FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PREMISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DEPARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, handsomely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in rich Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk and Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites, from 12 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas; solid Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best Morocco Leather, 14 guineas; Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 15s.; handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'s FIVE GUINEA NONPAREIL BEDSTEAD and BEDDING is a marvel of quality and economy combined—consists of a 4 ft. 6 in. wide handsome Brass and Iron French Bedstead, one of O. and Co.'s patent Pallio Mattresses, and a good Wool Upper Mattress, good Feather Bolster, and two Pillows. Every one about to furnish should see this excellent set on view in the Show Rooms. Also to suit the above, two fine Linen Sheets, one ditto Bolster-case, two ditto Pillow-cases, three superior quality Blankets, and handsome white Marseilles Quilt, for 78s. 6d. the set.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN'S Patent Pallio Mattress supersedes the use of the old rigid Palliasse; is more cleanly, healthy, and elastic; combines the advantages of a Mattress and Palliasse at the cost of one article. Price from 16s. 9d. upwards. See page 123 in "A Guide to House Furnishing," sent post free on application.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPETS. FURNITURE.
CARPETS. FURNITURE.
CARPETS. FURNITURE.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at a little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 6 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPET DEPARTMENT. — Stout Tapestry Brussels Carpet, 1s. 9½d.; handsome pattern ditto, from 2s. 3d. to 2s. 9d. per yard; superior Brussels, new designs, from 2s. 11d. upwards. These prices are much below value. Kidderminster Carpet, all wool, 1s. 11d. per yard; Patent Felt Carpeting, from 12½d. per yard; Superior Rock Dye ditto, handsome designs, double width, 2s. 11d. per yard; excellent Stair Carpet, from 6d. per yard; Best Quality, all Wool, ditto, 2s. per yard.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.
OETZMANN and CO.

ELEGANT TAPESTRY CRETONNE CURTAINS, in various choice designs, adapted for drawing-rooms, dining-rooms, parlours, bedrooms, &c., lined throughout with the new Cretonne lining, and bound all round with best silk Paris lace or Cretonne binding, 3 yards long by 30 inches wide, 10s. 6d. per pair; ditto, 45 inches wide, 15s.; ditto, 3½ yards long by 45 inches wide, 17s. 6d. Also every description of materials used for curtains. One of the largest and best assortments in London to select from.

BOMBAY STRIPED CURTAINS.— The cheapest Curtains extant. Effective style, 3 yards long by 46 inches wide, 9s. 9d. per pair; 3½ yards, 11s. 9d.; 4 yards, 13s. 9d. Patterns on application.

KITCHEN REQUISITES. — OETZMANN and CO.'S TEN POUND SET (List No. 2A, page 231, in their "GUIDE TO HOUSE FURNISHING," sent post free on application), includes Tables, Chairs, Clock, &c., with the various culinary utensils and requisites, contains all the most useful articles required in every kitchen, each being of superior quality, and is the most practical selection extant.—OETZMANN and CO.

CHINA. GLASS, &c.
CHINA. GLASS, &c.
CHINA. GLASS, &c.

CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICE.— OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGN, a beautiful Grecian shape, meets the great desideratum of art manufactures—viz., the shape best adapted for purposes of use required, combined with the most artistic design and decoration. Prices from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive Price List post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

POSTAL ORDER DEPARTMENT.— OETZMANN and CO.—ORDERS sent per POST, whether large or small, receive prompt and careful attention. Those residing at a distance, or any to whom a personal visit would be inconvenient, desirous of leaving the selection to the Firm, may rely upon a faithful attention to their wishes and interest in the selection. This Department is personally supervised by a member of the Firm. For further particulars please see page 287 in Catalogue, sent free on application.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by Edward Joseph Mansfield, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—October 6, 1877.

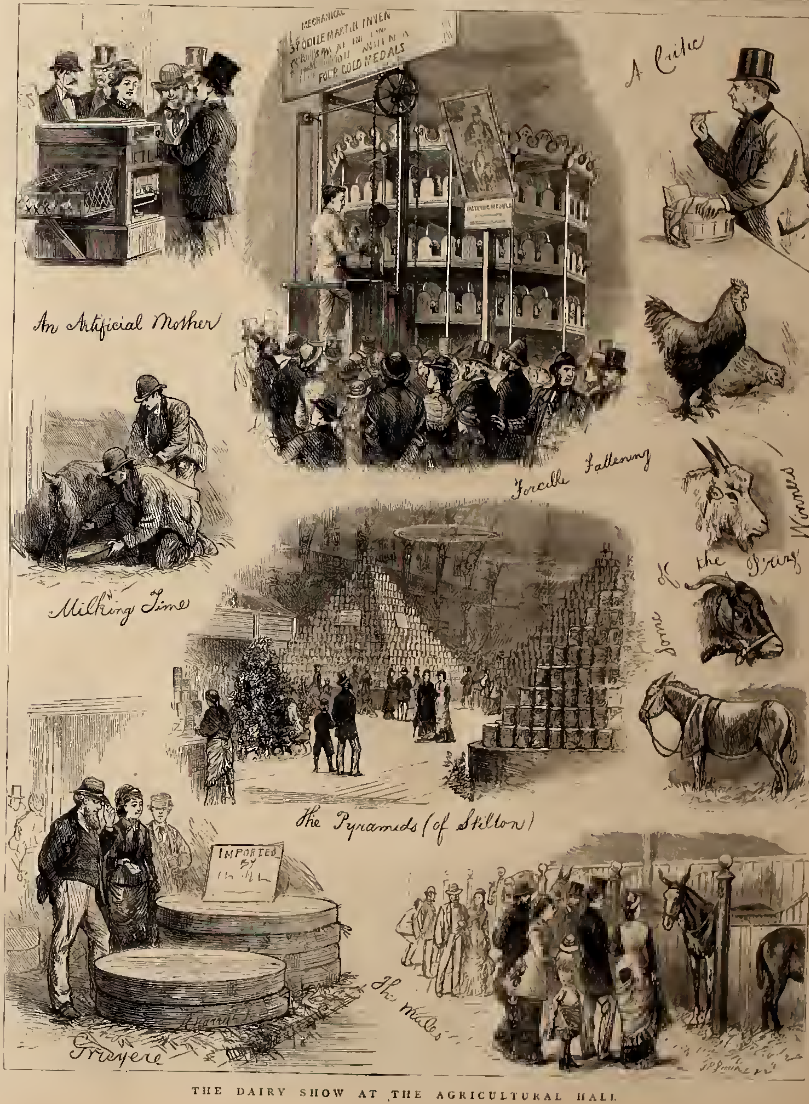
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 411
Regd. at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



MECHANICAL
FOUR GOLD MEDALS
A Critic
An Artificial Mother
Forcible Fattening
Some of the Dairy Winners
Milking Time
The Pyramids (of Stilton)
IMPORTED BY Gruyere
The Mules

THE DAIRY SHOW AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL

Topics of the Week

M. Gambetta and the French Elections.——The tone adopted by M. Gambetta in his manifesto and in his great speech is not one that commends itself to the English mind. There is nothing we dislike so much in our own politics as vehemence and passion. Proposals must be moderately stated; enemies must be attacked in a cautious and calm spirit. Probably, therefore, most Englishmen have been dissatisfied with the rather violent energy of the ex-Dictator. It must, however, be remembered that his circumstances are very different from those of British politicians. Mr. Disraeli felt himself justified in charging Mr. Gladstone's Ministry with "plundering and blundering," but all the world knew that the words were meant to be taken cum grano. We have not for a long time had a Government that has thoroughly shocked and outraged the national feeling. But France is in the hands of a set of paltry conspirators: men whose sole aim is to force their will upon the country. Every mean device for gaining their end they have recourse to; and it is clear to all impartial observers that if they are not checked they will prepare for the French people a series of fresh disasters and humiliations. How can we wonder then that an honest statesman, in telling the country what he thinks of such men, should use language which is not kept within the strict bounds of propriety? Probably in the end it will be found that he has accurately gauged the temper of his countrymen. Frenchmen love stirring appeals. If there is to be a fight, they prefer that it should be thorough and decisive. And it is possible that the glowing words of M. Gambetta will reveal to many half-hearted Republicans the immensity of the danger to which France is exposed. What she is threatened with is Ultramontane rule; and that rule, if it is thoroughly established, whether under a Legitimist or a Bonapartist régime, will mean incessant disturbance at home, and ultimately war with Germany and Italy. No one perceives this more distinctly than M. Gambetta, and there is good reason to hope that he has communicated his own fiery indignation to multitudes of other Frenchmen. By prosecuting him anew, the Government is simply playing into his hands, and rushing the more rapidly to its doom. If the nation does not unmistakeably prove that it will no longer tolerate the insolence and trickery of those who are trying to crush it, it will forfeit the sympathy and admiration of the most enlightened half of Europe.

Mr. Gladstone in Ireland.——The ex-Premier has kept himself so persistently before the public since his so-called "retirement" that the Irish people may be excused for refusing to believe that his intended visit is of so purely private and personal a character as has been alleged. Besides, whatever may be Mr. Gladstone's intentions, celebrity has its accompanying penalties, and, in these days, when news is transmitted with such rapidity, and when photography has rendered every famous face familiar to the multitude, nothing, short of an elaborate disguise, would save a man of mark from being dogged by an army of sight-seers. Then comes the question: Supposing Mr. Gladstone to be actuated in his Hibernian trip by the most intensely personal considerations, will he be able, if beset by admiring crowds at railway stations and elsewhere, to refrain from making a speech, or a series of speeches? Even General Grant, who was reckoned to be about the most silent American extant, has developed a very respectable speech-making faculty in this country. What then will be the effect on Mr. Gladstone, himself a master of copious rhetoric, when he visits an island where every man, woman, and child possesses "the gift of the gab?" There is just a possibility that, by way of contrast, he may put a curb on his oratorical powers, and become known to future generations of Emerald Islanders as "William the Silent." This alternative, however, is not very probable. Judging from the tone of the Irish newspapers, Mr. Gladstone will meet with a cordial, if not an enthusiastic reception. The Irish are an eminently hospitable people, and it is, we may take this opportunity of remarking, a thousand pities that they have not had more frequent opportunities of exercising their hospitality towards certain exalted personages who rarely direct their steps westward. As for Mr. Gladstone, he is not likely to be otherwise than civilly treated. Nations are rarely ungrateful, and the Celtic Irish may condone his onslaughts on the Head of their Church in consideration of his having pulled down that "upas tree," the Anglican Establishment, and given the peasantry a "lift" at the expense of the landlords. If he does speak, we shall be anxious to hear what he says on Irish soil about Home Rule. Mr. Gladstone is somewhat lacking in moral courage, so that we shall be rather surprised if he denounces Home Rule as a sham. Will he, on the other hand, speak gracious words concerning it, and if so, will the young shepherd who now leads the Liberal flock in the House of Commons dance to the old shepherd's piping?

The Church Congress.——The speech with which the Archbishop of Canterbury opened the Church Congress was one of singular breadth and moderation. No clergyman in high office has ever more frankly recognised the fact that there are parties of diverse tendencies in the Church, and that if they cultivate a tolerant spirit there is room enough for all of them. Such assemblies are of very great service to the mass of clergymen. A gentleman who gets up every Sunday, and lays down the law on the vastest subjects of human thought, is apt to forget that, after all, he is, like his neighbours, liable to error. He broods in solitude over perplexing questions, forms his own theories respecting them, and has so little opportunity of hearing them discussed that he becomes absolutely certain he is possessed of the whole truth. At the Church Congress he comes into contact with men who have been occupied with the same problems, and who are as earnest as he in maintaining their conclusions. A little heat of debate is sure to result from the collision of opposed elements; but the ultimate consequence is equally sure to be a somewhat wider vision, and a more charitable temper. Our only regret is that the Congress seems to shun difficulties that might give rise to passionate utterances. There is the Burials question, for instance. The grievance has caused so much bitterness among Dissenters that a body of clergymen could hardly have spent a few hours more profitably than in trying to find a remedy; but those responsible for the arrangements did not see their way to the introduction of so fiery a theme. For our part, we think the Congress would do well to consider seriously not only how this particular barrier between the Church and Nonconformists can be broken down, but how all unnecessary barriers to union can be removed. That would be very much more practical and useful than talk about fantastic schemes for association with the Greek Church, or even than virtuous denunciations of the Ritualists.

Music, Skating, Dancing, and Drinking.——In October leaves fall, pheasants are shot, and applications are made for the renewal of music and dancing licenses. Let us deal here with the last of these three phenomena, and say again, as we have said in former Octobers, that it would be well for the public comfort if the responsibility of granting these licenses were conferred upon younger persons than the Middlesex magistrates usually are. Elderly men are not likely to be fair judges of pursuits which are usually followed by the young, and, in their corporate capacity, they are wont to deem amusements immoral which really conduce to morality. With drinking they appear to have a decided sympathy, so long as a man can carry away his liquor quietly, or surely they would not license such an unnecessary number of ginshops; but a skating-rink, if the skating be performed to the sound of a band, is something too shocking to be endured. At the recent Sessions all the applications for music in connection with skating rinks were bowled over like so many skittles. One of these rinks is at Canonbury, a highly decorous suburb, and the application was supported by a schoolmistress, whose "young ladies" were in the habit of using the rink. Principals of ladies' schools are usually pretty keen to scent out impropriety in any place to which their pupils resort, so, if this lady was satisfied, the magistrates ought to have been satisfied too. But they were not, and so Canonbury is plunged in grief, sighing for its musical rink. And it is rather strange to find, amid all this severity, that the license for the Argyll Rooms—which may be a most respectable establishment, but which is scarcely a place to which the principal of a young ladies' seminary would habitually conduct her pupils—was cheerfully granted by these same Rhadamanthine justices, only a few dissentients saying nay. Seriously, we wish our magistrates would take a more philosophical view of public amusements; and would bear in mind that all these pastimes, such as music, skating, and dancing, are really powerful aids to the great cause of temperance. That low, sottish bar-tippling, which is the curse of this country, is greatly due to dulness and vacancy of mind; and there can be no better antidote to it than an active amusement in which both sexes can participate.

Servia and Greece.——It is obvious that the two petty neighbours of Turkey are seriously hesitating whether or not they will fling themselves into the war. When the struggle began, Russia was not only quite willing that they should remain out of it, but would have been sorry if they had insisted on joining her. Their aid, it was thought, would only complicate the final settlement. But the conflict has been so different from the anticipations formed respecting it, that Russia would now be extremely glad to obtain the help she would once have despised. Both Greeks and Servians might inflict serious damage on Turkey; and in any case they would occupy the attention of a considerable portion of the troops which make themselves so disagreeable in Bulgaria. Great pressure, therefore, is being exercised both in Belgrade and Athens to induce the respective Governments to give up their neutrality forthwith. England will be very much to blame if she does not endeavour to counteract Russian influence in these capitals. The two States could gain nothing from a war with Turkey, and they would certainly bring upon themselves a vast amount of unnecessary misery. And there is no sort of excuse for their joining the Russians. The Servians received unexpectedly easy terms of peace on the distinct understanding that they would not again rush into a quarrel with which they had nothing to do. As for the Greeks, they could have no other object, in making war, than to snatch as much plunder as they could lay their hands on. By waiting patiently they will advance their cause much more effectually than by premature and selfish action. It is, to say the least, possible that the Turks will be in no way improved by recent experiences. In that case, notwithstanding their brilliant valour, they will ultimately have to give way to a more progressive race; and the Greeks have a far better chance of succeeding them, since Russia has shown her hand, than they ever had before. They can, however, become a great influence in the East only by honesty and self-control.

Columbus and Bixio.——Most people—most non-Roman Catholics, at all events—must have felt rather relieved to learn that, after due deliberation, the Vatican had decided not to canonise Columbus. To have made the great navigator a saint would have detracted from rather than have added to his renown. When some man of world-wide celebrity goes to Oxford, and has the degree of D.C.L. solemnly conferred upon him, it is generally understood that he rather confers an honour upon the University than the University upon him. But, with regard to the proposal to canonise Columbus, we may go further than this, and say plainly that there are a good many people in the Roman Calendar with whom "the discoverer of New York and Chicago"—by which title we have heard Americans affectionately style Columbus—would have had no sort of fellow-feeling. He would recognise, we may suspect, a far more kindred spirit in such a man as the restless, daring Genoese, Nino Bixio, whose remains were brought home the other day from the East Indies. But Bixio was a revolutionist, it was the dream of his life to wrest Rome from the Papacy, and make it the capital of a United Italy, he fought gallantly against Oudinot and his meddling Frenchmen in 1849, and he was before the Eternal City again when the Temporal Power fell in September, 1870. Bixio, consequently, stands rather less chance of being canonised by the Pope than either Dr. Cumming, or Dr. M'Neile; nevertheless, we firmly believe that Columbus, could his opinion be ascertained, would far sooner grasp Bixio's hand than the hand of some of those whom the Church of Rome delights to honour.

Germany and Italy.——There has been a good deal of speculation respecting the visit of M. Crispi to Berlin, and it is probably not altogether without foundation. We do not, indeed, believe that there is the least truth in the theory that Germany and Italy wish to arrive at an understanding against Austria. At the present moment Austria threatens neither the one country nor the other. Her attention is absorbed by the Eastern Question; and, if we may assume that her neighbours do not intend to intermeddle with it, we may be tolerably certain that they are quite willing to leave Austria alone. Their intentions with respect to France are not so clear. There can be no doubt that Marshal MacMahon, whatever he may have done for "moral order," has succeeded in thoroughly arousing the suspicions of both the Italians and the Germans. The latter are so deeply involved in the struggle with the Papacy that they could not regard with indifference the rapid growth of Ultramontanism in France; and the former know very well that the real question now before the French electors is whether or not an effort shall be made for the restoration of the Temporal Power. Italy and Prussia have already fought side by side with splendid effect against a common enemy; and they would gladly do so again if circumstances rendered their alliance desirable. France will indeed act with inconceivable folly if she does not at once remove the occasion for any such scheme. Even with the help of Russia she would have found resistance to Germany sufficiently hard; to fight unaided both Germany and Italy would be impossible.

AMUSEMENTS

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8, THE DEAD SECRET. Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Messrs. Clifford, Cooper, Odell, Edmund Lyons, Pinero, Jenner, &c.; Misses Virginia Francis, Ewell, &c. Preceded by at 7, MARCH HARE HUNT. Mr. C. Cooper and Miss K. Pattison. Concluding with SHOULD THIS MEET THE EYE. Mr. E. Lyons.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD RIGHTON.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, £200 A-YEAR. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. At 10, THE LION'S TAIL. Messrs. Ryder, F. H. Macklin, Garner, A. H. Warren, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames F. Ritta, Compton, L. Clifton, C. Jecks, and Rachel Sanger. Acting Manager, Mr. E. CLIFTON.

ROYAL GENERAL THEATRICAL FUND.—Patroness, Her Majesty the QUEEN; Patron, H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.—Mr. RIGHTON has much pleasure in announcing his intention of giving a MORNING PERFORMANCE (under the patronage of His Grace the Duke of Beaufort), SATURDAY, Oct. 20, for the Benefit of the above-named Institution. At 2 o'clock a Comedietta, entitled £200 A YEAR. At 2.30 Recitation by Mr. HERMANN VEZIN. At 2.45 an appropriate Address, written by CLEMENT SCOTT, will be spoken by Mrs. STIRLING. At 3, for the first time these twenty years, Morton's Comedy, SPEED THE PLOUGH. Revised by Arthur Matheson and Edward Righton, with an Epilogue written expressly for the occasion by H. J. Byron.—GLOBE THEATRE.

THE MOONSTONE. By Wilkie Collins, at 8.30. A New Drama, altered from the Novel. EVERY EVENING. Box-office open daily from 11.0 to 5.0. No booking fees.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

MORNING PERFORMANCE of THE MOONSTONE, by special request, on SATURDAY, Oct. 27, at 2.30. Box plan open.—ROYAL OLYMPIC THEATRE.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—EVERY EVENING, at 6.45, the New Hibernian Drama, by Mr. R. Dodson, entitled DEOCH AN' DUR'ASS. Reddy Ryland, Mrs. S. Lane. MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. J. F. Brian, The Allouttis, The Rowella Trio. Concluding with LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET. Wednesday, The Hand in Hand Society's Benefit.

ROYAL GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—EVERY EVENING (Wednesday and Thursday excepted) at Seven, CAGLIOSTRO, THE MAGICIAN. Characters by Messrs. George Conquest, W. James, Sennett, Syms, Birchenough, George Conquest, Jun., Vincent, Nicholls, Inch, &c. Misses Mabel Verner, Victor, Denvil, Reed, &c. To conclude with DEAD TO THE WORLD. On Wednesday DEAD TO THE WORLD and SUSAN HOPLEY. On Thursday, THE HUNCHBACK, AN ARTFUL DODGE, and THE BLIND WITNESS. Dancing on the New Platform. The grounds brilliantly illuminated.—Acting Manager, Mr. ALPHONSE ROQUES.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening ditto.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Children of T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales. Also on view Portrait Models of the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, Count de Tourville, M. Thiers, and the Penge convicts. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

BRIGHTON.—A PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAIN runs Every Day between Victoria and Brighton; leaving Victoria, 10.0 a.m. Weekdays, and 10.45 a.m. Sundays; and Brighton, 5.45 p.m. Weekdays, and 8.30 p.m. Sundays.

EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m. calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.

Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe: also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.

The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.

J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE.—Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Engagement of Miss HEATH (of the Royal Princess's Theatre, London), accompanied by Mr. Walter Barratt, for Twelve Nights only (commencing MONDAY, Oct. 15), when will be produced the Popular Play, entitled JANE SHORE.

THE CONTINENT.—The Shortest, Cheapest, and Pleasantest Route to Holland, Germany, the Rhine, Belgium, Switzerland, Austria, Italy, and all parts of the Continent is via the Great Eastern Railway and Harwich.

An Express Train leaves the Liverpool Street Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 8 p.m., in connection with the Steamer to Rotterdam, and at 4.45 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, in connection with the steamer to Antwerp.

The Steamers are the finest that run between England and the Continent.

Goods and Parcels carried to all parts of the Continent at low through rates.

For further information apply to the Continental Department, Liverpool Street Station, London, E.C.

S. SWARBRICK, General Manager.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom. £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½*d.*

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1*d.* thin and 2*d.* thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia
Ceylon
China
} Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition. {
India
Japan
New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD, 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher.

Our Illustrations

THE ISLINGTON DAIRY SHOW

A DAIRY SHOW without cows seems at first blush very like the play of Hamlet with the title rôle omitted, but the inexorable fiat of the Privy Council had gone forth that no bovine cattle sent into London should be allowed to go out again, and it would scarcely have served the purpose of the dairy farmers to send their valuable cows to be sold for butcher's meat. So the managers of the Show yielded with a good grace, and got together as fine a display of dairy produce as one could wish to see, supplemented by exhibits of poultry, mules, donkeys, milch-goats, and all kinds of labour-saving machinery and apparatus in connection with the special industry which gave its name to the Show. The most noticeable feature on entering the Hall was Mr. Nuttall's gigantic pyramids constructed of 4,000 cheeses of the kind usually known as "Stilton," but which it seems should be called "Leicester," as it comes from that county, and has only been called by the former name from the fact of its having been first sold there by retail. Mr. Nuttall took the gold medal of the Farmers' Association for this exhibit. Other kinds were there in great variety from all parts of the Kingdom, and from a number of other European countries, and there was also a large display of British and foreign butters, the latter being easily distinguishable from the former by the neat style of packing. Another attractive feature of the show was the poultry hatching and poultry feeding machines, the Continental system of cramming fowl of all kinds being illustrated by pictures, and shown in actual operation. The goats were in full force, there being more than 100 entries, and amongst them were specimens of the Cashmere, Persian, wild Punjaub, Norwegian, and Maltese varieties; the Countess of Egmont and Lady Pigott took the first and second prizes, and the Baroness Burdett Coutts was also an exhibitor. Some of the mules and jackasses were of gigantic proportions, the chief prize winners being Mr. C. L. Sutherland and the Duke of Wellington, the former of whom exhibited with other animals a beautifully spotted mule, bought last year in Kentucky, and named "Centennial Harry." His sire was a Spanish ass, and his dam a thoroughbred mare; he stands 14 hands 2 inches high; and is thought to be the only spotted mule in Europe.

The galleries of the Hall were chiefly occupied by the poultry pens, the exhibits including almost every known variety of domestic fowl, from the diminutive Bantam to the Brobdingnagian Cochin. The attendance during the week was good, the number of visitors ranging from 5,000 to 8,000 per day.

THE LATE MDLLE. TITIENS

THERESA JOHANNA CAROLINE TITIENS, or Tietjens, was of Hungarian descent, and was born at Hamburg in 1831, and while yet a child the sweetness of her voice attracted so much attention that her parents resolved upon educating her for the lyric stage. She made her first appearance in her native city in 1849 as Lucrezia, in Donizetti's favourite opera, and afterwards sang at Frankfort and Vienna, her reputation growing with marvellous rapidity. In April, 1858, she appeared at Her Majesty's Opera as Valentine, in the Huguenots, and from that time forward became perhaps the most popular prima donna on the English stage. A few years ago she made a brilliant professional tour in the United States, and on her return took up her old position at Drury Lane; and when Mr. Mapleson removed to Her Majesty's Theatre, her name was still relied upon as one of the chief attractions. The painful internal disease which has now terminated her career was of long standing. It commenced at Brighton in 1875, but temporary relief was obtained by surgical treatment. It recurred in the following year while Mdlle. Titiens was in America; but she again recovered, and subsequently, during a provincial tour in this country, she sang for eighty nights as well as she had ever done in her life. Last April, however, the disease began rapidly to develop itself, and she sang for the last time, on the 19th of May, in Lucrezia Borgia. On that occasion she had to die a stage death, and she afterwards remarked to a friend that she thought she was really dying. She afterwards underwent several surgical operations, and for several months her condition was most critical. On the 18th of June she went to Worthing, and appears to have caught cold on the journey, and recently she returned to her residence at St. John's Wood, where she died last week. Much public anxiety was excited by her sufferings, and only the day before her death she received a kindly message from Her Majesty and the Princesses, expressing their sympathy and their admiration for her splendid voice and talents. The funeral took place on Monday last at Kensal Green Cemetery, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators, the behaviour of some of whom, we are sorry to hear, was not so decorous as the solemn nature of the ceremony demanded.—Our portrait is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company, 54, Cheapside.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH THE TURKS—SULEIMAN PASHA WATCHING THE ATTACK ON FORT ST. NICHOLAS

OUR sketch represents one of Suleiman Pasha's desperate attempts to retake Fort St. Nicholas in the Shipka Pass from the Russians. This assault took place on the night of the 17th ult., and was undertaken by a force of about 3,500 men, who had volunteered for the service. They were divided into three detachments, one under Salih Pasha being told off to attack the height on the southern side, a second under Redjeb Pasha on the eastern, and a third under Veissel Pasha on the western side. The first and third column had almost reached the enemy's position when the attack was discovered by the Russians, who immediately opened a heavy fire upon the second column. The Turks, however, succeeded in capturing the foremost entrenchments on the western side, and partially silenced the artillery fire higher up. On the eastern side, however, the attacking party were less fortunate, the officers, mainly subalterns, leading their men badly, or, as our artist remarks, not leading them at all. Thus far the Turkish soldiers had evinced the greatest bravery and spirit, scaling almost impossible rocks to shouts of "Allah! Allah! Oudjoum! Oudjoum!" ("To the assault!") but Redjeb Pasha giving away on the east, the Russians rallied, made a desperate charge upon the Turks, and finally drove back the whole of the attacking force—the assault thus ending in utter defeat, owing, our artist writes, to the failure of Redjeb Pasha to support his colleagues at the critical moment.—Our sketch was taken at the moment when the Turks had taken the entrenchment.

OUR ARTIST'S JOURNEY TO SHIPKA

THE first sketch portrays the village of Shipka and the various Turkish positions on the heights round Fort St. Nicholas, seen in the centre of the sketch, the only position held by the Russians in the Shipka Pass, but one of such strength that it is almost impregnable, although nearly surrounded by the Turks. Moreover, as the northern portion of the fortress abuts on the Gabrova road, the Russians are thus able to convey supplies and reinforcements, notwithstanding all the efforts of Chakir Pasha, who holds the heights commanding the road.

Our other sketches depicts various incidents which our artist encountered on his way to Shipka from Philippopolis viâ Kezanlik. "At Philippopolis," he writes, "the only thing that attracted my attention was a gallows erected in the middle of the street, at the foot of which sat a cobbler on a stool quietly mending a boot. The road leading to Carlova, where I intended to sleep, is straight and level as far as the foot of the Karadja Balkans, where I halted at a military outpost. An old Turkish captain invited me to sit down and drink a cup of water with him. He asked a multitude of questions, and amongst others if the English were coming soon, to which I could only vouchsafe evasive replies. After leaving him I passed through a burnt village, and arrived in the evening at Carlova. I found the town quiet; Bulgarians and Turks were chatting together in the cafés. I settled myself at an inn occupied by soldiers, and slept in a little room on a straw mattress spread on the floor. The next day I witnessed the distribution of meat to the soldiers. The poor fellows were delighted to get something to make soup with, as meat is a luxury to Turkish troops. I reached Kezanlik in the evening, and went on to Shipka by a road which was strewed with corpses of Mussulmans who had been murdered by the Bulgarians. I saw also amongst them the bodies of two Bulgarians, which I recognised by their costume. This road inspired me with feelings of horror, for on every side lay human bodies scorched and dried by the sun. In the camp I found the tent of the Commander-in-Chief, Suleiman Pasha, situated behind a mound. I noticed in camp a Bulgarian spy being carefully guarded by the soldiers with fixed bayonets."

Another of the sketches on page 352 portrays the nearest Turkish battery on Fort St. Nicholas, and higher up the hill may be distinguished the Turkish infantry entrenchments. This, the southern side, is the least favourable for an assault, which is most practicable from the north-western slope. Our last sketch at Shipka requires little description, as the impetuous charge of the Turkish soldier is well known. With visions of Paradise before him, if he falls while fighting the "unbeliever" he cares little for death, and with the battle-cry of "Allah! Allah!" will dauntlessly dash himself against the most serried ranks of breech-loaders.

WITH THE RUSSIANS—PHOTOGRAPHY IN THE FIELD

THESE illustrations are from further photographs in the field by M. Duschek, of Bucharest, with the exception of "Correspondents' Quarters in the Field," which is by our own artist. The various subjects are sufficiently explained by their titles; but we may remark upon the irony of fate shown in the humble dwelling of Prince Cerkasky, the "Governor-General of Bulgaria," whose post thus far has been a sinecure. The "Czar's Residence" is a house which belonged to a rich Bulgarian, who was not only a friend of the Turks, but had even secretly become a Mahomedan. When the Turkish population fled, this Bulgarian fled with them, and his house is now the temporary residence of the Emperor. Round about it tents have been put up for the persons attached to the Imperial head-quarters.

WITH THE TURKS IN ASIA

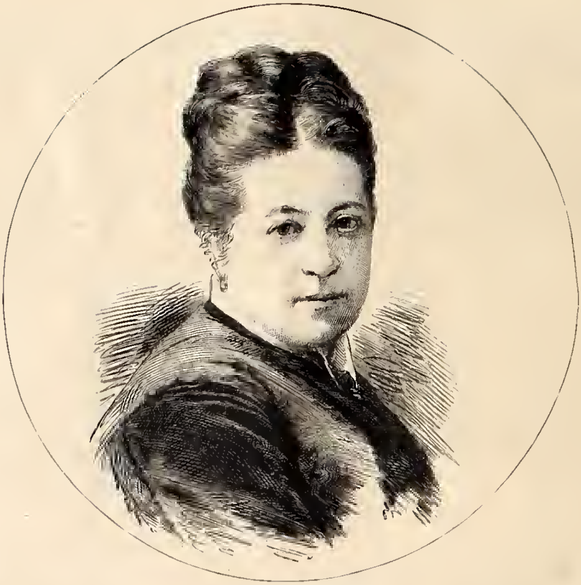
THESE sketches are by Captain H. McCalmont, one of the British Attachés with the Turkish Army in Asia. The first depicts the camp of Schéikh U. Heytullah, Chief of all the Kurds in Turkey and Persia. This chief has taken up arms for the Sultan, and is attached to the head-quarters of Ismail Pasha, and commands his immediate followers, some 2,000 irregular cavalry. The word "Kurd" is the Turkish for "wolf," and no appellation could better describe the Kurdish character. Plunder and pillage are their avocations in times of peace, while war affords them an excuse for greater crimes, and the country through which they then march becomes devastated far and wide. The costume of these irregulars is picturesque, a cloak of some bright hue, generally scarlet or light blue, richly embroidered, covering a uniform of the Zouave type; a broad sash or girdle encircles the waist, in which are carried at least a brace of old-fashioned pistols with silver mountings, a dagger, and a sword. In addition most of the Kurds carry a lance, and they have recently been supplied by the Turkish Government with Winchester repeating rifles. In the saddle from childhood, they ride well and gracefully. Many of their Arabian horses are of great beauty.

Another represents a recent "Skirmish between Kurdish Bashi-Bazouks and Russian Outposts in Front of Igdyr" (Russian territory). The fighting lasted from 10 A.M. till the evening. The Russians brought up four guns from Igdyr, in addition to eight squadrons of cavalry. The Turkish force consisted of some 700 Kurds, detachments of infantry being also in readiness to cover their retreat if necessary. In the sketch the foreground is occupied by Kurds, while between the Kurds and the nearest village, Khalfallau (alongside of which are the Russian guns in action), but not actually in sight, are the Russian cavalry skirmishers and squadrons concealed as much as possible by taking advantage of the undulations of the ground.

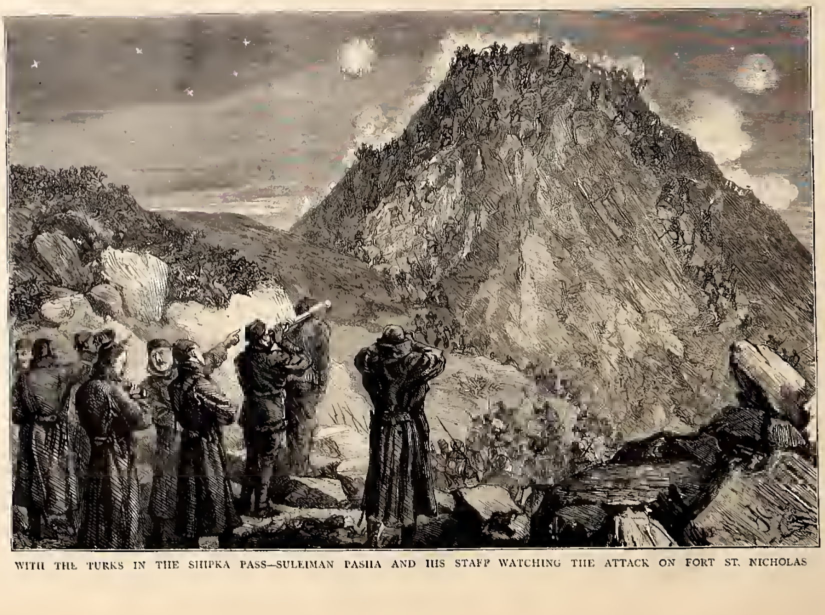
In the last sketch is shown the head-quarters of Ismail Pasha, on the Chatsituchuk Mountain, overlooking the Russian positions at Igdyr. Ismail Pasha commands the Second Army Corps of the forces in Asia Minor, and the camp in question is situated actually within Russian territory, which the army entered on August 6th. Below may be seen the fertile plain of Erivan.

VISIT OF THE PRINCESS LOUISE TO CARLISLE

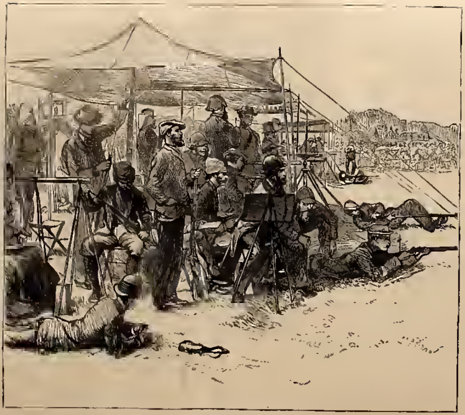
FULLY two hundred and sixty years having elapsed since the last public reception of a Royal personage in Carlisle, it is no wonder that the recent visit of the Princess Louise should have created an enthusiasm which has rarely been surpassed. Her Royal Highness's promise had been given nearly a year ago, and the preparations for welcoming her were of the most elaborate and magnificent description. The whole city was decked out with flowers and bunting, and lofty triumphal arches spanned the streets at several of the chief points past which the procession wended its way. Windows and pavements were thronged with spectators, who kept up a continuous shout of welcome as the Princess passed along, and the Yeomanry, Rifles, and Volunteers turned out in force to do honour to their Royal guest. Arriving by special train, accompanied by the Marquis of Lorne, the Princess was received at the station by the Mayor and Corporation. The procession went thence along the new road and



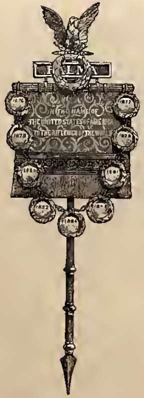
THERESA TITIENS
BORN IN HAMBURG JULY 17, 1831, DIED IN LONDON OCT. 3, 1877



WITH THE TURKS IN THE SHIPKA PASS—SULEIMAN PASHA AND HIS STAFF WATCHING THE ATTACK ON FORT ST. NICHOLAS

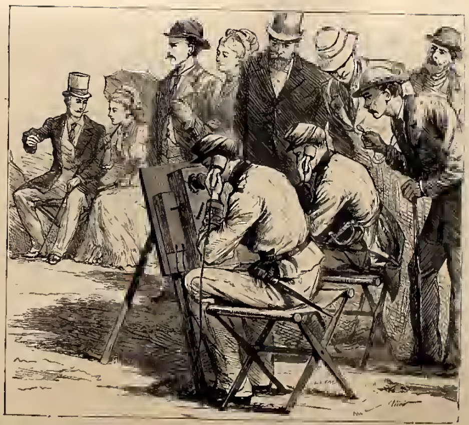


SHOOTING AT THE 1,000 YARDS RANGE

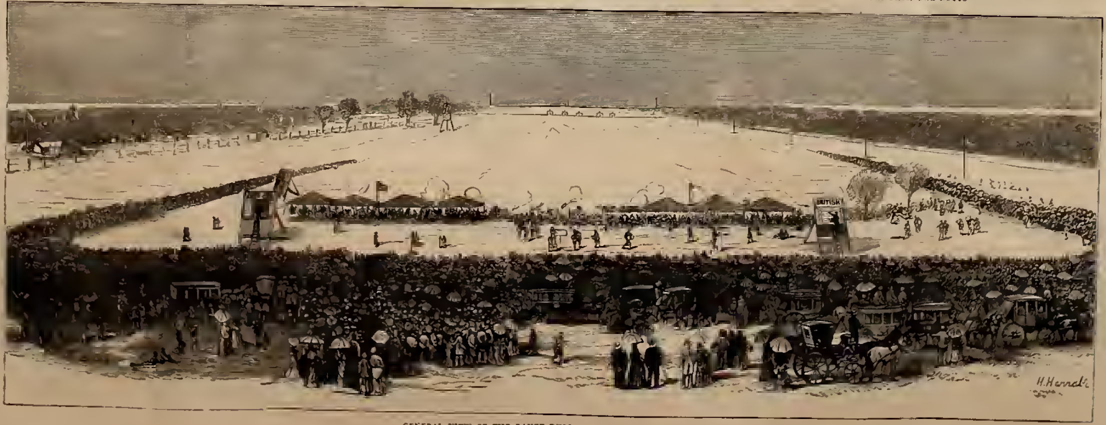


PALMA
IN THE NAME OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
TO THE RIFLEMEN OF THE WORLD
1876
1877

THE CHALLENGE TROPHY



TELEPHONIC MESSAGES FROM THE BUTTS



BRITISH
H. Harral

GENERAL VIEW OF THE RANGE DURING THE FINAL CONTEST

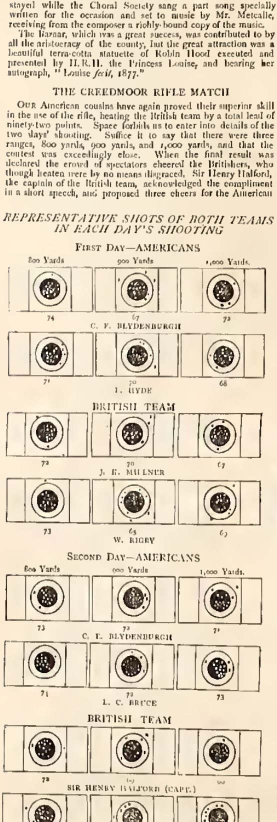
THE INTERNATIONAL RIFLE MATCH AT CREEDMOOR, LONG ISLAND, UNITED STATES viaduct which connects the two sides of the city, and which the Princess declared open, christening it the "Victoria Viaduct," after Her Majesty the Queen. The Princess then passed on to the Infirmary, through the wards of which she was conducted by the Lord Bishop, President of the institution, and other officials, pausing at each bed to speak to the patients, and having introduced to her an old nurse, Mrs. Grierson, who is a relative of Thomas Carlyle. After this the Royal party visited the Abbey, and next proceeded to the Victoria Hall to open the Bazaar in aid of the Infirmary Fund. Here in presence of a brilliant assemblage the Princess was presented with two illuminated addresses, one from the Municipality and the other from the Infirmary Committee, the receipt of which was acknowledged by the Marquis of Lorne, who complimented the Corporation upon their new viaduct, and expressed a hope that the Bazaar would not only free the Infirmary from present debt but keep it free for many years to come. The Princess then made the tour of the stalls, making purchases at each, and subsequently lunched with the Mayor and Mayoress in the Albert Hall, which was most tastefully decorated. After luncheon the Princess returned to the Victoria Hall and stayed while the Choral Society sang a part song specially written for the occasion and set to music by Mr. Metcalfe, receiving from the composer a richly-bound copy of the music.

The Bazaar, which was a great success, was contributed to by all the aristocracy of the county, but the great attraction was a beautiful terra-cotta statuette of Robin Hood executed and presented by H.R.H. the Princess Louise, and bearing her autograph, "Louise fecit, 1877."

THE CREEDMOOR RIFLE MATCH

Our American cousins have again proved their superior skill in the use of the rifle, beating the British team by a total lead of ninety-two points. Space forbids us to enter into details of the two days' shooting. Suffice it to say that there were three ranges, 800 yards, 900 yards, and 1,000 yards, and that the contest was exceedingly close. When the final result was declared the crowd of spectators cheered the Britishers, who though beaten were by no means disgraced. Sir Henry Halford, the captain of the British team, acknowledged the compliment in a short speech, and proposed three cheers for the American riflemen, which were of course heartily given. The challenge trophy which was competed for is a unique piece of work, in the form of a triumphal standard. It is over seven feet in height, and is made of wrought steel inlaid with gold and silver, and mounted with copper. The staff is of steel, with fillets of copper with a foliated capital, over which is a panelled block bearing the motto "Palma," surmounted by a copper eagle with extended wings. The banner is of steel, with gold scroll-work; upon it in letters of silver is the legend, "In the name of the United States of America to the Riflemen of the World;" and its lower edge is ornamented with an elaborate gold frieze and a massive gilded fringe. Upon a copper chain attached to the fasces which support the banner, are nine copper plates enclosed in laurel wreaths of silver, having the dates from 1876 to 1884, with spaces for the names of each year's successful team.—Our engravings are taken from illustrations in Harper's Weekly and Frank Leslie's Illustrated Paper.

REPRESENTATIVE SHOTS OF BOTH TEAMS IN EACH DAY'S SHOOTING



"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A new Story, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 345.

VICTOR HUGO

A few words concerning this famous French author may serve as a fitting introduction to his "History of a Crime," the publication of which we begin this week. He was born at Besançon, Feb. 26th, 1802, his father being a colonel in the French army. In 1822 and 1826 respectively he published two successive volumes of "Odes and Ballads;" in 1827 he composed his drama, Cromwell; and in 1829 his "Last Days of a Condemned Criminal." This latter attained an immense success. Both in art and politics he showed himself a Revolutionist. By his Hernani, first played at the Théâtre Français in 1830, he offended the upholders of the stiff and unnatural classical drama then in vogue; while his Le Roi s'Amuse was interdicted by the Government on account of its anti-monarchical tendencies. In 1841 he became a member of the Academy, and was created a peer of France by Louis Philippe. During the whole period of the Empire, for nearly twenty years, he was an exile from France, as he refused to avail himself of the amnesty of 1859, and spent much of the time in the Channel Islands. When the Empire fell he returned to France, and has since occupied a prominent position there, both as a literary man and as a politician. His political creed is of an ultra-Radical order, and his well-known sympathy with the Communists caused his expulsion from Belgium in 1871. M. Hugo has been a prolific writer. Among his prose writings those best known in this country are "Notre Dame de Paris," "Les Misérables," "Les Travailleurs de la Mer," "L'Homme qui Rit," and "Quatre-vingt Treize." A translation of the latter, under the title of "Ninety-Three," appeared in our columns in 1874.—Our portrait is from a photograph by M. Carjat, of Paris.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

Victor Hugo's New Work is commenced on page 349.

CHARACTER SKETCHES AT MALTA

These engravings (which are from sketches by F. E. S.) really need little or no explanation. We only hope that our Maltese friends will accept them in good part, and will not regard them as intended to be typical of the entire population. In Malta, as elsewhere, there are personages who specially attract the pencil of the caricaturist, and it is upon these that our draughtsman has instinctively fastened. The "Strada Reale" is the High Street of Valetta, and here various specimens of clericality, both stout and lean, are frequently to be met with, as priests and friars form a large percentage of the island population. The "faldette" is a kind of silk mantilla much in vogue, and its effect is respectively shown on the shoulders of a young woman and one who has attained rotund middle age. The Maltese cabby, like his London comrade, is a bit of a character; but the latter would do well to imitate the sobriety and frugality of the Mediterranean Jehu. Every visitor to Malta goes to Civita Vecchia to visit the Monastery of the Capuchin Friars, whose dead are embalmed and suffered to decay above ground. The British soldiers irreverently style them "pickled monks." The other two sketches give a somewhat outré rendering of two island dandies. One is styled "Young Malta," the other might be dubbed "A Mediterranean Immensikoff."

HOME.

Political Affairs.——A Cabinet Council attended by all the Ministers was held on Friday, and lasted exactly two hours.—Sir Stafford Northcote presiding last week at a meeting of the Exeter Chamber of Commerce, said, that though the revenue was not very elastic, there was no reason to think that the receipts would be less then had been anticipated. Referring to the question of Free Trade, he deprecated the retaliative policy advocated by some, and urged his countrymen to abstain from the first step of what he believed would be a most unfortunate retrogression.—The question as to Mr. Gladstone's rumoured trip to Ireland is now definitely settled, he having written to a gentleman at Dublin, saying that the visit will be purely private and personal. It is his rule, he says, to decline all share in public celebrations with which he has no local connection; "nor," he adds, "do I think Ireland in its present state would have any reason to thank me for departing from that rule on the present occasion."—By the way, a funny story has obtained currency anent the ex-Premier's powers in the wood-cutting line. The other day a crowd of admirers gathered round a fine tree which he was about to fell, but before he had struck one blow the tree toppled over, having, so goes the story, been previously nearly cut through by some less illustrious woodman. Whether any speech was made, or moral drawn from the untoward event, the record sayeth not.—Colonel Loyd Lindsay, M.P., Financial Secretary to the War Office, speaking at an agricultural dinner at Maidenhead on Tuesday, said that great improvements had during recent years been effected in the condition of the soldier. In war there were two things to be accomplished: to shoot your enemy and to prevent your enemy shooting you; and the tools of the soldier were the spade for himself and the breechloader for his enemy. Ten minutes' spade work would generally give a regiment shelter from which the most daring and dashing enemy could not drive him. The Turks understood this, and if they would only stick to their spade-work tactics they might continue to hold in check all the power of Russia, including her Imperial Guards and all her reserves.—On Wednesday the Marquis of Salisbury opened a Convalescent Home at Rawley near Leeds, erected by Mr. H. W. Ripley, M.P., at a cost of 10,000*l*. Referring to the Eastern Question, he said that every member of the Government was prepared to do his utmost to stop a calamity, which was one of the most grievous that had befallen the human race in our time. With regard to the Indian Famine, as far as he was departmentally concerned, he should not object if Sir S. Northcote thought fit to impose a shilling income-tax for the relief of the sufferers, but it must not be supposed that there was now any want of money or food. The worst part of the misery had passed, and the difficulty of bringing the starving people to the relief camps was being surely and steadily overcome.—On Tuesday about thirty Home Rule members of Parliament met in Dublin under the presidency of Mr. Maurice Brooks. After an animated discussion, three resolutions were unanimously adopted. The first reaffirmed the unity of the party and Mr. Butt's leadership; the second asserted that it was the duty of the members to consult and agree together on all questions affecting Ireland; and the third pledged them to meet in national conference whenever this should be deemed necessary, individual action to continue in matters upon which no resolution had been come to by the party.—The libel action brought by Mr. P. Callan, M.P., against the editor of the Nation for falsely asserting that he had furnished reports of the proceedings at a Home Rule Meeting, has been withdrawn, Mr. Sullivan having apologised for the accusation which he is now satisfied was unfounded.—A memorial in honour of the well-known Lancashire writer and politician, Samuel Bamford, was unveiled on Saturday, at Middleton, near Manchester, by Mr. Hibbert, M.P. It consists of a stone obelisk, twenty-five feet high. Mr. Hibbert dwelt at some length on the useful career of the author of "Passages from the Life of a Radical."

Miscellaneous.——There was a high tide in the Thames on Monday, and many of the low-lying districts on the southern bank of the river were inundated, the Vestries not having taken the precaution of placing barriers. At Dover, Folkestone, Margate, Ramsgate, and Sheerness, the tide was very high, with a strong wind, and much damage was done. Captain Saxby, who predicted this high tide, now says that others may be expected on the 7th prox. or the 22nd of December, if the wind should blow from the north on either of those dates.—General Grant was publicly welcomed at Torquay on Wednesday last. On Monday or Tuesday next he will visit Birmingham. On dit that the Leamington Town Council are quarrelling as to who shall pay the expenses of the General's recent reception in that city.—Weston, the pedestrian, has appeared at Hull in a new character, that of public lecturer, his subjects being "Will Power," and "Some Results of Temperance."—Some letters from Mr. Stanley appeared in the Daily Telegraph of Thursday, and another is promised on Monday next. Mr. Stanley, who is now at Kabinda, on the West Coast, gives an account of his five months' journey through West Central Africa along the Congo River, in the course of which he encountered fifty-seven cataracts, falls, and rapids, and fought thirty-two battles with various native tribes. His followers suffered much from dysentery, scurvy, and dropsy, and were at times reduced to the verge of starvation, owing to the natives refusing to barter food for the beads, cloth, &c., which they carried. On Aug. 6th they reached the village of Ni Sanda, whence Stanley sent messages with a letter to "any English-speaking gentleman at Emboma." This fell into the hands of Messrs. A. Motta Viega and J. W. Harrison, two merchants of that place, who sent immediate relief, the arrival of which was hailed with delight and wonderment by Mr. Stanley's people, who had almost given up hope of ever completing the journey. Mr. Stanley says that the commission with which he was entrusted has been fulfilled to the letter. Side by side with the account of his geographical achievements the Telegraph prints another letter descriptive of the horrors of slave-catching and dealing in Central Africa. This last letter is the duplicate of one sent by Mr. Stanley from Nyangwe in October last, but which has never come to hand.—Mr. Crawshay, the Iron King, who is said to be the richest man in Wales, has written a doleful letter to a Merthyr workman, saying that he sees no prospect of the resumption of work at Cyfarthfa. He does not think that he can possibly live very long, and if able he shall sell the works before he dies. There is nothing now to bind him to them, for he has been estranged from them by the conduct of the men. He always hoped and expected to die with the works going, and the same feeling amongst the men for their employer, but things have changed, and he goes to his grave feeling a perfect stranger, as all his old men are gone.—The Lords of the Admiralty had a practical experience of a collision on Saturday last, when the Enchantress, on board of which they were, ran into another vessel in Devonport harbour. The Enchantress had her bows smashed in, and the First Lord of the Admiralty, who was on the bridge at the time, was thrown down. Nobody was seriously hurt, however.—The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of the Avalanche and Forest was concluded on Tuesday. The judgment of the Court was that the Avalanche was primarily responsible, but Capt. Lockhardt of the Forest was reprimanded for not keeping his eye on the light of the other vessel. No one was to blame for not having saved more lives.

THE PHOTOGRAPHIC SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN

The annual Exhibition of this Society, which is now open to the public at 5A, Pall Mall East, illustrates the immense progress which the art of photography has made during the last few years, and is altogether, with regard to the general high degree of excellence attained, the most satisfactory collection of sun-pictures yet brought together. As there are upwards of five hundred numbers in the catalogue, and as many equally meritorious works were, we understand, shut out for want of space, it is evident that this Exhibition is thoroughly appreciated by the professors of the art, whether amateur or professional, native or foreign. Without further prelude let us plunge at once into the catalogue, and begin by remarking on the capital work executed by the Royal Engineers' School of Photography, as, for example, in the two large pictures of the great Beech tree and the Oak, Knole Park, the former of which is an untouched silver enlargement. Messrs. Stillfried and Anderson, of Yokohama, send some characteristic samples of Japanese architecture, foliage, and people. Mr. Robert Crawshay, of Cyfarthfa Castle, a veteran amateur, exhibits some specimens of Breconshire scenery, very soft in effect. Mr. William England, whose Swiss photographs are so widely known, is represented here by numerous examples, remarkable for their extreme distinctness of definition. These are from dry plates. Next we have Colonel Stuart Wortley, whose photographs of sea and shore are so highly appreciated. Of course there is a certain amount of device about his "moonlight" effects, since "that orbed maiden with white fire laden" does not, like her big brother, the sun, do anything in the art way. Photography serves many useful purposes nowadays. For instance, it is a potent aide-de-camp to the scientific lecturer, as witness Mr. Edward Viles's enlargements of microscopic objects, such as a honey-bee's tongue, or a blue-bottle's proboscis. The Pandora Arctic Expedition is effectively illustrated by Mr. W. J. A. Grant's photographs. Next comes a frame which will delight mammas, Messrs. R. Faulkner and Co.'s instantaneous portraits of children. There are scores of them here, and the expressions are delightfully natural. Next we come to a foreigner, Bernard Mischewski, of Carlsruhe, whose portraits are remarkable for their excellence, especially those on a large scale, taken with a Dallmeyer 6A lens, after fifty or sixty seconds' exposure. Mr. A. Boucher, also a foreigner, though domiciled at Brighton, exhibits some capital work in the way of portraiture.

Nor must we forget in this connection Mr. Valentine Blanchard, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Society, who exhibits some excellent portraits, one, for example, of Valentine Bromley, the promising young artist who was cut off so prematurely last spring; and another a head of Lear, the model for which was an old Frenchman, well-known to frequenters of the Strand, where he goes about bareheaded, selling oranges or newspapers. Photographs which aim, by a careful arrangement of figures and accessories, at depicting an incident such as a genre artist might choose for his pencil, are apt to fail, except on a small scale, and with comic subjects; there are exceptions to this rule, however, and at least three examples of this class in the Exhibition attain a high degree of success, namely, Mr. H. P. Robinson's old couple resting after the day's work, a thoroughly Faed-like study; Mr. R. Slingsby's "Alone," a girl seated on a sandhill by the sea; and Mr. Samuel Fry's birdstuffer surrounded with specimens, a subject recalling Mr. H. S. Marks' peculiar humour. Returning to portraits for a moment, we would call attention to those of Taeschler, and also point out Feilner's "Characteristic Heads of an Actor," interesting as showing the sitter's command of facial expression. Mr. Carlo Relvas, too, a Portuguese amateur, sends some good work both in portraiture and landscape. We have left out dozens of names equally deserving of mention, but space presses us, so we will in conclusion merely advise our readers to visit for themselves this most interesting Exhibition, not forgetting finally to look at No. 433, in which frame the Woodbury Company exhibit their process of surface printing from metal plates. The curious thing is that, on pressure being applied, the gelatine, which seems so soft, makes an impression on the pewter plate, which seems so hard, so that the latter can be printed from. The same phenomenon certainly obtains among human beings, for a soft, gentle woman often makes a very decided impression on a man who seems as hard as nails.

THEATRES

LORD LYTTON'S posthumous play produced at the COURT Theatre on Saturday evening may be accounted a success, though it will assuredly not take rank among the most brilliant of the works of its distinguished author. Its story is wanting in freshness, its characters are drawn after a somewhat conventional pattern, and the motives upon which they are supposed to act are often manifestly inadequate to bring about the serious consequences attributed to them. Not only the critical spectator, anxious not to miss either merits or defects, but the average playgoer, who goes only to be amused, cannot fail to feel at many points that there is something not explained, and not apparently explainable. When an audience begins to ask itself why the hero does this, or why the heroine neglects to do that, the interest is in danger of declining; and if prominent persons of the play use strong language or act excitedly under these circumstances the insincerity of the work is still more forcibly suggested. All this, however, may be charged against The House of Darnley; yet the performance was very far from failing absolutely to interest the audience. The late Lord Lytton's knowledge of stage effect was probably as complete as that of any dramatist of his time, and certainly more complete than that of any contemporary writer who had not had the advantage of practical familiarity with the resources and the artifices of the theatre. He knew, above all things, how to keep in view the central point of interest by subordinating mere incidentals to this purpose. Some of his plays—the comedy of Money for example—is crowded with characters to a degree which would inevitably have involved an inferior hand in confusion and ruin. Not only are types of character introduced which have no necessary connection with the main thread of the story, but these characters receive a certain completeness of outline, while their sayings and doings contribute much to the entertainment afforded. Yet the story is neither lost sight of nor overweighted. The House of Darnley is greatly inferior as a comedy to Money, but these qualities are nevertheless discernible in it; and to this that the fair measure of success achieved by the performance is in great degree to be attributed. The story is founded on nothing but the notion of a wife who leaves a husband on a groundless though plausible cause of jealousy, and who returns to him again and is reconciled after due explanations. This is the theme of Mr. Byron's Cyril's Success, to the plot of which play the story of The House of Darnley bears indeed no slight resemblance; but the experienced playgoer will easily recall other pieces produced during the last twenty or thirty years in which this notion is developed under various forms. On the French stage, to which source this germ of story seems to be originally traceable, strong interest is generally attained by representing the lady as on the brink of committing graver faults than that of merely quitting her home and leaving her children; but English standards of propriety being less tolerant of unpleasant subjects, our dramatists who adopt this theme are driven to seek the elements of pathetic interest in materials of a milder kind. Instead of being allured from her home the offended wife is generally only driven from it by horror at her husband's supposed offences. With this purpose in view it is found necessary to present the facts with a certain elaborate plausibility and emphasis which are ordinarily attained in a rather strained and arbitrary fashion. So it is in Lord Lytton's play; and it is to be observed that this fault cannot be charged to the account of Mr. Coghlan, who has been entrusted with the task of completing the play left unfinished by the author. Nothing is easier in fiction than to involve an innocent person in suspicious circumstances; but it is just because this is easy that the artifice is ordinarily too obvious to escape attention. In this instance the wife's suspicions are aroused by simply permitting certain facts to come to her knowledge, while other circumstances, which it is hardly conceivable that she could have failed to ascertain, are arbitrarily withheld as long as it suits the dramatist's convenience to withhold them. Thus a kind of entanglement is created, which is certainly conceivable, but which cannot excite much sympathy or apprehension in the minds of the audience, so obvious is it that sooner or later an explanation must be arrived at, and reconciliation effected. It is no slight testimony to the power of the acting of Mr. Kelly as Mr. Darnley, and Miss Ellen Terry in the part of the wife, that they were able even under these unfavourable conditions to interest the audience, and more than once even to move them in no slight degree. The acting throughout is indeed eminently satisfactory. The lighter characters of the play, sustained by Mr. Hare, Miss Amy Roselle, and Mr. Bishop, are rather thin character sketches, but they amuse. Mr. Titheradge, a new actor, plays, with excellent concentration of power and moderation, the ungracious part of a heartless profligate; and Miss B. Henri, in a more serious though not very prominent character, evinced ability of a high order. The "set scenes" represent interiors only, and therefore want the relief of contrast; but they are furnished and decorated with the profusion, and also with something of the eccentricity, in which managers have lately vied with each other. Such drawing-rooms as that of Mr. Darnley, with their rows of columns decked in garish blue and gold, may be assumed to be rare; nor perhaps do many noblemen build their libraries like Lord Fitzhollow in the form of the Chapter House at Westminster.

This evening a new extravaganza, entitled Faust, from the pen of Mr. Byron, will be produced at the GAIETY. An adaptation of MM. Meilhac and Halévy's comedy, entitled La Cigale, brought out with great success last week in Paris, is also in preparation at this theatre.

The QUEEN'S Theatre in Long Acre will reopen on the 27th instant under the management of Mr. Alex. Henderson, and with the new name of the NATIONAL. Romantic drama, for which its stage is pre-eminently fitted, having neither the bewildering vastness of Drury Lane nor the cramped confinement of smaller houses, is to be the feature of the new reign. A drama of this kind, entitled Russia, and founded on the striking, romantic, and spectacular play entitled Les Exilés, lately produced in Paris, will be the opening piece.

Miss Kate Santley has reopened the ROYALTY with a version of La Marjolaine, M. Lecocq's latest comic opera. The libretto has been adapted by Mr. Sutherland Edwards.

A special series of dramatic performances, under the direction of Mr. C. Wyndham, will be commenced at the CRYSTAL PALACE on the 16th instant.

BRITANNIA.——The latest attraction here is a new Hibernian drama, written by Mr. R. Dodson, entitled Deoch an' Dur'ass—Angiicé, "The Stirrup Cup." The action takes place at the time of the O'Connell Riots, and the incidents are of that exciting character which recommends itself to oriental audiences.

Books Received

Selections from the Authors of "The Schönberg-Cotta Family:" by a Friend. Daldy, Isbister, and Co.

Walks in Florence (2 vols.): Susan and Joanna Horner; The Fight of Faith (Second Edition): Rev. Stopford A. Brooke; Every Day Meals: Mary Hooper. Henry S. King and Co.

Wives and Mothers, or Readings for Mothers' Meetings (Second Series): Rosalind Marryat. Hatchards.

A Girl of a Thousand: Laura Beltairs. Walbrook and Co.

Cast Adrift: Mrs. Herbert Martin. Griffith and Farran.

Sacred Streams: P. H. Gosse, F.R.S.; The Vision of God and other Sermons: Henry Allon, D.D. Hodder and Stoughton.

The Home Naturalist: Harland Coultas; English Pictures Drawn with Pen and Pencil: Rev. Samuel Manning, LL.D., and Rev. S. G. Green, D.D.; Harrison Weir's Animal Pictures for Children; Natural History Pictures. Religious Tract Society.

The Life of Mozart (2 vols.): Trans. from German of Dr. Ludwig Nohl by Lady Wallace; Memorials of Charlotte Williams-Wynn: Edited by her Sister. Longmans.

Lutchmee and Dilloo (3 vols.): Edward Jenkins, M.P. W. Mullan and Son.

A Man of Other Days—Beauregarde (3 vols.): Charlotte M. Young. Hurst and Blackett.

Primer of Pianoforte Playing: Franklin Taylor. Macmillan.

Bulbs and Bulb Culture, Part I.: D. T. Fish. Bazaar Office.

Pauline (2 vols.): L. B. Walford. W. Blackwood and Sons.

A Defence of Russia and the Christians of Turkey: Sir Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., M.P. Chapman and Hall.

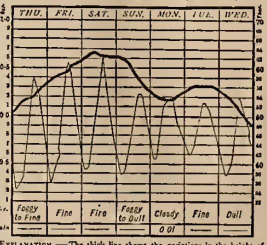
Through the Breakers (3 vols.): Rev. R. Bulkeley. Remington and Co.

The Trust (3 vols.): Jean le Peur; Lilian: G. Beresford Fitzgerald; The Reign of Rosas; E. G. Fernan; A Very Old Question (3 vols.): T. Edgar Pemberton; The House of Clarisford (3 vols.): Frederick Woodman. Samuel Tinsley.

◆

WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

OCTOBER 4TH TO OCTOBER 10TH (INCLUSIVE)



EXPLANATION.——The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

REMARKS.——During the whole of Thursday, Friday, and until midday on Saturday, the 4th, 5th, and 6th inst., the barometer rose steadily and rather briskly, the increase amounting to about 0·6 inches; but at that time the mercury began to get unsteady. For the first few hours it did not change much; but during the whole of Sunday afternoon, the 7th instant, and the early part of Monday, the 8th, it fell briskly, and though a slight recovery occurred during Tuesday, the 9th, it afterwards fell again very quickly. Temperature during the first few days showed a considerable range, as much as 25° on Friday, the 5th; but on the past three days it has been very much less, the difference between the maximum and the minimum on Tuesday, the 9th instant, being only 11°. The wind for the greater part of the time has been exceedingly light, calms, in fact, being reported at many of the eight a.m. observations, while light north-easterly breezes prevailed at other times; but since Sunday, the 7th instant, a moderate or fresh north or north-westerly breeze has been blowing. The weather has been very dry, and the sky moderately clear of cloud except on Wednesday, the 10th instant; but a great deal of fog has prevailed. The barometer was highest (30·68 inches) on Saturday, the 6th instant; lowest (29·90 inches) on Wednesday, the 10th instant: range, 0·78 inches. The thermometer was highest (62°) on Saturday, the 6th instant; lowest (35°) on Thursday, the 4th instant; range, 27°. Rain, 0·01 inches, on one day. A smart shower fell on Thursday morning.

Scraps

THE FAMOUS GERMAN TRAGEDIAN, DEVRIENT, has died at Frankfort.

"HAMLET" has been translated into Portuguese by the King of Portugal, who, however, publishes his work anonymously. The translation is said to be very well done.

A CONGRESS OF LIBRARIANS might do some good across the Atlantic, where in the classified index of one library Aristophanes' Frogs has been placed under the head of Reptiles.

TWO BIRDS OF PARADISE, from New Guinea, are now in the Paris Jardin d'Acclimatation, the first living specimens ever brought to France. These birds are very rarely secured alive, as they are specially shy and difficult to approach.

COMIC WAR MAPS.——In reference to some recent remarks of ours on this subject, Mr. F. W. Rose, of 4, Cromwell Crescent, South Kensington, the designer of the Octopus War Map, informs us that he did not take the idea from Hadol's French map, having never seen it.

EPIDEMICS IN BURMAH are treated very vigorously by the natives. Directly any pestilence appears in a village the inhabitants light enormous fires in the streets, to the great danger of their inflammable houses, to frighten away the nats or evil spirits. The purifying influence of the fires, however, generally has the desired effect.

M. VICTOR HUGO'S "HISTORY OF A CRIME" was made the subject of a clever drawing last week in one of the Paris illustrated satirical papers. The poet was represented inscribing his work upon bronze, a dead eagle lying at his feet. The Censor, however, speedily pounced upon the drawing, and prohibited its publication.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE reached Gibraltar safely on Sunday, and after the Olga had taken in fresh coals, started next day for Falmouth, where she may be expected between the 15th and 20th inst. Mr. Dixon writes that the needle-ship pitches terribly at the rate of fifteen times per minute, but the drum on the bows acts as a good breakwater, while he thinks she would have been better with a sharper bow and stern. Sail does not help her much. The only casualty has been the parting of the towline on the 31st ult., which was easily repaired next morning.

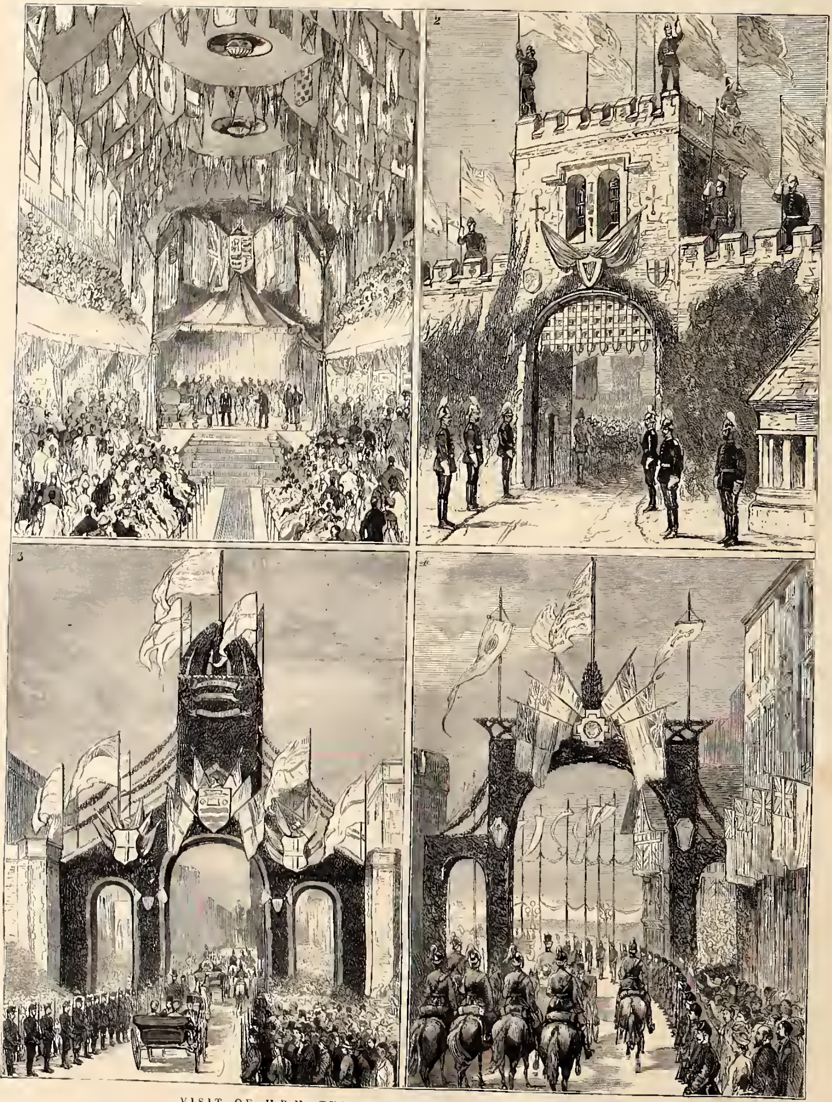
THE GELADA MONKEYS at the Alexandra Palace, the first of their kind ever brought alive to Europe, are six in number, and vary from a height of three feet to the size of a cat. They are covered with brown hair which becomes grey on the chest, have a long tail ending in a tuft like that of a lion, a pink hairless heart-shaped spot on their chest, and a similar space round the throat, which turns red when the animals are angry, while the males have a long thick mane. They prefer to eat Indian corn and grass, making the latter into tiny balls, and seem rather savage animals, as the two females and the biggest male had several fights on the first day of exhibition.

THE REWARD OF GOOD AND EVIL-DOERS IN A FUTURE WORLD, according to Chinese imagination, is curiously depicted on the walls of a Celestial Temple in Nevada, U.S. Hell is represented as a sort of brick oven, with folding-doors, by the side of which sits the Devil. Sinners are brought to the doors by minor devils, and the Prince of Darkness, looking on his victims with satisfaction, takes the keys from his waistcoat pocket and reaches out for his forked spear to poke the poor wretches into the oven. In Heaven the Blessed are seated on clouds of glory, surrounded by angels to fan away the flies, and are regaling themselves on the very prosaic diet of roast pig.

A FRESH ARCTIC EXPEDITION will be undertaken by Sir Allen Young in the Pandora next spring. He will probably try the Spitzbergen route, as Smith's Sound has now been so fully explored. Anent Arctic research, Professor Nordenskiold has decided on his route through the Polar regions next year. The Professor will leave Sweden in July, hoping to reach Nova Zembla in the beginning of August and the Yenisei shortly afterwards, will thence round the most northern point of Asia, called Tschieljuskin, and will arrive in Behring's Straits about the end of September. He will then skirt China and India, and return home by the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean. The Swedish Expedition will sail in a specially constructed steamer provisioned for two years, and will consist of a crew of twenty-two men, with a doctor and scientific staff.

LONDON MORTALITY increased again last week, and the deaths numbered 1,308, against 1,237 in the previous seven days, but were 66 below the average, while the death rate rose to 19·3 per 1,000. There were 14 deaths from small-pox (an increase of 1), 38 from scarlet fever (a decline of 11), 36 from diarrhœa (a fall of 16, and 29 below the average), 23 from measles (a rise of 7), 19 from fever (a decrease of 3, and 21 below the average), 21 from whooping-cough (an increase of 3), and 2 from diphtheria (a fall of 2). The fatal cases of diseases of the respiratory organs rose to 257 from 174, and were 60 above the average. Different forms of violence caused 47 deaths, of which 36 were the result of negligence. There were 2,420 births registered, an increase of 10 and 75 above the average. The mean temperature was 49·4 deg. and 5·5 deg. below the average, while the duration of sunshine was 33·3 hours out of the 80·0 hours during which the sun was above the horizon.

A LARGE ALLEGORICAL PICTURE of the "Apotheosis of M. Thiers," intended for next year's Paris Salon, has been begun by MM. Detaille and Vibert, the former well known for his spirited battle pieces. M. Thiers is represented lying on a crape-covered couch, over which leans France, clad in mourning, shrouding the deceased statesman in a tri-coloured flag. Around are his various foreign decorations, and overhead is the flag of Belfort almost hidden by wreaths, and a large figure of Glory extending its right hand over M. Thiers' head. Above this, on the right, appears the Commune as a Fury expiring in the midst of smoke, which is consuming the arms of Paris, and on the left is represented the funeral ceremony at Père la Chaise, while Paris during the siege can be seen in the background. At the top of all is shown M. Thiers as statesman, historian, and President. The July Column and a view of the Corps Législatif typify his political career, his historical works are illustrated by miniature views of the principal events from 1789 to 1815, and last of all comes his review of the Versailles Army after the Commune. M. Detaille, however, has studied under M. Meissonnier, and the latter, who was engaged upon a portrait of M. Thiers, and made a sketch of him after his death, is seriously angry with his pupil for forestalling him in the subject. M. Detaille has accordingly given up his share in the picture, and M. Vibert will finish it alone.



VISIT OF H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE TO CARLISLE

1. Opening of the Bazaar in Victoria Hall: The Mayor and Town Clerk presenting the Municipal Address.—2. The "Irish Gate" manned by the Fire Brigade: A Wooden fac-simile of one of the Ancient Gates of the City.—3. Triumphal Arch between the Court Houses.—4. Triumphal Arch at the Entrance of the New Viaduct.

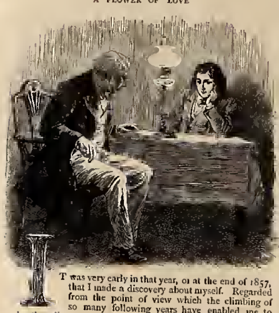
BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XIII.

A FLOWER OF LOVE



It was very early in that year, or at the end of 1857, that I made a discovery about myself. Regarded from the point of view which the climbing of so many following years have enabled me to reach, the discovery seems a thing which might have been expected,—quite natural, and belonging to daily experience. At the time, I remember, it was most surprising.

I suppose no one would believe that a young man could come to the age of one-and twenty, and remain so little of a man as I did. But I was deformed. I was morbidly sensitive of ridicule. I was extremely poor. I had some pride of birth; I could not possibly associate with the professional men, the drawing, dancing, and music masters of the town, who might have formed my set. Their thoughts were not mine; their ways were not my ways. Not that I claimed any superiority. Quite the contrary. Men who could ride, hunt, shoot, play billiards, and do all the other things which belong to skill of hand and eye, seemed, and still seem to me, vastly superior to a being who can do nothing except interpret the thoughts of the great masters. In a country town, unless you belong to the young men of the place, and take part in the things which interest them, you fall back upon such resources as you have in yourself. There was nothing for me but my piano and my books for the evening, and Celia in the afternoon.

It was partly on account of my deformity that we were so much together. When Leonard went away I had hardly an acquaintance of my own age in the town—certainly not a friend; and I was at the age when the imagination is strongest, and the need for close companionship is felt the most. In adolescence the heart opens out spontaneously to all who are within its reach. The friends of youth are close and confidential friends, there is no distrust, no reserve. I think it is rare for such a friendship as that between Celia and myself to exist between two persons who are not of the same sex, neither brother and sister, nor lovers. Yet it existed, up to a certain time,—and then, without a break on her part, but after a struggle on mine, it was resumed, and has been since continued. There was no shadow of restraint between us, but only a perfect and beautiful confidence, when Celia was a girl and I was a boy. Like me, but for different reasons, she lived apart from other girls; she had no schoolgirl friendships; she never went to school, and had no masters, except myself. I taught her all I knew, which was not much, in a desultory and methodless fashion, and the girl poured out to my ear alone—it was a harvest sixty and a hundredfold—the thoughts that sprang up as clear and bright as a spring of Lebanon in her pure young heart. The thoughts of youth are sacred things; mostly because young people lack power of expression, they are imperfectly conveyed in the words of the poets, who belong especially to the young. Great utterances by the men of old sink deep into the hearts of those who are yet on the threshold of life. They fertilise the soil, and cause it to blossom in a thousand sweet flowers. There is nothing to me, a teacher, and always among the young, more beautiful than the enthusiasms and illusions of youth, their contempt of compromise, their impatience of diplomatic evasions, their fancied impartiality, and their eager partisanship. And I am sometimes of opinion that the government of the world—its laws—its justice—its preaching—its decisions on war and peace—its expenditure—should all be under the control of youth. Before five-and-twenty all but the hardest men are open to higher influences and nobler aims. The lower levels are reached, step by step, through long years of struggle for luxury and position. Let the world be ruled by the adolescent, and let the wisdom of the senes, who have too probably become cynical, disappointed, or selfish, be used for administration alone. Above all, no man should be Autocrat, King, President, or Prime Minister after his five-and-twentieth year. As yet, however, I have made no converts to my opinions, and I fear I shall not live to see this admirable reform.

I have had many pupils, and won some friendship among them, but Celia was my first and best. No one was ever like her in my eyes, so zealous for righteousness, so pitiful for wrongdoers, so sweet in thought. Perhaps we loved her so much—the Captain and I—that we saw in her more virtues than she possessed. It is the way of those who love. What would this world be worth without that power of illusion which clothes our dear ones, while yet in life, with the white robes of Heaven?

"Has she wings somewhere, do you think, Laddy?" said the Captain one evening. Turning over the pages of the Bible, he lighted on a chapter which, he announced to me, bore upon the subject, and he would read it. "Celia's price," he read, commentating as he went along, "is far above rubies. That is perfectly true. The heart of her husband—she shall have a good one—shall safely trust in her. If he can't trust in her, he won't be fit to be her husband. She shall rejoice—there is prophecy for us, Laddy—in time to come. Many daughters—listen to this—have done virtuously, but Celia excels them all. The woman that feareth the Lord she shall be praised. Now, if that does not bear upon the girl, what does?"

It was not possible that our boy-and-girl confidences should remain permanently unchanged, but the change was gradual. I noticed, first of all, that Celia's talk grew less personal and more general. As I followed her lead, we ceased in a measure to refer everything that we read or played to our own thoughts. So that we grew more reserved to each other. An invisible barrier was rising between us that we knew nothing of. It was caused by the passage of the girl into womanhood, imperceptible as the rising of the tide, which you do not notice until you compare your landmarks, and see how the water has gained. It was the transformation of the child, open as the day, candid and unreserved, into the woman—the true emblem of her is this figure of the Veiled Nymph—who hides, nourishes, and guards her secrets, gathering them up in the rich garner of her heart till she can show them all to her husband, and then keep them for her son. A woman without the mystical veil is no woman, but a creature androgynous, amorphous, loathsome. So that Celia would never be again—I see it so well now—what she had been to me. Her face was the same as it had been, set grave at one moment with its fine delicate lines and ethereal look, and at the next bright and laughing like a mountain stream, but always sweet with the same kindness when she looked at me. Only it seemed at times as if I was groping about in the dark for the soul of Celia, and that I found it not.

"Cis," I said, one afternoon—we were in our old place, and she was leaning against the gun looking thoughtfully across the harbour. The tide was out, and instead of the broad lagoon was a boundless stretch of green and black mud intersected with a stream of sea water, up and down which boats could make their way at all tides.

"Cis, do you know that we are changed to each other?"

Almost as I said it I perceived that if Celia was changed to me I was no less changed towards her.

"What is it, Laddy?" she asked, turning gently, and resting her eyes on mine. They were so soft and clear that I could hardly bear to look into them,—a little troubled, too, with wonder, as if she could not understand what I meant. "What is it, Laddy? How are we changed?"

"I don't know. I think, Cis, it is because—because you are growing a woman."

She sat down beside me on the grass. She was so much taller than I that it was nothing for her to lay her hand upon my shoulder. We often walked so. Sometimes I took her arm. But now the gesture humiliated me. I felt angry and hurt. Was I then of such small account that she should change in thought, and yet retain the old familiar fashion, as if it mattered nothing what she said or did to me? It was a shameful and an unworthy feeling.

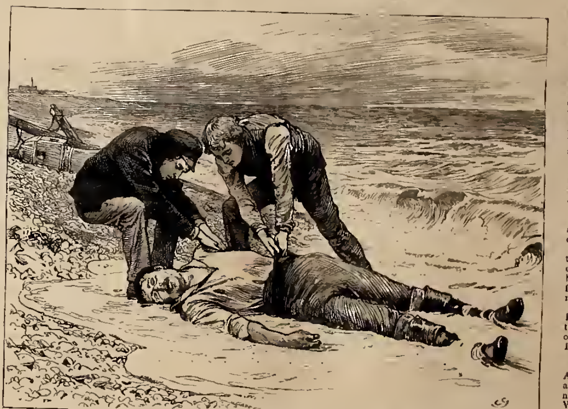
"Because I am grown a woman?" she repeated, quietly. "Yes, I believe I am a woman now."

She was, indeed, a stately, lovely woman, with the tall and graceful figure of Helen, and the pure face of Antigone, elastic in her tread, free in the movements of her shapely limbs, brave in the carriage of her head, full of strength, youth, and activity. Her face was long and oval, but her lips, which is not usual in oval faces, were as full and as mobile as the leaf upon the tree. Her features were straight and delicate. All about her was delicate alike, from the tiny coral ears to the dainty fingers and little feet, which, like mice, went in and out. A maiden formed for love, altogether and wholly lovable; sweet as the new-mown hay, inexhaustible in loveliness—like the Shulamite, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, lovely as Tirzah, a spring of living waters, but as yet a spring shut up, a fountain sealed. And as I looked up at her my heart sank down within me.

"But why should that make a difference between us, Laddy?"

I put her hand from my shoulder roughly, and sprang to my feet, because suddenly my heart overflowed, and words came bubbling to my lips which had to be repressed. I walked to the parapet, and looked across the harbour, battling with myself for a few moments. Then I turned. The girl was looking at me with wonder.

"Why should that make any difference, Laddy?" she repeated.



Once we came upon a dead man.

I was master of myself by this time, and could answer with a smile and lightly.

"Because you have put away the thoughts of a child, Celia. You no longer think or speak as you used to. Not any sudden change, Cis. Do not think that I complain. I was thinking of what we were a couple of years ago, and what we are now. You cannot help it. You show your womanhood in your new armour of reserve. Very bright and beautiful armour it is."

"I meant no reserve, dear Laddy. We always talked together since we were children, have we not? And told each other everything."

"Not lately, Cis, have we?"

She hesitated, and blushed a little. Then she evaded my question.

"Why, who could be more to me than you, Laddy? My companion, my tutor, my brother. What have I to hide from you? Nothing, Laddy, nothing."

"Not that you know of, Cis. But there is a change. I think that we do not talk so freely of our thoughts as we did. Do we?"

She pondered for a moment.

"I thought we did, Laddy. At least, I have not thought anything about it. There is no change indeed, dear Laddy. What if I am grown up, as you say, into a woman?"

"What, indeed, stately Cis? Only girls are so—they wrap themselves up in their own thoughts and become enigmas."

She laughed now.

"What do you know about girls, pray? We have so few thoughts worthy the name that we can hardly be said to wrap ourselves in them. And why should girls be enigmas any more than your own sex, sir?"

"I don't know. Perhaps because we want to find out more than they care to tell us about themselves."

"Perhaps because men always think and talk of women as a class. Why can they not give us individuality? You see, Laddy, we are different from men chiefly because we have no ambition for ourselves. I suppose it is in our nature—so far we are a class—that we desire peace and obscurity for ourselves, and greatness only for those men we care about. I have no hopes for myself in the future, Laddy. But I want to see Leonard famous, and you a great composer of beautiful music, and the dear old Captain happy in your success, and my father to grow in honour and reputation. That is all my prayer for myself and my friends. And I like to think of good men and women working all over the world to make us all better and happier. Perhaps it may come in my way some day to do something quietly for the love of God."

"You do something quietly already, Cis," I said, "because you live as you do live."

"Ah, Laddy, I have so many people who love me. Life is very easy when one is surrounded by the affection of so many. Suppose one had been born in the courts, where the voices are rough and men swear. Look at that troop of miserable men." She pointed to a gang of convicts passing through Liberty Gate. "What have been their temptations? How could they have lived the Christian life?"

"Their standard is lower than yours, Cis. Do you remember the statue of Christ, which was always higher than the tallest man? The higher one's thoughts carry one, the more wonderful, the more unattainable, seems the Christlike life. But our talk has led us into strange paths, Cis. All this because I said you were grown a woman."

"No, sir, you called me names. You said I was an enigma. See now, Laddy, I must never be an enigma to you. I promise this. If ever you think that I am hiding any thought from you ask me what it is, and I will confess it unless it is an unworthy thought, and then I should be ashamed."

"You could not have unworthy thoughts, Cis."

She shook her head.

"Foolish and frivolous thoughts. Vain and selfish thoughts," she said. "Never mind them now. Let us only continue as we always have been—my brother, my kind and sweetfaced brother."

Mine, indeed; but that she did not know. She took my hands in hers, laid her sweet fair cheek to mine, and kissed me on the lips and forehead. I think I feel her kisses still. I did not dare—I could not—return them. For when that ruby red-rose blossom of her lips met mine I trembled in all my limbs.

Think. I was small, mean of appearance, and deformed, but I was past twenty-one years of age. I was a man. And I loved the girl with an unbrotherly love, and with a passion which might even have belonged to a man whose back was straight.

If I trembled when she touched me, just as I rejoiced when I saw her, or heard the rustle of her dress, the kisses which she gave me struck my heart with a coldness as of death. Of course I knew it all along, but there is always a reserve power of illusion in youth, and I may have deceived myself. But now it came home to me with clearness as of crystal that Celia could never, never, by any chance, care for me—in that way.

I realised this in a moment, and pulled myself together with an effort, returning the gentle pressure of her soft warm hand just as if my heart was as calm as her own. Then I answered in commonplace and at random.

"Thank you, Cis. Some day, perhaps, I shall take you at your word, and make you confess all sorts of hidden things. Tutor and pupil is all very well, so is elder brother and younger sister. But you are six inches taller than I already."

I have always thought that this simple speech was just the wisest I ever made in my life, because I was so very near saying what I should have repeated ever after. Had I said what was in my heart, and almost on my lips, I might have destroyed the sweet friendship which existed then, as it still exists, pure and strong as the current of a great river. I thank God solemnly that I refrained my lips. "Whoso," says the wise man, "keepeth his tongue keepeth his soul from trouble." I loved her, that is most true; in those days when I was yet struggling with the impulses of a passionate love, there were moments when the blood ran tingling and coursing through the veins, and when to beat down the words running riot in my brain, was almost beyond my strength. We were so much together, and she was so unconscious. She could not understand how her voice fell upon my soul like the rain upon a thirsty soil. Even when we were apart there was no moment when Celia was not present in my thoughts. All the morning the music of my pupils, even the very scales, sang Celia, Celia, Celia, in accents which varied with my moods, now wild and passionate, now soft and pleading, now hopeful and now despairing.

There was one time—I do not know how long it lasted—a week or a dozen weeks—when I was fain to pretend illness because the misery of crushing this hopeless love was too great for me, and I craved for solitude.

CHAPTER XIV.

ON THE SEASHORE

In those days the new suburb, which is now a large town, had hardly yet been begun; there was no sea wall along the beach outside the harbour, and half a mile beyond the rampart you might reach a place perfectly lonely and deserted. There was a common, a strip of waste land where the troops drilled and exercised, and beyond the common an old castle, a square and rather ugly pile built by Henry VIII., when he set up the fortresses of Sandown, Walmer, and Deal. It was surrounded by a star fort, and stood on the very edge of the sea, with a sloping face of stone which ran down to the edge of the water at low tide and into the waves at high, protecting the moat which surrounded the town. As a boy I regarded this fortress with reverence. There had been a siege there at the time of the Civil War. It was held for the King, but the governor, after a little fighting with his Roundhead besiegers, surrendered the castle, and then the town itself capitulated. One pictured the townsmen on the wall, looking out to see the fortunes of the battle, the men for Church and King side by side with their sour-faced brethren who were for God and country, the discomfiture of the former when the Royal Standard was hauled down, and the joy of the Puritans when their party marched in at the town gates. Of course in my young imagination I supposed that the town walls were just the same then as now, with their bastions, curtains, ravelins, and glacis. It was a lonely place in those days, fit for a dreamy boy, or a moody man. Beyond the castle the beach stretched far far away under a low cliff of red earth, curving round in a graceful line; behind the beach was a narrow strip of ground covered with patches of furze, whose yellow and sickly sweet blossoms seemed to flourish independently of all seasons; on its scanty edge grew sea poppies; and here, amid the marshy ground which lay about, we used to hunt as boys for vipers, adders, and the little evvet, the alligator of Great Britain, who is as long as a finger and as venomous as a lamb. Sometimes, too, we would find gipsy encampments planted among the furze, with their gaudily painted carts, their black tents—every real Rommany has a black tent like the modern Bedawi or the ancient dweller in the tents of Kedar. While we looked at the bright-eyed children and the marvellous old women crouching over the fire of sticks and the great black pot, there would come out of the tents one or two girls with olive skins and almond eyes—not the almond eyes of Syria, but bolder, darker, and brighter. They would come smiling in Leonard's face, asking him to cross his hand with silver. When he said he had no silver they would tell him his fortune for nothing, reading the lines of his palm with a glibness which showed their knowledge of the art. But it was always a beautiful fortune, with love, fighting, wife, and children in it. Behind this acre or two of furze stood, all by itself, a mill, and there was a story about this mill because its centre pillar, on which the vanes revolved, had once been part of the mainmast of a French frigate taken in action. And higher up the beach again—because this was a place full of historic associations—stood two old earthwork forts at intervals of half a mile. The ramparts were green with turf, the grass all blown inland, and lying on the days of summer in long swathes upon the slopes, beaten down by the sea breeze; the moats were dry, and these, too, were grown over with grass; there was an open place at the back where once had been a gate and a drawbridge; there was a stonework well in the open part of the enclosure, only some inclined to the belief that it was only a sham well and masked, prætexto sub nomine, a subterranean passage to the Castle; the fronts of those forts were all destroyed and dragged down by the advancing tide. No ruined city in Central America, no temple of the Upper Nile, no Tell of Kouyounjik could be more desolate, more lonely, more full of imaginative associations than these forts standing upon the unpeopled beach in a solitude broken only by the footstep of the Coastguard. Before Leonard went away, and when we were boys together, this place was to us as the uttermost part of the world, a retreat accessible on a holiday morning, where one could sit under the cliff or on the grassy slopes of the fort; where I, at least, could dream away the hours. Before us the waves ran along the shingle with a murmurous sh—sh—sh, or, if the day was rough, rolled up their hollow threatening crests like the upper teeth of a hungry monster's jaw, and then dashed in rage upon the stones, dragging them down with a crash and roar which rolled unceasingly along the beach. In the summer months it was Leonard's delight at such times to strip and plunge to swim over and through the great waves, riding to meet them, battling and wrestling till he grew tired, and came out red all over, and glowing with the exercise. After a storm the beach was strewn with odds and ends; there were dead cuttle fish—Victor Hugo's pieuvre—their long and ugly arms lying powerless for mischief on the shingle; their backbone was good for rubbing out ink, and we had stores enough to rub out all the ink of the Alexandrian Library. There were ropes of seaweed thicker than the stoutest cables; if you untwisted the coils you found in them strange creatures dead and alive—the sea mouse, with its irridescent tufts of hair; little crabs with soft shells killed by the rolling of the pebbles; shells inhabited by scaly intruders, cuckoos among crabs, which poked out hard spiky legs, and were ready to do battle for their stolen house; starfish, ugly and poisonous; sea nettles and all kinds of sea-beetles. And lying outside the weed were bits of things from ships; candles, always plenty of tallow candles; broken biscuits, which like so many of Robinson Crusoe's stores were spoiled by the sea-water; empty bottles; bits of wood; and once we came upon a dead man rolling up and down. Leonard rushed into the water, and we pulled him up between two waves. He was dressed in sailor's clothing, and wore great sea boots, his face was bruised by the stones, and his black hair was cut short. Also he wore a moustache, so that he could not possibly be an English sailor. When we had got him beyond the reach of the waves, we ran to tell the Coastguard, who was on the cliff half a mile away, telescope in hand.

First he swore at us personally and individually for troubling him at all with the matter. Then, because Leonard "up and spake" in answer, he changed the object of his swearing, and began to swear at large, addressing the much-enduring ocean, which made no reply, but went on with its business of rolling along the beach. Then he swore at himself for being a Coastguardsman. This took altogether some quarter of an hour of good hard swearing, the excellent Solitary finding greater freedom as he went on. And he would have continued swearing, I believe, for many weeks if necessary, only that a thought struck him suddenly, like unto a fist going home in the wind, and he pulled up and gasped.

"Did you, did you?" he asked, "look in that dead man's pockets?"

We said "No."

Then he became thoughtful, and swore quite to himself between the teeth, as if he was firing volleys of oaths down his own throat.

"Now, lads," he said at last, "what you've got to do is this. "You've got to go straight away to the parish," which I suppose he took for a police office, "and tell the parish to come here and look after that man. I'm not stationed here to look after dead men. I'm for live smugglers, I am. You tell the parish that. Not but what it's proper for you to tell the Coastguard everything that goes on along the coast. And next time you fish up a drownded man you come straight to me first. No manner o' use to look in their pockets, because they've never got nothing in 'em. Them nasty fishes, you see, they gets into the pockets, and pulls out the purses." His belief in the emptiness of drowned men's pockets did not prevent him from testing its correctness. At least we looked back, and observed him searching diligently. But I suppose he was right, because the "parish" certainly found nothing in the pockets.

. . . .

It was to this place that I came, as to a wilderness, to struggle with myself. Here I was free to think, to brood, and to bring railing accusations against Providence because I could not marry Celia. Sitting on the lonely beach I could find a gloomy satisfaction in piling up my grievances against high Heaven. Who was I that I should be singled out for special and signal misfortune? Had I been as other men, tall, straight, and comely, Celia might have loved me. Had I come to her gallant and strong, rich and noble, one born in high station, the son of a brave and successful father, I might have had a chance.

Day after day I wandered here, brooding over my own wrongs, with bitter and accusing soul. The voice of the sea echoed the sorrow of my heart; the long roll from left to right of the ebbing or the rising wave was the setting of a song whose words were all of despair; the dancing of the sunlit waves brought no joy; my heart was dead to the blue sky, flecked with the white wing of seagull, and dotted along the distant horizon with the distant sails of passing ships. It pleased me to lie there, with my chin upon my hand, thinking of what ought to have been. During this time I was with Celia as little as possible, and at home not at all. Both she and the Captain, I remember now, were considerate, and left me alone, to worry through with the trouble, whatever it was. It was not all hopeless; it was partly that for the first time in my life I thoroughly understood what I was, what my prospects were, and what I might have been. I said at the beginning that it takes a long time for a hunchback entirely to realise what his affliction means; how it cuts him off from other men's pursuits; and how it isolates him from his youth upwards. I saw before me, as plainly as I see it now, a solitary life; I thought that the mediocrity of my abilities would never allow me to become a composer of eminence, or anything better than the organist of a church and the teacher of music in a country town; I should always be poor, I should never have the love of woman, I should always be a kind of servant, I should live in obscurity and die in oblivion. Most of us live some such lives; at least they can be reduced, in hard terms, to some such colourless, dreary wastes of weary years; but we forget the compensations. My dream was true of myself; I have actually lived the life of a mediocre musician; I have few friends; and yet I have been perfectly happy. I did not marry Celia; that I may premise at once; and yet I have been happy without her. For I retained her love, the pure and calm affection of a sister, which is with me still, making much of me, petting and spoiling me almost while I write, as it did twenty years ago. Surely there was never any woman before so good as Celia. The vision of my life was prophetic; it looked intolerable, and it has been more than pleasant. Say to yourself, you have thirty years to live; you will rise every morning to drudgery; you will live poorly, and will make no money; you will have no social consideration; you will make few friends; you will fail to achieve any reputation in your profession; you will be a lonely man—is that a prospect to charm any one? Add to this, that your life will be contented, that you will not dislike your work, that you will not live for yourself alone, that your days will be cheered by the steady sunshine of affection; and the prospect changes. Everything in the world is of magic. To some this old town of ours has seemed dirty, crowded, mean; to me it is picturesque, full of human interests, rich in association. To some my routine would be maddening; to me it is graceful and pleasant. To some—to most—a career which has no prizes has no joys. To me it is full of joys. We are what we think ourselves; we see everything though the haze of imagination; why—I am told that there is no such thing as colour in nature, but that it is an effect of light—so long as the effect is produced I do not care; let me only thank the Creator for this bunch of sweet peas in a glass before me, with their soft and delicate tints more beautiful than ever human pencil drew. We see what we think we see; people are what we think they are; events are what they seem to us; the man who least enjoys the world is the man who has the faculty of stripping things of their "effects;" who takes the colour from the flower, or the disinterestedness from love. That is common sense, and I would rather be without it.

One evening—it was after dusk and rather cold—I was still sitting in the enjoyment of a profound misery, when I became aware of a Voice addressing me. The Voice was inside my head, and there was no sound, but I heard it plainly. I do not pretend that there was anything supernatural about the fact, nor do I pretend to understand how it happened. It sprang from the moody and half-distracted condition of my mind: it was the return of the overstretched spring: it was the echo of my accustomed thoughts, for the last fortnight pent up and confined in narrow cells to make room for the unaccustomed thoughts. This is, exactly, what the Voice said to me:—

"You were a poor Polish boy, living in exile, and Heaven sent you the Captain to educate you, give you the means of living, and make you a Christian gentleman when you might have grown up among the companions of profligate sailors. You are an orphan, with neither mother, brother, nor sister. You have no relations to care for you at all. Heaven sent you Leonard to be your brother, and Celia to be your sister. From your earliest infancy you have been wrapped in the love of these two. You are deformed, it is true; you cannot do the things that some men delight in. Heaven has sent you the great gift of Music: it is another sense by which you are lifted above the ordinary run of men. Every hour in the day it is your privilege as a musician to soar above the earth, and lose yourself in Divine harmonies. You have all this—and you complain.

"Ungrateful! With these favours you sit here crying because you cannot have one thing more. You would have Celia love you, and marry you. Are you worthy of such a girl?

"Rouse yourself. Go back to your work. Show a brave and cheerful face to the good old man your benefactor. Let Celia cease to wonder whether she has pained you, and to search her heart for words she has never spoken; work for her and with her again; let her never know that you have hungered after the impossible even to sickness.

"And one more thing. Remember Leonard's parting words. Are you blind or are you stupid? With what face could you meet him when he comes home, and say, 'Leonard, you left me to take care of Celia; you trusted to my keeping the secret of your own love. I have betrayed your confidence, and stolen away her heart.' Think of that."

The Voice ceased, and I arose and walked home, changed.

The Captain looked up as I entered the room, in a wistful, sad way.

"Forgive me, sir," I said. "I have been worrying myself—never mind what about, but it is over now, and I am sorry to have given you trouble."

"You have fought it down, then, Laddy?" he asked, pulling off his spectacles.

I started. Did he, then, read my soul? Was my secret known to all the world?

Only to him, I think.

"When I was a young fellow," he went on, walking up and down the room with his hands behind him, "I fell in love—with a young lady—I believed that young lady to be an angel, and I dare say she was. But I found that she couldn't be my angel, so I went to sea, which was a very good way of getting through that trouble. I had a spell on the West Coast—caught yellow fever—chased the slavers—forgot it."

I laughed.

"Do you recommend me to go out slave-chasing, sir?"

"You might do worse, boy. She is a beautiful creature, Laddy; she is a pearl among maidens. I have always loved her. I have watched her with you, Laddy, and all the love is on your side. I have seen the passion grow in you; you have been restless and fidgety. I remembered my own case, and I waited. No, my boy, it can't be: I wish it could; she doesn't look on you in that light."

After supper he spoke allegorically.

"I've known men—good men, too—grumble at their posts in an action. What does it matter, Laddy, when the enemy has struck, where any one man has to do his duty? The thing is to do it."

This parable had its personal application, like most of the Captain's admonitions.

. . . .

"You have been unlike yourself, Laddy, lately," said Celia.

"Yes, Cis, I have been ill, I think."

"Not fretting, Laddy, over things?"

I shook my head.

"It seems hard, poor boy, sometimes, does it not? But your life will not be wasted, though you spend it all in teaching music."

She thought I had been brooding over my deformity and poverty. Well, so I had, in a sense.

Enough of my fit. The passion disappeared at length, the love remained. Side by side with such a girl as Celia one must have been lower than human not to love her. Such a love is an education. I know little of grown women, because I spend my time among girls, and have had no opportunity of studying woman's nature except that of Celia. But I can understand what is meant when I read that the love of woman may raise a man to Heaven or drag him down to Hell. Out of this earthly love which we share in common with the lowest, there spring for all of us, as we know, flowers of rare and wondrous beauty. And those who profit most by these blossoms sometimes express their nature to the world in music and in verse.

(To be continued)

DR. NEWMAN ON THE ANGLICAN "VIA MEDIA" *

THIS work, the first volume of which is now before us, may certainly claim to rank as a literary curiosity. For more than forty years the world has known Dr. Newman as a controversialist before whose logical spear few could hope to stand and live; now at last we find him in controversy with his former self. Dr. Newman of the Oratory here devotes himself to the refutation and exposure of what he now deems the mis-statements, baseless assumptions, and fallacious reasonings, put forth, exactly forty years ago, by the Rev. J. H. Newman, Fellow of Oriel, and Vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford, an opponent whom he treats with just the same strict measure of rigour and candour that he would show to any other. In the "Lectures on the Prophetical Office of the Church," which originally appeared in 1837, and are here republished, Dr. Newman's main object was, as he says in the introductory Lecture, "to furnish an approximation in one or two points towards a correct theory of the duties and office of the Catholic Church," a theory which should hold together, or be consistent, should be justified by the history of the Christian Dispensation, and "which is neither Protestant nor Roman, but proceeds along that Via Media, which, as in other things so here, is the appropriate path for sons of the Church of England to walk in." This attempt brought him necessarily across the existing teaching of Rome, and he had to attack it because, as he says in the same place, "it has pre-occupied the ground, and we cannot erect our own structure without partly breaking down, partly using what we find upon it." But, even at that date, Dr. Newman had to admit that there was force in the objection that, "while Protestantism and Popery are real religions, no one can doubt about them; they have furnished the mould in which nations have been cast;" this Via Media for which he was seeking an intellectual shape, and a logical standing ground, "viewed at an integral system, has never had existence except on paper." If the very limited space at our disposal permitted, it would be an interesting task to enter at some length upon the reasons put forward forty years ago by Dr. Newman for thinking this Via Media theory of his, though he allowed it had never been realised, "and that for 1,800 years the true Gospel, as regards his special aspect of it, had never been preached to the world," was yet "the nearest approximation to that primitive truth which Ignatius and Polycarp enjoyed, and which the nineteenth century has virtually lost," and upon the trenchant criticism which in subjoined notes he here applies to the many weak points he now detects in it. That in this curious controversy the Dr. Newman of our day has very much the advantage over his antagonist will be manifest to almost every one. In 1837 he had already conceded far too much to the claims of Church authority to be able, logically, to stop short where he then did. But, perhaps, the most striking and interesting portion of the book is the second section of the Preface, which is devoted to an explanation of the discordance which Dr. Newman allows at first sight presents itself between the formal teaching of Catholicism and its popular and political manifestations—"the active and political power . . . . expressively called Popery." As regards this discordance, Dr. Newman's explanation seems to us clear, and intellectually complete from his own point of view, though it will not satisfy, and he can hardly have put it forward with a view to aim at its satisfying those who deny the one premiss on which he proceeds all along—that the Roman Church really is all that she claims to be. But, pleasant as it would be to dwell farther on a work in all ways worthy of its illustrious author, we must bring our few remarks to a close, trusting that we have said enough to call attention to its appearance.

Magazines

IN a recent number of the Nineteenth Century, Sir Julius Vogel put forth a proposal for uniting the colonies of the British Empire—including the Mother Country—in one grand Confederation. Lord Blachford, in the October issue, examines this scheme, and pronounces against its expediency on the ground of the divergent interests of the various colonies. We agree with Lord Blachford in thinking that any premature efforts towards Confederation would do more harm than good, but at the same time we rejoice that the Whig idea of treating colonies as troublesome encumbrances, to be got rid of as soon as possible, is no longer fashionable. Whatever else may happen in the future, we may confidently hope that no colony will part from us in anger as the United States parted.—The versatility of Mr. Gladstone's intellect is wonderful. Here in the midst of all his other avocations he has found time to write a learned article on "The Colour-Sense." His illustrations are chiefly drawn from Homer; and he concludes that this sense has been gradually developed, and that a modern child of three has more perception of varieties of colour than the keenest-eyed men of the olden times.—Professor Colvin is very severe on the Restorationists, and thinks they have done more mischief to the ancient buildings of Europe than the ravages of Time and War. The curious thing is that this discovery seems only lately to have been made, when most of the harm done is beyond recall, although Mr. Ruskin, whose opinion on such matters might have been expected to exercise considerable influence, has always opposed these wholesale alterations.—The "Symposium" on "The Soul and Future Life" is concluded in this issue. As Canon Barry observes, the Freethinkers seem to fight more fiercely against each other than against their recognised opponents, who believe in a divine revelation.

Mr. Lowe, in his noteworthy essay in the Fortnightly, entitled "A New Reform Bill," sticks manfully to the colours which he hoisted in 1867. Now, as then, he opposes any further lowering of the franchise. Genuine Liberalism, he says, is beyond the comprehension of a democracy; in France universal suffrage is coincident with despotism, in America with political corruption, and in England the extension of the franchise has only served to seat Toryism in power.—Mr. Hutton's reminiscences of the late Walter Bagehot are highly attractive. He was a bright, vivacious, witty man, epithets which can be rarely applied to writers on finance.—Mr. Giffen examines the phenomena of the long-continued depression of trade, and shows that it originated in the breaking down of the bad business of foreign investment, and that our home-industries have been very slightly affected.—The late Mr. Nassau Senior's "Conversations with M. Thiers in 1852" are very interesting, containing as they do observations on the Roman Expedition in 1849, and many trenchant remarks, some of them by no means flattering, on the character of our self-satisfied nation.—Dr. Bridges writes a very readable though somewhat discursive paper on the "Moral and Social Aspects of Health."

In the Contemporary Dr. Tuke writes an interesting summary of the Blue Book recently issued on the Lunacy Laws. On the whole he concludes that the existing safeguards are sufficient to prevent persons who are wrongfully alleged to be insane from being deprived of their liberty, and he indicates the objections which apply to the transfer of all lunatics from private institutions to public asylums. Nevertheless, it seems to us that such a transfer would be highly beneficial, because the pecuniary interest of the keepers of private asylums induces them to retain rather than to cure their patients, and because friends and relatives are often only too ready in this manner to get rid of troublesome persons. Once in an asylum the taint of insanity is on a man's reputation, and, in spite of Commissioners' visits, it is very difficult for him to prove his right to freedom.—Mr. Innes has written two papers on the double trial of Our Saviour, namely, that before the Jewish authorities and that before the Roman tribunal. In the present paper he examines the conduct of Pontius Pilate, and combats the conclusion arrived at by Sir J. F. Stephen to the effect that if the Roman Governor believed in good faith that the condemnation of the prisoner was necessary for the preservation of the public peace, he was right.—Mr. George Howell supplies much useful information on the important subject of "Apprenticeship," and points out how much could be done by the City Guilds in encouraging technical education, and that, with the advance of such education, the seven years' term, hitherto obtaining, might be reasonably shortened.

In the New Quarterly we have a pleasant gossiping paper by the Rev. F. Arnold on "Lord Chancellors and Chief Justices since Lord Campbell," embracing biographies of, among others, Lords St. Leonard's, Westbury, Chelmsford, Sir Alexander Cockburn, Lord Selborne, and Lord Cairns.—Next, a memoir of Sir John Sinclair, the indefatigable improver of Caithnessshire land.—Then a paper advocating the transfer of the railways to the Government; and a brace of novelettes by Mrs. Lynn Lynton and Mrs. Trollope.

People in this country are apt to regard Algeria as rather a failure from the Colonial point of view, and no doubt it does not attract Frenchmen as Canada and Australia attract Englishmen; still, judging from Miss Betham-Edwards' agreeable sketch in Fraser, it is making rapid progress. The exports have multiplied threefold in five-and-twenty years, much wheat and barley is exported, good wine is made, and palatable beer is brewed, while the Alfa grass supplies a raw material for paper, and the dwarf palm for cordage.—"Clericality" is an essay reflecting on the tendency of our modern clergy to separate themselves into a caste. We do not, however, agree with the author in his remarks on clerical dress. Surely the present costume is an improvement on the waiter-like attire of thirty years ago.—Madame Jessie White Mario gives a spirited account of the unfortunate Garibaldian enterprise in France in 1870-1. Chiefly owing to the opposition of the clergy, the "red shirts" were very coldly received by the bulk of the inhabitants.

Macmillan opens with a learned paper by Mr. Gladstone on "Homeric Geography"—a subject more interesting to scholars than to the general public.—Next we have an account of the accidental discovery of an MS., by the first Lord Halifax, who was Privy Seal at the time of Lord Russell's execution.—Then a paper on the smuggling difficulty at Gibraltar. Our own opinion has always been that, as we hold Gibraltar for military purposes, we should endeavour to assimilate the "Rock" tariff to that of Spain. This is the object of the recently promulgated Customs' regulations; but as these tend to imperil various commercial interests which have grown up under the present system, a considerable outcry has been raised, with which the writer of the above essay appears to sympathise.

There is plenty of "go" in the new story in Blackwood, entitled "Mine is Thine," and the instalment this month is especially amusing. "The Irony of Life" is an interesting paper, though some of the illustrations, such as that of the ballet-girl at home and on the stage, are rather conventional.—"American Diplomacy in the East" contains some severe reflections on Mr. Schuyler for employing his diplomatic leisure in sending sensational letters to the newspapers.—"The Khedive's Egypt" is a review of Mr. De Leon's lately published book. The writer points out the misery inflicted on the people by the Khedive's system, and recommends him to place his affairs in the hands of trustees.—Some of Heine's ballads are very neatly and faithfully translated by Mr. Theodore Martin.

The planet Mars has been shining more brightly during August and September than for two and twenty years previous, and now by means of a powerful telescope two of his moons have been discovered. An interesting account of this appears in the Cornhill; where also will be found, among other attractive papers, a description of a former Indian famine, and a pleasant essay, chiefly based on Mr. James Thorne's book, on the Environs of London.

Biography is, as usual, to the fore in Temple Bar. The sketches of the younger Pitt, of Mrs. Centlivre, Mrs. Jordan, Bunsen, and D'Azeglio, are all good.—"A Lodging for the Night" is a forcibly-told but rather horrible story of Paris four hundred years ago.

Here we must stop, and simply acknowledge All the Year Round, Tinsley's, London Society, Belgravia, Gentleman's, Good Words, Sunday Magazine, Lippincott's, Argosy, Dublin University, Leisure Hour, Month, Atlantic Monthly, Chambers', and sundry others, including Messrs. Cassell's numerous serial publications.

A ROMAN RELIC

THERE is no more interesting collection of antiquities in the kingdom than the Brittano-Roman Museum at York. While wandering among Samian and Durobrivan ware, glass of opaline lustre and sepulchral ornaments, the visitor occasionally finds some object where all possess a sadness of their own, which especially touches his heart. Such are the child's toys of baked clay, or the little Samian jar with the minium still staining the bottom, which is thought to have been a child's paint pot. These trifling articles appeal to our common human nature, and affect us with regard to long past ages much as a mother might be affected on discovering in her nursery the little shoe of a child she had lost. But a still more touching relic has lately been added to the collection, the back hair of a Roman girl. The tresses of rich auburn yet retain their gloss after the darkness of sixteen or seventeen centuries, and are loosely pinned together, just as they were buried, by two jet pins of the kind not uncommonly discovered in Roman graves. On making excavations to lay the foundations of the new railway station at York in 1875 a stone coffin was found, which contained a leaden one, and inside it were traces of a cedar-wood shell. Liquid gypsum had been poured into this, which, on being opened, showed the form of a slender girl. The hair was perfectly preserved, as visitors to the Museum may now see for themselves.

Among the mingled feelings which these tresses, recovered from so many centuries of darkness, call forth—wonder, pity and awe, curiosity speedily asks Byron's question,

> But who was she, the lady of the dead?

And then, remembering her youth, muses,

> A cloud
> Might gather o'er her beauty, and a gloom
> In her dark eye, prophetic of the doom
> Heaven gives its favourites, early death.

No such questioning, however, can wring her secret from the tomb, and calling fancy to our aid we fall to guessing who was the owner of these luxuriant folds of hair. She was evidently of high birth, perhaps the daughter of the Dux Britanniarum himself, who commanded the victorious Sixth Legion which was stationed at York. Her father, whoever he was, may have smoothed these rich tresses before setting out to quell some outbreak of the northern barbarians, and a young Roman warrior, humming the while Horace's song on Neæra's hair, festooned them with strings of dusky pearls on his return with her sire victorious from the banks of the Tay. Was she the chief ornament of the brilliant Roman society which in Hadrian's time centred round York, then the chief city of Britain? Or was she related to the Emperor Severus, who died there in the next century? Or, once more, was she maid of honour to the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine (himself, perhaps, born at York, and certainly proclaimed Emperor there A.D. 306), to Helena, the discoverer of the True Cross, whose name is yet borne in mind in East Anglia from the dedication of many churches to her? How thankful would the visitor who stands a moment before the back hair of this Roman girl be for an answer to these speculations! Beyond the fact that in the midst of the martial society and the gaieties of the numerous Roman country houses round York, in the midst of her beauty and her conquests, whether maid or newly-married bride, black-robed Death claimed her, as she may have heard in her childhood's fairy tales that he erstwhile carried off the Pheræan Alcestis, the most diligent investigation is baffled. Imagination and fancy alike must own themselves vanquished. The matter-of-fact archæology of this busy age can discourse learnedly on the mode of her sepulture, and compare the stone coffin in which she was laid with the stone chest discovered near the road leading from Heslington to Grimston, which also contained traces of a female form and remains of her trinkets, earrings, bracelets, and glass beads; but the mind is in no humour to listen while contemplating these tresses. Here the heart and the affections hold sway. Better let them fashion their own story, inadequate though it seem to the cold eye of science. That bystander must possess an unenviable temperament who does not feel a thrill of pity for the unknown girl. One of her own writers first uttered the noble sentiment, "I am a man, and count all humanity akin to me."

A far more interesting theme for inquiry is opened by the conjecture, Did she die in hope with any grasp of Christianity? Dismissing the conversion of Britain by St. Paul as a mere guess, and that of King Lucius as a legend, there can be no doubt that the faith did gradually tincture Keltic barbarism and Roman civilisation in the second and third centuries. Whence could the owner of these tresses gather hopes of a resurrection? She probably lived after the time of Claudia, daughter of the British king Cogidubnus and wife of Pudens, himself a friend of Timothy; but tidings of the new religion might easily be disseminated through the land from the Eastern merchants who resorted to Cornwall for its tin. Or did she die like her forefathers in an hereditary belief of the old Pagan deities, resigned to the Fates, and looking on to Charon's bark, the loveless Styx, and the realms of dark Proserpine, while the images of the Deæ Matres (such as have been found in Yorkshire) and other newly-accepted divinities looked on with cold unyielding eyes as life slowly ebbed away? Here again baffled curiosity can but lay her hand on her mouth and be silent, reverently uttering the assured conviction of the Patriarch, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

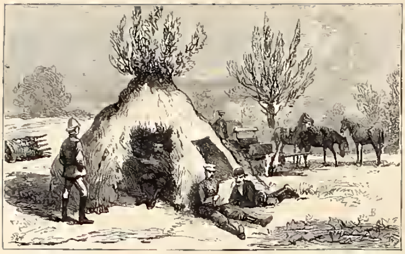
At all events we can easily realise the damsel's burial at the side of the great North Road, just as the celebrated names of her country's past glories sleep beside the Appian Way. A sympathising crowd from the neighbouring villas attends to swell the train of Libitina. The legionaries on the adjacent city walls lean sadly on the battlements beside their grounded weapons, for even their rough hearts have been not insensible to the grace and courtesy of the dead. Uncouthly-clad Brigantes look on, wondering at the unwonted ceremonies—the flowers and odours, the men in black, the women in white garments, marshalled by the designator (chief undertaker), the præficæ (mourning women), singing their dirges, the buffoons (strange contrast to the general gloom); then the purple-covered couch on which the body is carried, with these tresses crowned, it may well have been, with the wild roses of our own hedgerows; finally her relations and friends, her father perhaps, distinguished by his stoical indifference to the general grief. After the offerings of the Manes, the friends adjourn to the Silicernium or funeral feast—that mockery of feasting as well after a modern as an ancient funeral. And finally comes the blank in household life, the unavailing regret, the want of the buried one's presence at every meal, which must have touched even Romans, and spite of his outward calm have wrung the father's heart.

Such are the reflections induced by these tresses so long shut up in darkness. Little did her friends think when they laid her to rest what changes would take place in this distant province before these relics of their lost one should again see the light of day. And now, over the spot where she has slept so long, with rattle of mighty wheels and swift pulsations of steam, the heavy express trains rush on, in a few hours to pass beyond Hadrian's Wall into the Ultima Thule of the Romans, the mystic land of sea fog and savages. Let us take one more glance at the myrrhine hair in the case before us, and then pass on reverentially murmuring the last words uttered as the grave closed round it hundreds of years ago, Ave, anima candida, molliter cubent ossa.

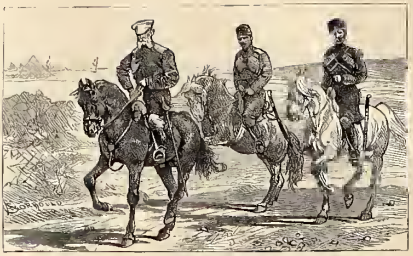
M. G. WATKINS

---

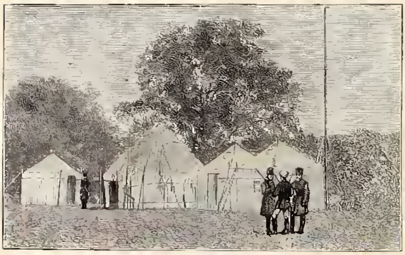
* The Via Media of the Anglican Church. Illustrated in Lectures, Letters, and Tracts written between 1830 and 1841. By J. H. Newman. With a Preface and Notes (2 vols.: Pickering).



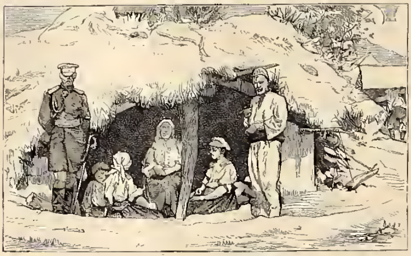
FIELD-QUARTERS OF THE "SCOTSMAN" AND "NEW YORK HERALD" AT PLEVNA



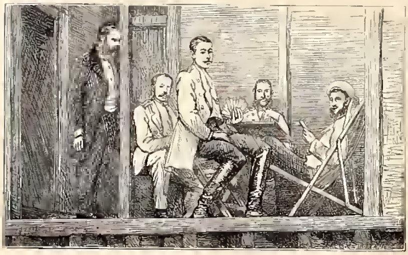
PRINCE MENTSCHIKOFF AT GORNY STUDEN



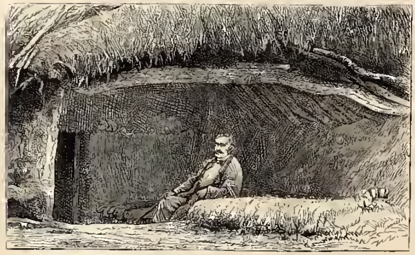
THE CZAREVITCH'S TENT AT OBRETENIK



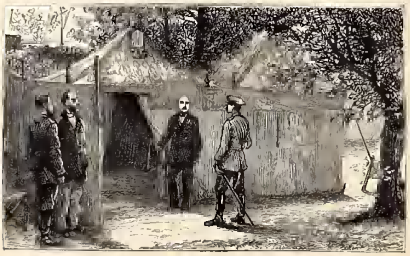
GENERAL STRUKOFF AT GORNY STUDEN



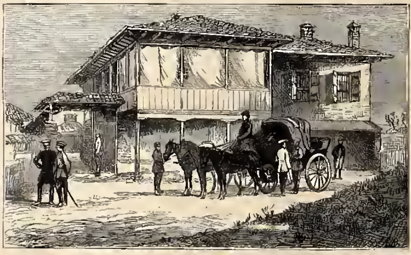
GORNY STUDEN—A GAME AT CARDS



PRINCE CERKASKY, GOVERNOR OF BULGARIA IN HIS HOUSE AT GORNY STUDEN

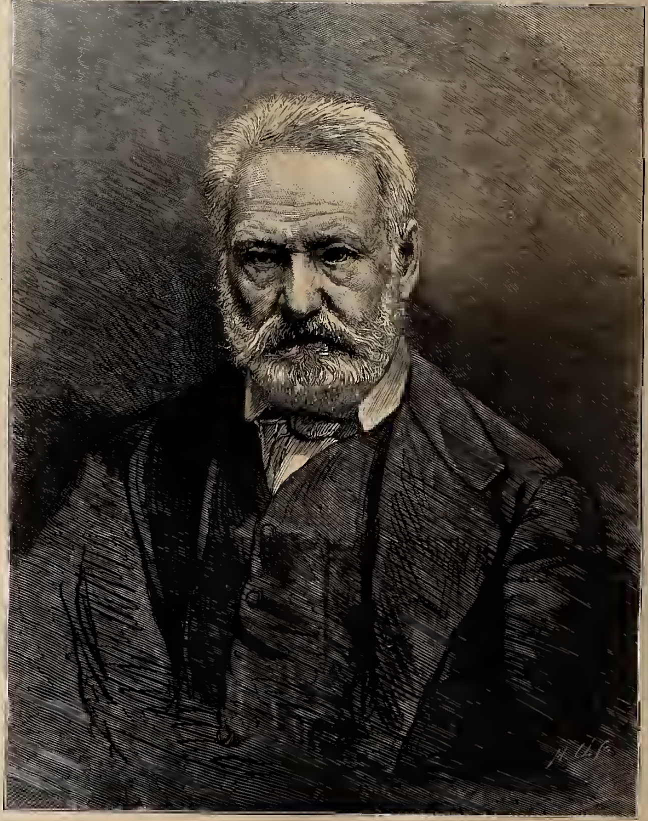


THE IMPERIAL TENTS AT BIELA



THE RESIDENCE OF THE CZAR AT GORNY STUDEN

WITH THE RUSSIANS—PHOTOGRAPHY IN THE FIELD



COMTE VICTOR MARIE HUGO

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

PREFACE.

THIS work is more than opportune; it is imperative. I publish it.—V. H. Paris, Oct. 1, 1877.

NOTE.——This work was written twenty-six years ago at Brussels, during the first months of exile. It was begun on the 14th December, 1851, and on the day following the Author's arrival in Belgium, and was finished on the 5th May, 1852, as though Chance had willed that the anniversary of the death of the First Bonaparte should be countersigned by the condemnation of the Second. It is also Chance which, through a combination of work, of cares, and of bereavements, has delayed the publication of this History until this extraordinary year 1877. In causing the recital of events of the past to coincide with the events of to-day has Chance had any purpose? We hope not. As we have just said, the story of the Coup d'État was written by a hand still hot from the combat against the Coup d'État. The exile immediately became an historian. He carried away this crime in his angered memory, and he was resolved to lose nothing of it. Hence this book. The manuscript of 1851 has been very little revised. It remains what it was, abounding in details, and living, it might be said bleeding, with real facts. The Author constituted himself an interrogating Judge; all his companions of the struggle and of exile came to give evidence before him. He has added his testimony to theirs. Now History is in possession of it. It will judge. If God wills, the publication of this book will shortly be terminated. The continuation and conclusion will appear on the Second of December. An appropriate date.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

I.

"SECURITY"

ON December 1, 1851, Charras[*] shrugged his shoulders and unloaded his pistols. In truth, the belief in the possibility of a Coup d'État had become humiliating. The supposition of such illegal violence on the part of M. Louis Bonaparte vanished upon serious consideration. The great question of the day was manifestly the Devincq election; it was clear that the Government was only thinking of that matter. As to a conspiracy against the Republic and against the People, how could any one premeditate such a plot? Where was the man capable of entertaining such a dream? For a tragedy there must be an actor, and here assuredly the actor was wanting. To outrage Right, to suppress the Assembly, to abolish the Constitution, to strangle the Republic, to overthrow the Nation, to sully the Flag, to dishonour the Army, to suborn the Clergy and the Magistracy, to succeed, to triumph, to govern, to administer, to exile, to banish, to transport, to ruin, to assassinate, to reign, with such complicities that the law at last resembles a foul bed of corruption. What! All these enormities were to be committed! And by whom? By a Colossus? No, by a dwarf. People laughed at the notion. They no longer said What a crime! but What a farce! For after all they reflected; heinous crimes require stature. Certain crimes are too lofty for certain hands. A man who would achieve an 18th

---

[*] Colonel Charras was Under-Secretary of State in 1848, and Acting Secretary of War under the Provisional Government.

Brumaire must have Arcola in his past and Austerlitz in his future. The art of becoming a great scoundrel is not accorded to the first comer. People said to themselves, Who is this son of Hortense? He has Strasbourg behind him instead of Arcola, and Boulogne in place of Austerlitz. He is a Frenchman, born a Dutchman, and naturalised a Swiss; he is a Bonaparte crossed with a Verhuell, he is only celebrated for the ludicrousness of his imperial attitude, and he who would pluck a feather from his eagle would risk finding a goose's quill in his hand. This Bonaparte does not pass currency in the army, he is a counterfeit image less of gold than of lead, and assuredly French soldiers will not give us the change for this false Napoleon in rebellion, in atrocities, in massacres, in outrages, in treason. If he should attempt roguery it would miscarry. Not a regimant would stir. Besides, why should he make such an attempt? Doubtless he has his suspicious side, but why suppose him an absolute villain? Such extreme outrages are beyond him; he is incapable of them physically, why judge him capable of them morally? Has he not pledged honour? Has he not said, "No one in Europe doubts my word?" Let us fear nothing. To this could be answered, Crimes are committed either on a grand or on a mean scale. In the first category there is Cæsar; in the second there is Mandrin. Cæsar passes the Rubicon, Mandrin bestrides the gutter. But wise men interposed, "Are we not prejudiced by offensive conjectures? This man has been exiled and unfortunate? Exile enlightens, misfortune corrects."

For his part Louis Bonaparte protested energetically. Facts abounded in his favour. Why should he not act in good faith? He had made remarkable promises. Towards the end of October, 1848, then a candidate for the Presidency, he was calling at No. 37, Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne, on a certain personage, to whom he remarked, "I wish to have an explanation with you. They slander me. Do I give you the impression of a madman? They think that I wish to revivify Napoleon. There are two men whom a great ambition can take for its models, Napoleon and Washington. The one is a man of Genius, the other is a man of Virtue. It is ridiculous to say, 'I will be a man of Genius;' it is honest to say, 'I will be a man of Virtue.' Which of these depends upon ourselves? Which can we accomplish by our will? To be Genius? No. To be Probity? Yes. The attainment of Genius is not possible; the attainment of Probity is a possibility. And what could I revive of Napoleon? One sole thing—a crime. Truly a worthy ambition! Why should I be considered mad? The Republic being established, I am not a great man, I shall not copy Napoleon; but I am an honest man. I shall imitate Washington. My name, the name of Bonaparte, will be inscribed on two pages of the history of France: on the first there will be crime and glory, on the second probity and honour. And the second will perhaps be worth the first. Why? Because if Napoleon is the greater, Washington is the better man. Between the guilty hero and the good citizen I choose the good citizen. Such is my ambition."

From 1848 to 1851 three years elapsed. People had long suspected Louis Bonaparte; but long-continued suspicion blunts the intellect and wears itself out by fruitless alarms. Louis Bonaparte had had dissimulating Ministers such as Magne and Rouher; but he had also had straightforward ministers such as Léon Faucher and Odillon Barrot; and these last had affirmed that he was upright and sincere. He had been seen to beat his breast before the doors of Ham; his foster sister, Madame Hortense Cornu, wrote to Mieroslawsky, "I am a good Republican, and I can answer for him." His friend of Ham, Peauger, a loyal man, declared, "Louis Bonaparte is incapable of treason." Had not Louis Bonaparte written the work entitled "Pauperism?" In the intimate circles of the Elysée Count Potocki was a Republican and Count d'Orsay was a Liberal; Louis Bonaparte said to Potocki, "I am a man of the Democracy," and to d'Orsay, "I am a man of Liberty." The Marquis du Hallays opposed the Coup d'Etat, while the Marquise du Hallays was in its favour. Louis Bonaparte said to the Marquis, "Fear nothing" (it is true that he whispered to the Marquise, "Make your mind easy"). The Assembly, after having shown here and there some symptoms of uneasiness, had grown calm. There was General Neumayer, "who was to be depended upon," and who from his position at Lyons would at need march upon Paris. Changarnier exclaimed, "Representatives of the people, deliberate in peace." Even Louis Bonaparte himself had pronounced these famous words, "I should see an enemy of my country in any one who would change by force that which has been established by law," and, moreover, the Army was "force," and the Army possessed leaders, leaders who were beloved and victorious. Lamoricière, Changarnier, Cavaignac, Le Flô, Bedeau, Charras; how could any one imagine the Army of Africa arresting the Generals of Africa? On Friday, November 28, 1851, Louis Bonaparte said to Michel de Bourges, "If I wanted to do wrong, I could not. Yesterday, Thursday, I invited to my table five Colonels of the garrison of Paris, and the whim seized me to question each one by himself. All five declared to me that the Army would never lend itself to a coup de force, nor attack the inviolability of the Assembly. You can tell your friends this."—"He smiled," said Michel de Bourges, reassured, "and I also smiled." After this, Michel de Bourges declared in the Tribune, "This is the man for me." In that same month of November a satirical journal, charged with calumniating the President of the Republic, was sentenced to fine and imprisonment for a caricature depicting a shooting-gallery and Louis Bonaparte using the Constitution as a target. Morigny, Minister of the Interior, declared in the Council before the President "that a Guardian of Public Power ought never to violate the law, as otherwise he would be—" "a dishonest man," interposed the President. All these words and all these facts were notorious. The material and moral impossibility of the Coup d'État was manifest to all. To outrage the National Assembly! To arrest the Representatives! What madness! As we have seen, Charras, who had long remained on his guard, unloaded his pistols. The feeling of security was complete and unanimous. Nevertheless, there was some of us in the Assembly who still retained a few doubts, and who occasionally shook our heads, but we were looked upon as fools.

II.

PARIS SLEEPS—THE BELL RINGS

ON the 2nd December, 1851, Representative Versigny, of the Haute-Saône, who resided at Paris, at No. 4, Rue Léonie, was asleep. He slept soundly; he had been working till late at night. Versigny was a young man of thirty-two, soft-featured and fair-complexioned, of a courageous spirit, and a mind tending towards social and economical studies. He had passed the first hours of the night in the perusal of a book by Bastiat, in which he was making marginal notes, and, leaving the book open on the table, he had fallen asleep. Suddenly he awoke with a start at the sound of a sharp ring at the bell. He sprang up in surprise. It was dawn. It was about seven o'clock in the morning.

Never dreaming what could be the motive for so early a visit, and thinking that some one had mistaken the door, he again lay down, and was about to resume his slumber, when a second ring at the bell, still louder than the first, completely aroused him. He got up in his night-shirt and opened the door.

Michel de Bourges and Théodore Bac entered. Michel de Bourges was the neighbour of Versigny; he lived at No. 16, Rue de Milan.

Théodore Bac and Michel were pale, and appeared greatly agitated.

"Versigny," said Michel, "dress yourself at once—Baune has just been arrested."

"Bah!" exclaimed Versigny. "Is the Mauguin business beginning again?"

"It is more than that," replied Michel. "Baune's wife and daughter came to me half-an-hour ago. They awoke me. Baune was arrested in his bed at six o'clock this morning."

"What does that mean?" asked Versigny.

The bell rang again.

"This will probably tell us," answered Michel de Bourges.

Versigny opened the door. It was the Representative Pierre Lefranc. He brought, in truth, the solution of the enigma.

"Do you know what is happening?" said he.

"Yes," answered Michel. "Baune is in prison."

"It is the Republic who is a prisoner," said Pierre Lefranc. "Have you read the placards?"

"No."

Pierre Lefranc explained to them that the walls at that moment were covered with placards which the curious crowd were thronging to read, that he had glanced over one of them at the corner of his street, and that the blow had fallen.

"The blow!" exclaimed Michel. "Say rather the crime."

Pierre Lefranc added that there were three placards—one decree and two proclamations—all three on white paper, and pasted close together.

The decree was printed in large letters.

The ex-Constituent Laissac, who lodged, like Michel de Bourges, in the neighbourhood (No. 4, Cité Gaillard), then came in. He brought the same news, and announced further arrests which had been made during the night.

There was not a minute to lose.

They went to impart the news to Yvan, the Secretary of the Assembly, who had been appointed by the Left, and who lived in the Rue de Boursault.

An immediate meeting was necessary. Those Republican Representatives who were still at liberty must be warned and brought together without delay.

Versigny said, "I will go and find Victor Hugo."

It was eight o'clock in the morning. I was awake and was working in bed. My servant entered and said, with an air of alarm,

"A Representative of the people is outside who wishes to speak to you, sir."

"Who is it?"

"Monsieur Versigny."

"Show him in."

Versigny entered, and told me the state of affairs. I sprang out of bed.

He told me of the "rendezvous" at the rooms of the ex-Constituent Laissac.

"Go at once and inform the other Representatives," said I.

He left me.

III.

WHAT HAD HAPPENED DURING THE NIGHT

PREVIOUS to the fatal days of June, 1848, the esplanade of the Invalides was divided into eight huge grass plots, surrounded by wooden railings and enclosed between two groves of trees separated by a street running perpendicularly to the front of the Invalides. This street was traversed by three streets running parallel to the Seine. There were large lawns upon which children were wont to play. The centre of the eight grass plots was marked by a pedestal which under the Empire had borne the bronze lion of St. Mark, which had been brought from Venice; under the Restoration a white marble statue of Louis XVIII.; and under Louis Philippe a plaster bust of Lafayette. Owing to the Palace of the Constituent Assembly having been nearly seized by a crowd of insurgents on the 22nd of June, 1848, and there being no barracks in the neighbourhood, General Cavaignac had constructed at three hundred paces from the Legislative Palace, on the grass plots of the Invalides, several rows of long huts, under which the grass was hidden. These huts, where three or four thousand men could be accommodated, lodged the troops specially appointed to keep watch over the National Assembly.

On the 1st December, 1851, the two regiments hutted on the Esplanade were the 6th and the 42nd Regiments of the Line, the 6th commanded by Colonel Garderens de Boisse, who was famous before the Second of December, the 42nd by Colonel Espinasse, who became famous since that date.

The ordinary night-guard of the Palace of the Assembly was composed of a battalion of infantry and of thirty artillerymen, with a captain. The Minister of War, in addition, sent several troopers for orderly service. Two mortars and six pieces of cannon, with their ammunition waggons, were ranged in a little square courtyard situated on the right of the Cour d'Honneur, and which was called the Cour des Canons. The Major, the military commandant of the Palace, was placed under the immediate control of the Questors.[*] At nightfall the gratings and the doors were secured, sentinels were posted, instructions were issued to the sentries, and the Palace was closed like a fortress. The password was the same as in the Place de Paris.

The special instructions drawn up by the Questors prohibited the entrance of any armed force other than the regiment on duty.

On the night of the 1st and 2nd of December the Legislative Palace was guarded by a battalion of the 42nd.

The sitting of the 1st of December, which was exceedingly peaceable, and had been devoted to a discussion on the municipal law, had finished late, and was terminated by a Tribunal vote. At the moment when M. Baze, one of the Questors, ascended the Tribune to deposit his vote, a Representative, belonging to what was called "Les Bancs Elyséens" approached him, and said in a low tone, "To-night you will be carried off." Such warnings as these were received every day, and, as we have already explained, people had ended by paying no heed to them. Nevertheless, immediately after the sitting the Questors sent for the Special Commissary of Police of the Assembly, President Dupin being present. When interrogated, the Commissary declared that the reports of his agents indicated "dead calm"—such was his expression—and that assuredly there was no danger to be apprehended for that night. When the Questors pressed him further, President Dupin, exclaiming "Bah!" left the room.

On that same day, the 1st December, about three o'clock in the afternoon, as General Le Flô's father-in-law crossed the boulevard in front of Tortoni's, some one rapidly passed by him and whispered in his ear these significant words, "Eleven o'clock—midnight." This incident excited but little attention at the Questure, and several even laughed at it. It had become customary with them. Nevertheless General de Flô would not go to bed until the hour mentioned had passed by, and remained in the offices of the Questure until nearly one o'clock in the morning.

The shorthand department of the Assembly was done out of doors by four messengers attached to the Moniteur, who were employed to carry the copy of the shorthand writers to the printing office, and to bring back the proof sheets to the Palace of the Assembly, where M. Hippolyte Prévost corrected them. M. Hippolyte Prévost was chief of the stenographic staff, and in that capacity had apartments in the Legislative Palace. He was at the same time editor of the musical feuilleton of the Moniteur. On the 1st December he had gone to the Opéra Comique for the first representation of a new piece, and did not return till after midnight. The fourth messenger from the Moniteur was waiting for him with a proof of the last slip of the sitting; M. Prévost corrected the proof, and the messenger was sent off. It was then a little after one o'clock, profound quiet reigned around, and, with the exception of the guard, all in the Palace slept. Towards this hour of the night a singular incident occurred. The Captain-Adjutant-Major of the Guard of the Assembly came to the Major and said, "The Colonel has sent for me," and he added, according to military etiquette, "Will you permit me to go?" The Commandant was astonished. "Go," he said with some sharpness, "but the Colonel is wrong to disturb an officer on duty." One of the soldiers on guard, without understanding the meaning of the words, heard the Commandant pacing up and down, and muttering several times, "What the deuce can he want?"

Half an hour afterwards the Adjutant-Major returned. "Well," asked the Commandant, "what did the Colonel want with you?" "Nothing," answered the Adjutant, "he wished to give me the orders for to-morrow's duties." The night became further advanced. Towards four o'clock the Adjutant-Major came again to the Major. "Major," he said, "the Colonel has asked for me." "Again!" exclaimed the Commandant, "this is becoming strange, nevertheless, go."

The Adjutant-Major had amongst other duties that of giving out the instructions to the sentries, and consequently had the power of rescinding them.

As soon as the Adjutant-Major had gone out, the Major, becoming uneasy, thought that it was his duty to communicate with the Military Commandant of the Palace. He went upstairs to the apartment of the Commandant—Lieutenant Colonel Niols. Colonel Niols had gone to bed, and the attendants had retired to their rooms in the attics. The Major, new to the Palace, groped about the corridors, and, knowing little about the various rooms, rang at a door which seemed to him that of the Military-Commandant. Nobody answered, the door was not opened, and the Major returned downstairs, without having been able to speak to anybody.

On his part the Adjutant-Major re-entered the Palace, but the Major did not see him again. The Adjutant remained near the grating of the Place Bourgogne, shrouded in his cloak, and walking up and down the courtyard as though expecting some one.

At the instant that five o'clock sounded from the great clock of the dome, the soldiers who slept in the hut-camp before the Invalides were suddenly awakened. Orders were given in a low voice in the huts to take up arms in silence. Shortly afterwards two regiments, knapsack on back, were marching upon the Palace of the Assembly; they were the 6th and the 42nd.

At this same stroke of five, simultaneously in all the quarters of Paris, infantry soldiers filed out noiselessly from every barrack, with their colonels at their head. The aides-de-camp and orderly officers of Louis Bonaparte, who had been distributed in all the barracks, superintended this taking up of arms. The cavalry were not set in motion until three-quarters of an hour after the infantry for fear that the ring of the horses' hoofs on the stones should wake slumbering Paris too soon.

M. de Persigny, who had brought from the Elysée to the camp of the Invalides the order to take up arms, marched at the head of the 42nd by the side of Colonel Espinasse. A story is current in the army, for at the present day, wearied as people are with dishonourable incidents, these occurrences are yet told with a species of gloomy indifference—the story is current that at the moment of setting out with his regiment one of the colonels who could be named hesitated, and that the emissary from the Elysée, taking a sealed packet from his pocket, said to him, "Colonel, I admit that we are running a great risk. Here, in this envelope which I have been charged to hand to you, are a hundred thousand francs in bank notes for contingencies." The envelope was accepted, and the regiment set out. On the evening of the 2nd of December the colonel said to a lady, "This morning I earned a hundred thousand francs and my General's epaulets." The lady showed him the door.

Xavier Durrieu, who tells us this story, had the curiosity later on to see this lady. She confirmed the story. Yes, certainly! she had shut the door in the face of this wretch; a soldier, a traitor to his flag who dared visit her! She receive such a man! No! She could not do that, "and," states Xavier Durieu, "she added, 'And yet I have no character to lose.'"

Another mystery was in progress at the Prefecture of Police.

Those belated inhabitants of the Cité who may have returned home at a late hour of the night might have noticed a large number of street cabs loitering in scattered groups at different points round about the Rue de Jerusalem.

From eleven o'clock in the evening, under pretext of the arrival of refugees at Paris from Genoa and London, the Brigade of Surety and the 800 sergents de ville had been retained in the Prefecture. At three o'clock in the morning a summons had been sent to the forty-eight Commissaries of Paris and of the suburbs, and also to the peace officers. An hour afterwards all of them arrived. They were ushered into a separate chamber, and isolated from each other as much as possible. At five o'clock a bell was sounded in the Prefect's cabinet. The Prefect Maupas called the Commissaries of Police one after another into his cabinet, revealed the plot to them, and allotted to each his portion of the crime. None refused; many thanked him.

It was a question of arresting at their own homes seventy-eight Democrats who were influential in their districts, and dreaded by the Elysée as possible chieftains of barricades. It was necessary, a still more daring outrage, to arrest at their houses sixteen Representatives of the People. For this last task were chosen among the Commissaries of Police such of those magistrates who seemed the most likely to become ruffians. Amongst these were divided the Representatives. Each had his man. Sieur Courtille had Charras, Sieur Desgranges had Nadaud, Sieur Hubaut the elder had M. Thiers, and Sieur Hubaut the younger General Bedeau, General Changarnier was allotted to Lerat, and General Cavaignac to Colin. Sieur Dourlens took Representative Valentin, Sieur Benoist Representative Miot, Sieur Allard Representative Cholat, Sieur Barlet took Roger (Du Nord), General Lamoricière fell to Commissary Blanchet, Commissary Gronfier had Representative Greppo, and Commissary Boudrot Representative Lagrange. The Questors were similarly allotted, Monsieur Baze to the Sieur Primorin, and General Le Flô to Sieur Bertoglio.

---

[*] The Questors were officers elected by the Assembly, whose special duties were to keep and audit the accounts, and who controlled all matters affecting the social economy of the House.

Warrants with the name of the Representatives had been drawn up in the Prefect's private Cabinet. Blanks had been only left for the names of the Commissaries. These were filled in at the moment of leaving.

In addition to the armed force which was appointed to assist them, it had been decided that each Commissary should be accompanied by two escorts, one composed of sergents de ville, the other of police agents in plain clothes. As Prefect Maupas had told M. Bonaparte, the Captain of the Republican Guard, Baudinet, was associated with Commissary Lerat in the arrest of General Changarnier.

Towards half-past five the fiacres which were in waiting were called up, and all started, each with his instructions.

During this time, in another corner of Paris—the old Rue du Temple—in that ancient Mansion Soubise which had been transformed into a Royal printing-office, and is to-day a National printing-office, another section of the Crime was being organised.

Towards one in the morning a passer-by, who had reached the old Rue du Temple by the Rue de Vieilles Haudriettes, noticed at the junction of these two streets several long and high windows brilliantly lighted up. These were the windows of the work rooms of the National Printing Office. He turned to the right and entered the old Rue du Temple, and a moment afterwards paused before the crescent-shaped entrance of the front of the printing-office. The principal door was shut, two sentinels guarded the side door. Through this little door, which was ajar, he glanced into the courtyard of the printing-office, and saw it filled with soldiers. The soldiers were silent, no sound could be heard, but the glistening of their bayonets could be seen. The passer-by surprised, drew nearer. One of the sentinels thrust him rudely back, crying out, "Be off."

Like the sergents de ville at the Prefecture of Police, the workmen had been retained at the National Printing Office under plea of night-work. At the same time that M. Hippolyte Prévost returned to the Legislative Palace, the manager of the National Printing Office re-entered his office, also returning from the Opéra Comique, where he had been to see the new piece, which was by his brother, M. de St. Georges. Immediately on his return the manager, to whom had come an order from the Elysée during the day, took up a pair of pocket-pistols, and went down into the vestibule, which communicates by means of a few steps with the courtyard. Shortly afterwards the door leading to the street opened, a fiacre entered, a man who carried a large portfolio alighted. The manager went up to the man, and said to him, "Is that you, Monsieur de Béville?" "Yes," answered the man.

The fiacre was put up, the horses placed in a stable, and the coachman shut up in a parlour, where they gave him drink, and placed a purse in his hand. Bottles of wine and louis d'or form the groundwork of this kind of politics. The coachman drank and then went to sleep. The door of the parlour was bolted.

The large door of the courtyard of the printing office was hardly shut than it reopened, gave passage to armed men, who entered in silence, and then reclosed. The arrivals were a company of the Gendarmerie Mobile, the fourth of the first battalion, commanded by a captain called La Roche d'Oisy. As may be remarked by the result, for all delicate expeditions the men of the Coup d'État took care to employ the Gendarmerie Mobile and the Republican Guard, that is to say, the two corps almost entirely composed of former Municipal Guards, bearing at heart a revengeful remembrance of the events of February.

Captain La Roche d'Oisy brought a letter from the Minister of War, which placed himself and his soldiers at the disposition of the manager of the National Printing Office. The muskets were loaded without a word being spoken. Sentinels were placed in the workrooms, in the corridors, at the doors, at the windows, in fact, everywhere, two being stationed at the door leading into the street. The captain asked what instructions he should give to the sentries. "Nothing more simple," said the man who had come in the fiacre. "Whoever attempts to leave or to open a window, shoot him."

This man, who, in fact, was De Béville, the orderly officer to Bonaparte, withdrew with the manager into the large cabinet on the first story, a solitary room which looked out on the garden. There he communicated to the manager what he had brought with him, the decree of the dissolution of the Assembly, the appeal to the Army, the appeal to the people, the decree convoking the electors, and in addition, the proclamation of the Prefect Maupas and his letter to the Commissaries of Police. The four first documents were entirely in the handwriting of the President, and here and there some erasures might be noticed.

The compositors were in waiting. Each man was placed between two gendarmes, and was forbidden to utter a single word, and then the documents which had to be printed were distributed throughout the room, being cut up in very small pieces, so that an entire sentence could not be read by one workman. The manager announced that he would give them an hour to compose the whole. The different fragments were finally brought to Colonel Béville, who put them together and corrected the proof sheets. The machining was conducted with the same precautions, each press being between two soldiers. Notwithstanding all possible diligence the work lasted two hours. The gendarmes watched over the workmen. Béville watched over St. Georges.

When the work was finished a suspicious incident occurred, which greatly resembled a treason within a treason. To a traitor a greater traitor. This species of crime is subject to such accidents. Béville and Saint Georges, the two trusty confidants in whose hands lay the secret of the Coup d'État, that is to say the head of the President;—that secret, which ought at no price to be allowed to transpire before the appointed hour, under risk of causing everything to miscarry, took it into their heads to confide it at once to two hundred men, in order "to test the effect," as the ex-Colonel Béville said later on, rather naïvely. They read the mysterious document which had just been printed to the Gendarmes Mobiles, who were drawn up in the courtyard. These ex-Municipal Guards applauded. If they had hooted, it might be asked what the two experimentalists in the Coup d'État would have done. Perhaps M. Bonaparte would have woke up from his dream at Vincennes.

The coachman was then liberated, the fiacre was horsed, and at four o'clock in the morning the orderly officer and the manager of the National Printing Office, henceforward two criminals, arrived at the Prefecture of Police with the parcels of the decrees. Then began for them the brand of shame. Prefect Maupas took them by the hand.

Bands of bill-stickers, bribed for the occasion, started in every direction, carrying with them the decrees and proclamations.

This was precisely the hour at which the Palace of the National Assembly was invested. In the Rue de l'Université there is a door of the Palace which is the old entrance to the Palais Bourbon, and which opened into the Avenue which leads to the house of the President of the Assembly. This door, termed the Presidency Door, was according to custom guarded by a sentry. For some time past the Adjutant-Major, who had been twice sent for during the night by Colonel Espinasse, had remained motionless and silent, close by the sentinel. Five minutes after, having left the huts of the Invalides, the 42nd Regiment of the Line, followed at some distance by the 6th Regiment, which had marched by the Rue de Bourgogne, emerged from the Rue de l'Université. "The regiment," says an eye-witness, "marched as one steps in a sick room." It arrived with a stealthy step before the Presidency door. This ambuscade came to surprise the Law.

The sentry, seeing these soldiers arrive, halted, but at the moment when he was going to challenge them with a qui vive, the Adjutant-Major seized his arm, and, in his capacity as the officer empowered to countermand all instructions, ordered him to give free passage to the 42nd, and at the same time commanded the amazed porter to open the door. The door turned upon its hinges, the soldiers spread themselves through the avenue. Persigny entered, and said, "It is done."

The National Assembly was invaded.

At the noise of the footsteps the Commandant Meunier ran up. "Commandant," Colonel Espinasse cried out to him, "I come to relieve your battalion." The Commandant turned pale for a moment, and his eyes remained fixed on the ground. Then suddenly he put his hands to his shoulders and tore off his epaulets, he drew his sword, broke it across his knee, threw the two fragments on the pavement, and, trembling with rage, exclaimed with a solemn voice, "Colonel, you disgrace the number of your regiment."

"All right, all right," said Espinasse.

The Presidency door was left open, but all the other entrances remained closed. All the guards were relieved, all the sentinels changed, and the battalion of the night guard was sent back to the camp of the Invalides, the soldiers piled their arms in the avenue, and in the Cour d'Honneur. The 42nd, in profound silence, occupied the doors outside and inside the courtyard, the reception rooms, the galleries, the corridors, the passages, while every one still slept in the Palace.

Shortly afterwards arrived two of those little chariots which are called "forty sous," and two fiacres, escorted by two detachments of the Republican Guard and of the Chasseurs de Vincennes, and by several squads of police. The Commissaries Bertoglio and Primorin alighted from the two chariots.

As these carriages drove up a personage bald, but still young, was seen to appear at the grating of the Place de Bourgogne. This personage had all the air of a man about town, who had just come from the opera, and, in fact, he had come from thence, after having passed through a den. He came from the Elysée. It was De Morny. For an instant he watched the soldiers piling their arms, and then went on to the Presidency door. There he exchanged a few words with M. de Persigny. A quarter of an hour afterwards, accompanied by 250 Chasseurs de Vincennes, he took possession of the Ministry of the Interior, startled M. de Thorigny in his bed, and handed him brusquely a letter of thanks from Monsieur Bonaparte. Some days previously honest M. de Thorigny, whose ingenuous remarks we have already cited, said to a group of men near whom M. de Morny was passing, "How these men of the Mountain calumniate the President! The man who would break his oath, who would achieve a coup d'état, must necessarily be a worthless wretch." Awakened rudely in the middle of the night, and relieved of his post as Minister, like the sentinels of the Assembly, the worthy man, astounded, and rubbing his eyes, muttered, "Eh! Then the President is a——"

"Yes," said Morny, with a burst of laughter.

He who writes these lines knew Morny. Morny and Walewsky held in the quasi-reigning family the positions, one of Royal bastard, the other of Imperial bastard. Who was Morny? We will say, "A noted wit, an intriguer, but in no way austere, a friend of Romieu, and a supporter of Guizot, possessing the manners of the world and the habits of the roulette table, self-satisfied, clever, combining a certain liberality of ideas with a readiness to accept useful crimes, finding means to wear a gracious smile with bad teeth, leading a life of pleasure, dissipated but reserved, ugly, good-tempered, fierce, well-dressed, intrepid, willingly leaving a brother prisoner under bolts and bars, and ready to risk his head, for a brother Emperor, having the same mother as Louis Bonaparte, and like Louis Bonaparte, having some father or other, being able to call himself Beauharnais, being able to call himself Flahaut, and yet calling himself Morny, pursuing literature as far as light comedy, and politics as far as tragedy, a deadly free liver, possessing all the frivolity consistent with assassination, capable of being sketched by Marivaux and treated of by Tacitus, without conscience, irreproachably elegant, infamous, and amiable, at need a perfect duke. Such was this malefactor.

(To be continued)

THE READER

In these days of "amateur Moltkes" by the score it is refreshing to turn to such thorough studies of strategic operations and of the victory that rewards the fewest mistakes as those contained in "Great Campaigns in Europe," revised and edited, from the lectures and writings of the late Major Charles Adams, by Capt. C. Cooper King (W. Blackwood and Sons). These notes of lectures by the late Professor of Military History at the Royal Military and Staff Colleges, though somewhat arbitrary in their selection of campaigns—we have nothing for instance about those of Wagram or of Moscow, or of any, except Waterloo, in which British forces were engaged—embrace on the whole the most instructive military operations on the Continent from 1796 to 1870—the bold initiative and happy daring of the campaigns of Montenotte and Marengo, the matured combinations of Austerlitz and Friedland, the alternate recklessness and hesitation of Montmirail and (after the first brilliant opening) of Waterloo, the instructive contrast between the Italian wars of '49 and '59, the last of the old "bayonet tactics" in the "model campaign" of Custozza, the triumphs of the newer system in the Franco-German War of 1870-71; while Capt. Cooper King's excellent summary of events between the campaigns analysed in each lecture knits all together into a continuous military history of the last eighty years. It is a volume solid and instructive rather than entertaining, for the severe tactician, to whom divisions and brigades are only so many red or blue pieces in the war-game, has no space or thought for those brave deeds of men and regiments to which a Kinglake or a Napier would give pages; even Waterloo's "grandes lignes rouges, immoveable as walls," are but "the tenacity of Wellington's soldiery which, enabled him to hold out against, on the whole, better troops." It is a book, too, that must not be read hastily or superficially, but followed page by page with constant reference to the outline maps, which Captain King has added, of the valleys of the Po and Danube, of Northern Europe and of Central France. But for the professional soldier or for the student who would understand aright on what narrow conditions of time and distance, what unexpected turns of merest chance the success of the most ingeniously devised movements may depend, it will be found a work of equal interest and ability.

In their substantial "Dictionary of Cookery," Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin have given us one of the most useful volumes for the kitchen with which we are acquainted. Prefaced with a very excellent introduction on "the principles of cooking," and supplemented with fair lists of dishes according to their seasons, of technical terms, and of the utensils needed for a well-regulated cuisine, it contains in the body of the work in alphabetical order, with cross references wherever there could be any difficulty, some nine thousand recipes after Ude, Carême, Soyer, Buckmaster, &c., for the preparation of all good things in the shape of meats, sauces, or cunningly compounded drinks for the digestion of the same—of punch alone are four-and-twenty varieties—all admirably simple and explicit, with general instructions besides on roasting, boiling, carving, choice of meat or fish in the market, probable cost of each dish, &c. Altogether a volume to which one may turn with confidence for every plat the most exacting housekeeper may require, and for very many that to nine housekeepers in ten will be absolute novelties.

What lover of graceful thought and picturesque phrase can fail to welcome "Addresses and Sermons," by A. P. Stanley, D.D. (Macmillan and Co.), or discourses delivered by him to the students of St. Andrew's, or preached within the walls of the town church in 1872, 1875, and 1877? Not certainly we should say the students and burgesses of that ancient city, who can have seldom heard so many sweet things of it before—of its topographical and historic claims to our attention, of its famous worthies, from that "young Marcellus" of the Scottish Church, whom death cut off too soon at Flodden, to the present "distinguished Principal of St. Mary's College," and from these by an easy transition to the great men of Scotland generally, Knox and Buchanan, Burns and Walter Scott. Yet somewhat strange one can hardly help thinking to minds brought up on the strong meat of the Westminster Confession must have been the contrast between their customary theological food and discourses such as these, where religion, science, morals blend together in somewhat vague and undefined unity, and the strictest dogmas of the sects, as in the sermon on the "Succession of Spiritual Life," melt away before our eyes in a gracious generalisation. All certainly is delightful reading, but it leaves behind it rather the impression of a general tendency towards what is good and noble than a theological substance easy to put in rigid form.

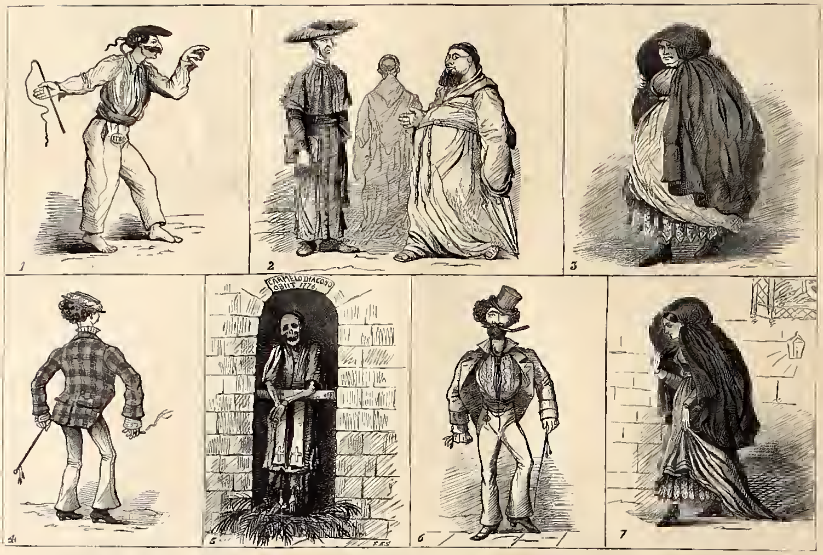
"Letters of William Cowper" (Religious Tract Society), or selections from the correspondence of the author of the "Task," will do good service in introducing to that wider circle of readers whom the original six-volumed edition might appal, compositions that have always ranked as models for thought and style of English letter-writing. A memoir of the poet's pathetic life prefixed to the collection is very fairly written, though hardly quite convincing in its efforts to disprove all connection between poor Cowper's mental ailments and the stern Calvinism of his religious friends.

"A Young Man's Difficulties with his Bible," by the Rev. D. W. Faunce, D.D. (3rd thousand: Hodder and Stoughton), has already stood the test of practical experience. As a little guide-book—popular, yet not unlearned—to the best way of meeting doubts that may arise from the supposed conflict between religion and science, from Bible miracles, or from the historic facts of Scripture, it may be pronounced at once able and suggestive.

"How to Draw a Straight Line," by A. B. Kempe (Nature Series: Macmillan and Co.), might be thought at first a simple question of a pencil and a ruler. A moment's reflection will show of course that this only puts the difficulty one step back; that whereas of the two natural figures, the straight line and the circle, the correctness of the latter (allowing for the infinitesimal error of imperfect instruments) is demonstrable at once, straightness of line or ruler's edge is a matter of much more difficult attainment. It is, in fact, a problem of "movement by link-work," first solved with sufficient nearness for many purposes by the famous Watt, but only completely overcome by M. Peaucellier eighty years after, with his seven-link apparatus, now simplified again in the Sylvester-Kempe "Quadruplane."

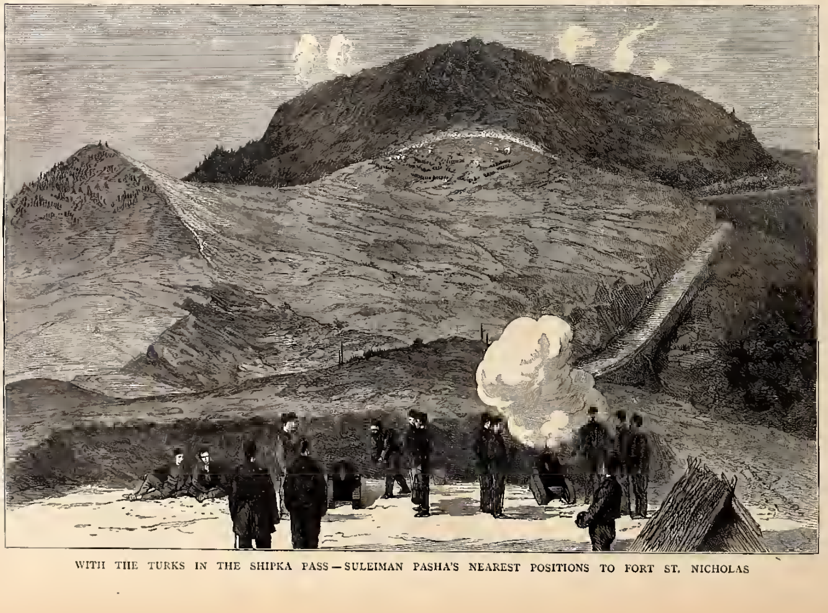
The story of the "Pretended Louis the Seventeenths"—of the claimants, that is, who have asserted themselves to be the boy prisoner of the Temple rescued by some ingenious substitution from the custody of Simon, and brought up in studied ignorance of his true origin and rights—has hardly perhaps yet taken its proper place beside those of the Perkin Warbecks, false Demetriuses, and other would-be sovereigns of history. Many, perhaps, are even unaware that England long owned one of these pretenders in the person of a Mr. Augustus Meves, whose claims, feebly asserted during his lifetime between 1830 and 1859, are now reiterated by his son, "Auguste de Bourbon," in an oddly-written volume entitled, "Dieu et Mon Droit" (R. Bentley and Son). It must certainly be a little vexing that while the "nobleman" at Dartmoor counts his adherents by the thousand, "Auguste de Bourbon" should be almost ignored.

Few authors probably of equal fame have been more written about and less generally read than has, at least in England, been the case with Voltaire. And thus a volume like Colonel Hamley's "Voltaire"—the new number of the Messrs. Blackwood's "Foreign Classics for English Readers"—gives scope, as you approach it from opposite sides, for favourable and unfavourable comparisons. As a sketch of the life and writings of Voltaire, it is quite a book to fill up a gap in the reading of the multitude. As a study of the man and of his times, it suffers by contrast with studies more powerful and thorough, e.g., with Mr. Morley's able monograph. Still, though just a little commonplace, and a little over-anxious to prove Voltaire a reverent man au fond—one, indeed, who nowadays would hardly be considered extreme at all—it is a very useful little volume, especially for its specimen extracts in prose and verse

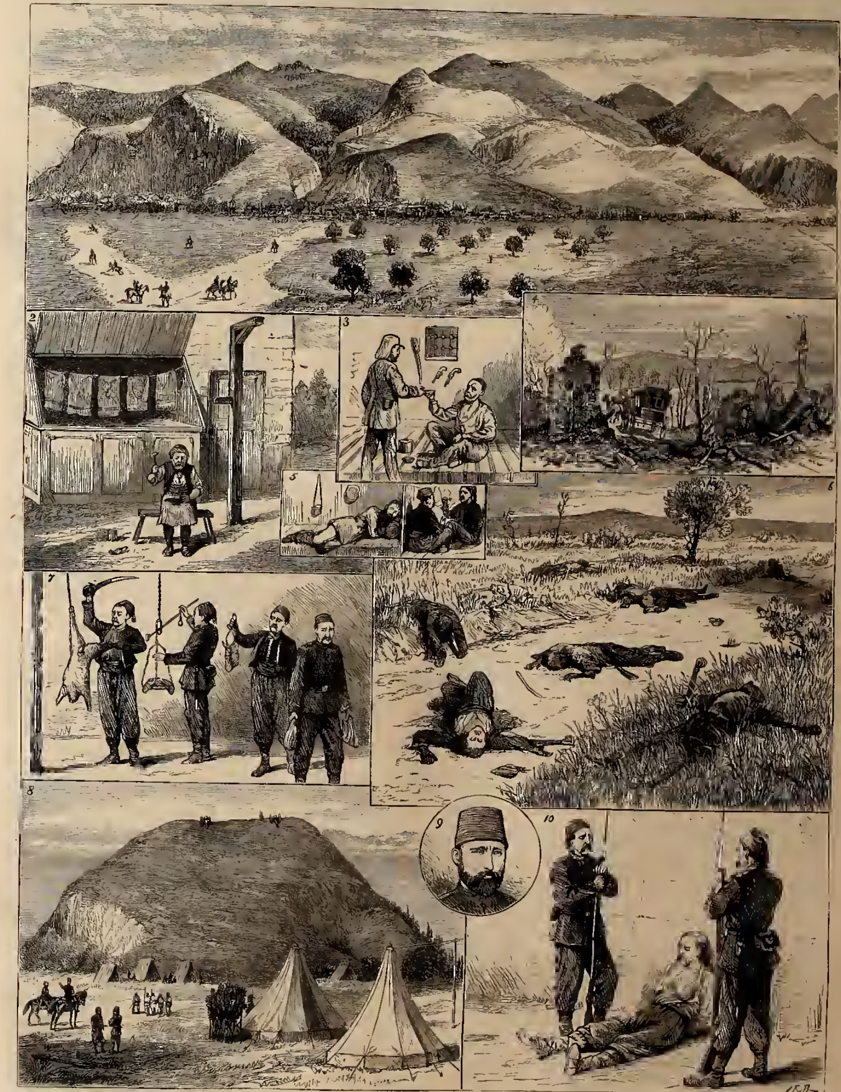


1. A Maltese "Cabby: "Sar! Four Wheeler, Sar?"—2. Some "Common Objects" on the Strada Reale.—3. The "Faldette:" "Fat and Forty."—4. "Young Malta."—5. "Old Malta:" A "Preserved" Capuchin Friar.—6. "Much the Expense but necessary I been to keep up my Positions."—7. The "Faldette;" "Sweet Seventeen."

CHARACTER SKETCHES AT MALTA



WITH THE TURKS IN THE SHIPKA PASS—SULEIMAN PASHA'S NEAREST POSITIONS TO FORT ST. NICHOLAS



1. View of the Village of Shipka and Mount St. Nicholas.—2. A Philippopolis Cobbler.—3. A Friendly Cup of Water.—4. Passing a Burnt Village by the Way.—5. Our Artist's Quarters at Carlova.—6. Corpses of Mussulmans Murdered by Bulgarians on the Road from Carlova to Kezanlik.—7. Distributing Meat to Turkish Soldiers at Carlova.—8. Shipka, Encampment of Suleiman Pasha, the Commander-in-Chief.—9. Suleiman Pasha.—10. A Bulgarian Spy.

WITH THE TURKS—OUR ARTIST'S NOTES OF A JOURNEY FROM PHILIPPOPOLIS TO SHIPKA VIÂ KEZANLIK

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——Both Turks and Russians have been diligently changing their commanding officers during the past week. Thus General Ivanosky is to command the Jantra Army in place of the Czarevitch, who assumes the direction of the Imperial Guard; General Gourko has been appointed head of the cavalry round Plevna; Prince Imeritinsky, who distinguished himself at Loftcha, is named Chief of the General Staff of the Russo-Roumanian Army, General Zotoff, whom he displaces, taking the Prince's former post; and General Skobeleff becomes head of the 16th Division. Reports are also abroad that General Kotzchue will succeed the Grand Duke Nicholas as Commander-in-Chief; while the Duke, who is seriously ill and disheartened, retires with his much-abused protégé Levitzky to St. Petersburg. The changes in the Turkish army we recorded last week. Mehemet Ali's recall is probably the result of jealousy and Mahmoud Damad's influence, but is due professedly to his refusal to attack the Czarevitch when he found himself too weak for any chance of success. He will go to the Montenegrin frontier, and Achmet Eyoub to Servia. Suleiman has accordingly been sent to the Lom with orders for prompt action, and his conduct in the Shipka proves that he will not shrink from encountering heavy odds. He is now concentrating between Rustchuk and Rasgrad, and threatens the forces on the Upper Lom. The weather has prevented any serious assault, but there was a Turkish success at Stroko on Wednesday week, and the bombardment of Rustchuk continues with unabated vigour. General Todleben has been minutely inspecting the works round Plevna, where there is a desultory bombardment. The Roumanians have finished their sapping operations, and only await the order to attack when their allies shall have completed their trenches. All the Guards have not yet arrived, although the last division passed through Gorny Studen on Saturday, and frequent councils of war are held, while there is some talk of removing the Russian headquarters to Sistova. A strict watch is now kept on the Plevna-Sofia road, and a Turkish convoy of provisions and medicine with 1,000 head of cattle was captured last week, the Russians also destroying the bridges at Radomirzi and Tscherwenberg. The Turks in Plevna seem inclined to be a trifle more courteous to the besiegers, as Ghazi Osman has received a Roumanian parlementaire to arrange for the burial of the dead still left on the field. Hitherto the Turks have fired on all burying parties. The Czar has resolved to stay with the army for the present; but it is still rumoured that he will shortly retire to Bucharest, where the Empress will join him. Preparations continue for winter supplies and accommodation for the soldiers. Fresh railway lines will be laid down, hospitals constructed, the best kind of bridge for the Danube is under consideration, and Sistova and Nicopolis are being strongly fortified. A foretaste of the difficulties of winter warfare has been given by the rising of the Danube, which for two days prevented communication by the Sistova and Nicopolis bridges, while the latter bridge had some of its pontoons carried away. At Silistria the Turks are fortifying the island of Chiciu, in the Borcea Lake on the Danube, and the Roumanians have thrown a bridge over one of the arms of the lake to cannonade their positions. Russian and Roumanian troops have been hurried up to Kalarash to prevent the Turks from landing, and the Grand Duke Constantine has also been sent in command. Meanwhile in the Shipka all is quiet save a Zeibeck reconnaissance in the Hain Boghaz Pass, and snow has fallen heavily.

The Russians in ASIA have suffered a fresh reverse. Bent on cutting off Mukhtar Pasha from Kars, the Grand Duke Michael attacked him on Tuesday week in three places—the Yanilar hills on the left of the Turkish position, Kizil Tepe in the centre, and Aladja Dagh on the left. The great Yagni hill was captured as well as the Aladja Dagh, but the Russians were soon repulsed from the latter heights, and failed to take the lesser Yagni. On Thursday, finding a lack of water, they retired from the great Yagni, but later in the day made another fruitless attempt on Kizil Tepe. Mukhtar Pasha regained communication with Kars next day, but on Monday abandoned Kizil Tepe and retired nearer Kars. The Russians pursued him next day, and were victorious at Iflenoni. The Russians are said to have lost 10,000 men, but the number is probably exaggerated. At all events, the Russian loss from the beginning of the campaign is officially estimated at 52,000 men.

SERVIA continues to intrigue with Russia, and although she has given fresh official pacific assurances to the Porte, she is also reported to have concluded a convention with Russia, and to have promised her co-operation to ROUMANIA. The latter Principality has been holding a Council to deliberate on a special convocation of the Chambers, and the popular feeling is by no means more amiable, while Russian troops and wounded still crowd Bucharest.—The Prince of MONTENEGRO has written to the Czar that as he has emancipated the population of Upper Herzegovina his campaign thus comes to an end. Nevertheless the Montenegrins have again attacked the fortresses of Spuz and Podgoritza.—The Hungarian plot continues to exercise the public mind in AUSTRIA, and there has been a scene in the Diet about a member, Herr Helfy, whose house was entered by the police. Herr Tisza, however, proved the affair to be due to a misunderstanding. The Austro-Hungarian Empire is said to be not quite so cordial as usual to Russia, as the Emperor's birthday was coolly ignored by the Czar.—In CONSTANTINOPLE the Sultan has reviewed the National Guard, and expressed his hope that at the close of the war they would aid him to carry out the reforms on which depend the prosperity and welfare of the people and country. Feeling in the capital is not over affectionate towards England, and the head of the chief Turkish College declares the British Government to be "the source of every political evil, of every crime." The Porte has apologised to Germany anent the Salonica convicts.

FRANCE.——To-morrow France, to use M. Gambetta's expression, "will say what she thinks" of the present situation, and the question of a Republican or a Conservative success will be decided. At this time it would be idle to prophesy the result of the elections, as the French are a nation of surprises. The chances of the Republicans, however, have been slightly impaired by M. Gambetta's manifesto, in which, abandoning his recent tone of studied moderation, he returns to the fiery style of former declarations, accuses the Government in no measured terms, styles the Marshal "a plebiscitary candidate," and reiterates the famous Lille phrase "to submit or to resign." Of course a fresh Government prosecution has followed, not for the publication of the speech in the journals, but for placarding it on the walls, and M. Gambetta was summoned before the Court of Appeal yesterday (Friday), when he would probably make default. A more cautious tone, however, ran through M. Gambetta's speech on Tuesday to his Belleville constituents at a "private" meeting. The electoral period had expired on the previous evening, and entrance to this meeting was only to be had by ticket. Over 6,000 persons were present, nearly all of the lower and more violent orders, yet not a single untoward incident occurred—a marvellous example of the recently acquired Republican discipline. M. Gambetta was firm in his belief of a strong Republican return, and, as hitherto, studiously placing himself in the background, put forth M. Grévy as the true leader of the party. The latter has also issued his address—a calm, temperate refutation of the charges against the late Chamber, and an echo in the main of M. Thiers' manifesto. Both Republicans and Conservatives have a "spectre" wherewith to frighten their more vacillating supporters into compliance. With the latter it is the "Red Spectre," with the former the "Black,"—Clericalism, and the Republicans have seized every opportunity to inveigh against priestcraft. The Left of the Senate, in their manifesto, warn the nation against the clerical agitation; MM. Grévy and Gambetta strike the same note; while M. Louis Blanc, in a recent speech, ascribes every French disaster to the Church, declaring that through clerical influence the Franco-Italian alliance failed at the most critical period, and that the loss of Alsace and Lorraine was due to the same source—an assertion calculated to touch his hearers to the quick. Stung by these charges, M. Fourtou has issued a circular to the prefects, bidding them to prosecute all those who spread the idea of clerical pressure on the Government throughout the provinces. M. de Broglie also, at a meeting of the Conservative Committee, warmly disclaimed undue ecclesiastical influence. The issue, he said, lay between Radicalism and Conservatism, Marshal Macmahon and M. Gambetta; and he accused the latter of wearing a mask, and sheltering himself now behind M. Thiers, now behind M. Grévy. Repressive measures have been more stringent than ever this week. Another Ministerial edict prohibits the reading aloud in a café of any newspaper, pamphlet, or electoral address, or the exhibition of any such document; M. Eugène Pelletan, a Republican senator, when recently at Arles, was persistently dogged by the police throughout his stay; one of the 363, M. Durieu, who had invited some friends to dine with him at Mauriac, could find no hotel permitted to receive them, and was obliged to dine alone, while the London papers were seized in Paris on Monday evening.

The Government has published no list of candidates, but official journals assert that a majority of twenty is confidently expected. The Temps, however, states that the official candidates comprise 240 Bonapartists, 98 Legitimists, 27 Orleanists, and 125 "dark horse" Royalists suspected of Bonapartist tendencies. Thus, should the Government be successful, the Imperialists will virtually command the Chamber. Hoping to impress the electors by the idea that the present Government is favourable to trade, the Finance Minister has published the 1878 Budget statement, showing a surplus of 861,437*l.* which is to be devoted to lightening the taxes. There has been a slight disturbance at Ajaccio, where the authorities interfered with the reception of Prince Napoleon, and the Prince has written a highly indignant epistle to the Minister of Justice. M. Jules Simon has been seriously ill from a carbuncle in the throat, but is now out of danger.

Paris has been occupied by two "first representations"—La Petite Muette, an opera by MM. Ferrier and Serpette, at the Bouffes, where the heroine loses her speech by a shock and recovers it through the potent influence of Love, and an amusing comedy by MM. Meilhac and Halévy, La Cigale, at the Variétés, in which Mdme. Chaumont plays a miserable tight rope dancer, who is rescued from her employers by an artist, and subsequently turns out to be an heiress, much after the style of La Figlia.

GERMANY.——Provincial reform in Germany is likely to lead to a Ministerial crisis. Several measures have been abandoned by the Ministers on the opposition of Prince Bismarck, and the Liberals are highly indignant. The Conservatives are now very strong, and should the Liberals not come to terms with the Government the Lower House will probably be dissolved. The result of the French elections is awaited with much anxiety, and the North German Gazette, after denying the conclusion of an Italo-German alliance, declares that the two countries would "certainly have a tendency to secure mutual cohesion if after the elections they were to find themselves confronted by a clerical, and therefore an aggressive, France."

UNITED STATES.—One Indian trouble is at an end. General Miles had an encounter with the Nez Percés on the Canadian Border, and besieged them vigorously for five days until the chief, Joseph, surrendered with 60 warriors. 400 wounded Indians were found in the camp. Congress meets on Monday, and the Democrats will probably nominate Mr. S. J. Randall as speaker. The Democrats have carried Ohio, and it will be a bitter disappointment to President Hayes to lose his native State.—There was a serious storm on the Atlantic coast last week, when considerable damage was done, especially to the railways, over a hundred persons being killed and injured.

INDIA.——The end of the Famine is at length in sight, and a good continuous rainfall is reported from most parts of India. The number on the relief works is fast decreasing, prices have fallen, and harvest prospects are good, nevertheless considerable suffering from weakness and poverty must yet ensue. The Viceroy intends to make a tour through Rajpootana, and has taken the head of the famine department.—Burmah has suffered greatly from heavy floods, which have washed away the paddy crops.—Eastern Bengal has recovered from the effects of last November's storm wave, which by the way caused the death of 165,000 people, and is prospering through the development of the jute trade.—The native Press is indulging in seditious language against the Government.

MISCELLANEOUS.——SWITZERLAND was visited by an earthquake on Monday, which was most severe at Geneva, and was felt also at Berne.—In ITALY the Pope has been ill again; and the usual winter pilgrimages are to be deferred until the spring to congratulate him on having exceeded in years St. Peter's pontificate at Antioch and Rome; a Railway Conference opened at Rome on Monday, and the Venetian Lagoons are to be improved.—There is a drought in AUSTRALIA throughout Queensland and New South Wales, and the defences of the former colony are being studied.

◆

THE COURT

THE Queen is still at Balmoral, with the Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold. Last week Her Majesty received the American Minister and Mrs. Pierrepoint, who came over from Aberdeen, and on Saturday morning the Queen and Princess Beatrice visited the Princess of Wales at Abergeldie. In the evening the Lord Chancellor and Principal Tulloch dined with Her Majesty. On Sunday the Queen and the Royal family attended morning service at Crathie Church, when Principal Tulloch officiated, and in the afternoon Her Majesty and the Princess Beatrice again drove to Abergeldie to see the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Lord Chancellor and Principal Tulloch joined the Royal party at dinner. Next day the Queen and her daughter drove to Murdern, and the Lord Chancellor, and Sir T. M. and Lady Biddulph dined with Her Majesty, while on Tuesday the Queen and Princess Beatrice drove round the "Lion's Face."

The Prince and Princess of Wales with their children will probably come south in about a fortnight's time, when they are likely to visit Dartmouth to instal their sons on board the training ship Britannia. The young Princes' quarters on the Britannia are on the upper deck, and occupy a space of fifty feet from the stern, screened off by canvas. There are a sitting-room, a bedroom with two hammocks, and an apartment for the tutor, in addition to a bath-room, while the suite communicates by a staircase with the schoolrooms below. The Princes will be treated entirely as the other cadets, with the exception of their separate apartments. Meanwhile the Prince and Princess of Wales remain at Abergeldie with their family.

Prince and Princess Christian have been staying with the Earl and Countess of Dudley at Black Mount, N. B.—The Duke of Edinburgh in the Sultan reached Syra on Saturday morning, and left at once for Malta, where he arrived on Wednesday. The Duke has sent 100*l.* and the Duchess 50*l.* to the Indian Famine Fund.—The Duke of Connaught has returned to Ireland. He concluded his visit to the Earl and Countess of Breadalbane at the end of last week, and crossed in the Flame from Glasgow to Belfast, whence he went on to stay with Lord Rossmore, at Monaghan. On Saturday the Duke unveiled a memorial fountain to the late Lord Rossmore, who was killed in a steeple-chase. There was a ball at Rossmore Castle in the evening. The Duke has been suffering from a bilious attack during his stay.

The marriage of the King of Spain with his cousin the Princess Mercedes is almost decided, as it has been arranged that her father, the Duc de Montpensier, shall quit Spain after the marriage and live at Bologna.

CHURCH NEWS

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.——The opening service of the Croydon Congress took place in the parish church on Tuesday, the sermon being preached from Ezekiel I, iv., by Canon Lightfoot, who said that the vision of the prophet was not a dead or dying story which had served its turn and now might pass out of mind. It lived still as the very charter of the Church of the Future. If in this nineteenth century Englishmen would do any work for Christ's Church which should be real, solid, abiding, they must follow in the lines here marked out for them. Mobility, spirituality, universality must inspire their efforts.

The Primate in his inaugural address spoke hopefully of the conditions of the Church, and asked his hearers with what country they would like to change Churches, or in what age were they prepared to say it would have been more satisfactory to have lived. He dwelt at length upon the importance of the meeting, and pointed out that whether it should be a blessing or not depended on the manner in which it was conducted by all who should take part in its deliberations. No one had a right to attend who was not willing to give and take. The English Church had always had its various phases of thought. Three very prominent and great names were attached to each—Andrewes, Hall, and Butler. Men of God of each school had been ready to feel for those of the others. While the Church slept there was no difficulty in keeping the peace, and when only one school of thought awoke there was little fear of collision. He thanked God that at the present moment there was no sect of theologians in this country which was not alive and awake, and anxious to do its duty according to its own convictions.

The first paper read was that by Bishop Steere on "Mahommedanism in its relation to Christianity," the discussion being taken up by Professor Palmer, Sir W. Muir, and Professor Monier Williams. The sectional discussions in the evening were on "Trades Unions," "Christian Faith and Sceptical Culture." On Wednesday the questions dealt with were—"The Promotion of Unity in the Church," "Pauper Children," "Representative Assemblies," "Charity Organisation," "Intemperance," and "Public Amusements." On Thursday "Church and State," "The Lord's Day," "Education," "Church Finance," and "Personal Religion;" and on Friday, the last day of the Conference, "Nonconformity," "Lay Help," "Biblical Knowledge," "Study and Prophecy," and "Children." To day, Saturday, there will be a closing service, at which Canon Farrar, D.D., will preach.

EXPLORATION OF PALESTINE.——Lieutenant Kitchener, R.E., the officer in command of this expedition, has sent a telegram to Mr. Hepworth Dixon, the chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund, announcing the completion of the scientific survey of Western Palestine. The observations which have been made (says Mr. Dixon) will enable the Committee to give the world such a geography of Palestine as will make the topography of the Bible for the first time completely intelligible. The map will consist of twenty-six sheets, each to be accompanied by its own memoir. These memoirs contain some thousands of names, very many of them of Biblical places heretofore not identified, together with many of those found in Talmudic, Early Christian, and Crusading histories. There are special detailed plans of the most important ruins, and there is a vast mass of information on Biblical subjects which Lieutenant Conder is now reducing to shape.

VARIOUS.——On Sunday last in all the Roman Catholic churches and chapels of the archdiocese of Westminster a pastoral letter was read from Cardinal Manning, calling the attention of his clergy and their flocks to the Indian famine, and desiring that on the following Sunday (to-morrow) collections should be made in aid of the fund.—The Bishop of Lincoln, presiding at the annual Diocesan Conference last week, said that the real object underlying the agitation in favour of Mr. Osborne Morgan's Burial Bill was the disestablishment of the Church; and declared that beyond assenting to the closing of many churchyards, and to the provision of cemeteries in every parochial district no concession or compromise was possible. To accept that which had been offered would not avert but rather hasten disestablishment, because it would weaken and disorganise the Church, and there would be no confidence existing between its Bishops, clergy, and laity.—A correspondent of the Scotsman is informed that in the new Roman Catholic hierarchy for Scotland the Primate or Metropolitan is to be styled "Archbishop of St. Andrews." He will, however, reside in Edinburgh." The suffragan sees are to be those of Glasgow, Lismore, or Fort William, Aberdeen, and Moray.—The Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland commenced its annual session at Newport (Monmouth) on Monday, about 1,000 ministers and delegates attending. On Monday the Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown preached an inaugural sermon, in which he contended that denominationalism formed the strength and not the weakness of the Church. On Tuesday, in the debate on Foreign Missions, the Rev. James Smith, of Delhi, made the remarkable statement that the operations of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel were a far greater hindrance to the spread of Evangelical Christianity than all the opposition of the heathen, their system being simply one of "coat and blanket ecclesiastical charity." On the other hand, the Church Missionary Society was a grand and good society, and its clergy were doing a great work. The Rev. R. H. Robarts denounced the warlike measures adopted by Mr. Stanley in Central Africa, and remarked that Livingstone had never found it necessary to point a weapon at a single human being.—The Smithfield butchers and their wives took tea with Mr. Spurgeon on Tuesday, and were afterwards treated to an address in the reverend gentleman's well-known style. One of the anecdotes related to a miser whom he had known in his youth, and who was "told by the Lord" to give him half a sovereign with which to buy a new hat. The old gentleman, however, only gave three halfcrowns at first, but a day or two afterwards he pressed him to accept the balance, as he could not sleep at night. He therefore took the halfcrown to ease the man's conscience, and God, who knew that he wanted the hat, made the old gentleman "fork out" that ten shillings.—Messrs. Monk and Wait, the members for Gloucester, are reported to have purchased a piece of the stake used at the martyrdom of Bishop Hooper. Nothing is said about the price, or the evidence as to the genuineness of the relic.

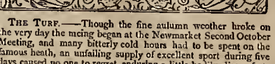
MUSIC

Crystal Palace Concerts.——The first concert was a real success. The overtures of Weber and Auber, as well as the symphony of Beethoven, were admirably played. Auber's Premier Jour de Bonheur, however, was a novelty, and welcome in the bargain. Like the opera to which it acts as orchestral prelude, it is fresh and sparkling from beginning to end, and no one would guess that its composer was over eighty. The other novelty, Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Incidental Music to Henry VIII.," once more more caused us to regret that but little chance is afforded in this country for the adequate production of an English—or, for all that, Italian—opera by one so eminently gifted to excel as a composer for the stage. The music was listened to with evident interest, the Pageant March, the ingeniously contrived "Graceful Dance," the Barcarole, &c., being received with hearty approval. A song, for baritone(with chorus), "Youth will needs have dalliance," the words of which are attributed to "Harry the Bluff" himself, is instinct with the spirit of old English melody, and being delivered in a simple, unaffected style by Mr. George Fox, obtained a unanimous "encore." In Henry VIII., as in Schumann's picturesque "Gipsy Life," what has been said about the marked improvement of the Crystal Palace Choir was amply justified. The pianoforte concerto of Sir Julius Benedict, the opening movement of which was composed many years ago, the work being afterwards finished expressly for Madame Arabella Goddard, was a marked success. The work itself, in which we find Weber's favourite pupil following the footsteps of Mozart as regards form, rivalling Hummel in his bravura and Dussek in his cantabile, and, glancing here and there at the famous author of the Concertstück, endowing the whole with strong individuality, is in its way a masterpiece. Madame Goddard, who has introduced the concerto on several previous occasions, has never played it with more spirit, grace, and refinement. The other leading vocalist was Madame Sophie Löwe, who sang "Lieder" by Wagner, Chopin, and Kirchner. At the concert to-day the Spanish violinist, Señor Sarasate, is to play a concerto by Herr Max Bruch, who himself will conduct the performance, as well as that of his own orchestral prelude to the opera, Lorelei.

Promenade Concerts.——The Covent Garden Concerts seem especially prosperous. The Wednesday "classical" programmes this week included a most attractive selection from the works of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett. It comprised, among other things, the Symphony in G minor (No. 7), the overtures, entitled the Wood Nymph and Paradise and the Peri, and the Pianoforte Concerto in F minor (No. 4). There were also solo pieces for the piano, and various songs. The pianist was M. Henri Ketten; the singers were Miss Lisa Walton and Mr. F. H. Celli, the former of whom, it may be stated at once, gave "Gentle Zephyr" and "Castle Gordon," the latter "'Tis jolly to hunt," from the May Queen—each, if pure melody and distinctive character may count for anything, a veritable gem. M. Ketten played the concerto (no easy task) with remarkable spirit, and was well supported by the orchestra. The symphony and overtures were admirably executed by the fine orchestra which Signor Arditi conducts with so much skill and vigour; and the entire selection was a legitimate treat to all who care for music so refined, poetical, and scholarly.

Waifs.——Mdme. Christine Nilsson left England on Wednesday to fulfil a three months' engagement at Moscow and St. Petersburg. On Monday she sang in one of Mr. Kuhe's grand concerts at Brighton.—Mdme. Adelina Patti has been staying in London, pending the series of concerts for which she is engaged in the "provinces." From England she goes to Milan, and, it is rumoured, will pass the winter in Italy.—Mdme. Annette Essipoff, the charming Russian pianist, is taking a holiday at Venice, and intends paying us a visit either in the winter of this year or the spring of the next; so that, what with Rubinstein, Bülow, &c., we shall have enough to do with foreign pianistic virtuosos for a good time to come. We are of opinion that Mdme. Essipoff, who may fairly be styled the Russian Arabella Goddard, can hold her own against any of them.—Miss Minnie Hauck may shortly join Mr. Carl Rosa's Opera Company. She has also been in negotiation with the director of Her Majesty's Theatre.—Sir Michael Costa went to Vienna shortly after the Leeds Festival, and was represented at the funeral of Mdlle. Titiens by his brother, Signor Raphael Costa.—The members of the orchestra belonging to the Imperial Opera at Vienna intend giving a series of concerts in Paris during the "Exposition Universelle," under the direction, we hope, of that really great conductor, Herr Richter.—The score of Rameau's opera, Castor et Pollux, has recently been published, the figured bass, hitherto somewhat vaguely representing the accompaniments, being set forth in plain harmony, to satisfy modern requirements, by M. Charles Lecocq, composer of La Fille de Madame Angot (!)—The Italian operatic season at Moscow began with Lucrezia Borgia. At St. Petersburg the first performance is announced for the 15th inst.—So that the war throws no impediment in the way of this annual entertainment of the Muscovites, the chief expenses connected with which are defrayed from the Imperial Exchequer.



SPORTING

The Turf.——Though the fine autumn weather broke on the very day the racing began at the Newmarket Second October Meeting, and many bitterly cold hours had to be spent on the famous heath, an unfailing supply of excellent sport during five days caused no one to regret enduring a little bodily discomfort. Seldom, if ever, have more persons been sojourning at Newmarket, or more visitors arrived day by day to witness the sport. Want of space compels us to omit Monday's and Wednesday's racing, and to speak only of the Cesarewitch. The field numbered but twenty-five, four less than last year, and the horses were despatched at the first attempt. Luckpenny brought the fleet along at a rare pace, and kept the lead till near the Rowley Mile starting post, where he was done with. At this point conspicuous among the leaders were Zucchero, Duchess of Cambridge, Belphœbe, Pageant, Rosy Cross, and Macaroon. The favourite, on whom, according to instructions, M'Donald was sitting as quietly as possible, was in the ruck, but making the descent into the Abingdon Mile Bottom his jockey let him out, and from that moment the race was never in doubt, the favourite sailing away and winning in a canter by three lengths from Macaroon, Lord Hartington's Belphœbe taking third honours. Whether the two placed horses would have occupied those positions had not others been more or less eased when the pursuit of Hilarious was seen to be hopeless may be a question; and certainly not a few who saw the race declare that Rosy Cross could have been second. Hence, probably, the favour Mr. Sheriff East's animal is in for the Cambridgeshire. The result of the race confirms the public running of the winner, and there was no getting away from his recent victory over Lady Golightly. This filly, in the afternoon of the Cesarewitch day, beat Albert Edward and Norwich with consummate ease in the Royal Stakes; and had the exhibition taken place before the great race Hilarious would probably have started an even chance. Macaroon's second was the great surprise of the race, as he started at no price at all, only one bookmaker, it is believed, having written his name. It was the first time her owner's colours had been seen on a racecourse; and certainly to run second for a big race like this the first time of asking must be very inspiriting, though perhaps partly tantalising. Zucchero, who was probably backed for more money than any horse in the race, was well up at the Bushes, and pulling hard at Luke; but soon after he had shot his bolt, showing, as not a few good judges suspected from his breeding, that the distance would be too far for him. The almost perfect unanimity of the sporting "prophets" on the morning of the race in favour of Hilarious was remarkable. It may be noted that the last real Northern horse which won this great prize was Legerdemain in 1849.

Aquatics.——As probably all our readers interested in Aquatics know by this time, Higgins beat Boyd for the Championship of England on Monday last. Boisterous weather, which was thought to have militated against Higgins in his last contest with the Tyne man, again seemed to make the race a certainty for Boyd, but for once in a way the odds laid on a man in a boat race were upset, and Higgins was an easy winner. Boyd and his friends, however, are by no means satisfied, and the result will probably be that the men will row again, and even two matches are talked of.

Pedestrianism.——Again we are more than a day after the fair, and it seems hardly worth while to note as a matter of information that on Saturday afternoon last Gale finished his 1,500 miles in 1,000 hours. We are glad, however, to add that the most recent accounts of the man indicate that the health has not suffered from his almost superhuman exertions. "All's well that ends well;" but we are glad further to note that there appears a very general consensus among writers in the press and thoughtful people that the repetition of such feats is very far from desirable.

RURAL NOTES

Foreign Cattle and Dead Meat Imports.——Notwithstanding the new American and Canadian fields recently opened for the importation of live stock to supply the ever-growing wants of the rapidly increasing population of this country, we note from the Board of Trade Returns for the last nine months a falling-off in the general total of all classes of live stock from abroad. In the first three-quarters of last year we had 1,054,388, in the corresponding period of this year only 875,633. Up to September this year we paid for live stock 4,724,492*l.*, to contrast with an expenditure of 5,614,978*l.* From these figures it may be inferred that something more than usual has gone into the pockets of the stock farmers and flock masters of the country. The increase in the imports of fresh meat have been marked, being in the case of beef about five times as much as in the corresponding period of last year, and in the other twice as much. Our wheat expenditure has been much larger, and so also for other cereals, with the exception of Indian corn, which has fallen to the extent of two and a-half millions of money. We are glad to see that the poultry yard is being better attended to in this country, judging from the decline in the imports and the increase in home shows. There is much room for increased attention in this department of the farm, however, the number of eggs imported in the nine months being 596,154,120, and we got them at a cost of 1,970,596*l.* Altogether the foreigners' bill against us for the last nine months amounts well on to 70,000,000*l.* It could easily be reduced by better farming and greater security in land occupancy.

The Weather.——During the last fortnight the weather has been favourable for harvest operations in most of the localities where the god Pluvius had exercised his capriciousness too much in the earlier part of the season. The winds have been free and fresh, and have rattled through the stooks with savouring effect. Disease however, has appeared in the potatoes, but not to such an extent as will materially effect prices. The turnips are not progressing so favourably as could be desired, which is a misfortune, as we depend more upon or ought to depend more upon stock husbandry in England than on cereal. In some localities the turnips would be much advantaged by rain.

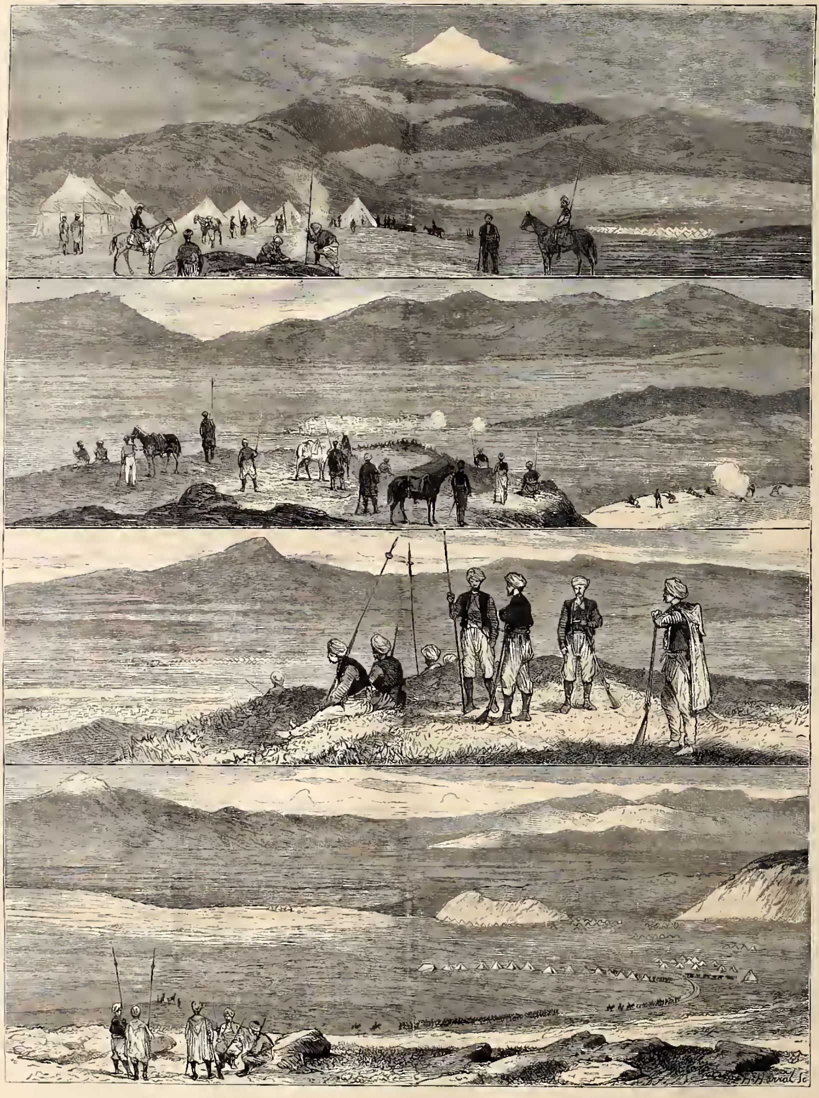
Miscellaneous.——From the London Gazette of Tuesday evening we learn that ten cases of that worst of all diseases in horses, glanders, have occurred during the week, four of which have been in the metropolis. Of farcy in horses, not communicable to human beings like glanders, there have been fourteen instances. From foreign countries, scheduled, 358 have been landed affected with foot-and-mouth disease and sheep scab; at the same time 51,105 animals came in healthy. A footnote gives us the satisfactory information that no case of contagious diseases from unscheduled countries has been detected in the course of the past month. We notice officially in the Gazette that the Home Secretary, on memorial, has resolved to consider whether the Hythe (Hants) Fair should not be abolished to the "convenience and advantage of the public." He takes till the 5th November to determine.—Mr. Elliott, M.P., and Mr. T. C. Booth, the celebrated shorthorn breeder, have publicly expressed their opinion that the only way of stopping the cattle plague in this country is the total prohibition of German cattle, a policy that can hardly be considered wise.—The shorthorn sales during the past fortnight have been numerous, and the prices more farmers' than fancy ones.

LEGAL

The City Road Burglary.——The coroner's inquest on the body of the unfortunate young man, Chalkley, has at least had the effect of clearing his memory from the stigma which had been cast upon it. The jury found that his death was the result of the accident in the Farringdon Road, spoken to by several witnesses, and that he was in no way connected with the burglary at Mr. Braham's. They added a rider censuring the police for removing him from the hospital, and for their subsequent treatment of him, and suggested that in future no prisoner should be removed without a written order from the hospital authorities. Chalkley appears to have been an honest, hard-working man, who was the main support of his widowed mother, for whom a subscription has been started, headed by Mr. Braham with a donation of 10*l.* The conduct of the police has excited much public indignation. Meetings have been held, and a memorial has been sent to the Home Secretary demanding a searching investigation into the case. "A Barrister," writing to a daily contemporary, calls attention to the conduct of the magistrate who remanded Chalkley for a week, refusing either to hear witnesses for the defence or to admit the accused to bail.

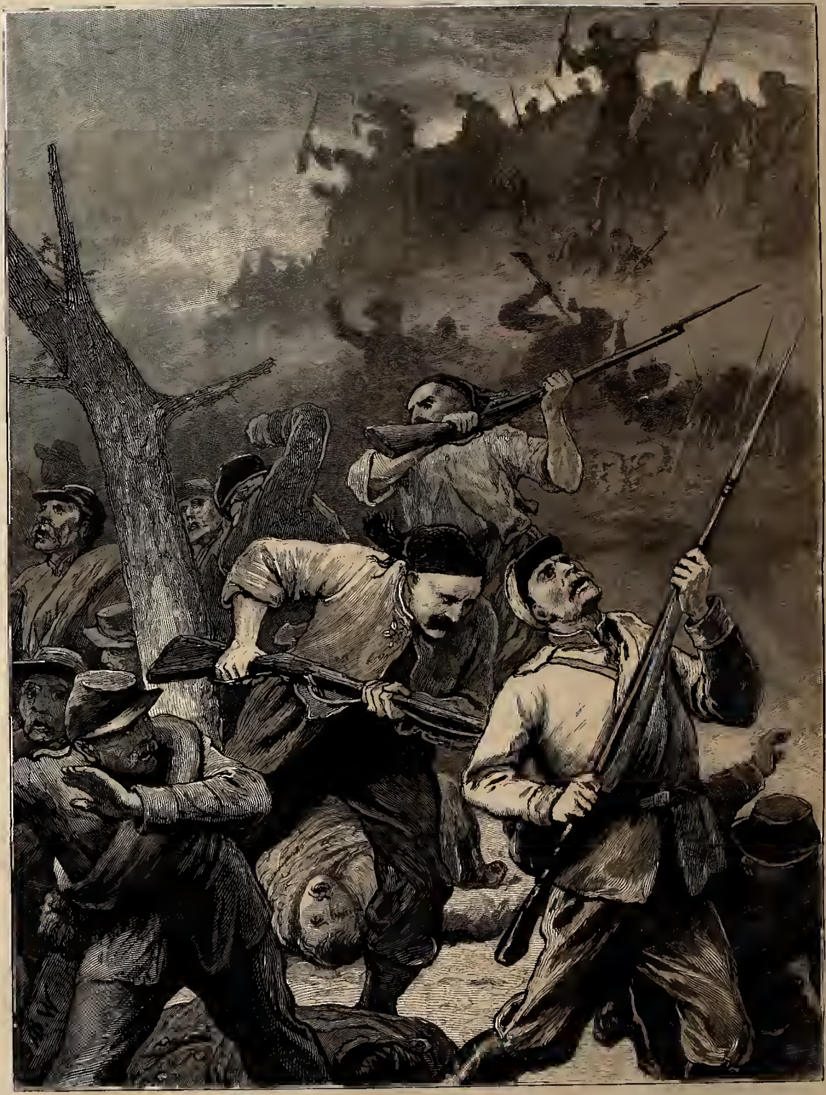
The Penge Murder still continues to occupy much public attention. Letters pro and con appear daily in the newspapers, and meetings have been held in London, Maidstone, and other places with the avowed object of influencing the Home Secretary in favour of a reprieve. The Daily Telegraph has published a second communication from Mr. C. Reade, who modestly proclaims that his Oxford training has enabled him to become a better judge of evidence than many other persons, and affirms that he is doing his "highest work" when he writes logic in a "great journal" upon a question of life and death. The four convicts have been told that they will be executed on Tuesday next, and they appear to have received the news with greater calmness than was anticipated. Patrick Staunton has denied several of the things alleged by Clara Brown in her supplementary statement; but, on the other hand, the girl has reiterated her allegations in a letter to the Daily Telegraph, and affirms that many of them can be corroborated by other persons.

Miscellaneous Items.——Jessie M'Lachlan, who was sentenced to death some fifteen years ago for the murder of Jessie Macpherson, but whose sentence was afterwards commuted to penal servitude for life, has just been set free on a ticket-of-leave. She declares her innocence.—At Tonbridge a woman has been committed for trial for the manslaughter of a publican, whom she bit in the leg while he was endeavouring to eject her from his house. The wound was dressed by a surgeon, but after four days the man died of delirium tremens caused by the bite. The doctor, however, stated that the patient might have recovered had he not been "saturated with alcohol."—The charge against a Portsmouth detective for obstructing the course of justice in the Gladstone divorce suit has broken down, and Captain Gladstone and one of his witnesses are to be indicted for "conspiracy."—The ringleaders of the recent mutiny at the Curragh Camp are to be tried by court-martial.—Three lads who are said to be respectably connected were the other night "playing at highwaymen" in a road near Kingston. Jumping suddenly from a ditch, one of them hailed the driver of a waggonette, with the cry, "Pull up; I am Dick Turpin," and at the same time the other two climbed up the back of the vehicle. The driver, who chanced to be a police inspector, immediately gave chase and caught one of the young rascals, and all three have since been bound over to keep the peace for six months. They ought to consider themselves lucky that the magistrate accepted their plea that "it was only done for a lark."—A young Austrian named Leonard Loth, who came over from Hamburg the other day, but who was so loth to pay for the voyage that he neglected to purchase a ticket, has been fined 1*l.* 15*s.*, with the alternative of three days' imprisonment.—A perplexing case of mistaken identity has just occurred at Bolton. One James Entwistle was summoned for wife desertion, but in court the woman declined to swear positively to him as her husband, although she affirmed that he "favoured" him very closely. The man's memory of his wife seems to have been equally defective, for he made no protest until he heard the witness say that her maiden name was Waddecar, when he exclaimed, "My missus's name was Flynn." Subsequent inquiry proved that there were two James Entwistles, both of whom were quarrymen, and both had deserted their wives at about the same time, some three years ago. The result was of course the release of the prisoner.—An equally strange case has just been heard at Worship Street Police Court, the subject of



1. Camp of Beytullah, Chief of the Kurds. Headquarters of the Turkish Invading Army under Ismail Pasha, near Igdyr, Georgia, Mount Ararat in Background.—2. Skirmish between Kurdish Bashi-Bazouks and Russian Outposts before Igdyr.—3. Kurds on Outpost Duty near Khalfallou.—4. Head-quarters: Camp of Ismail Pasha on the Chatsituchuk Mountain.

WITH THE TURKS AND ISMAIL PASHA IN ASIA



WITH THE TURKS AT SHIPKA—"ALLAH! ALLAH!" A TURKISH CHARGE AFTER AN UNSUCCESSFUL ASSAULT BY THE RUSSIANS dispute being a shawl instead of a husband. The garment had been stolen from a little girl, who afterwards with her mother met "a little old woman" wearing what they supposed to be the identical shawl, and accused her of taking it. Before the magistrate, however, the defendant proved that she had bought her shawl some months ago, and also produced a witness to identify it by a darn in the middle, which had been so neatly executed that there was some difficulty in finding it.—A printer's lad has been sentenced to a month's hard labour for damaging a machine belonging to his employer, his alleged object being to get a "mike"—anglicè, "holiday." A curious feature of the case was that the magistrate said he had no power to commit him for trial, although he could have done so had the machine been one used for manufacturing purposes.—Two women were the other day taken before the Bristol magistrates on the singular charge of endangering the life of an infant by exhibiting it. The child was thirteen weeks old, and was of such diminutive proportions that it only weighed 1 lb. 4 oz., and it was stated that as much as 16*l.* per day had been realised by the show. The prisoners were discharged on promising not to repeat the exhibition.

◆

A NEW GOVERNMENT FILTER has been invented, which will reduce strong tea and infusions of logwood to clear tasteless water. Major Crease is the inventor, and the filter was shown at the recent soirée at Guy's Hospital.

RAILWAY TRAVELLING IN FRANCE is decidedly safer than in our own country, to judge from some recent statistics. Thus between the years 1872-5 only one person was killed out of every 45,258,270 travellers on the French lines, and one person injured in 1,024,360, while during the same period in England one traveller was killed in 12,000,000 and one injured of every 336,000.

A BEAUTIFUL WHITE ALABASTER PIETÀ has been unearthed at the Parish Church of Breadsall, near Derby, now being restored. The Pietà apparently belongs to the fifteenth century, and is probably of Continental workmanship, while it is supposed to have been hidden away from the Puritans. It is about two feet six inches high, and bears traces of colouring and gilding, but unfortunately in the excavation the sculpture was slightly injured, part of the face of the Christ and the head and hands of the Virgin being damaged. The Pietà is, however, to be restored, and replaced in the church.

Now ready at all the Libraries,
NEW NOVEL BY MISS BRAMSTON.
"EM."
By MISS BRAMSTON,
Author of "The Carbridges," "Country Maidens," &c.
One Volume, price 10s. 6d.
MARCUS WARD and CO., London and Belfast.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Third Edition, cloth, post free 13 stamps.
ERRORS OF HOMŒOPATHY.
"A clever refutal of the system."—Medical Circular.
London: G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

Ready on the 15th instant, price 3d., or by post, 3½d.,
OUR EGYPTIAN OBELISK: CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE. By ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S.
BRAIN and CO., 26, Paternoster Row, and of all Booksellers.

Price 6d., or free by post, 8d.
MDME. DEMOREST'S
WHAT TO WEAR, AND HOW TO MAKE IT.
Information on Dress and Dressmaking. Contains nearly 500 miniature illustrations of Ladies and Children's Fashions for Autumn and Winter, with full descriptions of latest styles, &c., including materials, trimmings, walking, and outdoor costumes, dinner, evening, and other toilets, jewellery, laces, coiffures, millinery, and every new and desirable article connected with Ladies' and Children's Dress.
Just what every lady, milliner, dressmaker, draper, warehouseman, and outfitter wants to know about the Autumn and Winter Fashions.
Sold by all Booksellers and Newsagents, and at every Railway Station.—WILLIAM and ROGERS NEWS CO., General Agents for Demorest's Reliable Patterns, 11, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

Price One Penny.
ALL engaged in Education should read "VIVISECTION IN ITS MORAL AND EDUCATIONAL ASPECTS." By Mrs. GORDON, Author of "Home Life of Sir David Brewster," &c.—London: M. WALBROOK, 180, Brompton Road, S.W.

COLLECTIONS of PHOTOGRAPHS, PRINTS, &c., arranged.—MARION and CO., 22 and 23, Soho Square, undertake to PUT INTO ORDER COLLECTIONS of PHOTOGRAPHS, Prints, &c.—to make them into convenient volumes for reference—to frame them for the Library or Dining Room—or to portfolio them with partitions in order to keep Countries separate—Patent Portfolios, folding into small space. Portraits enlarged, framed, and cased. Estimates given for work in general.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

ALBERT MEMORIAL COLLEGE, FRAMLINGHAM, SUFFOLK.
The PUBLIC DISTRIBUTION of PRIZES for the Year 1877 will be made by the Hon. and Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of NORWICH on THURSDAY, the 18th inst., in the College Dining Hall, at 2 p.m.
The Distribution of Prizes will be followed by the usual Concert by the College Choir at 4.30.
All applications for Tickets should be made without delay to the Head Master.

THE WANDERERS' CLUB, Pall Mall. This Club having now reached 1,378 Members, there remain only 200 VACANCIES.
Annual Subscription: Town Members, 8 guineas; Country Members, 4 guineas; Members Abroad, 2 guineas. Present Entrance Fee, 10 guineas.
For further information apply to Major T. H. P. KENNAN,
Secretary.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.—The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

EXHIBITION GALLERY.—To Artists, Exhibitors, and others.—A well-frequented gallery in the best position in London, the light perfect, available for a short period on moderate terms, with competent assistance, and every facility for advantageously exhibiting and selling, or for subscribing and publishing.—Only artists of recognized reputation or their representatives treated with.—Address E. G., Messrs. STREET BROTHERS, 5, Serle Street, W.C.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

HAIR DESTROYER.—248, High Holborn, London.—ALEX. ROSS'S DEPILATORY removes superfluous hair from face and arms without injury. 3s. 6d. Sent post free, carefully packed, for 54 stamps by Alex. Ross.

THE NOSE MACHINE applied to the nose for an hour daily so directs the soft cartilage of the nose that an ill-formed one is quickly shaped, 10s. 6d. Sent for stamps.—ALEX. ROSS, 248, High Holborn, London.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.
BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 56, Cheapside, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price £4 to £120. Snuff Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC PRIMERS. Edited by Dr. STAINER.

Second Edition, price Two Shillings.
THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER (Principal Professor of the Pianoforte at the National Training School for Music). No. 1 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

Ready on October 15.
THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. No. 3 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

In the Press.
THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. No. 2 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

Second Edition, price Two Shillings.
CATHEDRAL PSALTER CHANTS. Edited by Rev. S. FLOOD JONES, M.A., JAMES TURLE, Rev. J. TROUTBECK, M.A., Dr. J. STAINER, and JOSEPH BARNBY.

SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM, containing Thirty Songs, with English and German words, by ROBERT SCHUMANN. Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM for YOUNG PIANISTS, containing Fifty-six Short Pieces, by ROBERT SCHUMANN (Op. 68 and Op. 15). Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM, containing Forty Songs, with the original German words, and an English version by JOHN OXENFORD. Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.
LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.,
1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

NEW and POPULAR WALTZES, performed at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden Theatre.
Geliebt und Verloren (Loved and Lost). Otto Müller. 4s.
Ditto, duet. 4s.
Der Letzte Kuss (The Last Kiss). 4s.
Der Letzte Kuss (The Last Kiss), duet. 4s.
Rêve d'Amour. G. Lamothe. 4s.
Ditto, duet. 4s.
Fontainebleau. 4s.
Sold at half-price.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford St.

THE Popular Song, LOVED AND LOST. The Words by PERCY FITZGERALD, adapted to MÜLLER'S Beautiful Waltz, "Geliebt und Verloren." Sold by every Musicseller in the United Kingdom. Post free, 2s.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

ESMERALDA. W. C. Levey's popular Song. "One of the brightest modern compositions of its kind."—Standard. The Song in D, E, or F, 4s.; for piano, by Kube, 4s.; Richards, 4s.; Rochard, 2s.; Waltzes, by Godfrey, 4s.—Half-price.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

A BIRD SANG IN A HAWTHORN TREE. J. L. HATTON'S most successful new song for soprano. "Exceedingly original, quaint, and truly charming—a song that will add to the composer's fame."—Queen. Sent for 2s.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Pianoforte School.
Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.
For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

THE FOUR MARIES.
As sung in Mr. Kennedy's Entertainment of the "Songs of Scotland" in St. James's Hall.
Post free for 18 stamps from
METHVEN, SIMPSON, and CO., Dundee; or
C. JEFFERYS, Berners Street, London.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Tiercot.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

WOOD and CO.'s POPULAR PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Kuhe's Village Blacksmith (Weiss)	4s.	0d.
Kuhe's My Mother bids me bind my hair (Haydn)	4	0
Kuhe's Mermaid's Song (Haydn)	4	0
Kuhe's Adelaide (Beethoven)	4	0
Kuhe's Where the Bee Sucks (Arne)	4	0
Kuhe's Rigoletto, quatuor (Verdi)	4	0
Kuhe's Caprice on an Air of Louis XIII.	4	0

Post free 2s.
WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street, and all Musicsellers.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.
All for Her. No. 1 sop., No. 2 contralto. A. S. Gatty.
Maiden May. Two keys. A. S. Gatty. Sung by Madame Cave-Ashton.
Before the Storm. Baritone. A. S. Gatty.
Meha. No. 1 tenor, No. 2 baritone. V. Capoul. Sung by M. Capoul.
Be My Love. Baritone. G. Fox.
My Star. No. 1 contralto, No. 2 mezzo-sop. Julia Wolff.
Little Nannie. Soprano. Julia Wolff. Sung by Mrs. Osgood.
The Trooper's Dream. Baritone. Julia Wolff.
Post free 24 stamps each.
ENOCH and SONS, 19, Holles Street, W.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20—GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

AMERICAN CENTENNIAL PRIZE MEDAL.
FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.
"The Caracas Cocoa of such choice quality."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.

FRY'S EXTRACT OF COCOA.
Of great value to Invalids who wish to avoid rich articles of diet.
"Which really consists of Cocoa Nibs deprived of the superfluous oil."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.
TENTH INTERNATIONAL MEDAL
awarded to J. S. FRY and SONS.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.
Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.
Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted. Four times the strength of Cocoas Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, Starch, &c., and really cheaper.
The Faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestive Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER," and invaluable for Invalids and Children. Keeps in all Climates. Requires no Cooking. A teaspoonful to Breakfast cup costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis.
H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam Street, London, W.C.

FOR BLANC-MANGE, PUDDINGS, CUSTARDS,
CHILDREN AND INVALIDS' DIET,
AND ALL THE USES OF ARROWROOT,
BROWN and POLSON'S CORN FLOUR
HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION,
AND IS DISTINGUISHED FOR
UNIFORMLY SUPERIOR QUALITY.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. 8d. per bushel; households for bread, 10s.; wheat meal for brown bread, 9s. 4d.; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, 5s. 4d. per bushel, or 20s. per sack; buckwheat, maize, and barley meal, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d.; ground pollard, 2s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for Invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG.

JOHNSTON'S (THE OLD HOUSE)
CORN FLOUR IS THE BEST.
"Is decidedly superior."—Lancet.
JOHNSTON'S SCOTCH OATMEAL, in packets, with plain directions for making Porridge, Brose, and Gruel.

HEDGES and Butler, 155, Regent Street, London, and 30 and 74, King's Road, Brighton, invite attention to their CLARET, at 14s., 18s., 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., to 84s.
SHERRY, at 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., to 60s.
CHAMPAGNE, at 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., 66s., to 78s.
OLD PORT, at 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., to 96s.
Fine old Pale Brandy, 48s., 60s., 72s., 84s.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY | "THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."
Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS. 1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

WILLS' "BEST BIRD'S-EYE" CIGARETTES.
Sold everywhere in Sixpenny Packets (containing Ten), protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

WILLS' "THREE CASTLES." Thackeray, in the "Virginians," says: "There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better brand than the 'Three Castles.'" Sold only in Packets, protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO. Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

PALACE SOAP, 20s. per lb., for State Apartments.—PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond Street, are the only makers of this exquisite soap. Single cakes, 5s., or six in a carton, 27s. 6d. Piesse and Lubin also make some charming flower-scented soaps, at 10s. per lb., such as opoponax soap, violet soap, frangipanni soap, otto of rose soap, and others, in cakes, 2s. 6d. each, suitable for superior use.—Royal Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street.

PIESSE and LUBIN'S SWEET SCENTS.—Opoponax, Jockey Club, Patchouly, Frangipanni, Kiss-me-Quick, White Rose, and 1,000 others from every flower that breathes a fragrance, 2s. 6d. each, 3 bottles in a case, 7s. The above sweet scents in sachet powder, 1s. 6d. each, can be forwarded by post. Sold by fashionable Druggists and Perfumers in all parts of the world.

PIESSE and LUBIN'S PESTACHIO NUT SKIN AND COMPLEXION POWDER imparts a natural whiteness and youthful delicacy to the skin attainable by no other means; also represses the unpleasantness of too copious perspiration.—2, New Bond Street, London, W. May be had of all the fashionable perfumers and druggists throughout the earth. In boxes, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS, REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—
with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required),
without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
PETER ROBINSON, of Regent Street,
has just completed some large purchases
from the Lyons Manufacturers, at a great advantage,
and can supply really Good Black Silks,
at 2s. 6½d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d., 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 10s. 9d.
THE EMPRESS BLACK SILK, at 6s. 6d.
is specially recommended for Good Wear
by the Manufacturer.
Also DEGOVE'S PURE BLACK SILK,
which gives Universal Satisfaction,
at 5s., 7s., and 8s.
For Patterns address
PETER ROBINSON, REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262,
where the above can only be obtained.
BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS,
exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in LYONS VELVET, at 10s. 9d.
BLACK SILK TRIMMING VELVETS,
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
at PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262.

A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK.

For 4½ & 5 Gs.	formerly 6½ & 7 Guineas.
For 7 Guineas	formerly 9 Guineas.
For 10 Guineas	formerly 14 Guineas.

Perfectly new styles.
Exquisitely cut and trimmed by French Artists.
Photographs and Patterns of the Silks free.
Address PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialité,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
59s. 6d. and 3½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9 guineas.
36 inches long for 10½ guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
It is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

SPECIALE INFORMATION. — La Directrice des modes dans l'établissement de Messieurs JAY et CIE. a l'honneur d'informer sa clientèle de son retour de Paris avec un grand CHOIX de CHAPEAUX et COIFFURES pour L'AUTOMNE. Les Chapeaux sont différents, et des plus confortables formes. Les Bonnets et Coiffures sont élégants, et de formes tout à fait nouvelles.

SPECIAL INFORMATION. — The latest FRENCH SILK COSTUMES, for autumn wear, composed of Black Silk with Velvet, and some very novel Garnitures, have been imported by Messrs. JAY. Ladies are specially invited to view these productions of the French Modiste's art and good taste.

SPECIAL INFORMATION. — New Pattern BLACK SILK COSTUMES, trimmed handsomely with Velvet and other fashionable Garnitures, at 6½ guineas each Costume, including 3½ yards of Silk for making a Bodice.

SPECIAL INFORMATION.—Fashions for AUTUMN.—Messrs. JAY have received from Paris some beautiful specimens of French art and ingenuity, in a variety of Mantles, so diversified in style, texture, and material, as almost to constitute a new class in Ladies' Costume.
JAY'S,
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
Regent Street, W.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)
BOYS' SUITS.
SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S EMACERATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing. 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, S.W.; or through any Chemist.

THE STOCK OF MADAME SILVESTRE, late of Vere St., Cavendish Sq., W., Modiste by Appointment to Her Majesty, has been purchased at a large discount off by

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.,

and is now on Sale, together with extraordinary purchases in anticipation of the Autumn Season in SILKS, FURS, MANTLES, and COSTUMES.

For particulars please write for Circular.

A LARGE PURCHASE OF

NEW COLOURED SILKS,

at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., and 4s. 6d. per yard.
250 shades to select from. Patterns free.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES OF

BLACK GROS GRAINS.

This extensive purchase comprises Silks of the best and most reliable makes, and are specially recommended. Prices 2s. 6½d., 3s. 3½d., and 3s. 9d. per yard. Also richer goods from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

THE NEW

PEKIN BROCADES (Spun Silk),

In all the New Colours, at 4s. 11d. per yard. A novel material, having a pretty effect blended with plain coloured Silks. Patterns free.

COLOURED GENOA VELVETS

to match every Silk. Short pile, well covered, suitable for Gowns, 6s. 11d. per yard, any length cut. Patterns free.

COLOURED SILK COSTUMES

of the latest designs and most fashionable description, in all the new colour Silks, commencing at 6½ guineas. Patterns of the Silks and Engravings post free.

BLACK SILK COSTUMES,

made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, price with bodice complete, 5½ guineas. Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

AUTUMN COSTUMES.

New Designs in Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas. Specialities in Travelling Costumes, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas. Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas. Illustrations and Patterns Materials post free.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.,

having concluded the purchase of large quantities of

SEAL FUR SKINS

and Squirrel Furs, they are now on sale as quoted below.
Russian Seal Fur Jackets, loose shapes, 24 to 28 inches deep, 6 to 10 guineas.
Ditto fitting shapes, 30 to 36 inches deep, 9 to 20 guineas.
South Sea Seals, loose shapes, 2 to 4 guineas.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN

MANTLES AND PALETOTS,

Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 2 to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL

CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.

The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 18s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 47s.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR

AUTUMN and WINTER DRESSES,

in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour, From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

IN 62 NEW SHADES OF COLOUR.

CACHEMIRE DE PARIS.

This elegant material is all wool, beautifully soft, and richer in its colourings than any article previously introduced 43 inches wide, 2s. 11d. and 3s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free. PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.

CASHMERE MERINOS, all wool,

This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

A NEW FABRIC FOR PALETOTS, &c.

POIL DE CHAMEAU (Registered).

This elegant fabric, though very warm, is remarkably light and soft, and can be had in choice shades of Fawn, Drab, Grey, Light Brown, &c. 54 inches wide, from 5s. 6d. per yd. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford St., W.

A VARIETY OF NEW MATERIALS FOR

WARM WINTER PETTICOATS,

including a large assortment of Silk Striped Cloth Skirtings, Reversible Felts, plain colours, New Striped Flannel Cashmere, &c., from 3s. 3d. to 5s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.

NOW ON SALE AT HALF-PRICE.

1,000 UNMADE PALETOTS (Black),

Richly embroidered on very fine Cashmere or Diagonal Cloth, full size and newest shapes, from 29s. 6d. to 42s. each, formerly 3 to 4 guineas.

IN WHITE, BLACK, AND ALL NEW COLOURS.

VELVET-FINISH'D VELVETEENS,

beautifully soft, rich, and very wide. This charming Fabric can be had in Black, from 2s. 9d. to 5s. 6d. per yard, and in 35 choice shades of colour, at 3s. 9d. per yard. Patterns free PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

GASK and GASK.

NEW VIGONA CLOTH, 21½d. per yard, in new autumn shades; also FINE French Cachemires, 2s. 11d., double width; and the FASHIONABLE SNOW-FLAKE CLOTH, 16½d.; with a large collection of NEW DRESS FABRICS, from 10d. to 3s. 9d. per yard. Patterns free.
Oxford Street and Wells Street.

NEW AUTUMN COSTUMES, made of the Fashionable Foreign and English Fabrics from novel and elegant PARIS MODELS, 2 guineas to 6½ guineas.

RICH BLACK SILK COSTUMES, exceptionally good, 4 guineas.
SILK COSTUME SKIRTS, 21s.; with a vast variety of Costumes of all kinds, equally cheap.
GASK and GASK, Oxford Street, and Wells Street.

GASK and GASK.

NEW LYONS SILKS, Black and Colours, still cheaper. The best makes of BLACK SILKS, recommended for wear, and every shade of colour in all qualities, 3s. 3d. to 7s. 9d. per yard.
NEW FANCY SILKS. Patterns free.
58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street; 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, Wells Street.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The

most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 40s. and 45s. half-dozen.—41 and 44, Poultry. Branch—308, Oxford Street, London.

WOOLLEN CLOTHS.

Waterproof Tweeds, Matelasse Cloths, Sealskins, Fur Beavers, and other materials for Ladies' Jackets; also every kind of Woollen Goods for Gentlemen's and Boys' wear.
C. MEEKING and CO., Woollen Warehouse,
111 and 112, Hatton Garden, Holborn Circus, London.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.

BRUSSELS CARPETS.

VELVET CARPETS, &c.

EXHIBITION MEDALS, 1851, 1862: DUBLIN, 1865.
34 and 36, OLD BOND STREET, W.

THROAT IRRITATION.

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s., labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC

WAFERS instantly relieve asthma, consumption, bronchitis, coughs, colds, shortness of breath, phlegm, pains in the chest, rheumatism, and taste pleasantly. 1s. 1½d. per box.

HENRY GLAVE'S

GRAND EXHIBITION OF COSTUMES AND OTHER NOVELTIES
on MONDAY NEXT, the 15th, and following days.

At the Grand Autumn Exhibition and Costume Contest just concluded at the Alexandra Palace we exhibited upwards of Fifty very superior Ladies' and Children's French Model Costumes, and many new things in Mantles, Jackets, Millinery, Flowers, &c., which obtained 25 prizes, and were highly commended for style and cheapness; the Prize and other Costumes are enumerated below:

LADIES' COSTUMES.

"Liebhart"—Evening Dress. Pale Blue Silk, with Lace and Gauze, £8 18s. 6d.
"Fleur de Thé"—Evening Dress. Pink and Cream Brocaded Silk, £9 18s. 6d.
"Lady Teazle"—Ball Dress. Pale Blue Tulle and Chrysanthemums, £3 18s. 6d.
"Ophelia"—Ball Dress. White Tulle and Silk, with Velvet Leaves, £7 7s.
"Harrogate"—Promenade Costumes. Bronze Green Cachmere and Velveteen, £4 4s.
"Ventnor"—Promenade Costumes. Fawn, Homespun, and Brown Braid Jacket and Hat, £3 18s. 6d.
"Silverton"—Promenade Costumes. Brown Cachmere and Velveteen, £3 18s. 6d.
"Glenthorne"—Promenade Costumes. Prune Snowflake and Pink Silk, £2 10s. 6d.
"Bromley"—Promenade Costumes. Bronze Cachmere and Blue Silk, with Cape, £4 4s.
"Claremont"—Promenade Costumes. Fawn Serge and Brown Velveteen, £2 10s. 6d.
"Christine"—Promenade Costumes. Black Velveteen and Silk Jacket and Hat, £5 5s.
"Lymington"—Promenade Costumes. Fawn Matalasse and Velvet Galloon Jacket and Hat, £4 10s. 6d.
"Zarel"—Reception Dress. Brown Velveteen and Cream Brocaded Silk, £4 4s.
"Moscow"—Travelling Costumes. Fawn Camel's Hair Cloth, with Lynx Fur Jacket, Hat and Muff, £6 6s.
"Clyde"—Travelling Costumes. Fawn, Chameau Cloth and Raccoon Fur, Jacket, Hat and Muff, £5 10s. 6d.
"St. Malo"—Travelling Costumes. Prune Velveteen and Grey Fur, Jacket, Hat, and Muff, £5 18s. 6d.
"Bonnie Fishwife"—Yachting Costumes. Blue Serge and Red Twill, with Cap, £2 18s. 6d.
"Normandy"—Yachting Costumes. Green Serge and White Braid Jacket and Hat, £2 18s. 6d.
"Chiswick"—Deep Mourning Costume. Black Cachmere and Crape, with Bonnet, £4 10s. 6d.
"Chislehurst"—Complimentary Mourning Costume. Black Silk and Real Feather Trimming, £10 10s.
"Daybreak"—Dressing Gown. Pink Cachmere and Cream Braid, with Cap, £3 18s. 6d.
"Rainbow"—Dressing Gown. Striped Flannel, with Coloured Ruchings, £4 10s. 6d.

CHILDREN'S COSTUMES.

"Leonora"—Bronze Cachmere and Silk Galloon, £2 5s. 6d.
"Lurline"—Brown and Pale Blue Silk Poplin, £2 2s.
"Valentine"—Brown and Cardinal Silk Poplin, £1 15s. 6d.
"Folly"—Claret Cachmere and Rose Silk, £1 17s. 6d.
"Surprise"—Navy Blue Cachmere and Pale Blue Silk, £1 19s. 6d.
"Iris"—White Flannel and Blue Braid, Jacket and Hat, £2 9s. 6d.
"Chipka"—Fawn Chameau Cloth and Raccoon Fur, Jacket, Hat, and Muff, £2 2s.
"Ida"—Pale Blue Cachmere and natural Feather Trimming, Jacket, Hat, and Muff, £2 12s. 6d.
"Patti"—Bronze Cachmere and Velveteen, £2 2s.
"Rosalice"—Navy Blue Velveteen and Pink Silk, £2 2s.
"Charmant"—Black Velveteen and Pale Blue Feather Trimming, Jacket, Hat, and Muff, £2 18s. 6d.
"Cossack"—White Flannel and White Fur, Jacket and Cap, £2 12s. 6d.
"Polo"—White Flannel and White Fur, Jacket and Cap, £2 18s. 6d.
"Silvio"—Blue Japanese and Torchon Lace, £1 11s. 6d.
"Caller Herrin"—Navy Blue Serge and Red Twill, with Cap, £1 18s. 6d.
"Pearl"—White Silk and Tulle, with Pearls, £2 9s. 6d.
"Rival"—Navy Blue Cachmere and Pale Blue Brocaded Silk, £1 19s. 6d.
"Cameron"—Green Cachmere and Pale Blue Brocaded Silk, £2 12s. 6d.
"Munroe"—Brown Serge and Pink Silk, £1 9s. 6d.
"Jessica"—Black Silk and Steel Buttons, £2 15s. 6d.
"Moonbeam"—Black Silk and Moonbeam Beads, £5 5s.
"Fairlight"—Dark Green Cachmere and Light Green and Silver Buttons, £1 17s. 6d.
"Winfred"—Ink Cachmere and Fawn Cachmere, £2 18s. 6d.

Patterns of Materials, Photographs, and every particular, post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S

GRAND EXHIBITION OF NOVELTIES
on MONDAY NEXT, the 15th, and following days.
In addition to the Prize Costumes in the above advertisement we shall show:—

10,000 pieces new fancy Dress Fabrics, including Serges of all kinds and at every price, commencing at 6¾d. a yard; also Diagonal Cloths, Matelasses, Estamenes, Shetlands, India and other fine Cachmeres, Scarboro Twills, Snowflakes, Camels'-hair, Vicuna Cloths, Rink Skirtings, with thousands of other new things, the production of every nation in Europe.

Patterns free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S

GRAND EXHIBITION OF NOVELTIES
On MONDAY NEXT, the 15th, and following days, will include:—
BLACK SILKS at 3s. 9d.
BLACK SILKS at 4s. 9d.
BLACK SILKS at 5s. 9d.
BLACK SILKS at 6s. 9d.
With various Cheap Lots from 1s. 11½d. to 9s. 11d. a yard; also Japanese and Coloured Silks of every kind at prices unprecedented
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

"FER BRAVAIS."

BRAVAIS' DIALYSED IRON.

THE ONLY PURE SOLUTION OF IRON WITHOUT ACID.

"IRON and OXYGEN combined, to the exclusion of all Acids, as Soluble Hydrate of Peroxide of Iron."
Vide Dr. J. RENGADE'S Report.

Prepared by RAOUL, BRAVAIS, and CO., 13, Rue Lafayette, Paris; London Office: 8, Idol Lane, Tower Street, E.C.
FIRST BRONZE MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1875.
SOLE PRIZE, PHILADELPHIA EXPOSITION, 1876.

This admirable Preparation does not CONSTIPATE, or disturb the digestive organs, and neither injures nor blackens the teeth. Its effect as a reconstituent are rapid and certain. IT HAS NO STYPTIC TASTE, and it is admirably adapted for all continuous treatment by Iron, possessing all the advantages of this MOST APPROVED TONIC in the highest degree. N.B. A LONDON PHYSICIAN WRITES: "I have given it to patients who have been unable to take Iron in any other form." PRICES: Bottle, full size, 4s. 6d.; small ditto, 3s.; in Card Box with drop measure complete. N.B. The full size bottles contain sufficient for about two months' regular treatment.

To be had of all leading Chemists and Druggists.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS

POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 82, Southwark St., London.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD

LIVER OIL (Registered).
The purest Oil, and by Almond flavouring, rendered palatable and easy of digestion.
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.

British Medical Journal says—Whilst securing the beneficial results traceable to Cod Liver Oil as a valuable tonic and dietetic, we have found no difficulty in inducing our little patients to take it.

Sanitary Record says—We have tried its effect on the most delicate constitutions with marked effect. So well are the odour and taste of the Oil disguised that children will take the preparation with avidity.

Medical Times says—The taste is decidedly masked by the almond flavouring.

Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists,
And Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited),
Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Gold chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.

BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

E. DENT and CO., 61, Strand, and 43,

Royal Exchange, London, Manufacturers of CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, CLOCKS, &c. (Catalogues free) to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and Foreign Sovereigns.
Makers of the Great Westminster Clock and of the New Standard Clock of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

NOTICE.—Manufacture of Spoons and Forks.—Messrs. ELKINGTON and CO. beg to announce that having succeeded in carrying out several important improvements in the above manufacture, they are now enabled to offer their guaranteed qualities at such prices as, while fully maintaining their high quality, place them within the reach of all classes. Revised Illustrated Price Lists can be had on application.

ADDRESS—ELKINGTON and CO.
LONDON—22, Regent Street, W.
42, Moorgate Street, E.C.
LIVERPOOL—25, Church Street.
MANCHESTER—St. Ann's Square, or to the Manufactory,
NEWHALL STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

MAPPIN and WEBB,

MANUFACTURERS,
Mansion House Buildings, City, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S TABLE

CUTLERY.—BEST QUALITY DOUBLE SHEAR STEEL.

	Table	Dessert	Carver
3½ inch ivory, per doz.	15s. 0d.	11s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
3½ inch ivory, balance, per doz.	19s. 0d.	15s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
3¾ inch ivory, balance, per doz.	22s. 0d.	16s. 0d.	7s. 6d.
3¾ inch ivory, stout, per doz.	32s. 0d.	22s. 0d.	9s. 6d.
4 inch fine ivory, per doz.	34s. 0d.	24s. 0d.	10s. 6d.

Oak Boxes always kept ready in stock.
Illustrated catalogues post free.

MAPPIN and WEBB,

MANUFACTURERS,
76, 77, and 78, Oxford Street, West End, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

NOTICE.—CLEARANCE SALE OF

CHINA, EARTHENWARE, and GLASS, commencing OCTOBER 8.
Messrs. DAVENPORT and CO. beg to inform their friends and the Public generally that they intend disposing of the whole of their Surplus Stock of China, Earthenware, and Glass, on their Premises, 82, Fleet Street, London, and 30, Canning Place, Liverpool, at a reduction of 25 per cent. discount off usual prices. Commencing October 8, 1877.

ONE SHILLING MODEL RAILWAY

ENGINE, all Brass, with four wheels, smoke stack, steam dome. Travels at express speed. Post free, 15 stamps, large size 2s. MODEL STEAM ENGINE, 4-inch boiler, furnace, two cylinders, piston rods, driving wheel, &c., post free, 16 stamps, large size 2s.—W. WILTON, 9, Charles Street, St. James's Road, Holloway, London.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons.—

	£
The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	3	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

DEANE and CO.'S London Kitcheners.—

DEANE and CO. manufacture, supply, and fix complete Cooking Apparatus, Kitcheners, Ranges, Hot Water Circulation, Bath Fittings, &c. Estimates free.

London Patt'n Close Fire.		London Patt'n Open Fire.		Flavel's Kitcheners.		Cheap Kitcheners.
4 ft.	£13 10	4 ft. 6	£16 10	3 ft. 6	£10 0	3 ft.	£3 0
4 ft. 6	16 10	5 ft.	£20 0	4 ft.	£12 0	3 ft. 6	£6 0
5 ft.	19 10	5 ft. 6	£24 0	4 ft. 6	£13 10	4 ft.	£10 5

GAS CHANDELIERS and GASFITTINGS.

—The mansion, villa, or cottage fitted throughout.

	Two Light	Three Lights	Five Lights
	£ s. d. £ s. d.	£ s. £ s.	£ s. £ s.
Ormolu	0 18 6 to 2 0 0	2 10 to 6 6	4 10 to 10 10
Bronze	0 17 0 to 2 18 0	2 14 to 7 15	4 4 to 12 12
Crystal	. . . .	2 15 to 9 9	6 6 to 15 0

Manufactory and Workshops, No. 1, Jacob Street, Dockhead.
Deane and Co.'s complete Illustrated Catalogue post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, King William Street, London Bridge.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS.

Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR

GLENFIELD STARCH

SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL

(SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. (Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR INDIGESTION, WIND, HEARTBURN, &c.
Also unrivalled as a Tonic, Purifying, Family Aperient Medicine, without Mercury.

DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER

PILLS, prepared by W. LAMBERT, 1a, Vere Street, London, W. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box; post free for 15 or 35 penny stamps, or of all Chemists. See you have the right Pills, "Dr. Scott's," which are wrapped in a square green package.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-

STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.

VICHY.

Property of the French Government.
CELESTINS—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.
HAUTERIVE—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.
GRANDE-GRILLE—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.
HOPITAL—For Stomach complaints, &c.
VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.
CAUTION—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.
Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants.
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

TAMAR-INDIEN, a laxative, refreshing,

and medicated Fruit Lozenge—the effectual Cure of Constipation, Headache, Bile, Hæmorrhoids, &c. Tamar (unlike pills and the usual purgatives) is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation. 2s. 6d. per box; post free, 2s. 8d.
E. GRILLON, Wool Exchange, E.C., and of all Chemists.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS.

BUDDHISM: Being a Sketch of the Life and Teaching of Gautama, the Buddha. By T. W. Rhys Davids, of the Middle Temple. With Map. 2s. 6d.

HINDUISM. By Monier Williams, M.A., D.C.L., &c. With Map. 2s. 6d.

ISLAM AND ITS FOUNDER. By J. W. H. Stobart, B.A., Principal, La Martinière College, Lucknow. With Map. 2s. 6d.

THE HEATHEN WORLD and ST. PAUL.

ST. PAUL IN GREECE. By the Rev. G. S. Davies, M.A., Charterhouse, Godalming. With Map. 2s.

ST. PAUL IN DAMASCUS AND ARABIA. By the Rev. George Rawlinson, M.A., Canon of Canterbury, Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford. With Map. 2s.

ST. PAUL AT ROME. By the Very Rev. Charles Merivale, D.D., D.C.L., Dean of Ely. With Map. 2s.

ST. PAUL IN ASIA MINOR AND AT THE SYRIAN ANTIOCH. By the Rev. E. H. Plumptre, D.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's, Vicar of Bickley, Kent. With Map. 2s.

ANCIENT HISTORY FROM THE MONUMENTS.

BABYLONIA (The History of). By the late George Smith, Esq., of the Department of Oriental Antiquities, British Museum. Edited by the Rev. A. H. Sayce, Assistant Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. 2s.

GREEK CITIES AND ISLANDS OF ASIA MINOR. By W. S. W. Vaux, M.A., F.R.S. 2s.

MANUALS OF ELEMENTARY SCIENCE.

THE SPECTROSCOPE AND ITS WORK. By Richard A. Proctor, Author of "Saturn and its System," "The Sun," "The Moon," &c. With Coloured Diagram of the Spectra and Many Illustrations. 1s.

NEW SERIES OF TWELVE CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

In Large Type, with numerous Illustrations. Each 1s.

NATURAL HISTORY TOY BOOKS.

Imperial 8vo. Each containing Ten Pictures printed in Colours, with Descriptive Letterpress, Ornamental paper cover, 6d.
No. 1. Wild Animals.
No. 2. Singing Birds.
No. 3. British Wild Birds.
No. 4. Seaside Birds.
No. 5. British Animals.
No. 6. Favourite Dogs.

FIFTH CONTINENT (The), with the ADJACENT ISLANDS. Being an Account of Australia, Tasmania, and New Guinea, with Statistical Information to the latest date. By Charles H. Eden, Author of "Australia's Heroes," &c. With Map. 5s.

HORÆ PAULINÆ. By William Paley, M.A., Archdeacon of Carlisle. A New Edition, with Notes, Appendix, and Preface by J. S. Howson, D.D., Dean of Chester. 3s.

ARGUMENT FROM PROPHECY (The). By the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A., Author of "Scepticism and Faith," &c. 1s. 6d.

DRIFTED AWAY. A Tale of Adventure. With Three Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s.

OUR VALLEY. By the Author of "The Children of Seeligsberg," &c. With three Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s.

OWEN HARTLEY; OR, UPS AND DOWNS. A Tale of the Land and Sea. By William H. G. Kingston, Esq., Author of "The Settlers," &c. With Five Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s.

SHEPHERD OF ARDMUIR (The). With Three Full-Page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s.

SNOWBALL SOCIETY (The): A Story for Children. By M. Bramston, Author of "Rosamond Ferrars," &c., &c. With Three Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s.

SNOW FORT AND THE FROZEN LAKE (The); or, Christmas Holidays at Pond House. By Eadgyth. With Three Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s.

GIRLS OF DREDEN (The); and Manor House Stories. By Mrs. Stanley Leathes. With Three Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. Crown 8vo, 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

TWO VOYAGES, AND WHAT CAME OF THEM. By the author of "Motherless Maggie," &c. With Three Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

THE GREAT CAPTAIN: An Eventful Chapter in Spanish History. By Ulick R. Burke, M.A. With Two Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 2s.; gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

SEPPI. Adapted from the German of Franz Hoffmann. By M. Montgomerie Campbell. With Three Page Illustrations. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; gilt edges, 2s.

STORIES FROM ITALIAN HISTORY. By D. Montgomerie Ranking. With Two Full-page Illustrations on toned paper. 1s. 6d.; gilt edges, 2s.

AN EVENTFUL NIGHT, AND WHAT CAME OF IT. Adapted from the German of Ernst Andolt. With Three Page Illustrations. 1s.; gilt edges, 1s. 3d.

WALTER CAMPBELL; OR, THE CHORISTER'S REWARD. By the Author of "Ellen Mansel," &c. With Three Page Illustrations. 1s.; gilt edges, 1s. 3d.

CARDS FOR CHRISTIAN SEASONS and FRIENDLY GREETINGS, &c.

HAPPY GREETINGS. In a Packet containing Twelve Floral Cards printed in Colours, per packet, 1s.

BIRTHDAY LETTER CARDS. In a Packet containing Three Cards, printed in Colours, per packet, 6d.

COMPLIMENTARY LETTER CARDS. Uniform with the Birthday Letter Cards. In a Packet containing Three Cards printed in Colours, per packet, 6d.

LONDON: 77, GREAT QUEEN ST.,
LINCOLN'S-INN FIELDS, W.C.;
ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.; and 48, PICCADILLY, W.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER of CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE

Containing the following Popular Dance Music:—

TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
CONSTANTINOPLE QUADRILLE	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
DIE FLEDERMAUS WALTZ	JOHANN STRAUSS.
LES LOINTAINS WALTZ	EMILE WALDTEUFEL.
MAIDEN'S DREAM WALTZ	EDWARD HOFFMAN.
THE SCHOMBERG GALOP	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
FLORETTA POLKA	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
PIZZICATO POLKA	J. & J. STRAUSS.
FORGET-ME-NOT GALOP	A. HECKER.

And a New Quadrille,
MOLLIE DARLING. By CHAS. D'ALBERT.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 2d.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG.

THE DISTANT SHORE. New Song by ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd during his Promenade Tour in October. Price (in E flat, F and G) 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE ROWAN TREE. New Song by M. W. BALFE. Will be sung by Madame Antoinette Sterling during her Tour in the Provinces. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

MARCH of THE PASHAS, for the Pianoforte. By JOHN PRIDHAM. Beautifully illustrated, with Portraits of Mehemet Ali, Suleiman Pasha, and Hobart Pasha. Price, post free, 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE FANFARE POLKA. By Charles D'ALBERT. Illustrated. Price 1s 6d. net. Orchestra, 3s.; Septett, 2s.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	NET
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Work	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	1 6
RINK GALOP	2 0
FLEUR DE THE QUADRILLE	2 0
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	2 0
SULTAN'S POLKA (New Edition)	1 6

All of the above are arranged for Full Orchestra, 3s; Septet, 2s. each.

N.B. A complete list of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

L'ORGANISTE PRATIQUE. 240 Easy Pieces for Organ or Harmonium. By J. LEYBACH. In 2 vols., price 6s. each net, or in eight parts, each 2s. net. The above will supply a want long felt by amateur performers on the organ or harmonium, as all the pieces are very pretty without being difficult.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRE.

PIANOFORTES of every description by all the most celebrated makers from Two Guineas a Quarter.

HARMONIUMS, by Alexandre, from One Pound Five Shillings per quarter.

SECOND-HAND PIANOFORTES at immense reductions for Cash, or on the Three Years' System.—50, New Bond Street.

Price 2s. 6d. each volume, paper; 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

THE ROYAL SONG BOOKS.

RUBINSTEIN'S 50 SONGS.
RUBINSTEIN'S 18 VOCAL DUETS.
BEETHOVEN'S 76 SONGS.
MENDELSSOHN'S 60 SONGS.
SCHUMANN'S 75 SONGS.
THE SONGS OF GERMANY (100 Volkslieder).
The above have all German and English words.
THE SONGS OF ENGLAND (100 songs).
THE SONGS OF SCOTLAND (150 songs).
THE SONGS OF IRELAND (108 Songs).
THE SONGS OF WALES (62 songs).
The above form a complete collection of National Songs.
SACRED SONGS. ANCIENT AND MODERN (100 Songs.
HUMOROUS SONGS (72 New and Old Songs).
CHOICE DUETS FOR LADIES' VOICES (24 duets).
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London, and all Musicsellers and Booksellers.

Price One Shilling each.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL INSTRUCTORS

DR. CALLCOTT'S GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.
W. T. BEST'S FIRST ORGAN BOOK.
J. W. ELLIOT'S NEW HARMONIUM TUTOR.
HENNINGS' FIRST BOOK FOR THE VIOLIN.
CASE'S VIOLIN TUTOR.
BRINLEY RICHARDS' FIRST LESSONS FOR THE PIANO.
GEORGE MOUNT'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
DR. SPARK'S HANDY-BOOK OF CHORAL SINGING.
BALFE'S BALLAD TUTOR.
VACCAJ'S SINGING METHOD, without Solfeggi.
HATTON'S SINGING TUTOR FOR LADIES' VOICES.
HATTON'S SINGING TUTOR FOR MEN'S VOICES.
KAPPEY'S CLARIONET TUTOR.
EDWARD HOWELL'S FIRST BOOK for the VIOLONCELLO.
R. S. PRATTEN'S FLUTE TUTOR.
STANTON JONES' CORNET TUTOR.
CASE'S ENGLISH CONCERTINA TUTOR.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

Price 1s. each book.

BOOSEY'S CABINET CLASSICS.

203. RUBINSTEIN'S ALBUM (11 best pieces). 1s.
206. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX STUDIES, 1s.
207. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX PRELUDES, 1s.
204. BRAHMS' ALBUM (including 16 waltzes). 1s.
205. RAFF'S ALBUM (6 best pieces), 1s.
80. HELLER'S ALBUM (12 pieces). 1s.
111. HELLER'S PETIT ALBUM (10 pieces). 1s.
85. HELLER'S PROMENADES D'UN SOLITAIRE 1s
140. HELLER'S 24 STUDIES. 1s.
102. SCHUMANN'S KINDERSCENEN, &c. 1s.
113. SCHUMANN'S 1st ALBUM FOR YOUTH. 1s
159. SCHUMANN'S 2nd ALBUM FOR YOUTH. 1s.
160. SCHUMANN'S 3rd ALBUM FOR YOUTH. 1s.
117. CHOPIN'S WALTZES, complete. 1s.
143. CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS, complete. 1s
171. CHOPIN'S NOCTURNES, complete 1s.
208. CHOPIN'S 25 PRELUDES
190. FIELD'S TEN NOCTURNES (all the best). 1s.
33-35. MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS (Six books).
114 BEETHOVEN'S WALTZ ALBUM (45 waltzes).
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

With fifteen Illustrations, price 2s. 6d

LILLIE'S FIRST MUSIC BOOK (64 Pages, Music size. "The most admirable tutor extant for the pianoforte."—Somerset Herald.
BOOSEY and CO., London.

THE CHORALIST. Twelve Anthems and Sacred Part-Songs by Arthur Sullivan have been added to this popular series, which now contains 224 numbers, price one penny each. Specimen for one stamp.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRUMENTS FOR AMATEURS.

THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.

The above instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST.

All Music post free at half-price.

I'D RATHER BE AN ENGLISHMAN. National and Patriotic Song by JOHN HART. "This song cannot fail to awaken a responsive echo in the hearts of all who hear it. The words are excellent, and the music is bold and stirring." Published in G for baritone or bass, and in C for tenor. Post free, 18 stamps.

WE ROAM AND RULE THE SEA. New Song. Words by Dr. W. C. BENNETT. Music by J. B. WALDECK, for baritone or bass. "At the present moment it would be difficult to meet with a song more worthy of a hearty reception, or more likely to prove acceptable to a British audience." Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONG by FLORIAN PASCAL. —DAWN-SONG (Aubade), with English and Italian Words. Sung with the greatest success by Signor Giannini at Arditi's Concerts. Post free, 24 stamps. The special attention of Tenors is invited to this most artistic and effective song.

PINSUTI'S POPULAR SONGS.

The Raft. Descriptive Song, Sung by Signor Foli. In F and G. 4s.
I Love My Love. Soprano, B flat, or Contralto, A flat. 4s.
What We Have Loved We Love For Ever. 4s.
Wilt Thou Be Mine. 3s.
The Maiden's Flower Song. 3s.
Love Will Shine All Through. 4s.
The Owl (Baritone or Bass). 4s.
"The above songs are universally acknowledged to be the finest productions of this most talented composer."

CAMPANA'S FAVOURITE SONGS.

Bessie's Mistake. 4s. Why Blooms the Rose. 3s.
Loving and Beloved. 3s. Far from My Eyes. 3s.
From Distant Lands. Sung by Madame Antoinette Sterling.
Also his very popular Duet—
Children's Voices. 3s.

SHALL I WEAR A WHITE ROSE? New Song. By EMILY FARMER. Poetry by SAVILLE CLARK. This charming Song is now being sung by Madame Trebelli at her Provincial Concerts with perfect success. Published in E flat and G, for Soprano or Contralto. Post free, 24 stamps.

VERY SUSPICIOUS! H. Clifton's renowned Serio-Comic Duet for Lady and Gentlemen, introducing popular songs. Also, the Medley Duet, "Love and Pride." "Just the thing for penny readings and amateur concerts." Either sent free, 24 stamps.

ROBINSON CRUSOE! H. Clifton's enormously popular Comic Medley. Humorously Illustrated. "His songs are always free from the vulgarity which is unfortunately characteristic of some modern comic songs." Lists of Clifton's Comic and Motto Songs gratis.

EDWARD TERRY'S COMPLAINTS, or, THE ILLS OF LIFE AND THEIR REMEDIES. By E. TERRY. "This song, without doubt, is one of the funniest of modern comic songs, and cannot fail to elicit the most hearty applause wherever sung." The recital of his complaints by the author is always well received and encored thrice. A New Edition now ready, with Comic Illustration of the Author, sent post free for 18 stamps.

POPULAR COMIC SONGS.

The Agreeable Young Man	Harry Clifton.
Don't Be After Ten	Do.
Artful Joe	Geo. Leybourne.
Captain Oo Wellington Boots	Do.
The Fairy Queen	Do.
Father Says I May	Do.
Ephriam Fox	Henry Clark.
Glycerina	Walter Howard.
It's Very Aggravating	G. Hunt.
Keep It a Secret	G. W. Moore.
Oh Nicodemus	Fred Coyne
Paddy's Dream	G. Ware.

All the above are Illustrated; may be sung anywhere by anybody, and sent post free, 18 stamps each.

POPULAR MOTTO SONGS.

Broken Down	Harry Clifton.
Pulling Hard Against the Stream	Do.
Seventy-two and as Hard as Steel	Do.
Shabby Genteel	Do.
Wait for the Turn of the Tide	Do.
Pull Slow and Steady	Harry Lynn.
Out in the Green Field	Walter Field.
Shun the Thing That's Wrong, Friend.

All the above are specially recommended, being full of point and entirely free from all vulgarity. Post free, 18 stamps each.

HARRY HUNTER'S MOTTO SONGS.

Cheerily Ever. Nulli Secundus.
Keep a Good Heart. Take Things as They Are.
There's Danger in Delay. Jolly Good Humour.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

HARRY HUNTER'S COMIC SONGS.

It Hasn't Happened Yet. Kiss and be Friends.
Cadging I Roam. The Fancy Fair.
I Saw Esau. Peter Perfect.
I'm Sorry I Made the Remark.
Doctor Says I'm Not to Be Worried.
Post free, 18 stamps each. A List of 60 Songs by Harry Hunter sent free on application.

HARRY HUNTER'S BANJO SONGS, as sung by Walter Howard with the greatest success at St James's Hall.

Get Out. Poor Thing
His Name was Joshua.
Post free, 18 stamps each.—Note. There is no restriction on these songs.

HOW THAT POOR GIRL SUFFERED FOR ME. New Song by HARRY HUNTER. Sung Nightly by Walter Howard, and always encored. Illustrated with portrait of the singer in character. Post free, 18 stamps.

HOBART PASHA MARCH. By MICHAEL WATSON. Just issued. With splendid portrait in colours of this celebrity. Price 3s.

H. WEIST HILL'S COMPOSITIONS, performed with great success at the Alexandra Palace.

VALSES.
Alma. 4s
Son Image. 2s.
True Love. 1s

POLKAS.
Gertrude. 1s. 6d.
Belle of the Promenade. 1s 6d.

Gavotte, Madame de Pompadour (Beautifully Illustrated) 2s.
Bashi Bazouk Galop. 1s. 6d. Osmanli March. 1s. 6d.
To Paris in 10 Hours Galop. 1s. 6d.
Review—"Marked by far more thought and musical ability than dance music usually is"

ARDITI'S L'INGÉNUE. Morceau à la Gavotte. 3s. Performed at the Promenade Concerts with enormous success.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

Berceuse. 3s. Also for Small Band, 1s net.
La Princesse. 3s. (Gavotte) Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
Performed with great success at the Promenade Concerts
Près le Lac, 2ième Méditation. 3s.
Les Vieux Temps (Gavotte). 3s.
Pavane Royale de Louis XIV. 3s.
Air de Ballet. New Simplified Edition by Arthur Grenville. 3s.
Thematic lists of this favourite composer's sent free on application.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—AUTREFOIS (Souvenir de Marguerite de Valois). This charming little morceau has already run through several editions, and seems likely to rival the ever popular "Danse Favorite" of the same composer. Post free, 18 stamps

FLORIAN PASCAL.—UN BIJOU PERDU.—"M. Pascal is to be congratulated upon having rescued from oblivion this really exquisite little gem, the melody of which is so captivating that we venture to predict for it great popularity." As piano solo, now ready, 18 stamps.

CATALOGUES GRATIS AND POST FREE.

Shipping Orders on most favourable terms

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATALOGUES of MUSIC.

Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3. HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4. VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.
Sent post free to any part of the World.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S YELLOW CATALOGUE for 1878, compiled expressly for the use of the Trade, Profession, and Schools, comprising a selection of upwards of 4,000 Standard Musical Works, will be ready early in December. Among the composers of Pianoforte Music will be found the names of Beethoven, Bach, Bertini, Chopin, Clementi, Czerny, Cramer (John), Dussek, Handel, Haydn, Henselt, Hummel, Herz, Kalkbrenner, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Moscheles, Mozart, Scarlatti, Schubert, Schumann, Schulhoff, Thalberg, Weber, &c., &c. Among the Vocal—Bishop, Braham, Arne, Dibdin, Callcott, Shield, Horn, Purcell, Haydn, Moore, Mazzinghi, Handel, &c., &c. Sent gratis and post free to any part of the world. All applications for trade terms must contain card, circular, or reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SYDNEY SMITH'S PIANOFORTE METHOD.

Price Five Shillings.

This unrivalled work is now firmly established as the Pianoforte Instruction-Book in nearly all the principal educational establishments in Great Britain, Ireland, Canada, the United States of America, India, Australia, New Zealand, &c. It is supplied direct by the Publishers, or may be had of any Musicseller in the world
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square

SIR WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT'S BARCAROLLE (from the Fourth Concerto) This beautiful composition, which is universally admitted to be the representative pianoforte piece of this great English musician, is now published in the following forms:

Piano Solo	4 0
Piano Duet	4 0
Organ, arranged by Dr. Steggall	4 0

ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SELECT PIANOFORTE PIECES of STEPHEN HELLER.

	s. d.
An Autumn Leaf (Romance, Op. 105, No. 3)	3 0
An even Song (Prelude, Op. 119, No. 16)	3 0
Aubade (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 7)	3 0
Barcarolle (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 23)	3 0
Berceuse (Study, Op. 47, No. 19)	1 0
Chanson de Mai (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 17)	1 0
Chant du Berceau (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 15)	2 6
Chant du Soir (Study, Op. 45, No. 9)	1 0
Cradle Song (Chanson de Berceau, Op. 73, No. 3)	3 0
Feuillet d'Album (Study, Op. 16, No. 15)	2 0
Halte du Chasseur (Dans les Bois, Op. 86, No. 3)	3 0
Huntsman's Song (Chant du Chasseur, Op. 73, No. 1)	3 0
Jagdlied (Study, Op. 90, No. 7)	2 6
L'Avalanche (Study, Op. 45, No. 2)	1 0
La Truite (Caprice Brillant on the Song of Schubert, Op. 33)	4 0
Liedchen (Study, Op. 46, No. 8)	1 0
On Song's bright Pinions (Improvisata on Song of Mendelssohn, Op. 67)	4 0
Ondine (Study, Op. 45, No. 16)	1 0
Parting Song (Mendelssohn's Song transcribed)	3 0
Rêverie au Bois (Study, Op. 45, No. 13)	1 0
The Watermill (Study, Op. 45, No. 20)	2 0
Un Rayon du Soleil (Study, Op. 45, No. 1)	1 0
Une petite Feuille (Op. 110)	3 0
Une petite Histoire (Study, Op. 125, No. 6)	1 0
Wanderstunden (Rêveries d'Artiste, Op. 60, No. 2)	3 0

The above pieces are among the most popular Works of this esteemed Composer. A complete catalogue of his entire Works, Op. 1 to Op. 141, is now ready, and will be forwarded post free (on application) to any part of the world.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

ROBERT COCKS and CO.'s MUSICAL BOX. Caprice for the Pianoforte. By J. LIEBICH (the first he composed), and performed by him at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, and twice encored. Free by post for 24 stamps.

A FRAGMENT from MENDELSSOHN, arranged for the pianoforte by C. A. CASPAR. 4s.; post free, 24 stamps.—London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., and of all Musicsellers.

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. 1,244th Edition.—This popular and standard book has been thoroughly modernised, and will now be found much more progressive. It begins at the lowest step of the ladder. Every little lesson has been carefully fingered and arranged, with a view to the position of the hand, and in the order of difficulty with reference to the keys. Solo duets have been added, and the part for the pupil placed over that for the teacher, in order further to explain the time-table. The improvements of the book will be found both practical and useful, and calculated to strengthen its position and increase its world-wide popularity. Post free for 28 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

POPULAR QUADRILLES for the Pianoforte, as Solos and Duets. 4s. each; post free at half-price.

The United Service. F. Godfrey.
The Osborne. S. Glover.
The Globe. S. Glover.
The Gypsy. S. Glover.
The Holyday. S. Glover
The True Friends. S. Glover.

The Pussey. A. Leduc.
Pretty Polly. A. Leduc.
The Canary. R. Linter
The Goldfinch. R. Linter.
The Garden Party. W. Smallwood.
The Moselle. W. Smallwood.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

THE SENTINEL'S MARCH, composed by JOHN PRIDHAM for the Pianoforte (finely illustrated title), 4s.; post free, 24 stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO. Order everywhere.

THE SOLDIER'S DREAM; a Descriptive Fantasia for the Pianoforte. By J. PRIDHAM. Illustrated title, 4s.; post free, 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE SAILOR'S DREAM; a Descriptive Fantasia for the Pianoforte. By J. PRIDHAM. Illustrated title, 4s.; post free, 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

LYSIS; Romaunt for the Pianoforte, composed by W. S. ROCKSTRO. 4s., post free, 24 stamps. "A graceful melody, skilfully managed, affording excellent practice for more advanced players."—Vide Scotsman.
London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., 6, New Burlington Street.

DANCING MADE EASY.–COULON'S HANDBOOK OF DANCING is the most complete treatise on the subject, containing full descriptions of all dances, new and old, illustrated by upwards of forty woodcuts Price 1s.; post free, 13 stamps.—A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, W. All new music half-price.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE

PULVERMACHER'S "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."

In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to

J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—On MONDAY and TUESDAY, the 15th and 16th October, Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. will OFFER for SALE an immense stock of FLANNELS, SERGES, and CALICOES, purchased for cash during the recent depression, and which will be sold off much below their usual cost. Reduced price lists will be sent post free on application.—OETZMANN and CO., Complete House Furnishers, 67 to 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD, near Tottenham Court Road.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—CARPETS.— OETZMANN and CO. beg to announce that they have now received their new designs in Carpets for the present season, adapted to every class of furnishing, from the richest qualities and most artistic designs to the neat and inexpensive kinds. An early inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PREMISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DEPARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, handsomely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in rich Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk and Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites, from 12 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas; solid Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best Morone Leather, 14 guineas; Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 15s.; handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

SIDEBOARDS, OETZMANN and CO. —Large and Handsome Mahogany or Oak Sideboards, with High Plate Glass Back and Carved Mountings, price 15 guineas; Massive Spanish Mahogany or Oak ditto, very handsome, 25 guineas; Noble Spanish Mahogany or Oak ditto, handsomely carved and lofty, Plate Glass Back, made and finished in the best possible manner, price 35 guineas. A variety of Early English and other designs, in rich Spanish Mahogany, or finest carved Oak, from 25 to 50 guineas.

OETZMANN and CO.'S BEDROOM SUITES.—One of the largest and best assortments in the kingdom to select from, displayed in Showrooms 228 feet long, with Bedsteads and Bedding fitted up for inspection. Bedroom Suite, consisting of Wardrobe, Chest of Drawers, Washstand, Toilet Table and Glass, Towel Airer, 3 Chairs, and Pedestal Cupboard, from 6½ guineas complete. Some new and elegant designs, at 15, 18, and 21 guineas. Large and handsomely decorated Bedroom Suites, in Ash, Pitch Pine, and other Woods, at 28, 36, 50, and 75 guineas. Also in Black and Gold, 50 guineas upwards.—OETZMANN and CO.

BEDDING DEPARTMENT.—Strong Iron Bedsteads, from 6s. 6d. each; superior Iron French ditto, 15s. 9d.; handsome Arabian Bedsteads, from 27s. 6d. upwards; excellent Mattresses, full size, 12s. 6d.; good Feather Beds, full size, 30s.; ditto Bolsters, 7s. 6d.; ditto Pillows, 3s. 9d. each; handsome 3 ft. Mahogany Washstands, with Marble Top, 18s. 6d.; Mahogany Toilet Glass, Best Plate Glass (size of plate, 16 inches by 12 inches), 6s. 6d.

PAPER-HANGINGS. — OETZMANN and CO.—PAPER HANGINGS at WHOLESALE PRICES.—A great reduction in price. All the new patterns are now on view at the Show Rooms.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPETS. FURNITURE.
CARPETS. FURNITURE.
CARPETS. FURNITURE.
CARPETS. FURNITURE.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at a little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 3 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPET DEPARTMENT. — Stout Tapestry Brussels Carpet, 1s. 9½d.; handsome pattern ditto, from 2s 2d. to 2s 9d. per yard; superior Brussels, new designs, from 2s. 11d. upwards. These prices are much below value. Kidderminster Carpet, all wool, 1s 11d. per yard; Patent Felt Carpeting, from 11½d. per yard; Superior Rock Dye ditto, handsome designs, double width, 1s. 11d. per yard; excellent Stair Carpet, from 6d. per yard; Best Quality, all Wool, ditto, 1s. per yard.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.
OETZMANN and CO.

DRAPERY DEPARTMENT.—Large white quilts, 2½ yards by 2 yards, 4s. 11d.; handsome marsella ditto, 9s. 9d.; white wool blankets, from 6s. per pair (see special reduced list sent post free); large Witney ditto, 2½ yards long, 9s 11d. per pair; handsome cloth table covers, from 4s. 11d.; magnificent ditto, large size, 10s. 11d.; good chintzes, new patterns, 4½d. per yard; Cretonne ditto, from 6d. per yard.—OETZMANN and CO.

MUSLIN and LACE CURTAINS.— CLEARING OUT.—Elegant design, 3 yards long by 40 and 52 inches wide, 4s. 11d. per pair, worth 7s. 6d.; very handsome ditto, 4 yards long by 52 and 56 inches wide, 10s. 6d., worth 16s. 9d.; magnificent Tuileries lace curtains, 4 yards long by 72 inches wide, 21s per pair. A special reduced list of curtains, with size and description, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

EXHIBITION PATTERN COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the season much admired, handsomely japanned, and rich burnished gold ornamentation, with opal handles, strong loose lining, a great convenience and saving in wear. Price complete, 21s.—OETZMANN and CO

CHINA and GLASS DEPARTMENT. —Alexandra pattern Toilet Services, ewer, basin, &c., complete—9 pieces, 7s. 11d.; handsome ditto, 9s. 9d.; richly cut Decanters, 7s 6d. per pair; cut Wines, from 2s. 6d. per dozen; superior ditto, richly cut, reduced to 5s. 9d. per dozen; Gilt Clocks, under glass shades, from 18s. 9d. upwards; Cottage Clocks, from 5s 9d. each; elegant Lustres, Vases, Parian Figures, &c.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway) Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—OCTOBER 13, 1877

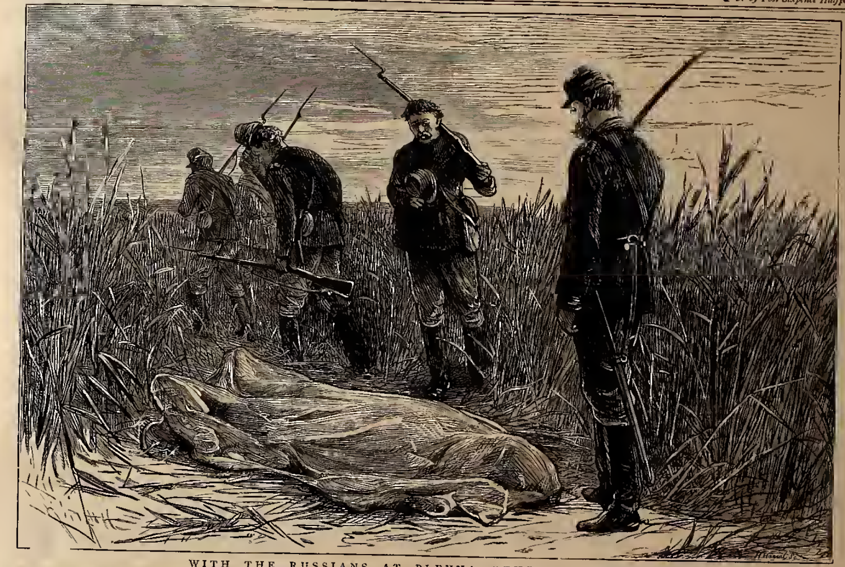
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

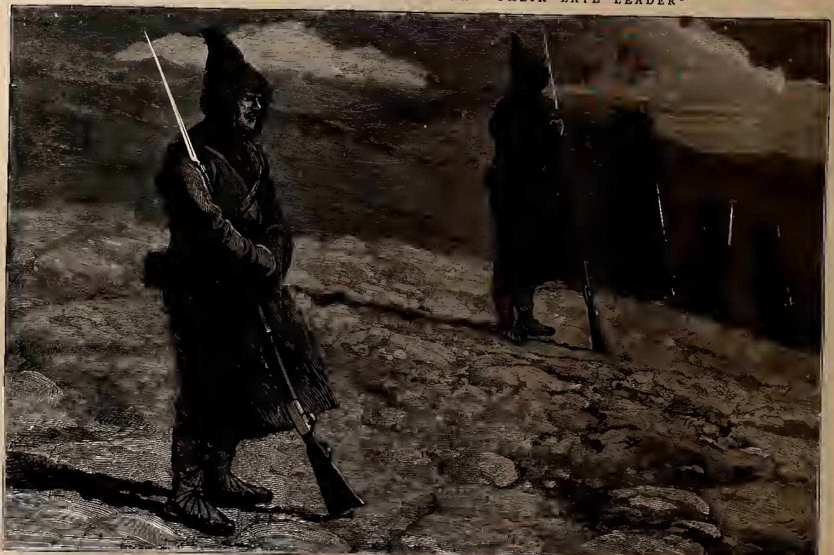
VOL. XVI.—No. 412
Regd. at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



WITH THE RUSSIANS AT PLEVNA—"THEIR LATE LEADER"



WITH SULEIMAN PASHA—NIGHT SENTRIES IN CAMP AT SHIPKA

Topics of the Week

The French Elections.——It has often been said that France is the land of surprises, and the commonplace was never better illustrated than in the result of the elections which were looked forward to with so much intense eagerness. Many observers prophesied that the Republicans would gain a splendid victory; others were of opinion that the Government would be completely triumphant. Few supposed that neither of these things would happen; that both the Government and the Republicans would be disappointed. Yet the unforeseen is what has actually happened. It is true the Republicans go back to Versailles with a large majority; but their number is considerably smaller than in the last Chamber. The glowing anticipations of M. de Fourtou have not been realised; but the supporters of Marshal MacMahon have acquired a genuine increase of influence. The fact is of course mainly due to the enormous exertions of the Ministry. In the cities, where the power of the Home Office could make itself least felt, the verdict was in accordance with the hopes of M. Gambetta. Paris especially proved that she is thoroughly Republican, and will never resign herself either to the Legitimists or the Bonapartists. In small towns and remote country districts, however, the Ministry of the Interior can bring immense pressure to bear upon the electors; and it is among them that the Marshal has found his new allies. What next? is the question which now agitates all minds. The future would have been tolerably clear had the nation spoken either as Radicals or as Conservatives prophesied; but as matters are, both sides are visibly perplexed. Marshal MacMahon cannot but see that the intelligence of France is not with him in the high-handed policy he has recently adopted; M. Gambetta has also learned that caution on his part is more than ever necessary. A wise President would seize the opportunity to effect a compromise. If a Ministry of moderate tendencies were appointed, it is improbable that the Republicans would oppose it; and in the circumstances even the Bonapartists might make up their minds to the temporary predominance of the Left Centre. The Marshal, however, is in bad hands; and no one can feel quite sure that he will have insight or courage enough to break away from his advisers. Hitherto, at any rate, he has shown himself excessively obstinate and narrow-minded. Should he persist in retaining M. de Broglie, and should the latter move on the lines on which he has advanced since he rose to power, France has a very unquiet and dangerous period before her. The Chamber will be the scene of an incessant conflict, which will render a fresh appeal to the constituencies absolutely necessary. With Germany and Italy looking on with angry suspicion, every one who wishes well to France must sincerely hope that she will be spared this trial and humiliation.

The Penge Convicts.——Up to the time of writing this we do not know whether the Home Secretary holds that the four prisoners are legally innocent of the charge brought against them, or whether he holds that some of them are guilty of the less heinous offence of manslaughter. We say, some of them, for if this latter view be taken, Alice Rhodes must be altogether exonerated. Meanwhile one thing is certain, namely, that Mr. Cross would not have reversed the decision of the judge and jury but for the strong feeling which was manifested out of doors. It becomes, therefore, a matter of some importance to trace how this strong feeling originated. Up to the moment when sentence was passed public opinion was dead against the prisoners. The almost universal belief was that they all, with possibly varying degrees of guilt, had committed a murder of unparalleled barbarity. But when people got up on the following morning, and learnt from their newspapers that four of their fellow countrymen had been cast for death, two of the convicts being women, a marvellous revulsion of feeling took place. Instantly the sentimental side of the English character came into prominence, that national trait of ours which Continentals find it so hard to comprehend, which often impels to worthy deeds, but which sometimes sacrifices justice to misplaced tenderness. Had there been but one convicted murderer in the Penge case the popular conscience would have felt no twinge at his execution. But to hang four people at once, all of them young, and two of them women, seemed a dreadful and unheard-of thing. So the newspapers teemed with indignant correspondence, and by degrees it began to dawn on the public mind that the murder had not been so conclusively proved as was at first supposed. The increasing clamour caused the Government to take the matter up; the case was, for all practical purposes, tried over again; and the tribunal, guided chiefly by the opinion of some eminent medical men, concluded, as we are led to presume from the respite which has been announced, that there was not sufficient evidence to convict the prisoners of murder. We express no opinion as to whether the Home Office is right and the Old Bailey wrong, or vice versâ; all we desire to show is that this second official inquiry would not have taken place had not popular sentimentalism been deeply stirred by the impending horror of a quadruple execution.

The Aldermen and Sir John Bennett.——It is impossible not to regret the course the Court of Aldermen has seen fit to pursue in regard to Sir John Bennett. We have, of course, nothing to do with the grounds on which they have resolutely declined to accept him as one of their number. They have not made these grounds public, so that the subject is not a fair one for discussion. The broad fact is that the Court has felt itself justified in opposing the declared will of the electors. What was good enough for the inhabitants of the ward was not, it appears, good enough for the Aldermen; consequently they have three times exercised their right of veto. No one denies that this right belongs to them, but a public body may possess abstract rights which it is very inexpedient to use, and we cannot but think that this is true in the present instance. For ages we have gradually been making our public institutions more and more popular. We talk less than our French neighbours of the will of the majority, but in no country in the world is that will more influential. In the United States themselves the action of the Government is not so quickly controlled by public opinion as it is in England. The Aldermen may, therefore, be very sure that they will not long be allowed to play the despot. Electors may be right or wrong, but when they have proclaimed their decision the whole spirit of modern liberty requires that it shall be acted upon. Is it quite wise to force upon general attention the necessity for some such reform? So long as old institutions work, Englishmen are quite willing that they should be let alone; but it is dangerous to strain too severely antiquated principles. If a process of change is once begun, nobody can tell whether it will be confined within absolutely just limits.

A Russian Success.——Those journalists who only a few days ago confidently asserted that the campaign in Asia had virtually closed, and that the Russians would have to wait until the spring for any chance of retrieving their late reverses, will perhaps be for the future more chary of their predictions. The defeat sustained by Ghazi Mukhtar is the most serious and the most decisive which has befallen either side since the war began. The Russians, it is true, have suffered many reverses both in Europe and Asia since the first assault on Plevna, but they have never yet had an army cut in two, or been compelled to surrender a large portion of their forces to the enemy. It is fortunate for the Turks that the disaster has come so late in the season, for the severity of the weather may possibly prevent such a prolonged investment of Kars as would lead to its capture. Still, in spite of the aid of such powerful allies as Frost and Snow, the military prospects of the Turks in Asia are undeniably gloomy. Mukhtar was evidently overmatched, and the important question now is whether he can collect a fresh army in a region which has been nearly exhausted as a recruiting-ground in order to supply the needs of the Turkish generals in Europe.

A Truant School.——It is to be feared that although the boy who plays truant is not a model of all the virtues he commands a good deal of sympathy. The young rascal is generally full of life and energy; and he has in a high degree the supreme British quality—a passionate love of freedom. Even those who have a sneaking liking for him, however, admit that it is necessary to put him down. He makes anything but creditable progress with his work; and his influence on his fellows is far from encouraging to the schoolmaster. The London School Board, after much consideration, have resolved to deal with him by forming a school for his especial benefit. It is to be in Hackney, and its great peculiarity will be that except when lessons are being said, or when the children have occasion to address the teacher, absolute silence will be maintained. A truant will be sent by the magistrate for a week to this terrible institution when all other means of impressing him have failed. Fresh offences will expose the young criminals to the chance of being detained two, three, or even four weeks. We observe that the scheme has met with some opposition in the daily papers; and it certainly does sound somewhat harsh. But everything will depend upon the manner in which it is carried out. A firm but cautious and patient master may give effect to the idea of the Board without exciting against it the smallest prejudice. A great deal is now demanded of public elementary schoolmasters; they are expected to attain in their work a standard, in regard both to amount and quality, far beyond that reached by their class in the last generation. It is only fair that the conditions of their labour should be made as favourable as the circumstances of their rather trying calling will permit.

Cleopatra's Needle.——Mr. Dixon is a sanguine man, and possibly his cheerful anticipations may be verified, otherwise it seems improbable that the Cleopatra, with such an unwieldy cargo as the monolith on board of her, could keep afloat, after being abandoned, during a gale as severe as that of last Sunday night. The most lamentable part of the affair is the loss of the six brave fellows who went from the Olga to rescue the crew of the Cleopatra, and whose boat was swamped. We should be well content, provided their lives had been saved, that the obelisk should have gone irremediably to the bottom of the Atlantic. Would it not have been wiser to wait till next summer before undertaking a voyage involving so much risk? October is notoriously a treacherous month, as it is then that the so-called equinoctial gales, which usually come a month after the equinox, begin to blow. Should the obelisk be recovered, it will naturally become an object of greater interest than ever on account of the adventures which it has undergone, and, we may add, of the precious lives which it has sacrificed. Should it not be recovered, each of the æsthetic enthusiasts who have flooded the newspapers with their suggestions can amuse himself by fancying how well it would have looked in the pet spot of his own selection.

An International Tribunal.——General Grant deserves gratitude for a manly little speech he delivered the other day in Birmingham. It is not every soldier who has the courage to say that he regards the appeal to the sword as a brutal and essentially uncivilised mode of settling disputes; and a brilliantly successful soldier might be pardoned if he took a quite different view. Yet General Grant said nothing short of this to his Birmingham friends, and he added that he hoped a day would come when a tribunal would be established whose authority in regard to serious subjects of misunderstanding all the nations of the earth would recognise. Those who share this opinion must be pleased to find it supported by a man who has held so lofty a position, and who still exerts considerable influence. The impulse of most men is to pooh-pooh the notion as Utopian; but at any rate it is better to have a great political ideal than to go on from day to day as if we had already exhausted the possibilities of existence. For our part, we do not believe that the plan is so Utopian as it seems. The whole tendency of progress has been in this direction. In the Middle Ages the authority of the Papacy was almost the only influence which reminded nations that they had common rights and duties. Since then the vast body of international law has been slowly formed; and it must not be forgotten that at least in one instance two of the foremost nations of the earth, America and England, have disposed of a long-standing quarrel by arbitration. The Gladstone Government did much good work in its best days; but the time will probably come when its acceptance of the Geneva Tribunal will be ranked as the greatest of its achievements. If a few more men like General Grant would speak out as he has done, a real impetus would be given to the movement among the most active minds of the time.

Westminster School.——Although this is emphatically an age of great cities, no previous generation had, perhaps, so keen an appreciation as the present of the disadvantages of urban as compared to rural, or semi-rural, existence. Indeed, this love of green fields is one of the most potent reasons why our cities are growing so rapidly. Nearly every citizen who can afford it tries to live as near the edge of his town as possible, and so it comes to pass that the edge has to be continually pushed further outwards, and that the green fields, thanks to the combined efforts of thousands of determined ruralisers, are found every year to be further off. A couple of hundred years hence, perhaps, when aerial machines will be as common as cabs and omnibuses now are, there will be no residential towns at all. Everybody—a few care-takers and policemen excepted—will sleep in country air, and cities will be used for all that they are really fit for—namely, as temporary resorts for business or pleasure purposes. We are already on the road to this happy achievement, a large number of us are suburban dwellers, but we have not reached the goal yet, nor are we likely to reach it for some generations to come. Without referring here to the labouring classes, a good many people of the middle and higher ranks are still, owing to various circumstances, obliged to live in the central districts of London and other great towns. Most of these people have children, and as all parents, for sundry reasons, do not approve of boarding-schools, it is advisable that for such persons there should be good day-schools within a convenient distance. This is the most forcible argument for the retention of Westminster on its present site. If it were mainly a boarding-school, we should strongly advocate its removal, as Charterhouse has been removed, and, as we hope, Christ's Hospital will before long be removed; but, being what it is, it seems to fulfil a more useful function by staying where it is, than by emigrating into the country.

Weather Forecasts.——Speaking of weather predictions, Dr. Johnson is reported to have said that a weather-wise man might in the morning foretell what sort of weather there would be between that time and evening, but that he was powerless to predict the weather four-and-twenty hours in advance. Till recently this observation remained substantially true; but now, owing to the invention of the electric telegraph, and its ramification over the civilised world, the statement needs to be received with some modification. Formerly the meteorologist's field of observation was bounded by the limited horizon visible to his own eyes; whereas now he may sit in his office in London, and receive, from a staff of messengers, travelling more swiftly than the swiftest hurricane, a series of simultaneous reports from places as far distant apart as Bergen, Gibraltar, the Texel, and Valentia. The practical result of these improvements is that it is now possible to issue weather-warnings to seafaring persons and others, which are in the majority of cases absolutely verified; and to this cause it is no doubt in some degree attributable that the remarkable storm which swept over these islands on the night of Sunday last, and which did so much damage on land, caused, in comparison with its exceeding violence, little damage by sea. Mariners, having received timely warning, either sought shelter at once, or forbore from quitting the shelter in which they already lay. In enumerating some of the places from which a modern meteorologist receives his almost instantaneous reports, we purposely omitted to mention America, because it is doubtful whether, with our present stock of knowledge, any practical inferences of value can be drawn from the weather phenomena of a region separated from us by an ocean nearly 3,000 miles wide. The storm from New York, which was predicted to reach our shores on the 10th inst., certainly did not visit us on that day, which was remarkably calm; but at the same time it is possible that the great gale of Sunday night was part of the same convulsion, although it had been delayed four days on the road.

Notice.——The Half-Sheet this week, though delivered in the middle of the paper, must be placed for binding between pages 372 and 381.

AMUSEMENTS

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8, THE DEAD SECRET. Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Messrs. Clifford, Cooper, Odell, Edmund Lyons, Pinero, Jenner, &c.; Misses Virginia Francis, Ewell, &c. Preceded by at 7, MARCH HARE HUNT. Mr. C. Cooper and Miss K. Pattison. Concluding with SHOULD THIS MEET THE EYE. Mr. E. Lyons.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. Edward Righton.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, £200 A-YEAR. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. At 10, THE LION'S TAIL. Messrs. Ryder, F. H. Macklin, Gaines, A. H. Warren, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames E. Ritta, Compton, I. Clifton, C. Jecks, and Rachel Sanger. Acting Manager, Mr. E. Clifton.

ROYAL GENERAL THEATRICAL FUND.—Patroness, Her Majesty the QUEEN; Patron, H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.—Mr. RIGHTON has much pleasure in announcing his intention of giving a MORNING PERFORMANCE (under the patronage of His Grace the Duke of Beaufort), TO-DAY, SATURDAY, Oct. 20, for the Benefit of the above-named Institution. At 2 o'clock a Comedietta, entitled £200 A YEAR. At 2.30 Recitation by Mr. HERMANN VEZIN. At 2.45 an appropriate Address, written by CLEMENT SCOTT, will be spoken by Mrs. STIRLING. At 3, for the first time these twenty years, Morton's Comedy, SPEED THE PLOUGH. Revised by Arthur Matheson and Edward Righton, with an Epilogue written expressly for the occasion by H. J. Byron.—GLOBE THEATRE.

THE MOONSTONE. By Wilkie Collins. A New Drama, altered from the Novel. EVERY EVENING, at 8.30. Box-office open daily from 11.0 to 5.0. No booking fees.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

MORNING PERFORMANCE of THE MOONSTONE, on SATURDAY, Oct. 27, at 2.30. Carriages at 5. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. No Fees for Booking.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. Lane.—EVERY EVENING (Wednesday excepted), at 6.45, the New Hibernian Drama, by Mr. R. Dodson, entitled DEOCH AN' DUR'ASS. Reddy Ryland, Mrs. S. Lane. MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. J. F. Brian, Miss Emmeline Cole, The Rowella Trio. Concluding with THE MAD GIRL OF ST. MARTIN'S. Wednesday, Mr. J. B. Howe's Benefit.

ROYAL GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—NOTICE: The New Grecian Theatre will positively be opened on Monday, October 29.—EVERY EVENING at Seven, THE LION'S LOVE; or, STILL IN THE TOILS. Messrs. George Conquest, W. James, Sennett, Syms, Birchenough, George Conquest, jun., &c. Misses Mabel Verner, Victor, Denvil, Reed, &c. To conclude with CAGLIOSTRO, THE MAGICIAN. Dancing on the New Platform. The grounds brilliantly illuminated.—Acting Manager, Mr. Alphonse Roques.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening ditto.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN.—NOTICE.—On and after MONDAY, Oct. 22, the Café part of these celebrated CONCERT and SUPPER ROOMS will be thrown open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS every evening, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Children of T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales. Also on view Portrait Models of the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, Count de Tourville, M. Thiers, and the Penge convicts. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

BRIGHTON.—A PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAIN runs Every Day between Victoria and Brighton; leaving Victoria, 10.0 a.m. Weekdays, and 10.45 a.m. Sundays; and Brighton, 5.45 p.m. Weekdays, and 8.30 p.m. Sundays.
EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m. calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.
The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.
J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE.—Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. Nye Chart.—Engagement of Miss HEATH (of the Royal Princess's Theatre, London), accompanied by Mr. Walter Barratt, for Twelve Nights only (commencing MONDAY, Oct. 15). On MONDAY, Oct. 22, EAST LYNNE.

THE CONTINENT.—The Shortest, Cheapest, and Pleasantest Route to Holland, Germany, the Rhine, Belgium, Switzerland, Austria, Italy, and all parts of the Continent is via the Great Eastern Railway and Harwich.
An Express Train leaves the Liverpool Street Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 8 p.m., in connection with the Steamer to Rotterdam, and at 4.45 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, in connection with the steamer to Antwerp.
The Steamers are the finest that run between England and the Continent.
Goods and Parcels carried to all parts of the Continent at low throughout rates.
For further information apply to the Continental Department, Liverpool Street Station, London, E.C.
S. SWARBRICK, General Manager.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply The Graphic.

United Kingdom. £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt

France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video

Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of The Graphic (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½*d*.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1*d*. thin and 2*d*. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia Ceylon China	Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition.	India Japan New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. Mansfield, 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of The Graphic can be obtained on application to the publisher.

Our Illustrations

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH THE RUSSIANS—THEIR LATE LEADER

Our first sketch depicts an incident which has been mournfully frequent during the past few months, Russian soldiers are paying their last respects to the officer who has fallen while heading the attack against the hated Moslem. While leading them on to "death" or "glory" death has been his lot, and his last resting place is a solitary and unknown grave in the plains of Bulgaria, through which a short time since he had so proudly hoped to march victorious to the gates of the city of the Sultans.

WITH SULEIMAN PASHA—NIGHT SENTRIES, SHIPKA

"The cold," writes our artist, "already begins to grow piercing in the Balkans, the glacial wind whistles through the trees of the oak woods, where we have our quarters on the left wing of the camp, with a frightful sound. The day before yesterday an alarm was given, and I at once set off to the front, and passing the outposts, looked in vain about for any signs of conflict. At last I made up my mind to return, and, coming back, noticed the enormous line of sentries which encircle the camp at from twenty to thirty yards distance from each other. The wind was so strong that I froze in my cloak, but on seeing these poor fellows standing in the wind and cold I felt comparatively luxuriously situated. These sentinels had heard some shots at a short distance, and a cry of 'Cossacks!' was at once passed from mouth to mouth until it arrived at the central camp."

WITH THE RUSSIANS—GENERAL SKOBELEFF

General Skobeleff, whose daring charges with his Circassian Cossacks so greatly hastened the capture of Lofteha, and have gained him so much renown at the successive attacks on Plevna, gained his first laurels in Central Asia, like so many of his colleagues, being previously known as "conqueror of Ferghana or Khokand," which he subdued and annexed for the Czar, and of which he subsequently was made the Governor. A writer in the Daily News last June describes him as a "tall, handsome man, with a lithe, slender, active figure, a clear blue eye, and a large, prominent, but straight, well-shaped nose, the kind of nose, it is said, Napoleon used to look for amongst his officers when he wanted to find a general, and a face young enough for a lieutenant, being aged only thirty-two, although a general—the youngest in the Russian army." The father of General Skobeleff, himself a general, is also with the army in Bulgaria, and as he is by no means an old man, the two bear a striking resemblance to each other. Skobeleff's reckless charges, of which we have heard so much, are proverbial even in the Russian army, by whom through his daring exploits he is looked upon as almost a madman who would fling away his own life and that of his troops without the slightest regard to consequences. This view is certainly unjust, for with all his rashness there generally is found not a little method and considerable calculation in all Skobeleff's reckless ventures, and he has achieved with them undoubtedly considerable success in Central Asia, where he gained his crowning victory by attacking the Khan of Khokand and 7,000 men with only 150 followers, and completely routing the enemy without the loss of a single man.

Our portrait is from a photograph by C. Szathmari, Bucharest.

WITH THE TURKS IN ASIA

The view of the town and citadel of Bayazid is taken from the rocky hills overlooking the town from the south-east, the position from which the Turks under Faik Pasha bombarded the citadel with mountain guns. The Citadel, or Château, is a noble building, about 150 years old. The walls, of a hardish sandstone, are of great thickness, and in the basement and lower chambers the garrison were thoroughly protected, owing to their massive structure, from the Turkish shells. But the Russian riflemen were placed at almost every point, even to the gallery of the minaret, whence their fire could tell upon the surrounding heights, and their losses in these comparatively exposed places must have been considerable. The walls of the citadel are covered with bullet marks, and rent and torn by shells. During the siege all supplies, including the water, were cut off from the beleaguered garrison by their assailants, the Turks, and thousands of Kurds from the district near Van. Russians were killed almost every night in the desperate attempt to obtain water from a small stream which trickles through the town at the foot of the rock, and the sufferings and privations of the troops, until released on the 10th of July by the army from Erivan, under General Tergukasoff, were intense. Many had died of starvation. But for a timely fall of rain the whole garrison would in all probability have succumbed.

The horrible massacre of the soldiers and townspeople by the Kurds, still fresh in the memory of our readers, occurred upon the road leading to the gate of the fortress. On the 2nd of August the Turkish army, under Ismail Pasha, had taken up a position in the centre of the plain represented in the sketch, near the River Alsaz, while the Russians occupied the mountains opposite, at the Pass of Karohulak, the entrance to Russian territory. Another sketch shows the interior of the Quadrangle in the citadel. The Mosque had been used for officers' quarters by the Russians. The stone carving, both exterior and interior, is very beautiful.

There is also a sketch of the Citadel and Mosque taken from the town of Bayazid. It was done in a minute or two because the "stench" was almost unbearable. At the foot of the Tower to the left hand can be seen the entrance to a kind of subterranean passage. It was from this point the Russian soldiers used to come down at night to the foot of the rock for water at the risk of their lives. The houses are roofless, having been burnt and plundered, &c., by the Kurds during the siege.

A fourth sketch depicts the head-quarters of Ismail Pasha, with a view of Mount Ararat in the distance. There is little need to describe this well-known mountain, which with the exception of Sinai has more sacred associations than any other mountain in the world. Apart from its Scriptural associations it is interesting geographically speaking, as on the top of its lower peak the dominions of the Czar, the Sultan, and the Shah, the territories of the three chief forms of faith which possess Western and Northern Asia, converge to a point.

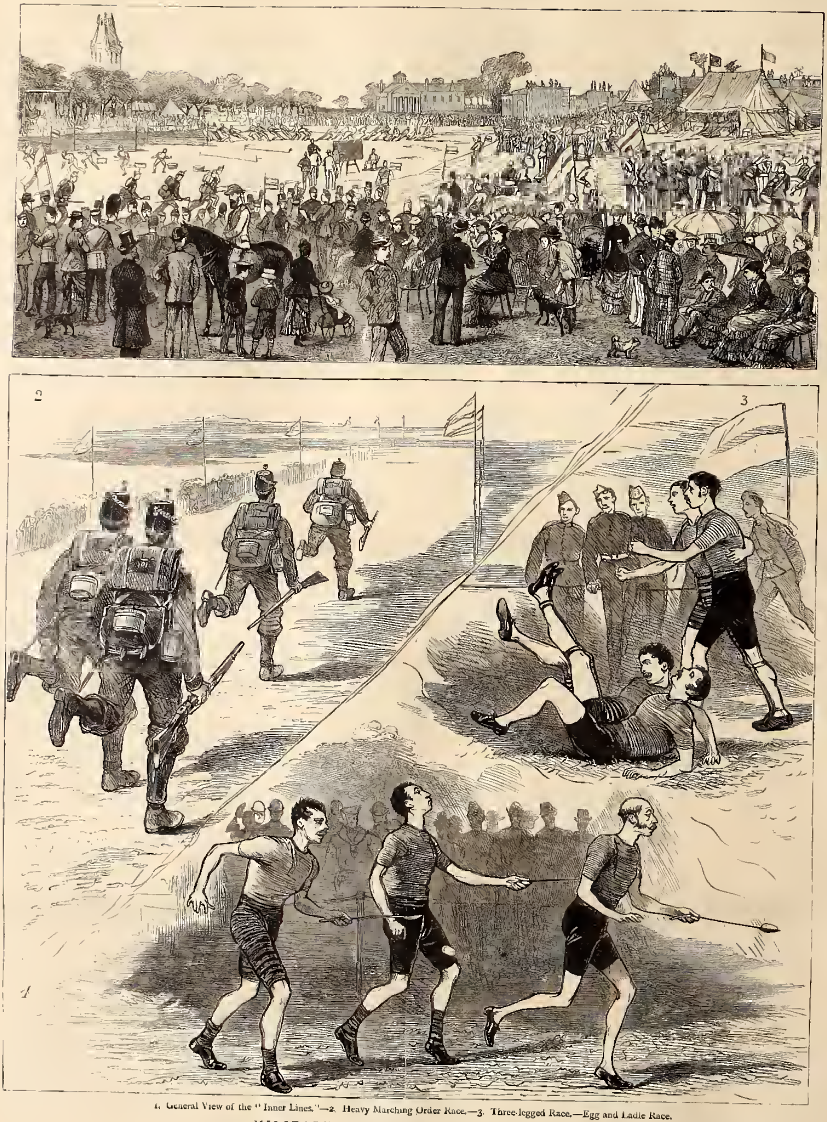
Our illustrations are from sketches kindly furnished to us by Captain McCalmont, one of the British Attachés with the Turkish forces in Asia.

MILITARY ATHLETICS AT CHATHAM

These sports took place on the 4th inst., the locale being the "Inner Lines," and the competitors the 2nd Battalion of the 24th Regiment. Fine weather favoured the event, and there was consequently a large gathering of spectators. The programme included the usual number of "flat" and "hurdle" races, with "high" and "long" jumping, and others of a more distinctive character, some of which our artist has chosen for illustration. The Heavy Marching Order Race was no joke for the runners, 300 yards at double-quick pace, with full accoutrements and rifle to carry. The Egg and Ladle Race, though not requiring so much physical power, was by no means less difficult of accomplishment. Each competitor was provided with a ladle, in the bowl of which was placed an egg, and the question to be decided was which should most quickly get over the 300 yards without dropping the egg. The fun arising from such a contest may be readily imagined, and the race was certainly not to the swift. Another difficult feat was the Egg and Basket Race, twenty-five eggs being placed in a line, a yard apart, and the runner having to make a separate journey to bring each one to the basket, which was eight yards distant from the nearest egg. The Three-Legged Race was also very provocative of mirth, the numerous tumbles proving indisputably that in some matters the proverb "Two heads are better than one," does not hold good.—Our engravings are from sketches by Captain H. G. Robley, 91st Highlanders, and Mr. C. D'Aguilar Pope, of the 24th Regiment.

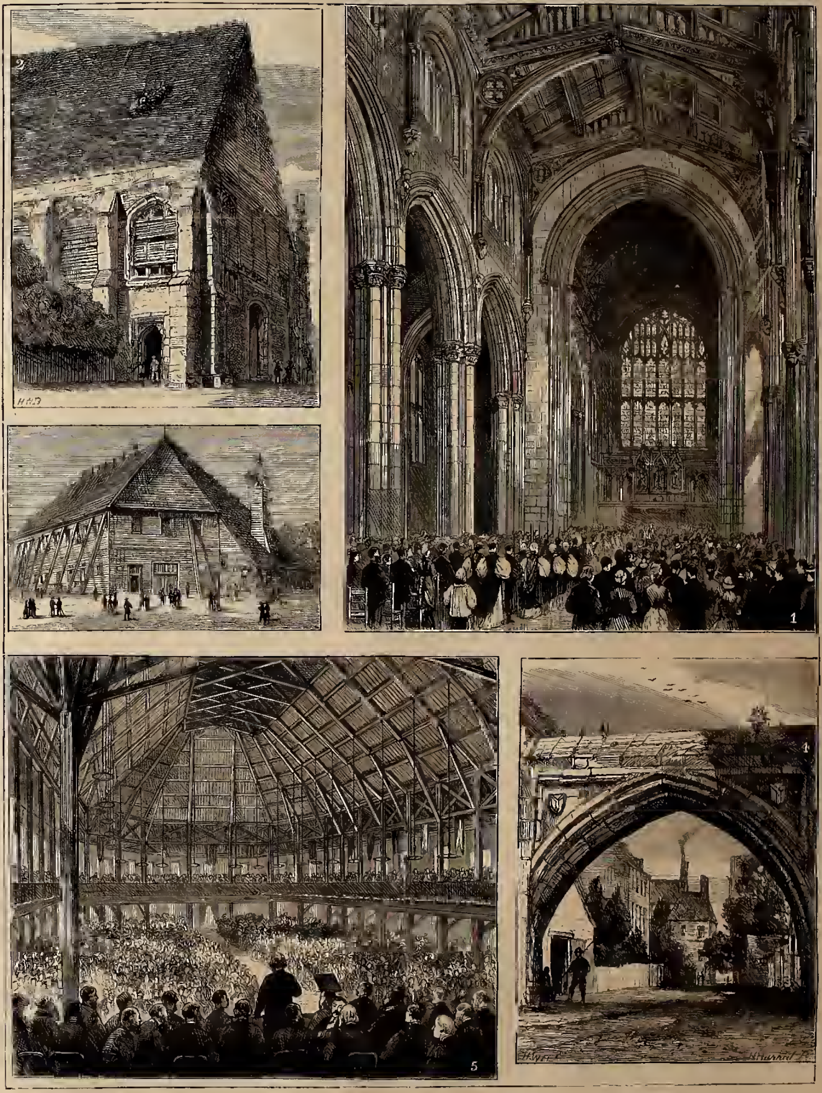
CHURCH CONGRESS AT CROYDON

Some account of the proceedings at the various meetings of the Croydon Congress will be found under the head of "Church News," so that here we need only speak of the subjects of our engravings. The first shows the interior of the Parish Church during the opening service, with the procession of Bishops, priests, and other ecclesiastical dignitaries passing up the aisle, conspicuous amongst them being the figure of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the President of the Congress. We have also views of the exterior and interior of the Congress Hall, a temporary structure erected in the short space of three weeks, at a cost of 2,000*l*. It is one of the largest buildings of the kind ever constructed, being capable of seating nearly 4,000 persons. It was here that the principal meetings took place, the "sections" assembling in the Public Hall of the town, while the Ecclesiastical Art Exhibition was held on a piece of land which had been a skating rink, part of which was roofed in, and the other part covered with large marquees. This exhibition comprised all kinds of Church vestments, altar ornaments, and Church plate, memorial brasses, stained glass, wood carvings, embroidery, &c., with many historical banners and pictures. One of the specialities was a portable Communion case, containing not only every ordinary requisite, but also two candlesticks, an "altar," and a reredos; and another was the Bishop's "Tennessee Satchel," contrived to hold the episcopal robes so as to prevent them being soiled by rain or crumpled by careless handling. In the Funeral Department there were several newly-invented funeral cars, hand-biers, and mourning carriages, and a variety of novelties in coffins, some made of bent wood, others of hardware, and again others of wicker-work, as suggested by Dr. Seymour Haden. The "Earth to Earth" system now in operation at the



1. General View of the "Inner Lines."—2. Heavy Marching Order Race.—3. Three-legged Race.—Egg and Ladle Race.

MILITARY ATHLETICS AT CHATHAM



1. Opening Service in the Parish Church : The Procession.—2. Great Hall of "Old Croydon Palace."—3. Exterior of the Congress Hall.—4. Ancient Gateway of the "Palace."—5. Interior of the Congress Hall.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS AT CROYDON

London Necroplis was illustrated by engravings, but not by actual specimens. The coffin in this case is of the ordinary appearance, but is made of more perishable material than usual.

Reverting to our engravings, we have views of the "Great Hall" and the "Gateway" of Old Croydon Palace, formerly the chief residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury, where Queen Elizabeth was thrice entertained, first in 1567, again in 1573, and lastly in 1600. It was sold in 1780, and is now used as a bleaching factory. Our artist speaks of the Great Hall as one of the very finest in England, the roof being similar to that of Westminster Hall, and remarks that it is a disgrace to all parties concerned that it should ever have been allowed to fall into its present deplorable condition. Surely something might be done to rescue and preserve so fine a national monument.

FAMINE SCENES AT BELLARY (MADRAS PRESIDENCY)

OUR double-page engraving, which is composed from photographs taken on the spot by Capt. W. W. Hooper, 4th Madras Cavalry, and forwarded to us by Dr. Martin Wood, of Bombay, represents a Famine Relief Camp at Bellary. From a recent issue of the Times of India, we learn that the Camp at Avamali's Tope, Bellary, which may be taken as a typical example of these establishments, contained 3,600 inmates, all of whom were either suffering from ailments resulting from starvation, or were too weak to be able to labour on the relief works. Some gangs of weakly coolies and women were employed in light work about the neighbourhood, but no one was kept in camp who could do even half a day's work. The Camp is divided into two parts. In one are erected hospitals and sheds, while the other is divided off into large compartments surrounded by light bamboo railings, which support one side of a roof of matting. Under this strip of matting the inmates sheltered themselves from the vertical sun. The people are classified in the various compartments:—in one 600 "orphan" boys; in another some hundreds of girls; in a third the coolies; in a fourth women and children. There are eight hospital sheds. Nearly all the patients suffer from bowel complaints, and in cases of severe starvation dropsy supervenes. When persons are brought in almost starved, they are put on very small rations of milk or broth, and their clamours for plenty of food to fill themselves are disregarded. Dysentery or fatal diarrhœa would attack them, if they got much food while their digestive organs were unable to bear it. There are many men and more children, in the shed devoted to starvation cases, who are merely skeletons covered with wrinkles of discoloured skin. How they continue to breathe—generally the chief sign of life they give—it is difficult to understand. Yet many of them recover.

Our small engraving is from a drawing by Mrs. Alexander Harvey, of Bellary. For this also we are indebted to Dr. Martin Wood, of Bombay, who says: "It shows the terminal railway station of Bellary, crammed with bags of grain, which are being removed by the men-drawn carts of the period. Bellary is the western terminus of the Madras Railway, but an extension of the line further westward has been undertaken as a 'famine work.' This is to be laid far into the Dharwar Collectorate of the Bombay Presidency, where it will form a portion of the line that must eventually be taken up from Carwar on the Malabar Coast."

MR. ANDRIES STOCKENSTRÖM

THE newly-appointed Attorney-General of the Cape Colony is of Swedish extraction, his grandfather having left his native country in consequence of some political disturbances, and after going to the Cape, and taking service under the old Dutch Government, was killed in one of the native fights which made the life of the early settler in South Africa so full of privation and danger. His son Andries was in early life an officer in the British army, was afterwards appointed Landdrost (magistrate) of Graaff Reinet, in the Cape Colony, and subsequently rose to be Lieutenant-Governor of the Colony. He died in London in 1846, having been created a baronet. The present Attorney-General, who bears his father's name, and is heir presumptive to his title, is a native of Cape Colony, but received his education in England, going first to King's College, London, and afterwards to the London University, where he graduated B.A., in 1863. Two years later he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, at the same time as Mr. de Villiers, the Chief Justice of the Cape. After practising a few months in the Supreme Court, he went to the Eastern Districts Court, Grahamstown, in 1866, and in September, 1875, was appointed Judge of the Land Court of Griqualand West, the difficult duties of which he discharged with as great credit to himself, and as much satisfaction to the people as the peculiarly unhappy circumstances of the times would admit.

Mr. Stockenström's appointment is looked upon as of great importance in its bearing on Lord Carnarvon's policy, and on South African politics generally; and it is received with general congratulation by the Eastern Province on account of the views he entertains in favour of the confederative union of these colonies by the Western Province.—Our portrait is from a photograph by J. E. Bruton of Cape Town.

THE RIGHT REV. DR. DAVID MORIARTY

THIS distinguished Roman Catholic prelate was born near Tralee in 1814, and educated first at Boulogne-sur-Mer, and afterwards at the College of Maynooth. On the death of Father Hand of the Foreign Missionary College at Drumcondra, near Dublin, he succeeded to the Presidency of that Institution, a post which he held for many years. In 1854 he was chosen to be coadjutor to the Right Rev. Dr. Egan, Bishop of Kerry, entering the episcopacy as Bishop of Antigona in partibus infidelium. Dr. Egan died in 1856, and Dr. Moriarty succeeded to the See. He administered his diocese with a mild but firm rule, showing a hearty sympathy with every member of his extensive flock who suffered any real distress or wrong; while he steadily refused to countenance any movement of a character likely to produce illwill between different classes, to perpetuate sectarian strife, or promote social disorder. He inculcated principles of loyalty to the Crown and Constitution, and opposed all revolutionary schemes. He was perhaps the most conservative and the least Ultramontane of all the Roman Catholic bishops of Ireland. In 1870 he attended the Vatican Council, and both spoke and voted against the opportuneness of defending the Papal infallibility, but when the Dogma was proclaimed he, like a dutiful son of the Church, accepted it in all its fulness. He was both an eloquent preacher and earnest worker, and his kindly and generous disposition made him widely respected and beloved, although his stern opposition to all kinds of violent political agitation made him at times extremely unpopular. His death was quite sudden and unexpected. On Saturday, the 29th ult., he officiated at the consecration of a new church near Killarney, founded by the Earl of Kenmare, and while engaged in the service he was seized with a paralytic stroke, which terminated fatally on the following Monday. The funeral obsequies took place at Killarney on Thursday last week, when the Cathedral was thronged with mourners, amongst whom were most of the higher dignitaries of the Irish Roman Catholic Church, and representative deputations from the Town Commissioners, Poor Law Boards, and other institutions in the South of Ireland. High Mass was celebrated by the Bishop of Limerick, and after the funeral service was over a meeting was held to elect a Vicar Capitular to hold office during the vacancy of the see, the Very Rev. Dean Mawe, parish priest of Tralee, being unanimously chosen. The Cathedral was draped and decorated for the service at the cost of the Countess of Kenmare, and the magnificent pall which covered the coffin was the gift of the Earl of Kenmare.

Our portrait is from a photograph by A. Lesage, 40, Sackville Street, Dublin.

THE FIRE AT INVERARY CASTLE

THIS disastrous conflagration, which nearly destroyed one of the most princely residences in the kingdom, broke out early on Friday morning last, and was first discovered by a fisherman, who, while on his way to the harbour, saw the glare of light from one of the upper windows, and immediately gave the alarm. The inmates, including the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, the Princess Louise, and the Marquis of Lorne, were aroused, and their safety having been assured, every effort was made to save the building, the tenantry and many of the townsfolk having hurried to the scene in order to render what aid they could. The fire raged until nearly noon, and the grand central hall and tower were completely gutted. Most of the valuable pictures and articles of vertu were saved, but amongst the treasures destroyed were four highly-valued paintings of the duke's grandfather and grandmother—Miss Gunning, "the beautiful duchess," wife of two dukes in succession (Hamilton and Argyll) and mother of four dukes; and of the Great Marquis of Argyll and his rival Montrose; a fine organ placed in the north gallery was burnt, as were also the well-worn colours of the 91st Highlanders (the Princess Louise's Own), and about 200 flint-lock muskets, used at Culloden by the Argyllshire Fencibles, besides some ancient mail armour. Some of the pictures were destroyed by being hastily torn from their frames, and a fine porcelain vase, worth 500*l.*, was broken in removal. The historic wooden cup, which belonged to the illustrious Marquis of Argyll, was, however, saved, much to the gratification of the duke, who set a high value on it as a family relic. The castle, which was built about 140 years ago, on the site of the more ancient edifice, stands at the foot of the Hill of Duniquoich, near the head of Loch Fyne. It was a quadrangular building of slatestone, with round towers at the angles and a central tower of great height. The fire is supposed to have been caused by lightning, and the cost of restoration is estimated at between 15,000*l.* and 20,000*l.* After the fire had been extinguished, the Duke and Duchess made several calls upon the townspeople to thank them for their exertions; and the Duke wrote a letter to the Provost expressing the warm thanks of himself, the Duchess, and the whole family to all the people of Inverary for their zealous and effective aid in saving the castle and its contents from total destruction.

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 373.

COFFEE CULTIVATION IN GUATEMALA

See page 375.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO's new work is continued on page 377.

SINKING OF THE "REDOUTABLE" AFTER THE BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR

AMONG the vessels of the combined French and Spanish squadron which were defeated by our fleet on the ever-memorable 21st October, 1805, the Redoutable (seventy-four guns) will always hold a place of special interest. It was from her mizen-top, at the time when she was lying between the Téméraire and the Victory, that the fatal musket-shot was fired at the quarter-deck of the latter vessel, which ended Lord Nelson's glorious career. Within an hour afterwards, while desperately contending with her two antagonists, the Redoutable's main and mizen-masts were shot away. The former fell upon the deck of the Téméraire, and formed a bridge of easy descent, along which a portion of the Téméraire's crew presently rushed, and took quiet possession of the gallantly-fought Redoutable.

At five P.M. of the following day, the Redoutable, which had been much damaged in the action, and which was in tow by the Swiftsure, was found to be sinking. Part of the prize-crew, and about 120 Frenchmen, which were as many as the boats could contain, were brought off from her, and at 10.30, the Redoutable having her stern entirely under water, the Swiftsure cut herself clear. At this time the weather was very bad. At 3.30 A.M. of the 23rd, attracted by the cries of people, the Swiftsure again sent her boats, and, from three rafts, which the French crew, amid a dreadful night of wind, rain, and lightning, had constructed from the spars of their sunken ship, saved fifty more of the sufferers. The remaining survivors of the Redoutable's officers and crew, together with thirteen of the Téméraire's, and five of the Swiftsure's men, perished in her.

The picture from which our engraving is taken was painted by Mr. C. Bolonachi, a Greek by birth, who is reckoned to be the best marine painter in Munich. The picture was exhibited at the Munich Art Union, from the secretary of which body, Mr. M. Wulfert, we have obtained permission to publish it.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——Lord John Manners, M.P., the Postmaster-General, responding to the toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers," at a Conservative Banquet at Ipswich on Tuesday last, referred to the War as a subject on which it behoved all men to speak with great sobriety and diffidence. All he could venture to say was that as when the war broke out Great Britain was the first Power to express a decided opinion that it was unnecessary and uncalled for, so now the Government was most ready and eager to avail itself of the first favourable opportunity to interfere in order to terminate the conflict upon a satisfactory and equitable basis. If asked whether there was any prospect of such a favourable opportunity presenting itself, he should most respectfully decline to answer; but in the personal dispositions of the Czar and the Sultan he saw the best hope of so happy a consummation.—The Hon. E. Ashley, speaking at Poole, at the opening of a new Liberal Hall, said that the Government had caused Turkey to believe that when the first guns were fired they would bring allies on her side, and had thus induced the Turk to refuse the terms of the European Conference. It was certain that if Turkey proved the conqueror, a pressure of force must be used to ensure the reform of her government and protection of her Christian subjects, as she was powerless herself to make the slightest reform.—At a meeting of the Dublin Home Rule League last week, a National Conference was finally decided upon. It is to meet between the 16th of December and the 20th of January, and will consist of Members of Parliament, clergymen of all denominations, magistrates, members of Corporations, Poor Law Guardians, persons who have been at any time members of the original Home Rule League, and the representatives of local kindred associations and trade societies. It is said that at this Conference there will be produced a "black-book" now in preparation, containing the names of all members of the House Rule party who have been at all remiss in attending to their Parliamentary duties. The number of their attendances and votes on the Irish questions brought before the House of Commons in the last three sessions; and their attendances at the meetings of the "Irish parliamentary party," will also be given, and special attention will be called to the almost regular absence of about twenty of the hon. gentlemen.—Sir Tollemache Sinclair, in a long letter to the Liberal Committee of the county of Caithness, declares that he is still resolved to leave public life, but will not do so until the dissolution of the present Parliament, as he is afraid that a member might now be returned in his place who would support the Premier with regard to any pretext for going to war with our old friend and ally, Russia, and in favour of the unspeakable Turk. He repeats his complaint with regard to the treatment he has met with at the hands of the House of Commons, and says it was the experience of his father, as well as himself, to be beaten in the race by many inferiors in ability and knowledge.—Sir Wilfrid Lawson, addressing his constituents at Carlisle on Wednesday, said that he differed from Mr. Gladstone with regard to exacting certain conditions from Turkey, because "exacting" meant either war or threatening war. He did not believe that war could have been prevented by the Powers uniting to coerce Turkey, nor did he agree with Lord Beaconsfield, whose rowdy after-dinner rhetoric, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against a great nation was unworthy of any man calling himself a statesman.—Mr. Gladstone arrived at Kingstown on Wednesday by the Holyhead steamer, and was greeted on landing by a solitary newsvendor, who shouted, "Welcome to Ireland." He is the guest of the Earl and Countess of Meath, and the visit is to be as private as possible.—The Polish Society of the "White Eagle" have sent an address to the Sultan of Turkey, expressing their sympathy in "the righteous struggle" which he and his subjects are so gallantly engaged for the protection of their territory and Faith; and stating their firm conviction that "the Almighty has destined the Ottoman nation to be the worthy instrument of effectually curbing the intolerable curse of Russian domination."

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.——The Olga steamer arrived at Falmouth on Wednesday night with the news that the Cleopatra was thrown on her beam ends during a heavy gale on Sunday night in the Bay of Biscay, in lat. 44, 53 N. long. 7·52 W., which is not far from the place where H.M.S. Captain went down. The men on board Mr. Dixon's vessel signalled for assistance, the Olga hove to, and sent a boat with the second mate and five men, all of whom were drowned by the swamping of the boat. Next day another boat succeeded in taking off the crew of the Cleopatra, and the Obelisk was cut adrift and abandoned. Mr. J. Dixon has expressed his belief that his strange vessel is sufficiently buoyant to carry the Obelisk safely out to sea until it can be picked up, but Captain Carter, who had charge of it during the voyage, is not so sanguine. The loss of the Needle, however, is of less consequence than the lives of the poor men who have been drowned.

ACCIDENTS AND DISASTERS.——The gale of Sunday night and Monday morning was general throughout the United Kingdom, and terrible accounts have been received from all quarters of loss of life and damage to property. In rural districts hundreds of trees were torn up, and in town an immense number of buildings were either totally or partially blown down, windows were broken in, and chimney-pots cast about in the streets, and in some places the police and other pedestrians were compelled to hold on to area railings to prevent themselves from being hurled down. A number of wrecks, some of them fatal, occurred upon the coasts, though the lifeboats did good service at several stations. At Dunbar there was a curious reversal of the usual order of things, the lifeboat after putting out became unmanageable, drifted out to sea, and capsized, two of the crew being drowned, and the remainder, who managed to scramble on board again, were saved by some fishing boats which put out to the rescue. In London the gale, though very violent, does not appear to have done nearly so much damage as at many provincial places.—A fatal colliery explosion occurred last week at Pemberton, near Wigan. Thirty-six of the miners who were at work in the pit were killed, and two of the exploring party, one of whom was the manager of the colliery, also lost their lives. The fire raged so fiercely that the working had to be bricked up in order to stop it, and it was several days before the ordinary work could be resumed. The cause is supposed to have been the firing of a shot, and there is some talk of petitioning for an Act to prohibit the use of gunpowder for this purpose in future.—Another colliery accident happened on Saturday at Ward Leigh, near Wigan, where an engine boiler exploded, and twelve workers at the bottom of the shaft were thus deprived of air. The air fan was worked by forty men to keep them alive, and after six hours they were all got out safely. The explosion was caused by the neglect of the fire-beater, who had allowed the boiler to run dry.—Two policemen were killed, and three others injured, by the sudden falling-in of a burning building at Newcastle on Friday last.—Two children have been killed by an express train at a level crossing near Goole.—Nine persons were badly injured the other day on Blackfriars Bridge by a runaway horse, the driver of which had been thrown out of his vehicle in consequence of the animal stumbling.

MISCELLANEOUS.——General Grant was in Birmingham on Tuesday, and was presented with addresses from the Corporation, the working-men of the city, and the Peace Arbitration Union. In response to the latter, he said that though he had been in many battles he would always have rather listened to some settlement other than by the sword, and he hoped that on some future day all the civilised nations of the earth would agree to settle disputes peacefully by some sort of International Congress. On Wednesday he went the round of the manufactories, and afterwards dined at the Town Hall.—The election of Sir J. Bennett as Alderman of the Ward of Cheps has been vetoed for the third time by the Court of Aldermen, who still decline to give any reason for their opposition.—The London School Board are about to establish a "Truant School" for the whole of London. It is to be conducted on the "silent system," but how the urchins are to be compelled to hold their tongues is not stated.—The anniversary of the birth of Father Mathew was celebrated on Monday by the Catholic League of the Cross, who held a temperance meeting in Exeter Hall under the presidency of Archbishop Manning.—Rewards granted by the Board of Trade, and allotted out of public subscriptions sent to the Rector of Portland, have been distributed to the fishermen who helped to rescue the survivors of the Forest and Avalanche. It is proposed to build a small church in Portland as a memorial of the passengers and crew of the latter vessel. The body of the pilot of the Avalanche has been washed ashore at Lulworth. It was identified by the pilot's license found in a pocket.—On Wednesday Lord Hartington laid the foundation stone of a Memorial Hall which is to be erected at Chesterfield to the memory of George and Robert Stephenson, and is to serve as the head-quarters of the Derbyshire Institute of Engineers as well as a scientific and literary institute. The ceremony was conducted with full masonic honours.—A serious mutiny broke out on board the New World, an American vessel outward bound on Tuesday off the Nore. One man was killed by a pistol shot, and two others jumped overboard, and were drowned. A strong party of sailors and marines was sent from H.M.S. Chesterfield, and the New World will probably be brought back to London.

SPORTING

THE TURF.——Harking back for a moment to last week's Newmarket Meeting, we must put on record the victory of Beauclerc in the Middle Park Plate, for which a round score sported silk. Athol Lad, own brother to that grandest of modern sprinters, Prince Charlie, held the favouriteship, as was expected, to the fall of the flag; but after showing a bold front for some distance, the infirmity of roaring, which afflicted his illustrious relative, prevented his emulating his brother's feat or even getting a place. By the victories of Beauclerc and Hilarious the Northern stables show that they need not fear to antagonise the Southern even at the head-quarters of the Turf; and it must have been gratifying to Northern owners and trainers to find the hearty reception their successes met with. In the Champion Stakes, run on the same day as the Middle Park, Springfield, by his easy defeat of Silvio, thoroughly proved himself the best horse we have on the Turf. On the Friday old Ecossais, with 10st. 7lb. on his back, took the Third Welter, and so made up for his defeat by Golden Spur in a similar race on the Wednesday. In the last race of the meeting Lady Golightly gave us another taste of her quality by winning the Newmarket Derby from Jongleur and others, though she had the best of the weights with the French horse. This splendid filly has won ten races for Lord Falmouth this season, and stakes to the value of nearly 5,000*l*. The consistently good running of her ladyship has tended to uphold Hilarious as first favourite for the coming Cambridgeshire, as well as the easy victory of the colt himself in the Cesarewitch. It was rightly considered a most remarkable thing last year that the first occasion of the penalty of the Cesarewitch winner being increased should also be marked as the first occasion of the same horse carrying off the double event: it would be still more strange if the double event coup were to be repeated next week. Many good judges, however, think it will; but others, who rely on Manœuvre's close race with Lady Golightly in the St. Leger, think Earl Bradford's filly must beat the Northern colt considering the extra weight he has to give her. Not a few, again, swear by Rosy Cross, who ran fourth in the Cesarewitch, and receives a large allowance from Hilarious. Besides the animals just named few others seem backed with any spirit.

Though an off week, being the middle one between the two great Newmarket gatherings, there has been any amount of capital racing from Newcastle in the North to Sandown and Croydon in the South. At the Coal Capital the Autumn Plate proved the good thing it looked for Tentergate, and the Nursery Handicap fell to the Stella filly, while Telescope beat nine others in the Town Plate. Ranald McEagh scored on both days, taking the Meldon Stakes on the Tuesday and the Northern Nursery on the Wednesday. On the latter day Bogie, by winning the Welter, added another to his long list of recent victories. Umbria was made favourite in a field of ten for the Autumn Handicap, and won by a length from the second favourite, Fontarabian. Old Grand Flaneur, who generally seems hardly treated by the handicappers, had a chance given him in the Gateshead Plate, and took it. Good fields, too, and good racing were the order of the day at Croydon, where Little Fish beat eleven competitors in the Maiden Stakes, Memorandum nine in the Shirley Plate, and Little Shaver eleven in the Selling Nursery. But the great feature of the first day was the reappearance of Oxonian, the old and evergreen horse looking as fresh as ever. His good looks, comparatively light weight, and the memory of his former prowess made him first favourite, and he justified the compliment paid him by beating his five antagonists most handsomely. Maid of the Valley showed that she was still in the winning vein by taking the West Wickham Plate; and Electra ran clean away with the Stand Plate. The Steeplechase, won by Rattle, reminds us that the "legitimate" season is fast drawing to a close.

COURSING.——This favourite sport goes on merrily both in private and public. Most of the well-known names in the coursing world appear in the record of the meeting of the Ridgway Club (Lytham). Mr. Bell Irving's Iron Grey divided the North Lancashire Stakes with Mr. Clifton's Comrade; and, curiously enough, the same gentlemen divided the Lytham Cup with Czarevna and Cupid. The division of the stakes in these and other instances is much to be regretted. The North of England Club have had a grand meeting, at which Mr. Turner's Unexpected took the Longridge Cup, and Mr. Pringle's Royal Ann the Tenants' Cup. The coursing season seems likely to prove one of the most busy and interesting on record.

AQUATICS.——There is every reason to believe that a match will be made between Boyd and Higgins, to be rowed over the Tyne Champion Course. The only difficulty in the way seems to be the adjustment of some trifling points in the articles of agreement.

FOOTBALL.——The well-known Clapham Rovers have begun their season well, beating the Marlborough Nomads and the Mighty Wanderers, who, per contra, have opened badly by losing two matches. It must be remembered, however, that they did not play all their best men; and they are sure to show a much bolder front when they send their representatives into the field for the Association Challenge Cup. At Watford the Herts Rangers beat the Old Wykehamists by twelve goals to nil.

POLO.——During the last few weeks the Carabineers stationed at Colchester have played a series of matches with the East Essex Polo Club. Twenty-five games in all have been decided, the Carabineers winning 13 and the Essex men 12.

GOLF.——Considerable interest is felt in Scotland in reference to the match for 100*l*. between the well-known golfers, Davie Strath of North Berwick and Bob Ferguson of Musselburgh. The game is 72 holes, of which 36 have been played over Musselburgh Links, Strath being four holes to the good. The other 36 holes are to be played at St. Andrews' Links.

WRESTLING.——A reviving interest seems to be showing itself in connection with this once popular athletic sport. A grand match, after the West Country style, between Rundle of Plymouth and Chapman of London, for 100*l*., has just been decided at Kensal Green. Neither men had suffered defeat in previous contests, but in this Rundle showed great superiority. The proceedings were marked with a tone of fair play from beginning to end.

THEATRES

MR. BYRON'S new burlesque at the GAIETY is an amusing piece of extravagance which the management have liberally endowed with scenery and costume, while the action is contrived to furnish pretext for those topical songs and grotesque dances which are hailed with tokens of frantic delight by audiences who find pleasure in pieces of this kind. It is, perhaps, a trifle less pretty than the Bohemian Gyurl, which has just been withdrawn at the same theatre after a long career of popularity; but, like its predecessor, it does not rely entirely on caricature and humour, but includes much that is graceful and pleasant to the eye. Its title, Little Doctor Faust, may, perhaps, have led some persons to expect a new version of M. Hervé's Le Petit Faust. Mr. Byron, however, has simply taken the version of Goethe's poem which was prepared by a French playwright for the Gymnase Theatre nearly thirty years ago, and which has since become familiar as substantially the libretto of Gounod's opera. So far as it is a parody, indeed, Mr. Byron's piece is a parody of the opera scenes, which are travestied in the usual way by exaggeration and by ludicrous associations; but this is of little importance as compared with the indispensable features already referred to. The piece, supported by such popular performers as Miss Ellen Farren, Miss Kate Vaughan, Mr. Royce, Mr. Soutar, Miss Marion West, Mr. Edward Terry, and Miss Amalia, has been received by Gaiety audiences with much favour, and it may be expected to sustain its popularity.

M. Lecocq's La Marjolaine, produced at the ROYALTY Theatre on the occasion of the re-opening of this house under the management of Miss Kate Santley, is essentially a comic opera, displaying not only that pleasant vein of melody for which the composer is famous, but considerable skill in the management of concerted pieces, and generally in the orchestral accompaniments. The company are better able to interpret the humours of the libretto—which has been skilfully adapted and subjected to a moderately refining process by Mr. Sutherland Edwards—than to do justice to the music. On the whole, however, the performance, which is supported by Mr. Lionel Brough, Miss Santley, Mr. Walter Fisher, and other actors and actresses of note, passes pleasantly enough.

Mr. W. G. Wills's new spectacular drama at DRURY LANE Theatre, founded on Sir Walter Scott's Peveril of the Peak, seems to have been no more successful in pleasing the public than in satisfying the judgment of the critical. On Saturday next Mr. Chatterton will revive the late Mr. Halliday's Amy Robsart.

A morning performance will be given at the GLOBE Theatre to-day for the benefit of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, an old and useful institution which commands the respect of the theatrical profession. Morton's Speed the Plough, a comedy which has not been performed in London for some years, will be revived, supported by a cast which, as usual on occasions of this kind, is of even embarrassing strength, inasmuch that the "plough boys" who figure in some scenes are to be represented by distinguished actors and actresses. An address, written by Mr. Clement Scott for the occasion, will be spoken by Mrs. Stirling.

The GRECIAN Theatre, a very popular house among playgoers residing in the northern suburbs, has been entirely rebuilt, and will be reopened on Monday, October 29. It claims to be now one of the most beautiful as well as one of the largest of London theatres. Unfortunately great size is not favourable to the display of the finer qualities of acting, but it seems to be an indispensable condition of management in the suburbs, where prices of admission are lower than in the theatres of the West End. It is satisfactory to observe, however, that the new house, which is built to accommodate five thousand persons, is provided with fifteen exits in case of alarm of fire or otherwise. A new romantic drama, written by Mr. George Conquest and Mr. Henry Pettitt, and entitled Bound to Succeed, will be produced on the opening night.

A new series of dramatic and musical matinées has been commenced at the ROYAL AQUARIUM Theatre, under the direction of Mr. Wybrow Robertson. The performances will be of a varied kind, and will be supported by popular performers. This week the company have appeared in Mr. Robertson's Breach of Promise and Messrs. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan's Trial by Jury.

A morning performance of Mr. Gilbert's new farcical comedy Engaged will be given at the HAYMARKET Theatre to-day.

Mr. Hollingshead has secured the English rights in MM. Meilhac and Halévy's new and very successful comedy La Cigale, a version of which will shortly be produced at the GAIETY.

◆

NEW YORK HAS BEEN THREATENED WITH A WATER FAMINE. Up to the 3rd inst., hardly any rain had fallen during the previous two months, and, accordingly, springs were drying up, small streams had disappeared, and the larger had considerably diminished. Fourteen lakes at present supply the department, one or two of which have never yet been tapped, and if rain did not speedily fall, it would be necessary to go to the lakes with steam pumps and dry them up.

Scraps

A NEW THEATRE has been opened in Paris—the Théâtre de la Porte St. Denis.

M. GOUNOD is writing an opera on the story of Abelard and Heloïse. It will be called Maître Pierre.

A DIRECT DESCENDANT OF MARTIN LUTHER, a schoolmaster, Herr Johann Ernst Luther, has died in Germany.

NORWEGIAN COFFINS are now imported to England, several hundreds ready for use having just arrived at an English port.

A CURIOUS WELL exists in Wise County, Texas, U.S. Although the well is 110 ft. deep and gives water abundantly at all times of the year, when a north wind has blown for twelve hours not a single drop of water can be drawn.

SIR PAUL PINDAR'S HOUSE in Bishopsgate Street, now divided into two houses, is shortly to be pulled down. The beautiful ceilings, however, are to be preserved, and one or more will be given to the South Kensington Museum.

A FAMILY OF SIX ESQUIMAUX are going to spend the winter at the Paris Jardin d'Acclimatation. They will form a regular Arctic encampment, as they bring with them their tents, furniture, and sledges, with the dogs and reindeer.

THE OLD EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY FASHION of wearing two watches has been revived by the Chinese, who carry duplicate timepieces, so that "spose one makee sick and die" the other "still lives." Chinese watches show twenty-four hours on the dial.

JOURNALISM IS LIKELY TO HAVE A PATRON SAINT, as the Turin journals, backed by the devout Roman Voce della Verita, propose to petition the Pope to nominate St. Francis de Sales guardian of Catholic writers. "Sales" is an appropriate name for a commercial venture.

A MONUMENT TO THE LATE MR. MARGARY is to be erected at Shanghai. It will consist of a Gothic cross of red and green Ningpo stone on a granite base, supported on a pedestal of granite steps, and ornamented by shields bearing the Margary arms and those of the Municipality.

COPIES OF THE PHOTOGRAPHS taken during the late Arctic Expedition are to be presented to the British and South Kensington Museums, the United Service, Royal Artillery, and Royal Engineer Institutions, and other Government collections. The originals are now being exhibited by the Photographic Society.

M. VICTOR HUGO'S PIEUVRE has appeared in the waters round Vancouver's Island, where an Indian woman, bathing near Victoria, was seized and drowned by one of these devil-fish. Her body was seen next day lying at the bottom of the bay in the grasp of the octopus, and some Indians succeeded in recovering it by cutting the creature's tentacles.

THE CLARET VINTAGE OF 1877 IN THE MEDOC will be a good average crop this year, and will be superior to that of 1876. The vintage has been carried on under very disadvantageous circumstances, as the weather has been colder than had ever been known during the gathering of the grapes. The cold has, however, been partially beneficial in checking the growth of the foliage, and thus giving the grapes a better chance of development.

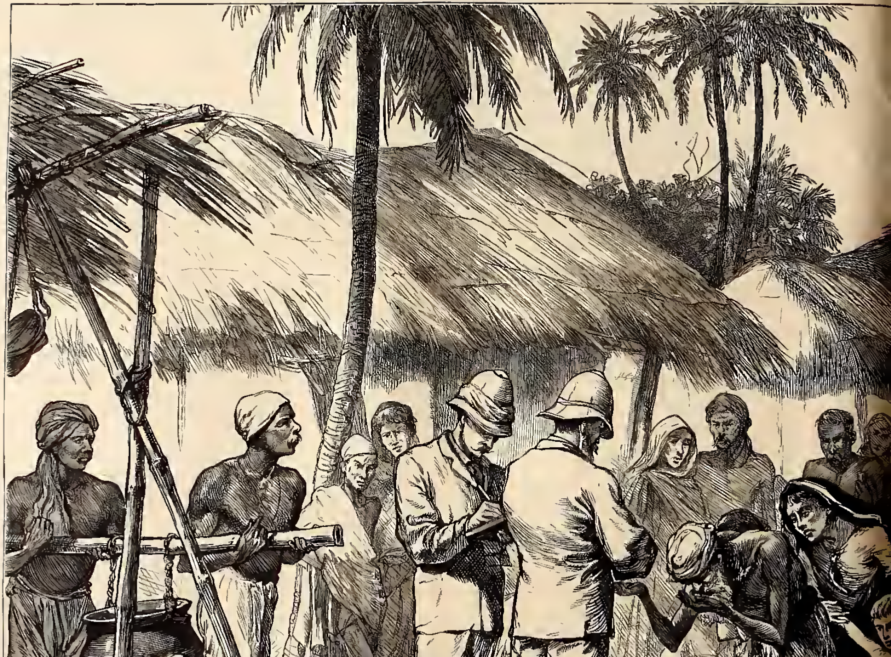
DRIVING BY ELECTRICITY is the latest invention across the Channel, according to the Live Stock Journal. An electro-magnet is placed under the coachman's seat, from which one wire is carried along the reins to the horse's bit, and another to the crupper, so that the whole length of the animal's spine forms part of an electric circuit. A sudden shock, which the driver can administer at discretion, will, it is said, arrest the most furious runaway, while a series of small shocks will stimulate a "screw" to marvels of pace and style.

A SCHOOL OF SCIENCE, ART, AND LITERATURE FOR LADIES has been established at the Alexandra Palace for the convenience of residents in the neighbourhood. Mr. Lindsay Sloper is the Director, and the course includes lessons, both public and private, in music and singing, languages, drawing and painting, mathematics, history, geography, &c., from well-known professors. There are three terms, and students are admitted free to the Palace on the days of their lessons, a similar admission being given to the lady who accompanies them.

THE DOME OF ST. PETER'S AT ROME is again causing considerable anxiety for its security, as the fissures and cracks in the upper part of the dome and its supports have much increased of late. A commission from the Russian Academy of Fine Arts has recently examined the dome, and it was found that almost every part of the structure was more or less cracked or dislocated. Bands of iron have been placed round the dome in previous years and marble tablets dove-tailed into the cracks, but numbers of the latter have been broken or torn by the widening of the fissures.

THE RENOVATION OF THE WESTMINSTER CLOCK TOWER is finished, and the scaffolding was removed on Saturday. The clock now reports its time to the makers twice a day by means of telegraphic apparatus, and the signal passes on to the Greenwich Observatory. It has been thoroughly cleaned, and although the works had been remarkably dirty since the beginning of the year, the variation never exceeded three seconds. A new escape-wheel has been added, so constructed that its several parts can never get loose, and the clock is going with great accuracy. The old escape-wheel was taken away to be repaired before the clock was stopped, but by the aid of a number of workmen it was kept going as well as if it had been controlled by its pendulum.

LONDON MORTALITY continues to increase, and the deaths last week numbered 1,321 against 1,308 in the previous seven days, but were 89 below the average, while the death rate rose to 19·5 per 1,000. Small-pox is on the increase, and although there were only 14 deaths the number of patients in the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals rose to 145, and 45 new cases were admitted against 28 in the preceding week. There were 50 deaths from scarlet fever (a rise of 12), 48 from diarrhœa (an increase of 12), 33 from measles (a rise of 10), 29 from fever (an increase of 10, although 14 below the average), 11 from diphtheria (a rise of 9), and 10 from whooping-cough (a fall of 11). The fatal cases of diseases of the respiratory organs increased to 259 from 257, and were 40 above the average. Different forms of violence caused 51 deaths, of which 43 were the result of negligence or accident. There were 2,392 births registered (a decrease of 28, and 24 above the average). The mean temperature was 48 deg. (3 deg. below the average), and the duration of sunshine was 18 hours out of the 79·9 hours during which the sun was above the horizon.



THE FAMINE IN INDIA—DISTRIBUTION OF RELIEF TO SUFFERERS AT BELLARY, MADRAS PRESIDENCY

FOREIGN

The War in the East.——Plevna continues to be the chief point of interest in the Bulgarian campaign. When first attacked by the Russians on July 20th, Plevna was solely defended by a wall and a few blockhouses, but now the town is the centre of a circle of detached works, having a radius of from ten to twelve kilometres. Slowly and cautiously, however, the Russian and Roumanian trenches are being brought nearer the Turkish works, and it is believed that the fate of the fortress will be decided within the next month. The Turks have retired from the Osman redoubt on the Gravitza ridge, which the Roumanians have been sapping for some time past, but the latter have not yet occupied it, fearing that it has been mined. Before vacating the redoubt the Turks attacked the trenches, but were defeated. General Todleben is credited with the intention to starve out Osman Pasha rather than waste his men in fruitless assaults, but to succeed in this he must keep a better watch than hitherto on the Sofia road, as three convoys of provisions have entered Plevna, while Chefket Pasha has also been there to consult with Osman, and now holds a strong position at Radomirza, thus maintaining the road open. General Gourko failed to intercept one of these convoys, and some Turkish infantry fell on a Russian foraging expedition near Telich on Saturday, and captured a quantity of sheep, cattle, and horses, the sheep being sent into Plevna. Nevertheless it is rumoured that there is great distress for food and warm clothing at Plevna, that the soldiers wish to surrender, and Osman sternly refuses. The Grand Duke's dragoman has been into Plevna on a secret mission—whether to propose an armistice for the burial of the dead, or one of a more lasting character, is not known—and reports that the garrison are living on a pound of bread a man per day, while thirty Turkish deserters, who have entered the Russian lines, describe the state of their comrades as pitiable. The besiegers, however, are in but little better condition. Although fine weather has set in, the troops suffer much from cold and damp, notwithstanding the warm clothing now being rapidly supplied, and the mud is so deep and thick as to prevent the passage of any but very light waggons. Sistova is strongly fortified, and is to be connected by rail with the Plevna camp. The Danube is rising, and has carried carried away the Nicopolis bridge, so that rafts have to be used, while the Simnitza Bridge is also in a very shaky condition. Little is known of Suleiman Pasha's movements, but he is believed to be concentrating near Sarnasuflar, in front of Rasgrad. He has despatched the unruly Egyptian contingent to Varna, and is supposed to have sent reinforcements into the Dobrudscha, lest General Zimmerman should seize the Varna railway, and cut off his supplies. The Czarevitch has declared that his army cannot winter in Bulgaria unless Rustchuk or some other fortress surrenders, as the troops are suffering greatly from sickness and from the loss of their tents and greatcoats during the retreat from the Lom. Skirmishing goes on round Pyrgos and Metchka, Cossacks have occupied Opaka, Bashi-Bazouks have attacked Mahren, near Elena, without success, and there is still a mild bombardment of Rustchuk. Farther up the Danube, the Turks on Wednesday week attempted to cross from Silistria to damage the Roumanian works at Kalarash, but returned unsuccessful, and have now destroyed the bridge they had built. In the Shipka Pass the bombardment of the Russian positions has recommenced.

Fighting continues in Asia, where the Russians have gained a decided victory, as Mukhtar Pasha has been driven from the road to Kars. The Russians evidently soon reoccupied the Great Yagni on the Turkish left which they had abandoned, as on Saturday morning the Turks attacked the hill with no result; while on Sunday General Lazaroff, who had been manœuvring for six days, turned the flank of the Turks, and drove them towards Kars and Vezinkoi. Next day the Grand Duke Michael engaged Mukhtar Pasha on his right wing near Bazardjik, seized the Acolias Redoubt, and captured the Aladja Dagh. The Turkish army was cut in two, a large number of the troops were compelled to surrender, thirty-two guns falling into the hands of the Russians, and Mukhtar is said to have fled to Kars, the remainder of the army being pressed back on Erzeroum. Kars will now probably be reinvested, and winter weather will scarcely interfere with the siege, as precedents have shown that a winter campaign is quite posible in Asia. The Russian fleet also has met with some success, and has been bombarding Sulina, where a Turkish vessel was blown up by striking on a torpedo. Fresh reinforcements are being prepared in Russia, and St. Petersburg is forming thirty-six reserve battalions of Guards and one hundred and three of the Line reserves; while to stimulate a warlike spirit the Czar has decreed that every soldier at the front shall be capable of promotion to officers' rank for distinguished services. There are rumours of a Russian loan at 8 per cent. gold interest, issued at 95, and the paper currency is so diminishing in value that the paper rouble lately worth 3*s.* 3*d.* now only brings 1*s.* 10*d.*

Servia has been bargaining for war subsidies with Russia, and it is asserted that the Principality will be paid a million of roubles every month from the day the Servian army crosses the frontier until its return. Nevertheless hostilities are still delayed, and the Porte has sent a mild remonstrance on the subject of warlike preparations.—Roumania was said to have been invaded last week by a band of 1,500 Hungarians, but the invaders proved to be Austrian troops, who had been doubled on the frontier for the sake of caution.—In Montenegro most of the troops have been sent to plant the autumn crops, and Prince Nikita has gone to Cettinje.—Greece is still busied with her armaments, on which she intends to spend 1,280,000*l.*, and the King is going to Thebes to be present at the autumn manœuvres.

France.——The result of the elections has caused considerable disappointment to all parties. Marshal MacMahon's strenuous appeals to the country, aided by military pressure, have merely produced a Conservative minority; while the Republicans not only do not possess their estimated 400 seats, but even the historic 363 have not been returned in their entirety. Yet the Liberals will command in the new Chamber a majority of 120 or 125, and can seriously embarrass the Marshal if he persists in governing with a hostile Cabinet. The successful Conservatives at present number 199, divided into 99 Bonapartists, 44 Legitimists, 11 Orleanists, and 45 MacMahonites, while 59 of these are new to the Chamber. On the other hand the Republicans will have 317 seats, including 297 of the original 363, and 24 new men. A second ballot is necessary in fourteen places, and here the Government will probably be successful, as the several Conservative candidates will coalesce against their opponent. The four Colonial deputies are also not yet known, but they are pretty sure to be Republicans. The number of the Conservatives minority may be still further lessened when the Chamber meets, as all elections have to be verified, and M. de Fourtou's intrigues will make it easy for the Opposition to bring forward proofs of illegality. Indeed, when the last Assembly first met the Liberals only mustered 295, and it was by the Conservative invalidations that the number was raised to 363. There is already a threat of this storm, as the Left of the Senate have issued an address in which they reckon the seats of their party in the Lower House at 335, when the result of the elections shall have been finally settled, and promise an appeal to the Chamber to decide on those elections carried out under the system of official candidature. This system, by the way, has not much benefitted the Government, as out of 506 official candidates 307 were rejected. Clerical influence has prevailed in the north-west and south-west, but Brittany, the very fortress of Conservative doctrines, sends ten Republicans out of twenty-four Deputies, and in north-eastern France, with the exception of the Belgian frontier, the Republicans are almost entirely victorious, while even the arrondissement including La Forêt, the Marshal's own seat, returns a Liberal. Of course the larger cities returned Republicans, Paris showing an increase for the Radicals of 50,000 votes on the 1876 election, but it is remarkable that moderate Republicans have been far more successful than their Red colleagues. M. Grévy was elected in Paris for the Ninth Arrondissement, M. Thiers' old seat, and even polled 2,000 votes more than his predecessor, while he was also returned for his former constituency, Dôle. M. Gambetta was successful at Belleville, and on the Ministerial side M. de Fourtou and the Duc Decazes were duly returned. Three prominent Bonapartists, the Duc de Mouchy, M. de Maupas, and M. Raoul Duval have however been thrown out, while Prince Napoleon has been beaten in Corsica by Baron Haussmann. The number of abstentions is particularly small, and it is evident that Government pressure has rallied many provincials to the official side. Perfect calm prevailed during the elections alike in Paris and the provinces, and the only sign visible of any excitement was the crowd on the Boulevards waiting for the returns, and the scramble for newspapers. Up to the last moment each party strove hard for victory. The Marshal issued a fresh manifesto, curt and imperative, M. de Fourtou gave forth a solemn warning against Radicalism, and Ministerial speeches abounded, while the Left brought out a counter-manifesto, and M. Victor Hugo made a forcible speech at a meeting in support of M. Grévy. Now the Press on both sides are loud in their expression of discontent.

All attention is at present concentrated on the election for the Councils General on the 4th prox., when 1,500 members will have to be chosen. This election is of the highest importance to the Government, as the Councillors, in company with the Municipal Delegates, are the electors of the Senate, and should they be Republicans the renewal of a third of the Senate in 1879 will be materially affected. M. de Fourton has accordingly summoned the Prefects to Paris to arrange for the coming vote. No change is likely to be made in the Cabinet until after this election, but once the Chamber opens the Ministers can hardly continue in office in face of the majority. The Senate, also, is reported to be preparing for action, and as it meets on the 7th prox., before the new Chamber can be constituted, it may play a very important part. M. Gambetta's trial for his last week's electoral address came on last Friday, when he failed to appear, and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment and a fine of 160*l.*

Germany.——The Ministerial crisis is at an end. The Emperor refuses to accept the resignation of Count Eulenburg, the Minister of the Interior, offered on the plea of bad health, but gives him leave of absence for six months. Dr. Friedenthal, Minister of Agriculture, will replace him ad interim.—A Government inquiry into the state of German industry and commerce will probably be held at the request of the Protectionists.—A case of cattle plague is reported from Geisenheim, in the Wiesbaden district, and some larvæ similar to that of the Colorado beetle has been discovered in a field at Hückeswagen, near Düsseldorf.

Italy.——Papal circles have been very anxious about the French elections. Prayers for the Marshal's success were ordered, and much regret is felt at the result. The Pope is busy with the vacant See of Naples, and wishes to appoint the Archbishop of Trani, while His Holiness even contemplates an autograph letter to the King, asking him to waive his right as patron of the See. There has been an inoffensive Congress of Italian Catholics at Bergamo.—Much speculation is still abroad anent Signor Crispi's Berlin visit, and a German alliance is freely canvassed.—Italy is fast organising her fleet. The ironclad Duilio, falsely reported unable to bear armour, will be finished next year, five more ironclads are being built, and two torpedo ships will be constructed.

United States.——Congress met on Monday for an extraordinary session, to make appropriations for the army. President Hayes' Message, which was read next day, contained nothing noteworthy. It stated that all subjects of public interest were left for next session, but that the army and navy estimates would be submitted, while it recommends that preparations should be made fitly to represent the country at the Paris Exhibition and the Stockholm Prison Congress. Mr. Randall, a Democrat, was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Democrats now have a majority of eleven in the Lower House, and the Republicans a smaller majority in the Senate. The new Ohio members are very violent, and declare the President to have been elected by fraud. They were serenaded on their arrival at Washington. Trade is steadily improving, and the commercial failures during the last quarter are less than in the two preceding, or than in the corresponding period in 1876. Railway freights are to be increased, and the Pennsylvania Railroad is being threatened by some of its shareholders with proceedings regarding the lease of the New Jersey Railroad.

India.——A good rainfall is reported in all parts of the country, and it is hoped the Famine will be over by February. This week's rain has saved the Government 4,000,000*l.* sterling, and at Madras rice has fallen 20 per cent., a fall which, however, threatens to paralyse the rice trade. There is now no fear of a famine in Northern and Central India, although high prices and distress throughout the Famine districts will continue for some time to come. The Famine will probably cost the Government fifteen millions, exclusive of the loss of revenue. Returns of the mortality in the Madras Presidency for the six months from November to April, show a total of 373,993 deaths, of which 182,114 were due to cholera. January was the most fatal month, and the deaths exceed the average by 188,945.

Miscellaneous.——Austria has been welcoming Signor Crispi.—In Egypt the Nile is falling, having only attained a maximum height of 16 ft. 8 in.—Canada is rejoicing in an exceptional wheat harvest.—The Cape is threatened with fresh disturbances in the Transkei.—There has been some fighting in the Niger river, where three English gunboats have destroyed the town of Emblena, to punish the natives for wrecking a trading steamer.

THE COURT

Winter has set in throughout the Highlands, and snow has fallen at Balmoral to the depth of two or three inches. Should this cold weather continue the Queen will probably return to Windsor sooner than originally intended. Her Majesty has been out every day, notwithstanding the piercing wind, has visited the Prince and Princess of Wales at Abergeldie, and last week received Princes Albert Victor and George to lunch and the Lord Chancellor to dinner. On Sunday, the Queen with the Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold attended morning service at Crathie Church, the Rev. Dr. Lees officiating, and after the service the Prince and Princess of Wales with Princes Albert Victor and George lunched with Her Majesty. The Rev. Dr. Lees joined the Royal party at dinner. On Tuesday afternoon the Queen and the Princess Beatrice left Balmoral to spend a few days at the Glassalt Shiel.—The Queen has received an address from the inhabitants of Esher thanking Her Majesty for the erection of a drinking fountain.

The Prince of Wales and his two sons have left Scotland for the South, while the Princess remains behind at Abergeldie during the illness of her lady-in-waiting, Miss Knollys, who is suffering from an attack of typhoid fever. Before leaving Abergeldie the Prince was present at a deer drive in Invercauld Forest, and entertained Prince Leopold to dinner on Sunday. On Monday morning the Prince of Wales and Princes Albert Victor and George drove from Abergeldie to Ballater, went on by train to Edinburgh, where they stayed to dine, and left a few hours afterwards for London, arriving in town on Tuesday morning. Whilst in town they stayed at Clarence House as Marlborough House is under repair. On Thursday the Prince was to visit Dartmouth to instal his two sons on board the Britannia, and a grand reception was prepared for the Princes. They were to be received with a guard of honour and presented with an address, while the town would be decorated and illuminated. The Prince was to return to town yesterday (Friday) after visiting the site of the new naval colleges.

The Duchess of Edinburgh and her children are not expected to leave Marseilles for Malta before Tuesday, and the Duke has gone to Marseilles to escort his wife. The Duchess will occupy the Palace of San Antonio at Malta, where she stayed last winter, and may probably pay a visit to Villafranca. Prince Alfred of Edinburgh, the eldest son of the Duke and Duchess, was three years old on Monday, while Wednesday was the Duchess's twenty-fourth birthday.—The Princess Louise and her husband have not accompanied the Duke and Duchess of Argyll to Roseneath, but remain at Inverary Castle, their apartments having been uninjured by the fire.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck returned to England from Germany on Saturday, and are now at White Lodge, Richmond.

CHURCH NEWS

The Church Congress.——On Thursday last week, the principal subject discussed at the Croydon Congress was "The Relations between Church and State." Dean Stanley was to have opened this debate, but as he had not arrived from Switzerland, the first paper was read by Canon Gregory, who argued that the time had come for the Church to legislate for herself by means of a reconstituted Convocation. Disestablishment was deprecated by all the speakers. There was an interesting discussion on the Sunday Question, led off by Archdeacon Hessey, who admitted that the exigencies of society required that some amount of trading and of travelling should be allowed on Sunday, for both the existence and the recreation of the working classes and others. He also advocated the movement for open spaces and recreation grounds, but spoke strongly against the Sunday opening of art galleries and museums. On Friday the "Relations between the Establishment and Nonconformists" were considered, amongst the speakers were Mr. T. Hughes, whose remarks were frequently interrupted with expressions of disapproval. He suggested such a revision of the Prayer Book, especially of the Thirty-Nine Articles and the Rubrics, as would make the Church in fact what she is in name—national. Canon Ryle cautioned his hearers to beware of flirtation with Popery, as tending to keep Nonconformists outside the pale of the Church, and Mr. Beresford Hope said that all flirtation with Miss Rome or Miss Geneva was equally dangerous. The great historic flirtation of James II. was with the Dissenters, and the great opponents of that flirtation were the Seven High Church Bishops, who were sent to the Tower. This was the last day of the Congress, which wound up with a conversazione in the evening, at which the Archbishop of Canterbury made a second address, complimenting the various speakers on the moderate tone which had been preserved. On Saturday Canon Farrar preached in the Parish Church to a large congregation, amongst whom were the Primate, the Bishop of Winchester, Dean Stanley, Archdeacon Emery, and a number of clergymen. He said that the two chief enemies with which the Church had to contend were Infidelity and Intemperance. The one was to be fought, not with the futility of ignorant anathema, nor the assumption of repudiated authority, but by the calmest thought, the purest candour, the deepest learning, and, above all, by blameless lives. The other, that national sin which was making them the helots of the world, should not be met with smooth language, or false compromises, but, if they were honest and resolute, they would seize it by the throat, and wrench away the poison. The Guardian speaks of the Congress as "a great success." The Nonconformist says that "Churchmen may fairly congratulate themselves that, notwithstanding the sharp contrasts presented, and the burning questions discussed, the proceedings throughout were characterised by an amount of good feeling and mutual toleration which these great assemblies have rarely exhibited before;" while the Rock affirms that if "All parties were simply honest there could have been no Congress," and asks why the utterances of men in the Congress Hall should so greatly contrast with their speeches out of it. "Whence then this change of tone? It is due to the laws of Congressional propriety, which override the laws of godliness and truth. There is a virtual, if not an actual, agreement that all the sharp outlines of controversy are to be rounded off—all irritating topics on either side to be avoided, or gently handled; and things are as far as possible to be made pleasant all round."

VARIOUS.—The 38th autumnal meeting of the Congregational Union was opened at Leicester this week, under the presidency of Mr. H. Richard, M.P., about 1,000 delegates being present. The opening sermon was preached on Monday, by the Rev. A. Maclaren, it being the first time that the Association Sermon has been delivered by a minister of another Communion. In the evening there was a public meeting in furtherance of the temperance movement, and on Tuesday the chairman delivered his inaugural speech, the subject of which was the application of Christianity to Politics. He avowed his belief that if all ministers of the Gospel would, with one voice, constantly and courageously preach to the nations the truth of God, and would denounce war as not only costly, cruel, and barbarous, but as essentially and eternally un-Christian, another war would become impossible in Europe. On Wednesday the "Confessional" and several other subjects were discussed, and in the evening a public meeting for working men, and several special services were held. On Thursday, the Rev. Principal Fairbairne read a paper on "How best to meet the un-Christian and anti-Christian teaching of the day," and a lecture on Wycliffe was given by the Rev. Baldwin Brown.—The Floating Church promoted by the Bishop of Lichfield is nearly completed, and will soon be used on the canals within his lordship's diocese. It is built boat-fashion, but is much larger than an ordinary cabin boat, and will comfortably hold eighty persons. It cost between 300*l.* and 400*l.*—Bristol Cathedral, the restoration of which is now nearly complete, is to be opened on the 23rd inst.

LEGAL

THE PENGE MURDER.——A respite having been granted to the whole of the four convicts in this case, it remains to be seen whether they will all be relegated to penal servitude for life, or whether the Home Secretary will allot proportionate punishments to them according to the amount of guilt which he conceives to attach to each. The news of Her Majesty's clemency was communicated to them on Saturday, and they all appeared very thankful and greatly relieved in mind. The public agitation has now taken a new form, that of a demand for a rehearing of the case, as there is a very wide-spread opinion that with the evidence which has cropped up since their trial it would be impossible to obtain a conviction. The present position of affairs is certainly eminently unsatisfactory, and speaks as strongly as facts can speak in favour of the establishment of a regular Court of Criminal Appeal.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.——Mr. Justice Lopes has refused to accede to the application made on behalf of Inspectors Druscovich and Palmer that they should be admitted to bail until the trial at the Central Criminal Court.—The three persons charged with defrauding the Midland Railway Company have been committed for trial. One of them is a brickmaker, of Maryport, near Carlisle, and the others were in the employ of the Company as inspectors of the permanent way. The charge relates to the misappropriation of a large quantity of building materials and the fraudulent employment of workmen and rolling stock.—A Somersetshire farm labourer has been fined 5*s.* and costs for keeping a living Colorado beetle in his house.—Eight summonses have been taken out against the Commercial Gas Company for neglecting to supply gas of the quality required by law. The case is not yet decided, but should the suit go against the Company they will be liable to penalties amounting to 400*l.*—The occupants of the steam-launch which in August last ran down a pleasure boat on the Thames were last week fined for infringing the bye-laws of the Thames Conservancy. The defence was that the accident resulted from the breaking of the rudder chains. The proprietor of the launch was also summoned, but was acquitted because he was not on board at the time.—The proprietors of the Globe are threatened with an action for libel for inserting a letter headed "A Heartless Advertisement," and signed "Etat Major," complaining of the manner in which Mr. Maddox exhibited in his window the coffin lid of the late Mdlle. Titiens.—A curious application was made the other day at Bow Street Police Court by a lady who refused her name and address, but who complained that every night after her first sleep "Algernon Joy" came to her and played draughts upon her. He worried her out of her life, and had been sent to her by Messrs, Maskelyne and Cooke for that purpose. Mr. Vaughan said that he could not interfere, and the poor lady, who is doubtless insane, went away quite disconsolate.—A man named Smith has been committed for trial for forging a cheque. The chief witness against him was his sweetheart, a domestic servant, o whom he had given the cheque to cash, and who, though unable to read, was able to swear to his handwriting in consequence of having received from him many love-letters which she got her mistress to read to her.—The Middlesex Justices are now engaged in attempting to solve the knotty question whether it is illegal for a publican to sell gin diluted with water. Professor Redwood, the analytical chemist, one of the "expert" witnesses, said that if a rectifier should send out gin fifty per cent. under proof he should still call that gin, but if any one else were to do so he should call it gin and water, a statement which not unnaturally was received with "loud laughter."—William Sheppard, aged fourteen, possibly a descendant of the notorious "Jack" of that ilk, is in custody for committing a burglary in Lambeth.—Two cabmen have been sentenced to five years' penal servitude for stealing a quantity of jewellery from a widow lady, who had engaged the vehicle driven by one of them. While on the journey she fell faint, and requested the driver to get her some brandy. Whether this liquor was drugged or not does not appear, but after drinking it she became insensible. The other cabman then got into the cab, and after the robbery had been effected, the two miscreants lifted their victim out and left her in a field on the Harrow Road, where she was subsequently found, still unconscious.—Starvation appears to be growing more and more fashionable since the revelations respecting the Penge murder or "mystery." Mr. Chance, the Lambeth magistrate, is now engaged in investigating a charge brought against two women for illtreating and neglecting to supply food to two infant children who are now in the infirmary, and who appear to have been rescued only just in time to save their lives, at Blairgowrie, near Dundee, an elderly lady has just died under suspicious circumstances, and her sister has been arrested on suspicion; and at Stepney an old woman of ninety has died from "disease of the heart, want of food, and privation," the parish authorities having stopped her allowance of 2*s.* per week because she refused to go into the house.—The Liverpool Post says that the presence in the streets of large numbers of drunken men is creating a new and profitable department of thievish enterprise. Waylaying inebriates is now regarded as an occupation of itself, and several experts have recently fallen into the hands of the police. On Monday two young roughs who had been previously convicted were sentenced to three months' imprisonment upon charges of frequenting the streets for this purpose.—There seems to be urgent need of reform in the hospital regulations regarding the removal of patients. On the 29th ult. a man named Thomas, who appears to have no relations, was admitted to University College Hospital suffering from dropsy and disease of the kidneys. Last week, either in a fit of delirium or bad temper, he spoke offensively to one of the nurses, and threatened to strike her, whereupon the house physician wrote to his former landlord saying that he must at once be removed. This man accordingly went to the hospital, and seeing that the poor fellow was in a dying state protested against his removal, which however was insisted upon, with the result that he died within a quarter of an hour after his arrival at the workhouse infirmary. The coroner's inquiry resulted in a verdict that death was the result of disease accelerated by the removal.—A groom residing at some stables near South Audley Street has been committed for trial for attempting to murder a fellow servant who lodged in the same building. It appears that there had been a quarrel, and the prosecutor having threatened to throw the defendant down stairs was shot at by him with a pistol loaded with powder and small shot. The defence was that the weapon went off accidentally.—John Lynch, the man who murdered his wife by cutting her throat in the streets at Islington, was on Monday executed at Newgate. He died penitent, acknowledging the justice of his sentence.

MUSIC

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.——At the second concert, under the direction of Mr. August Manns, a composer and a virtuoso appeared—both the welcomer because so little known among us. The composer was Herr Max Bruch, a German; the virtuoso was Señor Sarasate, a Spaniard. Both may be said to have gained a fairly legitimate success. Herr Max Bruch, if he had achieved nothing more, is entitled to consideration as the man who had the courage to set to music Geibel's book of Lorelei, written expressly for Mendelssohn, who had a long time previously composed a grand finale, an "Ave Maria," and a "chorus of vintagers," so eminently characteristic that to say the art-world, through his early and lamented death, has been deprived of another masterpiece is no more than to say the bare truth. Mendelssohn, however, having left us an incomplete work, it was natural that some other musician of standing and repute should ask himself why the libretto of a poet so highly esteemed as Geibel should be consigned to the shelf? That musician is Herr Max Bruch, from whose opera, Lorelei, the Vorspiel (orchestral prelude) was played, and admirably played, under the composer's own direction, on Saturday. Anything more weak and colourless could hardly be imagined. We could not detect in it one original idea, indeed, anything above flat and smoothly developed commonplace; and we sincerely believe that more than one young student in our Royal Academy of Music—not to name the Shakespeares, Winghams, &c.—would have contrived to produce a much better, more poetical, and more significant introduction than this. Herr Bruch's violin concerto in G minor and major is so well known here, through the remarkable performances of Joseph Joachim, that there is little to say about it—even if it contained (which it hardly does) anything to suggest a new idea. The concerto, however, brought forth Señor Sarasate, a really accomplished virtuoso (the term must be accepted for want of a better). The playing of this gentleman is in some respects of more than ordinary excellence. His mechanism is prodigious—no less emphatic epithet can be applied. At the same time certain inequalities of tone, certain irregularities of phrasing, and a prevalent overstraining of "sentiment"—as, for example, in the reading of the middle movement, sentimental enough in itself, without demanding any ardent striving on the part of the interpreter. Beyond these defects, and a somewhat too prevalent use of the "tremolo" (as again in the cited andante) we have only unqualified eulogy for the playing of Señor Sarasate. In his early youth Señor Sarasate was hailed as a boy-wonder—a Charles Filtsch, a future Joachim, but these expectations have not been precisely realised. In three movements from a Suite by the apparently exhaustless Joachim Raff—a "show-piece" at the best—the Spanish violinist afforded fresh proofs of his astonishing facility, especially in the execution of rapid movements ("prestissimos"), which he occasionally seems, to speak with deference, to play "quicker than possible," though not always with the desired accuracy. We are not cognisant of how many more "numbers" Herr Raff's Suite may consist; but judging by those we heard, three were more than sufficient. One might fancy that Herr Raff was a descendant of Lachesis, the coiler of the Parcæ, so many, and so long, are the threads he spins out. Cherubini's bright and effective overture to Anacreon; Haydn's B flat symphony—one of the finest of the Salomon set of twelve; and Mendelssohn's overture, The Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, a veritable "tone-poem," "tone-picture" (or whatever else it may be styled), if there ever was one, were the orchestral pieces—all played in perfection. Madame Nouvès and Mr. Barton M'Guckin (one of the youngest and most promising tenors of the day), were the solo vocalists. The third concert (to-day), comprising an unknown symphony by Schubert, a new orchestral piece by M. Saint Saens, and Sterndale Bennett's beautiful overture, Parisina, together with Mendelssohn's violin concert, played by Señor Sarasate, can hardly fail to be one of special interest.

◆

A MIRACULOUS MAD-STONE, warranted to prevent hydrophobia, is owned by a Kentucky farmer. The stone was bought from an Italian, who had brought it from Switzerland, and has cured fifty-nine dangerous bites in twenty-three years. It is a porous stone, something like bone, but much harder, weighs about 2 oz., and is 1 in. thick by 1½ in. long. When applied to a wound it adheres tightly until it has absorbed all the poison, and after being soaked in warm milk and water is again ready for use.

New Music

W. CZERNY.——Of more than ordinary merit, and replete with devotional feeling, is a sacred song, "Thy Gates are Opening" (Crucifixus), the music by J. Faure, words by J. Finlayson; the compass is from C below the lines to E on the fourth space.—But little inferior to the above is "An Angel Passed By," a popular Russian song, composed by N. B. Varlamov, the words translated from Lermontoff's poem by C. E. Marr. These two songs should be added to the repertoire of all mezzo-soprani who care to contribute their share to the enjoyment of a Sunday evening at home.—Two (as far as we know) new aspirants to fame have made a very successful début in a song entitled "Sunset" (Tutto e Pace), the English and Italian words written by Beatrice Ley, music by J. Hart Gordon.—W. Czerny has tastefully transcribed for the pianoforte and violin, "Un Petit Bijou, Fragment Musical, de L. Van Beethoven."—From so gifted a pianiste as Henry Ketten we are apt to expect something super-excellent as a composer, and are therefore disappointed to meet with two such mediocre compositions as "Sarabande pour le Pianoforte," and "Petite Marche Italienne," from his pen.—As a pianoforte piece, "Sweet Remembrances" (Erinnerungen), waltzes, by Eduard Kremser, are passably good, but dancers would condemn the constant breaks and changes in the time as halting and fidgety in the extreme.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER, AND CO.——Part 36, Vol. V., of The Organist's Quarterly Journal, commences with a melodious "Andante Espressivo," by James Stimpson; a spirited "Allemande," by F. Archer, calculated to show off a good organ, when manipulated by the composer thereof, comes second on the list; this is followed by a brief "Andante" by Dr. J. V. Roberts; a "Postlude," by W. H. Wale, Mus. Bac., Oxon.; a brilliant march, by W. A. Cruickshank, which is a clever work of a very Mendelssohnic type; and finally we have a charming "Andante Grazioso," by George Smith.—Decidedly uncommon, both as regards music and poetry, is "A Leave Taking," a song for a tenor or soprano; the words, by Algernon C. Swinburne, are vague and mysterious, the music, by Charles Salaman, agrees with its theme; those persons who can understand it will appreciate this composition.

MESSRS. WOOD AND CO.——There is something very taking in a dialect song well sung; a soprano who will take some pains to study her words may produce an excellent effect with "My Sailor Laddie," a Scottish ballad, written and composed by William Crawford.—By the composer of this successful ballad is "Forest Fairy," a polka facile, of the most commonplace description.—"Au Revoir" (Reverie), for the pianoforte, by T. Liebich, will be asked for again and again.

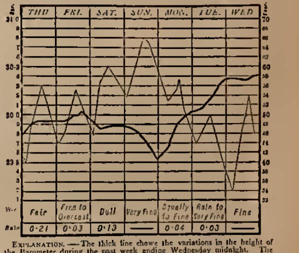
MESSRS. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, AND CO.——A useful study for steady practice is an "Allegro con Forza" (in B flat minor) for the pianoforte, by F. Westlake.—A tenor with a sweet voice and a cultivated taste cannot fail to make a hit with a song, "Beloved, it is Morn;" the poetry, by E. H. Hickey, is refined, the music, by H. A. Rudall, is very original.

MESSRS. SCHOTT AND CO.——The "Andante 3me Quintuor" (en ut mineur), of W. A. Mozart, has been faithfully transcribed for the violin, with pianoforte accompaniment, by G. Haddock, who has done equally well with the "Celebrated Minuet," by L. Boccherini, of which musical transcribers seem never to tire; these two duets are well calculated for the home circle during the long winter evenings.

◆

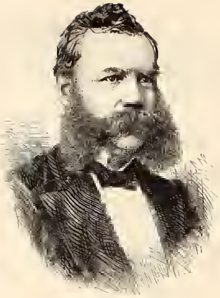
WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

OCTOBER 11TH TO OCTOBER 17TH (INCLUSIVE)

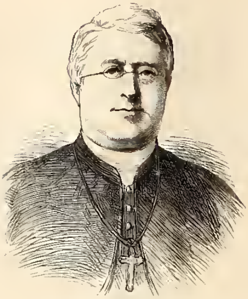


EXPLANATION.——The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

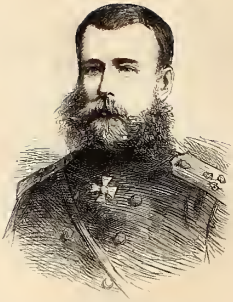
REMARKS.——Pressure has been very unsteady during this period. On the first few days the oscillations were comparatively slight, owing to barometrical disturbances which passed well to the westward and northward; but on Sunday, the 14th instant, a very quick fall occurred, lasting until midnight, occasioned by an exceedingly deep depression advancing on our coasts. As it passed away the barometer rose as quickly as it had fallen, the increase lasting until Wednesday, the 17th instant, when the mercury became almost steady, but rising slightly. Wind has varied considerably; on Thursday and Friday, the 11th and 12th, it was generally westerly and light in force; on Saturday, the 13th, however, it had backed to south-west and increased to a fresh breeze; this had fallen light again by Sunday morning, the 14th instant; but by six p.m. the same day it had risen again to a fresh breeze, and early on Monday morning, the 15th instant, it blew a hard gale. During Monday and Tuesday, the 15th and 16th, it was light from west again, and on Wednesday, the 17th instant, north-westerly. Temperature has changed very much. On the first few days the range was not very great; but on Sunday, the 14th instant, exceptionally hot weather was experienced, the thermometer not falling below 54° during the whole day, while in the afternoon it rose as high as 66°. Since then a steady decrease in the heat has been in progress, and on Wednesday morning, the 17th instant, 34° was registered in the shade. Weather was fine on Thursday and Friday, the 11th and 12th; but on Friday night, the 12th instant, the sky became overcast, and continued so until Sunday morning, the 14th instant, when it cleared, and exceedingly fine weather prevailed all day. Since that time it has been fair, but rather unsettled. The barometer was highest (30·41 inches) on Wednesday, the 17th instant; lowest (29·52 inches) on Sunday, the 14th instant; range, 0·89 inches. The thermometer was highest (66°) on Sunday, the 14th instant, lowest (34°) on Wednesday, the 17th instant; range, 32°. Rain has fallen on five days, the total being 0·44 inches; a dense fog and sharp frost on Thursday morning ushered in a brilliant day.



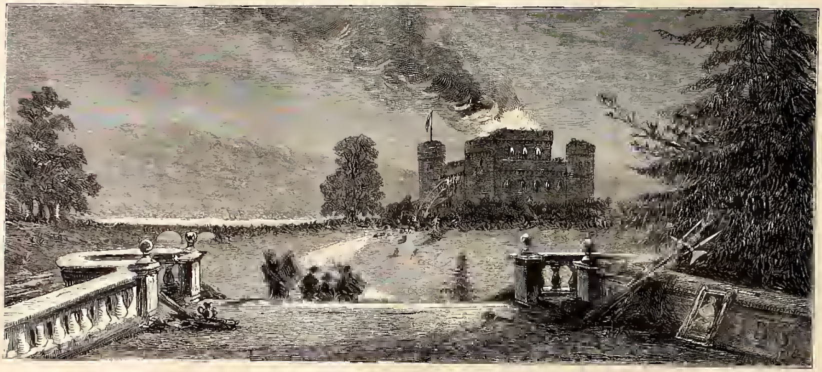
MR. ANDREAS STOCKENSTRÖM
New Attorney-General of Cape Colony



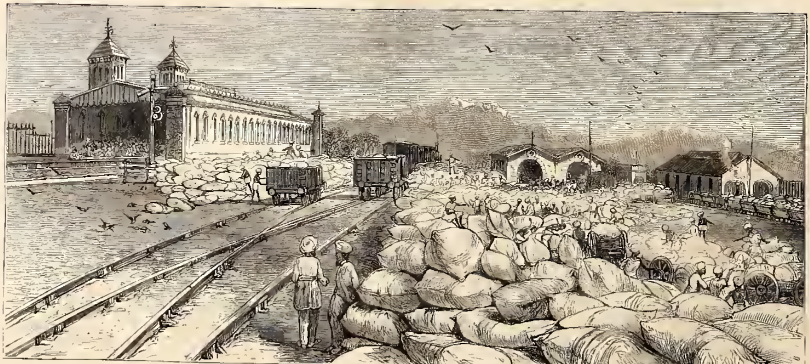
THE RIGHT REV. DR. DAVID MORIARTY, ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF KERRY
Died Oct. 1, aged 63



GENERAL SKOBELEFF
One of the Leaders at Plevna



THE RECENT FIRE AT INVERARY CASTLE



THE FAMINE IN INDIA—DEPÔT OF GRAIN AT THE RAILWAY STATION, BELLARY, MADRAS PRESIDENCY

BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XV.

LA VIE DE PROVINCE

THE twenty-fourth of May was not only the Queen's birthday, and therefore kept a holiday in the port, with infinite official rejoicings and expenditure of powder, but also Celia's as well. On that account it was set apart for one of the Tyrrells' four annual dinner parties, and was treated as a Church festival or fast day. This was the period of early Christianity, when any ecclesiastical days, whether of sorrowful or joyful commemoration, were marked by a better dinner than usual, and the presence of wine. On Ash Wednesday and Good Friday we had salt fish, followed, at the Tyrrells', by a sumptuous repast, graced by the presence of a few guests, and illustrated, so to speak, by a generous flow of port, of which every respectable Briton then kept a cellar, carefully labelled and laid down years before. The novus homo in a provincial town might parade his plate, his dinner service, his champagne—then reckoned a very ostentatious wine. He might affect singularity by preferring claret to port, and he might even invite his guests to drink of strange and unknown wines, such as Sauterne, Bucellas, Lisbon, or even Hock. But one thing he could not do: he could not boast of his old cellar, because everybody would know that he had bought it. Mr. Tyrrell was conscious of this, and being himself a novus homo he evaded the difficulty by referring his wine to the cellar of Mr. Pontifex, the husband of Mrs. Tyrrell's aunt. Now Mr. Pontifex was a man of good county family, and his port, laid down by his father before him, was not to be gainsaid by the most severe critic. Criticism, in our town, neglecting Literature and the Fine Arts, confined itself to Port in the first instance, municipal affairs in the second, and politics in the third. As the two latter subjects ran in well-known grooves it is obvious that the only scope for original thought lay in the direction of Port. Round this subject were grouped the choicest anecdotes, the sweetest flowers of fancy, the deepest yearnings of the Over-soul. A few houses were rivals in the matter of Port. The Rev. Mr. Broughton, our old tutor, was acknowledged to have some '34 beyond all praise, but as he gave few dinner parties, on the score of poverty, there were not many who could boast of having tasted it. Little Dr. Roy had a small cellar brought from Newfoundland or New Brunswick, whither, as everybody knows, the Portugal trade carries yearly a small quantity of finer wine than ever comes to the London market. The Rev. John Pontifex inherited, as I have already said, a cellar by which Mr. Tyrrell was the principal gainer. There were two or three retired officers who had made good use of their opportunities on the Rock and elsewhere. And the rest were nowhere. As Mr. Broughton said, after an evening out of the "best" set, that is, the set who had cellars worth considering, the fluid was Lamentable. Good or bad, the allowance for every guest at dinner was liberal, amounting to about a bottle and a half a head, though seasoned topers might take more. It was Port, with rum and water, which produced those extraordinary noses which I remember in my childhood. There was the nose garnished like Bardolph's with red blossoms; there was the large nose, swollen in all its length; there was the nose with the great red protuberance, waggling as the wearer walked, or agitated by the summer breeze; and there was the nose which paled while it grew, carrying in its general appearance, not a full-voiced song and pæan of rum, like its brothers of the ruddy blossom and the ruby blob, but a gentle suspicion of long evening drinks and morning drams. Some men run to weight as they grow old; some dry up. It is matter of temperament. So some of those old topers ran to red and swollen nose, rubicund of colour and bright with many a blossom; while some ran to a pallid hue and shrunken dimensions. It is true that these were old stagers,—the scanty remnant of a generation most of whom were long since tucked up in bed and fallen sound asleep. The younger men—of George Tyrrell's stamp—were more moderate. A simple bottle of Port after dinner generally sufficed for their modest wants; and they did not drink rum at all. The Captain, for his part, took his rations regularly: a glass of port every day, and two on Sunday; a tumbler of grog every night and two on Sunday. To Sundays, as a good Churchman, he added, of course, the feasts and festivals of the Church.

Let us return to these occasions.

On Good Friday, it was—it is still, I believe—de rigueur to make yourself ill by eating Hot Cross Buns, which were sold in the streets to the tune of a simple ditty, sung by the vendors. On Whit Sunday, who so poor as not to have gooseberry-pie, unless the season was very backward? Lamb came in with Easter, and added its attractions to heighten the spiritual joy of the season. Easter eggs were not yet invented; but everybody put on something new for the day. The asceticism of Lent had no terrors for those who, like ourselves, began it with more than the customary feasting, conducted it without any additional services, broke its gloom by Mothering Sunday, and ended it by two feasts, separated by one day only. The hungriest Christian faced its terrors with cheek unblanched and lips firm; he came out of it no thinner than he went in; as for the spiritual use he made of that season, it was a matter for his conscience to determine, not for me to resolve. We marked its presence in Church by draping the pulpit, reading desk, and clerk's desk with black velvet, instead of red. The Rev. Mr. Broughton always explained the bearings of Lent according to the ordinances of the Church, and explained very carefully that fasting, in our climate, and in high northern latitudes, was to be taken in a spiritual, not a carnal sense. It was never meant, he said, that Heaven's gifts were to be neglected, whatever the season might be. Nor was it intended by Providence, in the great Christian scheme, that we were to endanger the health of the body by excessive abstinence. This good shepherd preached what he practised, and practised what he preached. During Lent the hymns, until I became organist, were taken more slowly than at other seasons, so that it was a great time for the old ladies on the triangular brackets. The Captain, who had an undeveloped ear for music, said that caterwauling was not singing praises, but it was only fair to let every one have his watch, turn and turn about, and that if the commanding officer—meaning Mr. Broughton—allowed it, we had to put up with it. But he gave out the "tools" with an air of pitiful resignation. On Trinity Sunday, Mr. Broughton, in a discourse of twenty minutes, confronted the Unbeliever, and talked him down with such an array of argument that when the benediction came there was nothing left of him. It is curious that whenever I, which is once a year, read that splendid encounter between Greatheart and Apollyon, I always think of Mr. Broughton and Trinity Sunday. When Apollyon was quite worsted and we were dismissed, we went home to a sort of Great Grand Day dinner, a Gaudy, a City Feast, a Commemoration Banquet, to which all other Christian Festivals, except Christmas, were mere trifles. For on Trinity Sunday, except when east winds were more protracted than usual, there were salmon, lamb, peas, duckling, early gooseberries and asparagus.

From Trinity Sunday to Advent was a long stretch, unmarked by any occasion of feasting. I used to wonder why the Church had invented nothing to fill up that space, and I commiserated the hard lot of Dissenters, to whom their religion gave no times for feasting.

The influence of custom hedged round the whole of life for us. It even regulated the amount of our hospitalities. Things were expected of people in a certain position. The Tyrrells, for instance, could hardly do less than give four dinner-parties in the year. Others not in so good a position might maintain their social rank with two. Retired officers were not expected to show any hospitality at all. To be sure this concession was necessary unless the poor fellows, who generally had large and hungry families, were allowed to entertain, after the manner of Augustus Brambler, on bread and cheese. Mrs. Pontifex, again, who had very decided Christian views, but was of good county family, admitted her responsibilities by offering one annual banquet of the more severe order. A bachelor, like Mr. Verney Broughton, was exempt from this social tax. He gave very few dinners. To make up for this, he would ask one man at a time, and set before him such a reminiscence of Oriel in a solid dinner, with a bottle of crusted port after it, as to make that guest dissatisfied with his wife's catering for a month to come.

The guests were divided into sets, with no regard for their special fitness or individual likings, but simply in accordance with their recognised social status. The advantage of this arrangement was that you knew beforehand whom you would meet, and what would be talked about. I knew all the sets, because at most of their entertainments I was a guest, and at some a mere umbra, invited as ami de famille who would play and sing after dinner. On these occasions my profession was supposed to be merged in the more creditable fact of my illustrious birth. When strangers came I never failed to overhear the whisper, after the introduction, "Count Pulaski in Poland, but refuses to bear the title in England. Of very high Polish family." One gets used to most things in time. Mr. Tyrrell divided his dinner guests into four sets. In October we had lawyers, one or two doctors, perhaps a clergyman, and their wives. At the summer feast (which was the most important, and was fixed with reference to the full moon for convenience of driving home) there were the important clients, who came in great state, in their own carriages. In February we entertained a humbler class of townspeople, who were also clients. And in December we generally entertained the Mayor and officers of the borough, a thing due to Mr. Tyrrell's connection with the Municipality. The May banquet was wholly of a domestic character. The dinners were solid and heavy, beginning early and lasting an immense time. After dinner the men sat for an hour or two consuming large quantities of port. "If this," Celia used to say, "is Society, I think, Laddy, that I prefer Solitude." She and I used to sing and play duets together, after dinner, occasionally giving way to any young lady who expected to be asked to sing. The songs of the day were not bad, but they lasted too long. It is more than possible to tire, in the course of years, of such a melody as "Isle of Beauty" or "Love Not," (a very exasperating piece of long drawn music), or the "Sweet Young Page," a sentimentally beautiful thing; the men, some of whom had red faces after the port, mostly hung about the doors together, while the ladies affected great delight in turning over old albums and well-known portfolios of prints. Photographs began to appear in some provincial drawing-rooms in the early fifties, but they were not yet well-established. It was a transition period. Keepsakes and Books of Beauty were hardly yet out of fashion, while portrait albums were only just beginning. Daguerreotypes, things which, regarded from all but one point of view, showed a pair of spectral eyes and nothing else, lay on the table in red leather cases. Mural decoration was an art yet in its infancy, and there must have been, now one comes to think of it, truly Awful things to be witnessed in the shape of vases, jars, and ornamented mantel-shelves: the curtains, the carpets, the chairs, and the sofas were in colours not to be reconciled on any principle of Art. And I doubt very much whether we should like, now, the fashion in which young ladies wore their hair, dressed their sleeves, and arranged their skirts. Fashion is the most wonderful of all human vanities; and the most remarkable thing about it is that whether a pretty girl disguises herself in Queen Anne's hoops, Elizabethan petticoats, immense Pompadour coiffure, Victorian crinoline, or Republican scantiness, whether she puts patches and paint on her cheek, whether she runs great rings through her nose, whether she wears a coal-scuttle for a bonnet, as thirty years ago, or an umbrella for a hat, as last year, whether she displays her figure as this year, or hides it altogether as fifteen years ago, whether she walks as Nature meant her to walk or affects a stoop, whether she pretends in the matter of hair and waist, or whether she is content with what the gods have given her—she cannot, she may not, succeed in destroying her beauty. Under every disguise the face and figure of a lovely woman are as charming, as bewitching, as captivating, as under any other. When it comes to young women who are not pretty—but, perhaps, as the large-hearted Frenchman said,—il n'y en a pas—there are no young women who are not pretty.

"Three-bottle men, were you?" said Dr. Roy

We were, then, ignorant of Art in my young days. Art in provincial towns as commonly understood did not exist at all. To be sure, we had an Art speciality of which we might have been proud. There was no place in the world which could or did turn out more splendid ships' figure heads. There was one old gentleman in particular, a genius in figure-head carving, who had his studio in the Dockyard, and furnished Her Majesty's Navy with bows, decorated in so magnificent a style, that one who, like me, remembers them, is fain to weep in only looking at the figure-headless ironclads of the present degenerate days.

As for conversation after dinner, there was not much between the younger men and the ladies, because really there was hardly anything to talk about except one's neighbours. In London, probably, people talked much as they do now, but in a country town, as yet unexplored by Mudie or Smith, there could be very few topics of common interest between a young man and a girl. The Great Exhibition of 1851 did one great service for country people; it taught them how easy it is to get to London, and what a mine of wealth, especially for after memory and purposes of conversation, exists in that big place. But remember that five-and-twenty years ago, in the family circle of a country town, there were no periodical visits to town, no holidays on the Continent, no new books, no monthly magazines; even illustrated newspapers were rarely seen; there was no love of Art or talk of artistic principles, or Art schools; there were no choral societies, no musical services; no croquet, or Badminton, or lawn tennis. And yet people were happy. Celia's social circle was too limited to make her feel the want of topics of conversation with young men. No young man except myself was ever invited to the house, and of course I hardly counted. When the formal dinner parties were held, the guests at these banquets were principally old and middle-aged people. At our birthday dinner only the very intimate friends and relations were invited. Mr. Tyrrell had no relations; or at least we never heard of them, but his wife was well connected; the Pontifexes are known to be a good old county family, and Mrs. Pontifex, Mrs. Tyrrell's aunt, often asserted the claims of her own ancestry, who were Toplingtons, to be of equal rank with her husband's better known line.

Of course, the Pontifexes always came to the dinners.

Mrs. Pontifex—Aunt Jane—was fifteen years older than her husband, and at this time, I suppose, about sixty-five years of age. She was small in person, but upright and gaunt beyond her inches. It is a mistake to suppose—I learned this from considering Mrs. Pontifex as a Leading Case—that gauntness necessarily implies a tall stature. Not at all. "If," I said to Cis one day, "if you were to wear, as Aunt Jane wears, a cap of severely Puritanic aspect, decorated with a few flowers which might have grown in a cemetery; if you were to arrange your hair, as she arranges it, in a double row, stiff curls, set horizontally on each side of her face; if you were to sit bolt upright, with your elbows square, as if you were always in a pew; if you were to keep the corners of your lips down—as Aunt Jane does—so—Cis—why even you would be gaunt. John of Gaunt, so called because he resembled Aunt Jane, was, I believe, a man under the middle height."

She married the Rev. John Pontifex, or rather they married each other, chiefly for money. They both had excellent incomes which united made a large income; they were both desperately careful and saving people; they held similar views on religious matters (they were severe views), and I suppose that Aunt Jane had long learned to rule John Pontifex when she invited him—even Cis used to agree that he would never have invited her—to become her husband.

Mr. Pontifex was a man of lofty but not commanding stature. Another mistake of novelists and people who write. You have not necessarily a commanding stature because you are tall. No one could have seen anything commanding in Mr. John Pontifex. He was six feet two in height, and, although by nature austere, he looked as meek as if he had been only five feet; the poor man, indeed, never had the chance of looking anything but meek; he had a pale face and smooth cheeks, with thin brown hair, a little grey and "gone off" at the temples. His features were made remarkable by a very long upper lip, which gave him a mutton-like expression as of great meekness coupled with some obstinacy. In fact, she who drove John Pontifex had at times to study the art of humouring her victim. Since his marriage he had retired from active pastoral work, and now passed his time in the critical observation of other men at work in his own field. He held views of the most Evangelical type, and when he preached at St. Faith's we received without any compromise the exact truth as regards future prospects. He spoke very slowly, bringing out his nouns in capitals, as it were, and involved his sentences with parentheses. But in the presence of his wife he spoke seldom, because she always interrupted him. He was fond of me, and, for some reason of his own, always called me Johnny.

In strong contrast with his clerical brother was the Perpetual Curate of St. Faith's, my old tutor, Mr. Verney Broughton. The latter was as plump, as rosy, as jolly, as the former was thin, tall, and austere. Calvin could not have looked on the world's follies with a more unforgiving countenance than the Rev. John Pontifex; Friar John could hardly have regarded the worldliness of the world with more benignity than the Rev. Verney Broughton. He was a kind-hearted man, and loved the world, with the men, women, and children upon it; he was a scholar and a student, consequently he loved the good things that had been written, said, and sung upon it; he was a gourmand, and he liked to enjoy the fruits of the earth in due season. Perhaps he loved the world too much for a Christian minister; at all events he enjoyed it as much as he could; never disguised his enjoyment, and inculcated both in life and preaching a perfect trust in the goodness of God, deep thankfulness for the gifts of eating and drinking, and reliance on the ordinances of the Church. Mr. Pontifex amused him; they were close companions, which added to the pleasures of life; and he entertained, I should say, dislike for no man in the world except Herr Räumer, whom he could not be brought to admire.

"He is a cynic," he would say. "That school has never attracted my admiration. He delights in the double entendre, and is never so much pleased as when he conveys a hidden sneer. I do not like that kind of conversation. Give me honest enthusiasm, admiration, and faith. And I prefer Englishmen, Ladislas, my boy, though you are only an Englishman by adoption."

CHAPTER XVI.

A DINNER PARTY

THERE were several other people who entertained similar views with regard to Herr Räumer. Mrs. Pontifex disliked him excessively for one. Everybody began with distrust of this man; then they grew to tolerate him; some went on to like him; all ended with cordial hatred—it would be hard to say why. His eyes, without the blue spectacles, which he put off indoors, were singularly bright, though rather small. He had a way of turning their light full on to a speaker without speaking, which was as embarrassing a commentary on what you had just said as you can imagine. It conveyed to yourself, and to everybody else, which was even more humiliating, the idea that you were really, to this gentleman's surprise, even a greater fool than you looked. Perhaps that was one reason why he was so much disliked.

You noticed, too, after a time, that he saw everything, heard everything, and remembered everything. When he spoke about his personal reminiscences, he showed an astonishing recollections of detail as if he preserved photographs of places and persons in his mind.

He was always about Mr. Tyrrell's office, and kept there a fire-proof safe, with his name painted on it in white letters. He carried the key in his own pocket. Of course I knew nothing of the nature of his business, but it was generally understood that he was a German who had money, that he chose to live in our town for his own pleasure and convenience, and that he invested his funds by Mr. Tyrrell's help and advice in local securities.

The Captain and little Dr. Roy always made up the party. Everybody liked the little doctor, who stood five feet nothing in his boots, a neat and well-proportioned abridgement of humanity, with a humorous face and a twinkling eye. He was an Irishman; he had been in America; and it was currently reported that if he ventured his foot on Canadian soil he would infallibly be hanged for the part he took in the rebellion of eighteen hundred and forty something. In certain circles he had the reputation of being an Atheist—he was in reality as good a Roman Catholic as ever touched holy water—because he was constantly crying out about bad drainage, and taunting people with the hundreds of lives wantonly thrown away, he said, every year, and struck down by preventible diseases. "As if," the people said, piously, "the issues of life and death were in man's hand." So typhus fever went on, and the town was not drained.

The birthday dinners were all alike, with the same guests. The year went on, and we met on the anniversary to drink Celia's health and talk the same talk. Let me take one of these dinners, the last at which this company met together for this purpose.

The Rev. Mr. Broughton took in Mrs. Tyrrell, so that Celia fell to Mr. Pontifex, and Mrs. Pontifex, of course, took Mr. Tyrrell's arm. The grace was "pronounced" by Mr. Broughton. He was less unctuous over the petition than poor Augustus Brambler, but he threw considerable feeling into the well-known words, and had a rich melodious voice, a fitting prelude to the banquet. Grace said, the benevolent divine surveyed the guests and the table with the eyes of satisfaction, as if he wished it was always feast time.

There were no ménus laid on the table in those days, and you did not know what was coming as you do now. But there was the smell of roast meats which, if you remembered what things belong to the season, was almost as good as a ménu. And the things were put on the table. There were no dinners à la Russe. You saw your food before you. The host carved, too, and very laborious work it was. But it was still reckoned part of a gentleman's education to carve with discretion and skill. I should like to have seen Mr. Broughton's face if he had been compelled to sit in silence during the mangling of a hare. Perhaps, however, he was too much of a martinet, and the exquisite finish with which he distributed a pheasant among half-a-dozen guests, however admirable as a work of Art, pointed to an amount of thought in the direction of dinner beyond what is now expected of the clergy. Mr. Pontifex, on the other hand, was a wretched carver. "I am now more at ease," he would say, "in the Pulpit than in the Place of the Carver, though, in my youth, when I was at Oxford, when, alas, the pleasures of the—ahem—the Table, were in my day placed above the pleasures of the Soul—I was considered expert in the Art of Carving. There was one occasion, I remember—with sorrow—when a Goose was placed upon the board——"

"I wish, Mrs. Tyrrell," interrupted Mr. Broughton—and indeed we had all heard the goose story before; "I wish I could persuade my landlady to give the same thoughtfulness to things as your cook. It is so difficult to make some women understand the vital importance of dinner. I can order the raw materials, but unfortunately I cannot cook them."

Mrs. Pontifex, I saw, sat opposite her husband, who took his dinner under her superintendence. I sat next to that divine, and felt pity for him as a warning or prohibition came across the table, and he had to shake his head in sorrowful refusal.

In his rich, mellow voice, Mr. Broughton, on receiving his fish, remarked, "The third time this year, and only the 24th of May, that I have partaken of salmon. The Lord is very good——"

"No, John Pontifex," said that clergyman's wife loudly, "no salmon for you."

"My dear," he ventured to expostulate feebly, because he was particularly fond of salmon.

"Ladislas Pulaski, who is young, may make himself ill with salmon and cucumber if he likes," said Aunt Jane, "but not you, John Pontifex. Remember the last time."

He sighed, and I took the portion intended for him.

"The Lord is very good," resumed Mr. Broughton, "to nearly all His creatures," as if Pontifex was an exception.

Dr. Roy began to talk of salmon fishing in the Saguenay River, and we were all interested except poor Mr. Pontifex, whose face was set in so deep a gloom that I thought he would have rebelled.

He picked up a little when an entrée of pigeons was allowed to stop at his elbow. But the undisguised enjoyment with which he drank his first glass of champagne brought his wife, who was at that moment talking of a new and very powerful tract, down upon him in a moment.

"No more champagne, John Pontifex," she ordered promptly.

"Another glass for me," cried Mr. Broughton, nodding his head. "A glass of wine with you, Mrs. Pontifex. I am a bachelor, you know, and can do as I like."

It was not manners to refuse, and Aunt Jane raised her glass to her lips icily, while Mr. Broughton drained his with an audible smack. In 1858 we had already, in provincial towns, passed out of the custom of taking wine with each other, but it was still observed by elderly people who liked the friendly fashion of their youth.

I thought this assertion of independence rather cruel to Mr. Pontifex, but it was not for me, belonging, with Celia, to the class of "young people" to say anything at a party unless previously spoken to or questioned. Then Aunt Jane began a talk with Herr Räumer, chiefly about the sins of people. As you came to know this German well, you discovered that, whenever he did talk about people, he had something bad to say of them; also when he spoke of any action, however insignificant, it was to find an unworthy motive for it. Perhaps, however, I am now in that fourth and bad stage mentioned above.

Mr. Tyrrell was silent during the dinner, perhaps because he had to carve industriously and dexterously; he drank wine freely; but he said nothing. Celia noticed her father's taciturnity, and I saw her watching him with anxiety. No one else observed it, and when the first stiffness of ceremony wore off, there began the genial flow of conversation which ought to rejoice the heart of a hostess, because it shows that every one is feeding in content. Mr. Tyrrell, a florid, high-coloured man, who usually talked fast and rather noisily, was looking pale; the nerves of his cheek twitched, and his hand trembled.

When the cloth was removed—I am not certain that the old fashion of wine and dessert on the polished dark mahogany was not better than the present—we all drank Celia's health.

"In bumpers," cried Mr. Broughton, filling up Mrs. Tyrrell's glass and his own to the brim with port. "In bumpers all. And I wish I was a young man again to toast Celia Tyrrell as she should be toasted. Don't you, brother Pontifex? Here is to your beaux yeux, my dear. Some day I will preach a sermon on thankfulness for beauty."

"God bless you, Celia, my child," said her father, with a little emotion in his voice. "Many happy returns of the day, and every one better than the last."

"The best thing," continued Mr. Broughton, "for young girls is a young husband—eh, Mrs. Tyrrell? What do you think?"

"Vanity," said Aunt Jane. "Let them wait and look round them. I was thirty-five when I married my first."

"When I was at Oxford," Mr. Pontifex began, glancing anxiously at his wife; "when I was at Brasenose, Oxford (where I was known, I am ashamed to say, as—as—as Co-rin-thian Pon-ti-fex, on account of the extraordinary levity, even in that assemblage of reckless youths, of my disposition), there were some among us commonly designated as—as—as Three—Bottle—Men!!!" He said this with an air of astonishment, as if it was difficult to credit, and a thing which ought, if printed, to be followed by several notes of admiration. "Three—Bottle—Men! The rule among us was—I regret to say—No—ahem—no Heeltaps."

"John Pontifex!" interposed his wife, severely. "Recollect yourself. No Heeltaps, indeed!"

"My dear, I was about to conclude this sad Reminiscence by remarking that it was a Truly Shocking State of Things."

He spoke in capitals, so to speak, and with impressive slowness.

"When young people are present," said Aunt Jane, "it is well to consider the religious tendency of anecdotes before they are related."

Mr. Pontifex said no more.

"I will tell you, by-and-bye, Pontifex," said the jolly old parson, whose face was a good deal redder than at the commencement of dinner, "I will tell you, when the ladies have left us, some of our experiences in Common Room. Don't be afraid, Mrs. Pontifex, we shall not emulate the deeds of those giants."

"In my house," said Aunt Jane to her niece, reproachfully, "it is one of our Christian privileges not to sit over wine after dinner; we all rise together."

"From a lady's point of view," observed Herr Räumer, "doubtless an admirable practice."

"Not at all admirable," cried the Captain, who had been quiet during dinner. "Why shouldn't we have half-an-hour to ourselves to talk politics and tell yarns, while the ladies talk dress?"

"In my house," said Aunt Jane, "the ladies do not talk dress. We exchange our experiences. It is a Christian privilege."

Dr. Roy uttered a hollow groan, doubtless from sympathy with Mr. Pontifex.

Just then Mrs. Tyrrell sat bolt upright, which was her signal, and the ladies left us.

"Aha!" cried Mr. Broughton, "confess, brother Pontifex, that you do not appreciate all the Christian privileges of your house."

He shook his head solemnly, but he did not smile.

"Three bottle men, were you?" said Dr. Roy. "Gad, sir, I remember at old Trinity, in Dublin, some of us were six bottle men. Not I, though. Nature intended me for a one pint man."

"It is only a German student," said Herr Raumer, "who can hold an indefinite quantity."

"I sincerely hope," said Mr. Pontifex, as he finished his glass, "that things have greatly changed since that time. I remember that the door was generally locked; the key was frequently thrown out of the window, and the—the—Orgie commenced. As I said before, the word was 'No Heeltaps.' It is Awful to reflect upon.—Thank you, Dr. Roy, I will take another glass of Port.—There were times, too, when, in the wantonness of youth, we permitted ourselves the most reckless language over our feasts. On one occasion I did so, myself. The most reckless language. I positively swore. My thoughtless companions, I regret to say, only laughed. They actually laughed. The cause of this—this Iniquity arose over a Goose. It is a truly Dreadful Event to look back upon."

"We used at Oriel," said Mr. Broughton, again interrupting the Goose story without compunction, "to drink about a bottle and a half a head; and we used to talk about Scholarship, Literature, and Art. And some of the men talked well. I wish I could drink a bottle and a half every night now; and I wish I had the Common Room to drink it in. It is a Beautiful Time for me to look back upon."

It was as if he tried in everything to be a contrast to his brother in Orders.

"The rising generation," said Dr. Roy, "who work harder, ride less, smoke more tobacco, and live faster, will have to give up Port and take Claret. After all, it was the favourite Irish wine for a couple of hundred years."

"Ugh!" from Mr. Broughton.

"The longer the Englishman drinks Port," said Herr Raumer, "Port and Beer, the longer be will continue to be—what he is."

As this was said very smoothly and sweetly, with the rasp peculiar to the voice, giving an unpleasant point at the end, I concluded at once that the German meant more than was immediately apparent.

"Thank you, Herr Räumer," said Mr. Broughton, sharply; "I hope we shall continue to remain what we are. The appreciation of your countrymen is always generous. As for Port, I look on that wine as the most perfect of all Heaven's gifts to us poor creatures. This is very fine, Tyrrell. From Pontifex's cellar? Brother Pontifex, you don't ask me to dinner half often enough. Forty-seven? I thought so. Agreeable,"—he held the glass up to the candles: we had wax candles for the dining room—"with little body, but quite enough. Rather dry," he tasted it again. "How superb it will be in twenty years, when some of us shall not be alive to drink it. The taste for Port comes to us by Nature—it is not acquired like that for claret and Rhine wines—pass me the olives, Roy, my dear fellow. It is born with some of us, and is a sacred gift. It brightens youth, adorns manhood, and comforts age. May those of us who are blessed by Providence with a palate use it aright, and may we never drink a worse glass of wine than the present. I remember," he went on sentimentally wagging his head, which was by this time nearly purple all over, "I remember the very first glass of port I ever tasted. My grandfather, the Bishop of Sheffield, gave it to me when I was three years old. 'Learn to like it, boy,' said his lordship, who had the most cultivated palate in the diocese. I did like it from that hour, though, unless my memory fails me, the Bishop's butler had brought up too fruity a wine."

The more port Mr. Broughton consumed the more purple the jolly fat face and bald head became. But no quantity affected his tongue or clouded his brain, so that when we joined the ladies he was as perfectly sober, although coloured like his favourite wine, as Mrs. Pontifex herself, who was making tea.

Mrs. Tyrrell was asleep when we came upstairs, but roused herself to talk with Dr. Roy, who had certainly taken more than the pint for which, as he said, Nature intended his capacity.

Celia was playing, and I joined her, and we played a duet. When we finished I went to ask for a cup of tea.

By the table was standing Mr. Pontifex, a cup in his hand and a look of almost ghastly discomposure on his face, while his wife was forcing an immense slice of muffin upon his unwilling hands.

"Muffin, John Pontifex," she said.

"My dear," he remonstrated with more firmness than one might have expected; "My dear, I—I do not wish for any muffin—ahem."

"It is helped, John Pontifex," said his wife, and leaving the unhappy man to eat it, she turned to me, thanked me sweetly for the duet, and gave me a cup of tea.

Mr. Pontifex retreated behind his wife's chair. As no one was looking I stole a plate from the table, and with great swiftness transferred the muffin from his plate to mine. He looked boundless gratitude, but was afraid to speak, and after a due interval returned the empty plate to the table, even descending so far in deception as to brush away imaginary crumbs from his coat. His wife looked suspiciously at him, but the muffin was gone, and it was impossible to identify that particular piece with one left in another plate. In the course of the evening he seized the opportunity of being near me, and stooped to whisper sorrowfully.

"I do not like muffin, Johnny. I loathe muffin."

The party broke up at eleven, and by a quarter past we were all gone. As I put my hat on in the hall I heard the voice of Herr Räumer in Mr. Tyrrell's office.

"This is the day, Tyrrell. After she was eighteen, remember."

"Have pity on me, Räumer; I cannot do it. Give me another year."

"Pity? Rubbish. Not another week. I am not going to kill the girl. Is the man mad? Is he a fool?"

I hastened away, unwilling to overhear things not intended for me, but the words struck a chill to my heart.

Who was "she?" Could it be Celia? "After she was eighteen"—and this Celia's eighteenth birthday. It was disquieting to hear Mr. Tyrrell asking that white-haired man with the perpetual sneer and the rasp in his voice for pity. Little as I knew of the world, it was clear to me that there would be small chance of pity in that quarter. Herr Räumer and Celia! Why he was sixty years of age, and more; older than Mr. Tyrrell, who was a good deal under fifty. What could he want with a girl of nineteen? It was with a sad heart that I got home that night, and I was sorely tempted to take counsel of the Captain. But I forebore. I would wait and see.

I met Mr. Pontifex next morning. He was going with a basket to execute a few small commissions at the greengrocer's. He acted, indeed, as footman or errand boy, saving the house large sums in wages.

He stopped and shook hands without speaking, as if the memory of the muffin was too much for him. Then he looked as if he had a thing to say which ought to be said, but which he was afraid to say. Finally, he glanced hurriedly up and down the street to see if there was any one within earshot. As there was no one, he laid two fingers on my shoulder, and said in agitated tones, and with more than his usual impressiveness—

"I am particularly partial to salmon, which is, I suppose, the reason why I was allowed none last night. When I married, however, I totally—ahem—surrendered—I regret to say—my independence. Oh! Johnny, Johnny!"

(To be continued)

THE READER

"Trans-Caucasia and Ararat," by James Bryce, D.C.L. (Macmillan and Co.). "When you get away up to Moscow and the interior of our country, you must be prepared to meet with rudeness, perhaps even with insults." So said St. Petersburg friends to Dr. Bryce and his companion when about to start, in the summer of 1876, by way of Nijni Novgorod and the Volga, for Trans-Caucasia and Ararat. But cosmopolitan St. Petersburg did scanty justice to the natural kindliness of the simple Russian towards any stranger, even an Englishman, in 1876, within his gates; nor had the travellers, though helpless at times as non-Russian-speaking folk must be, the slightest reason to complain of their reception. Their route for some of its stages was perhaps more hackneyed than Dr. Bryce appears to think. Few doubtless among holiday tourists choose for their rambles the vast distances of Southern Russia. En revanche, each one who does so writes a book; and so it comes to pass that the windings of the Volga below Nijni, the "change at Saratoff for Tiflis or Astrakhan," the swamps of Poti, and the "one-horse" Trans-Caucasian railway with its one train per diem, have quite a Clapham Junction air of familiarity to those whom choice or fate impels to skim the annual roll of books of travel. Dr. Bryce, however, is no commonplace tourist, nor can his after journey among the wild aborigines and modern settlers of the frozen Caucasus, close to the lines where Ghazi Mukhtar and the Russians confront each other even now, be classed with bits of every-day travelling. But its chief incident—the incident, indeed, of the tourist season for 1876—is the ascent single-handed, his companion being out of training, of Mount Ararat; its most interesting chapters those that tell of the legends that surround the Mount of Noah, of previous ascents by Parrot, Abich, and General Chodzo, and of the wondrous panorama from the summit high above "the repulsive snow-slope," the "broken arrête," the "rocky towers, red, grim, and terrible," that guard its south-eastern approaches. True, the climber must be prepared for disbelief when he comes down. "This Englishman," said Dr. Bryce's interpreter two days later to the Archimandrite of Etchmiadzin, "says he has ascended to the top of Ararat." The venerable man smiled sweetly. "No," he replied, "that cannot be. No one has ever been there. It is impossible." But what is disbelief to one who has been 2,000 feet higher than Mont Blanc, and seen from thence, in a glance, what might well be called "the cradle of the whole human race." Altogether, for genial pleasant description—none the worse for a slightly learned tinge—of the wild ways and races of these mountain lands, and shrewd clever comment—a little but not unreasonably Russophil in tone—on the ambition, resources, and administration of the Muscovite conqueror, Dr. Bryce's volume may fairly be pronounced one of the best books of travel in the Western Caucasus we have had.

"William Blake: Etchings from his Works, by W. Bell Scott, with Descriptive Text" (Chatto and Windus), will enable the many who did not find their way to the Burlington Club Exhibition of last year, and know not the Blake drawings in the Museum, to judge for themselves the merit of a painter, thought in his own days rather odd than great, deified almost in ours by a coterie of passionate admirers. The designs, ten only altogether, from which the etchings are taken, have been excellently chosen, as typical instances of the fancy and invention which characterised Blake above the men of his time, while free from the wild mystery and extravagance which make so many of his works unintelligible without a key. Whether all even of these will commend themselves at once to the uneducated eye—whether the "Nativity," for instance, and the "Creation of Eve," will be unhesitatingly accepted as inventions, in Mr. Scott's phrase, "really resembling revelations," by the plain taste which will readily acknowledge the sublimity of the conception of the "Flood" or the grave beauty of the angel in the "St. Matthew," is a question which we would rather not decide. Of the excellence of the etchings and the general opportuneness of the book there can be, happily, no possible doubt.

"Memorials of Charlotte Williams-Wynn," edited by her sister (Longmans, Green, and Co.), bring before us one of those fair and tranquil lives which seem, while hardly giving in themselves the impression of distinguished talent, to attract to them by some subtle charm the noblest and most gifted of their contemporaries. Born in 1807, the eldest daughter of the Right Hon. Charles Watkins Williams-Wynn, the friend of Heber and of Southey; thrown at a very early age into the society of men of note, of Hallam, Mackintosh, Sydney Smith, &c.; brought somewhat later on, yet still much earlier than most of her countrywomen, into close contact with German Rationalism; the friend, almost the disciple, till her death, of F. D. Maurice, Charlotte Wynn moved through life, a learned lady without a touch of the blue-stocking, a Christian liberal to the extreme of breadth, yet with no laxness for all that in her grasp of the essentials of belief. Her letters—very many of them addressed to Varnhagen von Ense, the husband of that Rahel, of whom, in some ways, she seems to remind us—are often most interesting, above all those which describe the state of France at the Coup d'État—the general demoralisation which alone made the crime of December possible, and to some minds, to Montalembert's among others, even pardonable; the want of any common bond between the chiefs of parties; the real smallness, even in his hour of triumph, of the President. Still more, however, is there, as we go on, of philosophic than of political reflection in her letters—we hardly think she was quite en rapport with the new politics of '63 and '66—mingled with many pretty descriptions of the French, Swiss, and Italian towns to which failing health more or less impelled her to resort. A volume in fine which one reads with a certain aisance, an almost physical sense of contentment, as though with good company in a stately mansion.

"Shooting, Yachting, and Sea-fishing Trips" (2 vols.: Chapman and Hall),—a second series of "Wild-fowler's" piquant sketches of sport with rod and gun by land and water, or in that doubtful region between the two, the happy hunting-ground of the amphibious duck-shooter—is quite a book for the scanty library of a yacht-cabin or a country shooting-box. Addressed par excellence to the thorough-going lover of sport, the man who can find perfect happiness, let us say, in shooting seagulls all a November afternoon between the grey sea and the greyish-green pastures of the Sussex coast, or in hauling up conger and skate, with here and there a brill, off Bognor rocks till every finger is fairly frozen, it will tell him of fifty different places between the Tees and the Channel Islands where these and similar pleasures may be enjoyed at will, and put him up as well to sundry "wrinkles" on the score of nets and tackle, build of guns, and filling of cartridges. At the same time it is sufficiently well written to be decidedly amusing even to the general reader.

"Hunting, Shooting, and Fishing," on the other hand (S. Low and Co.)—reprints, if we remember rightly, from some of our lighter magazines—is sporting fiction pure and simple, gay tales of steeplechases in the Emerald Isle, of adventures of would-be sportsmen (innocent novices or false impostors), of Cockney Highlanders, of inexperienced horse-buyers. But this, too, is a fairly amusing volume, though in a vein that has been somewhat overworked.

That the English nation are descendants of Ephraim and the true representatives of the Lost Tribes of Israel, although a theory that has been more than once advanced, has not yet, we believe, found general acceptance. In "The Covenant; or, Jacob's Heritage" (W. H. Guest), Mr. F. C. Danvers endeavours to prove it to demonstration by a comparison one by one of the prophecies which declare that Israel shall increase and multiply, be scattered over the isles of the sea, and have authority over nations, with the Blue Books showing that England, with her colonies, best answers this description, to say nothing of such minor evidence as the use of the bull, lion, and unicorn—symbols of Israel and Judah—as national emblems, and the crowning of our kings since the First Edward, on the "Jacob's Pillow," the miraculous Stone of Scone. But Mr. Danvers is good enough to add that possibly others of the Teutonic races may be collaterally descended from the Patriarchs, though we fear the case is a little hard for the Ancient Briton and the Irish Celt.

More curious again than either interesting or profitable is the "Survival, with an Apology for Scepticism" (Remington and Co.), or the diary of one whom the existence of evil in the world, the problems of conscious and unconscious cerebration, the difficulty of reconciling will and instinct, nobleness and humility, have driven to and fro on a troubled course of thought, in which a strained and nervous disregard of self is almost the only aim distinctly visible. It is hard to imagine any one being either the wiser or the better for its perusal.

A new edition after many years of "Sacred Streams," by P. H. Gosse (Hodder and Stoughton), or "The Ancient and Modern History of the Rivers of the Bible," deserves mention as a book of pleasant yet suitable Sunday reading.

◆

COFFEE CULTIVATION IN GUATEMALA

The plantation of Las Nubes is the most celebrated in Guatemala, and is owned by Mr. William Nelson, a Scotchman by birth, and citizen of the United States by adoption. The plantation has about a million and a half of trees in various stages of growth, and during the season of picking employs from two to three hundred hands. Picking at this elevation usually commences in September, or towards the close of the rainy season.

A coffee plantation is a very beautiful sight. The leaves of the plant are a brilliant green, the young ones being light, and growing darker as they get older. The flower somewhat resembles a jasmine, and emits a most agreeable perfume, more pleasant even than the scent of an orange grove. The berries are, when ripe, about the size and colour of a small dark red cherry, and surrounded with a similar "pulp." The trees are usually planted about five or six feet apart.

At Las Nubes, the temperature being cool, the Indians usually go fully clothed. During picking the scene is very animated. The pulp of the full ripe berry being very sweet, when the picker alights upon an extra large one it is usually placed in the mouth before being thrown into the basket, and thus the pulping machine is lightened of its labours, sometimes to a considerable extent. At Las Nubes the old methods of preparing the coffee have been superseded to a great extent by machinery driven by water-power. The extent of this plantation is about four square miles, and from 250,000 to 300,000 young trees are transplanted every year.

Although Guatemala is a republic, the Government is in effect despotic; and the Indians, though nominally free, are really slaves attached to the plantation. This anomaly is caused by the universal system of the Indians drawing pay in advance for work to be performed. They always insist on being in the planter's debt, and consequently are prohibited by law from working upon any other plantation until the debt is cancelled. Each plantation of any extent employs a detective to hunt up runaways, who, unless they elect to return to their plantation labours, are set to work in the chain-gang, making and repairing roads. This punishment, however, is limited to one month; but should an offender on its expiration still persist in declining to return to work, he is sentenced to another month, and so on. After a month or two the most refractory usually decide to return.

In some districts no seed is planted, but the young coffee plant is reared from the stray berries that fall from the trees; in others the berries are planted; and in the lower elevations (as shown in our second sketch) little sun-guards are erected, thatched with a light covering of reeds, to protect the infant plant from the sun. Weeds grow apace in the tropics, and the hoe is in constant requisition to prevent the young plants from being choked.

When the young plant is about two years old—sometimes less—it is transplanted to the spot where it is expected permanently to thrive. It begins to bear berries in its fifth year, and bears profitably for another ten or twelve years. It is best then either to cut it down, and let another tree spring therefrom, or to root it out altogether.

The average produce in Guatemala is not above 1 lb. per tree, but the full-grown specimen in our fourth picture, which was about sixteen feet high, was estimated to yield 8 lb. of coffee.

In the earlier days of coffee cultivation in Guatemala it was supposed that the best berries were those produced at a low elevation, but Mr. Nelson proved that with proper cultivation, and a due selection of locality and soil, coffee of a far superior flavour could be produced on much higher ground, say from 800 to 1,500 feet above the sea.

After the coffee-berry has undergone the operation of pulping, which removes the fruity exterior, the kernels are spread upon the "patio" to dry. In the higher localities, the drying process, if left unassisted, is often a slow one, so Mr. Nelson has had a kiln constructed for the purpose. The coffee is placed in shallow trays with perforated bottoms, and, as a current of warm dry air is allowed to circulate through the building, all vapour is rapidly carried off.

Our last engraving shows the shipment of coffee at Champerico by means of surf boats, as the breakers on this coast are very heavy, sometimes twenty-four feet high. A pier is now building at Champerico, from which the launches will be able to start outside the breakers. At present, a line is run from a buoy a few hundred yards out to the shore. The captain of the launch and his eight men carry about fifty bags of coffee, each weighing 180 lbs. They wait patiently for a favourable opportunity when the surf is comparatively quiet, and then pull as rapidly as possible at the line until they get past the dangerous spot.

Our engravings are from photographs by Mr. Muybridge, of San Francisco, and these photographs have been forwarded to us by Mr. D. H. Brandon, Civil Engineer, of 1, Rue Lafitte, Paris.

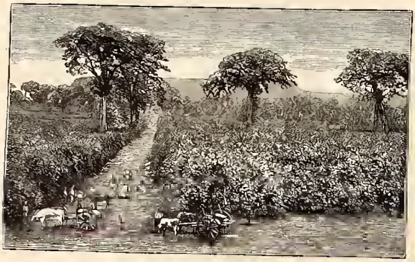
◆

BOOKS RECEIVED

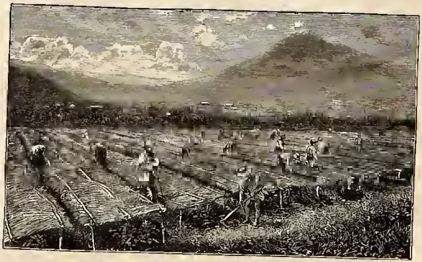
The Snow Fort and the Frozen Lake: Eadgyth: The Girls of Reedon: Mrs. Stanley Leathes; The Two Voyages: by the Author of "A Child of the Glens," &c.; The Heathen World and St. Paul (4 vols.). Rev. E. H. Plumptre, M.A.; The Great Captain: U. R. Burke, M.A.; Owen Hartley: W. H. G. Kingston; The Snowball Society: M. Bramston; The Shepherd of Ardmuir; Leppi: M. Montgomerie Campbell; Ancient History from the Monuments (2 vols.)—Babylonia: George Smith, Edited by Rev. A. H. Sayce; Greek Cities and Islands: W. S. W. Vaux, M.A., F.R.S.; Drifted Away; The Fifth Continent, with the Adjacent Islands: Charles H. Eden; Our Valley: By the Author of "The Children of Seligsberg," &c.; Stories from Italian History: B. Montgomerie Ranking; An Eventful Night: from the German of Ernst Andolt; Non-Christian Religious Systems (3 vols.)—Hinduism: M. Williams—Buddhism: Rhys Davids—Islamism: J. W. H. Stobart; Manuals of Elementary Science—The Spectroscope: R. A. Proctor; New Educational Code—Euclid, Books I. and II.: Edited by W. H. H. Hudson, M.A.—Elementary Mechanics: W. Garnett, M.A.; Algebra: W. H. H. Hudson, M.A.; T. G. Bonney, M.A., F.G.S., &c. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

The Tennyson Birthday Book. Edited by Emily Shakespear. H. S. King and Co.

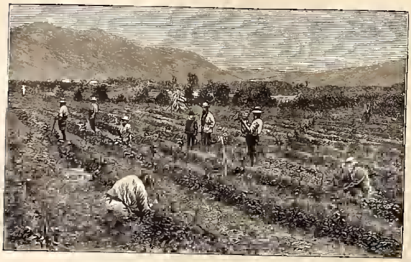
Those Unlucky Twins: A. Lyster; Ten of Them: Mrs. R. M. Bray; The Secret of Wexford: Esther Carr. Griffith and Farran.



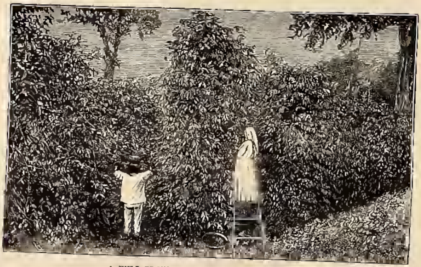
A COFFEE PLANTATION, LAS NUBES



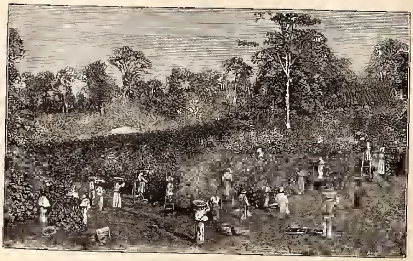
WEEDING AND PROTECTING THE YOUNG PLANT FROM THE SUN



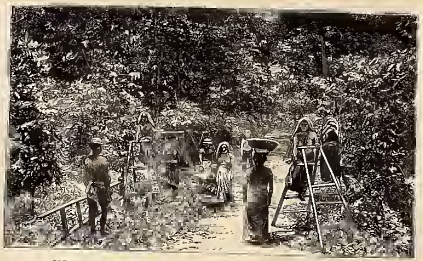
TRANSPLANTING THE YOUNG COFFEE TREE, ANTIGUA



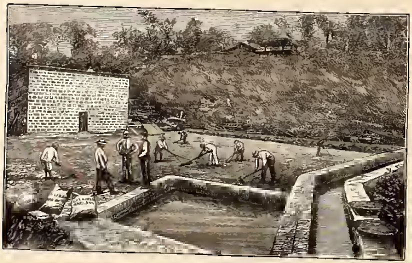
A FULL-GROWN COFFEE-TREE, LAS NUBES



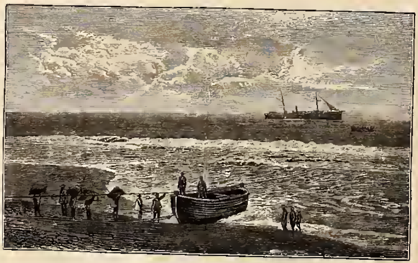
COFFEE HARVESTING AT LAS NUBES (6,000 FEET ABOVE SEA LEVEL)



COFFEE HARVESTING AT SAN ISIDRO (1,500 FEET ABOVE SEA LEVEL)



DRYING COFFEE BERRIES ON THE PATIO



LOADING A COFFEE LAUNCH AT CHAMPERICO

COFFEE CULTIVATION IN GUATEMALA, CENTRAL AMERICA

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

III.

WHAT HAD HAPPENED DURING THE NIGHT (continued)

It was not yet six o'clock in the morning. Troops began to mass themselves on the Place de la Concorde, where Leroy-Saint-Arnaud on horseback held a review.

The Commissaries of Police, Bertoglio and Primorin, ranged two companies in order under the vault of the great staircase of the Questure, but did not ascend that way. They were accompanied by agents of police, who knew the most secret recesses of the Palais Bourbon, and who conducted them through various passages.

General Le Flô was lodged in the pavilion inhabited in the time of the Duc de Bourbon by Monsieur Feuchères.

That night General Le Flô had staying with him his sister and her husband, who were visiting Paris, and who slept in a room, the door of which led into one of the corridors of the Palace. Commissary Bertoglio knocked at the door, opened it, and together with his agents, abruptly burst into the room, where a woman was in bed. The general's brother-in-law sprang out of bed, and cried out to the Questor, who slept in an adjoining room, "Adolphe ! The doors are being forced, the Palace is full of soldiers. Get up !"

The General opened his eyes, he saw Commissary Bertoglio standing beside his bed.

He sprang up.

"General," said the Commissary, "I have come to fulfil a duty."

"I understand," said General Le Flô, "you are a traitor."

The Commissary stammering out the words, "plot against the safety of the State," displayed a warrant. The General, without pronouncing a word, struck this infamous paper with the back of his hand.

Then dressing himself, he put on his full uniform of Constantine and of Médeah, thinking in his imaginative soldierlike loyalty that there were still generals of Africa for the soldiers whom he would find on his way. All the generals now remaining were brigands. His wife embraced him, his son, a child of seven years, in his nightshirt, and in tears, said to the Commissary of Police, "Mercy, Monsieur Bonaparte."

The General, while clasping his wife in his arms, whispered in her ear, "There is artillery in the court yard, try and fire a cannon."

The Commissary and his men led him away. He regarded these policemen with contempt, and did not speak to them, but when he recognised Colonel Espinasse, his military and Breton heart swelled with indignation.

"Colonel Espinasse," said he, "you are a villain, and I hope to live long enough to tear the buttons from your uniform."

Colonel Espinasse hung his head, and stammered, "I do not know you."

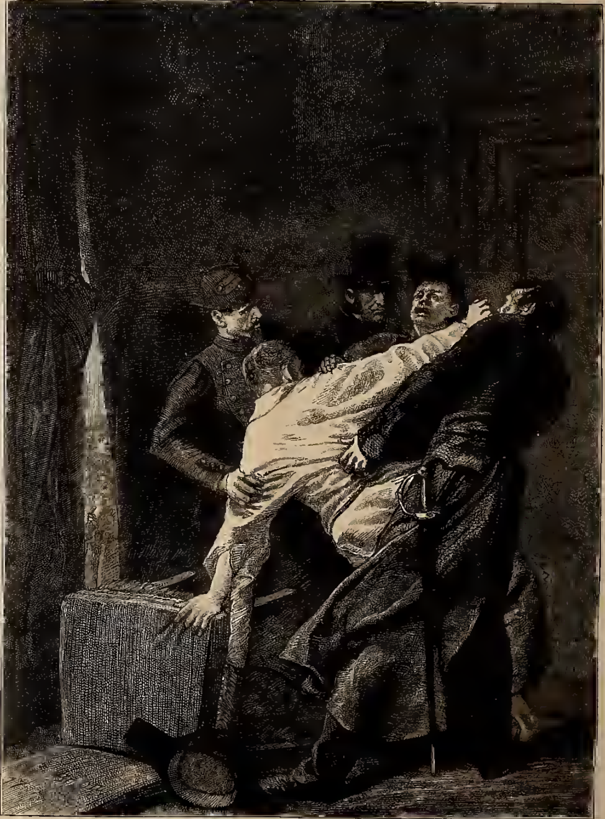
A major waved his sword, and cried, "We have had enough of lawyer generals." Some soldiers crossed their bayonets before the unarmed prisoner, three sergents de ville pushed him into a fiacre, and a sub-lieutenant approaching the carriage, and looking in the face of the man who, if he were a citizen, was his Representative, and if he were a soldier was his general, flung this abominable word at him, "Canaille !"

Meanwhile Commissary Primorin had gone by a more roundabout way in order the more surely to surprise the other Questor, M. Baze.

Out of Baze's apartment a door led to the lobby communicating with the Chamber of the Assembly. Sieur Primorin knocked at the door. "Who is there?" asked a servant, who was dressing. "The Commissary of Police," replied Primorin. The servant, thinking that he was the Commissary of Police of the Assembly, opened the door.

At this moment M. Baze, who had heard the noise, and had just awoke, put on a dressing-gown, and cried, "Do not open the door."

He had scarcely spoken these words when a man in plain clothes and three sergents de ville in uniform rushed into his chamber. The man, opening his coat, displayed his scarf of office, asking M. Baze, "Do you recognise this?"



A hand-to-hand struggle ensued, four against one. . . . "You are ruffians," cried out Monsieur Baze. They carried him away by main force, still struggling, his dressing-gown being torn to shreds, his body being covered with blows, his wrists torn and bleeding

"You are a worthless wretch," answered the Questor.

The police agents laid their hands on M. Baze. "You will not take me away," he said. "You, a Commissary of Police, you, who are a magistrate, and know what you are doing, you outrage the National Assembly, you violate the law, you are a criminal !" A hand-to-hand struggle ensued—four against one. Madame Baze and her two little girls giving vent to screams, the servant being thrust back with blows by the sergents de ville. "You are ruffians," cried out Monsieur Baze. They carried him away by main force in their arms, still struggling, naked, his dressing-gown being torn to shreds, his body being covered with blows, his wrist torn and bleeding.

The stairs, the landing, the courtyard, were full of soldiers with fixed bayonets and grounded arms. The Questor spoke to them. "Your Representatives are being arrested, you have not received your arms to break the laws!" A sergeant was wearing a brand new cross. "Have you been given the cross for this?" The sergeant answered, "We only know one master." "I note your number," continued Baze. "You are a dishonoured regiment." The soldiers listened with a stolid air, and seemed still asleep. Commissary Primorin said to them, "Do not answer, this has nothing to do with you." They led the Questor across the courtyard to the guardhouse at the Porte Noire.

This was the name which was given to a little door contrived under the vault opposite the treasury of the Assembly, and which opened upon the Rue de Bourgogne, facing the Rue de Lille.

Several sentries were placed at the door of the guardhouse, and at the top of the flight of steps which led thither, Baze being left there in charge of three sergents de ville. Several soldiers without their weapons, and in their shirt sleeves, came in and out. The Questor appealed to them in the name of military honour. "Do not answer," said the sergent de ville to the soldiers.

Baze's two little girls had followed him with terrified eyes, and when they lost sight of him the youngest burst into tears. "Sister," said the elder, who was seven years old, "let us say our prayers," and the two children clasping their hands, knelt down.

Commissary Primorin, with his swarm of agents, burst into the Questor's study, and laid hands on everything. The first papers which he perceived in the middle of the table, and which he seized, were the famous decree which had been prepared in the event of the Assembly having voted the proposal of the Questors. All the drawers were opened and searched. This overhauling of Baze's papers, which the Commissary of Police termed a domiciliary visit, lasted more than an hour.

Baze's clothes had been taken to him, and he had dressed. When the "domiciliary visit" was over, he was taken out of the guard-house. There was a fiacre in the courtyard, into which he entered, together with the three sergents de ville. The vehicle, in order to reach the Presidency door, passed by the Cour d'Honneur, and then by the Cour de Canons. Day was breaking. Monsieur Baze looked in the courtyard to see if the cannon were still there. He saw the ammunition waggons ranged in order with their shafts raised, but the places of the six cannon and the two mortars were vacant.

In the Avenue of the Presidency the fiacre stopped for a moment. Two lines of soldiers, standing at ease, lined the footpaths of the avenue. At the foot of a tree were grouped three men: Colonel Espinasse, whom M. Baze knew and recognised, a species of Lieutenant-Colonel, who wore a black and orange ribbon round his neck, and a Major of Lancers, all three, sword in hand, consulting together. The windows of the fiacre were closed; Monsieur Baze wished to lower them to appeal to these men, the sergents de ville seized his arms. The Commissary Primorin then came up, and was about to re-enter the little chariot for two persons which had brought him. "Monsieur Baze," said he, with that villainous kind of courtesy which the agents of the Coup d'État willingly blended with their crime, "you must be uncomfortable with those three men in the fiacre. You are cramped; come in with me."

"Let me alone," said the prisoner. "With these three men I am cramped; with you I should be contaminated."

An escort of infantry was ranged on both sides of the fiacre. Colonel Espinasse called to the coachman, "Drive slowly by the Quai d'Orsay until you meet a cavalry escort. When the cavalry shall have assumed the charge, the infantry can come back." They set out.

As the fiacre turned into the Quai d'Orsay a picket of the 7th Lancers arrived at full speed. It was the escort; the troopers surrounded the fiacre, and the whole galloped off.

No incident occurred during the journey. Here and there, at the noise of the horses' hoofs, windows were opened and heads put forth; and the prisoner, who had at length succeeded in lowering a window, heard startled voices saying, "What is the matter?"

The fiacre stopped. "Where are we?" asked M. Baze. "At Mazas," said a sergent de ville.

The Questor was taken to the office of the prison. Just as he entered he saw Baune and Nadaud being brought out. There was a table in the centre, at which Commissary Primorin, who had followed the fiacre in his chariot, had just seated himself. While the Commissary was writing, M. Baze noticed on the table a paper which was evidently a gaol register, on which were these names, written in the following order: Lamoricière, Charras, Cavaignac, Changarnier, Le Flô, Thiers, Bedeau, Roger (du Nord), Chambolle. This was probably the order in which the Representatives had arrived at the prison.

When Sieur Primorin had finished writing M. Baze said, "Now, you will be good enough to receive my protest, and add it to your official report." "It is not an official report," objected the Commissary, "it is simply an order for committal." "I intend to write my protest at once," replied M. Baze. "You will have plenty of time in your cell," remarked a man who stood by the table. M. Baze turned round. "Who are you?" "I am the governor of the prison," said the man. "In that case," replied M. Baze, "I pity you, for you are aware of the crime you are committing." The man turned pale, and stammered a few unintelligible words.

The Commissary rose from his seat; Monsieur Baze briskly took possession of his chair, seated himself at the table, and said to Sieur Primorin, "You are a public officer; I request you to add my protest to your official report." "Very well," said the Commissary; "let it be so." Baze wrote the protest as follows:

"I, the undersigned, Jean Didier-Baze, Representative of the people, and Questor of the National Assembly, carried off by violence from my residence in the Palace of the National Assembly, and conducted to this prison by an armed force which it was impossible for me to resist, protest in the name of the National Assembly and in my own name against the outrage on national representation committed upon my colleagues and upon myself.

"Given at Mazas on the 2nd December, 1851, at eight o'clock in the morning. "BAZE."

While this was taking place at Mazas, the soldiers were laughing and drinking in the courtyard of the Assembly. They made their coffee in the saucepans. They had lighted enormous fires in the courtyard; the flames, fanned by the wind, at times reached the walls of the Chamber. A superior official of the Questure, an officer of the National Guard, Ramond de la Croisette, ventured to say to them, "You will set the Palace on fire?" whereupon a soldier struck him a blow with his fist.

Four of the pieces taken from the Cour de Canons were ranged in battery order against the Assembly; two on the Place de Bourgogne were pointed towards the grating, and two on the Pont de la Concorde were pointed towards the grand staircase.

As side-note to this instructive tale let us mention a curious fact. This 42nd regiment of the line was the same which had arrested Louis Bonaparte at Boulogne. In 1840 this regiment lent its aid to the law against the conspirator. In 1851 it lent its aid to the conspirator against the law: such is the beauty of passive obedience.

IV.

OTHER DOINGS OF THE NIGHT

DURING the same night in all parts of Paris acts of brigandage took place. Unknown men leading armed troops, and themselves armed with hatchets, mallets, pincers, crowbars, life preservers, swords hidden under their coats, pistols, of which the butts could be distinguished under the folds of their cloaks, arrived in silence before a house, occupied the street, encircled the approaches, picked the lock of the door, tied up the porter, invaded the stairs, and burst through the doors upon a sleeping man, and when that man, awakening with a start, asked of these bandits, "Who are you?" their leader answered, "A Commissary of Police." So it happened to Lamoricière, who was seized by Blanchet, who threatened him with the gag; to Greppo, who was brutally treated and thrown down by Gronfier, assisted by six men carrying a dark lantern and a pole-axe; to Cavaignac, who was secured by Colin, a smooth-tongued villain, who affected to be shocked on hearing him curse and swear; to Monsieur Thiers, who was arrested by Hubault (the elder), who professed that he had seen him "tremble and weep," thus adding falsehood to crime; to Valentin, who was assailed in his bed by Dourlens, taken by the feet and the shoulders, and thrust into a padlocked police van; to Miot, destined to the tortures of African casemates; to Roger (du Nord), who with courageous and witty irony offered sherry to the bandits. Charras and Changarnier were taken unawares. They lived in the Rue St. Honoré, nearly opposite to each other, Changarnier at No. 3, Charras at No. 14. Changarnier had dismissed the fifteen men armed to the teeth by whom he had hitherto been guarded during the night, and on the 1st December, as we have said, Charras had unloaded his pistols. These empty pistols were lying on the table when they came to arrest him. The Commissary of Police threw himself upon them. "Idiot," said Charras to him, "if they had been loaded you would have been a dead man." These pistols, we may note, had been given to Charras upon the taking of Mascara by General Renaud, who at the moment of Charras' arrest was on horseback in the street helping to carry out the Coup d'État. If these pistols had remained loaded, and if General Renaud had had the task of arresting Charras, it would have been curious if Renaud's pistols had killed Renaud. Charras assuredly would not have hesitated. We have already mentioned the names of these police rascals. It is useless to repeat them. It was Courtille who arrested Charras, Lerat who arrested Changarnier, Desgranges who arrested Nadaud. The men thus seized in their own houses were Representatives of the people; they were inviolable, so that to the crime of the violation of their persons was added this high treason, the violation of the Constitution.

There was no lack of impudence in the perpetration of these outrages. The police agents made merry. Some of these droll fellows jested. At Mazas the under-jailors jeered at Thiers, Nadaud reprimanded them severely. The Sieur Hubault (the younger) awoke General Bedeau—"General, you are a prisoner"—"My person is inviolable"—"Unless you are caught red-handed, in the very act."—"Well," said Bedeau, "I am caught in the act, the heinous act of being asleep." They took him by the collar and dragged him to a fiacre.

On meeting together at Mazas, Nadaud grasped the hand of Greppo, and Lagrange grasped the hand of Lamoricière. This made the police gentry laugh. A colonel, named Thirion, wearing a commander's cross round his neck, helped to put the Generals and the Representatives into gaol. "Look me in the face," said Charras to him. Thirion moved away.

Thus, without counting other arrests which took place later on, there were imprisoned during the night of the 2nd of December sixteen Representatives and seventy-eight citizens. The two agents of the crime furnished a report of it to Louis Bonaparte. Morny signed himself "Coffrés." Maupas signed himself "Bouclés." The one in drawing-room slang, the other in the slang of the galleys. Subtle gradations of language.

V.

THE DARKNESS OF THE CRIME

VERSIGNY had just left me.

While I dressed hastily there came in a man in whom I had every confidence. He was a poor cabinet-maker out of work, named Girard, to whom I had given shelter in a room of my house, a carver of wood, and not illiterate. He came in from the street; he was trembling.

"Well," I asked, "what do the people say?"

Girard answered me:

"People are dazed. The blow has been struck in such a manner that it is not realised. Workmen read the placards, say nothing, and go to their work. Only one in a hundred speaks. It is to say, 'Good!' This is how it appears to them. The law of the 31st May is abrogated—'Well done!' Universal Suffrage is re-established—'Also well done!' The re-actionary majority has been driven away—'Admirable!' Thiers is arrested—'Capital!' Changarnier is seized—'Bravo!' Round each placard there are claqueurs. Ratapoil explains his coup d'état to Jacques Bonhomme, Jacques Bonhomme takes it all in. Briefly, it is my impression that the people give their consent."

"Let it be so," said I.

"But," asked Girard of me, "what will you do, Monsieur Victor Hugo?"

I took my scarf of office from a cupboard, and showed it to him.

He understood.

We shook hands.

As he went out, Carini entered.

Colonel Carini is an intrepid man. He had commanded the cavalry under Microslawsky in the Sicilian insurrection. He has, in a few moving and enthusiastic pages, told the story of that noble revolt. Carini is one of those Italians who love France as we Frenchmen love Italy. Every warm-hearted man in this century has two fatherlands—the Rome of yesterday and the Paris of to-day.

"Thank God," said Carini to me, "you are still free;" and he added, "The blow has been struck in a formidable manner. The Assembly is invested. I have come from thence. The Place de la Revolution, the Quays, the Tuileries, the boulevards, are crowded with troops. The soldiers have their knapsacks. The batteries are harnessed. If fighting takes place it will be desperate work."

I answered him, "There will be fighting."

And I added, laughing, "You have proved that the colonels write like poets; now it is the turn of the poets to fight like colonels."

I entered my wife's room; she knew nothing, and was quietly reading her paper in bed.

I had taken about me five hundred francs in gold. I put on my wife's bed a box containing nine hundred francs; all the money which remained to me, and I told her what had happened.

She turned pale, and said to me, "What are you going to do?"

"My duty."

She embraced me, and only said two words:

"Do it."

My breakfast was ready. I ate a cutlet in two mouthfuls. As I finished, my daughter came in. She was startled by the manner in which I kissed her, and asked me, "What is the matter?"

"Your mother will explain to you."

And I left them.

The Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne was as quiet and deserted as usual. Four workmen were, however, chatting near my door; they wished me "Good morning."

I cried out to them, "You know what is going on?"

"Yes," said they.

"Well. It is treason! Louis Bonaparte is strangling the Republic. The People are attacked. The People must defend themselves."

"They will defend themselves."

"You promise me that?"

"Yes," they answered.

One of them added: "We swear it."

They kept their word. Barricades were constructed in my street (Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne), in the Rue des Martyrs, in the Cité Rodier, in the Rue Coquenard, and at Notre-Dame de Lorette.

VI.

"PLACARDS"

ON leaving these brave men I could read at the corner of the Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne and the Rue des Martyrs, the three infamous placards which had been posted on the walls of Paris during the night.

Here they are:—

"PROCLAMATION

"OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC

"Appeal to the People

"FRENCHMEN! The present situation can last no longer. Every day which passes enhances the dangers of the country. The Assembly, which ought to be the firmest support of Order, has become a focus of conspiracies. The patriotism of three hundred of its members has been unable to check its fatal tendencies. Instead of making laws in the public interest it forges arms for civil war; it attacks the power which I hold directly from the People, it encourages all bad passions, it compromises the tranquillity of France; I have dissolved it, and I constitute the whole People a judge between it and me.

"The Constitution, as you know, was constructed with the object of weakening beforehand the power which you were about to confide to me. Six millions of votes formed an emphatic protest against it, and yet I have faithfully respected it. Provocations, calumnies, outrages, have found me unmoved. Now, however, that the fundamental compact is no longer respected by those very men who incessantly invoke it, and that the men who have ruined two monarchies wish to tie my hands in order to overthrow the Republic, my duty is to frustrate their treacherous schemes, to maintain the Republic, and to save the Country by appealing to the solemn judgment of the only Sovereign whom I recognise in France: the People.

"I therefore make a loyal appeal to the whole nation, and I say to you: If you wish to continue this condition of uneasiness which degrades us and compromises our future, choose another in my place, for I will no longer retain a power which is impotent to do good, which renders me responsible for actions which I cannot prevent, and which binds me to the helm when I see the vessel driving towards the abyss.

"If on the other hand you still place confidence in me, give me the means of accomplishing the great mission which I hold from you.

"This mission consists in closing the era of revolutions, by satisfying the legitimate needs of the People, and by protecting them from subversive passions. It consists, above all, in creating institutions which survive men, and which shall in fact form the foundations on which something durable may be established.

"Persuaded that the instability of power, that the preponderance of a single Assembly, are the permanent causes of trouble and discord, I submit to your suffrage the following fundamental bases of a Constitution which will be developed by the Assemblies later on:

"1. A responsible Chief appointed for ten years.
"2. Ministers dependent upon the Executive Power alone.
"3. A Council of State composed of the most distinguished men, who shall prepare laws and shall support them in debate before the Legislative Body.
"4. A Legislative Body which shall discuss and vote the laws, and which shall be elected by universal suffrage, without scrutin de liste, which falsifies the elections.
"5. A Second Assembly composed of the most illustrious men of the country, a power of equipoise, the guardian of the fundamental compact, and of the public liberties.

"This system, created by the First Consul at the beginning of the century, has already given repose and prosperity to France; it would still ensure them to her.

"Such is my firm conviction. If you share it, declare it by your votes. If, on the contrary, you prefer a government without strength, Monarchical or Republican, borrowed I know not from what past, or from what chimerical future, answer in the negative.

"Thus, for the first time since 1804, you will vote with a full knowledge of the circumstances, knowing exactly for whom, and for what.

"If I do not obtain the majority of your suffrages I shall call together a New Assembly, and shall place in its hands the commission which I have received from you.

"But, if you believe that the cause of which my name is the symbol,—that is to say, France regenerated by the Revolution of '89, and organised by the Emperor, is to be still your own, proclaim it by sanctioning the powers which I ask from you.

"Then France and Europe will be preserved from anarchy, obstacles will be removed, rivalries will have disappeared, for all will respect, in the decision of the People, the decree of Providence.

"Given at the Palace of the Elysée, 2nd December, 1851.

"LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE."

"PROCLAMATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC TO THE ARMY

"SOLDIERS! Be proud of your mission. You will save the country, for I count upon you not to violate the laws, but to enforce respect for the first law of the country, the national Sovereignty, of which I am the Legitimate Representative.

"For a long time past, like myself, you have suffered from obstacles which have opposed themselves both to the good that I wished to do and to the demonstrations of your sympathies in my favour. These obstacles have been broken down.

"The Assembly has tried to attack the authority which I hold from the whole Nation. It has ceased to exist. I make a loyal appeal to the People and to the Army, and I say to them, Either give me the means of ensuring your prosperity, or choose another in my place.

"In 1830, as in 1848, you were treated as vanquished men. After having branded your heroic disinterestedness, they disdained to consult your sympathies and your wishes, and yet you are the flower of the Nation. To-day, at this solemn moment, I am resolved that the voice of the Army shall be heard.

"Vote, therefore, freely as citizens; but, as soldiers, do not forget that passive obedience to the orders of the Chief of the State is the rigorous duty of the Army, from the general to the private soldier.

"It is for me, responsible for my actions both to the People and to posterity, to take those measures which may seem to me indispensable for the public welfare.

"As for you, remain immovable within the rules of discipline and of honour. By your imposing attitude help the country to manifest its will with calmness and reflection.

"Be ready to repress every attack upon the free exercise of the sovereignty of the People.

"Soldiers, I do not speak to you of the memories which my name recalls. They are engraven in your hearts. We are united by indissoluble ties. Your history is mine. There is between us, in the past, a community of glory and of misfortune.

"There will be in the future community of sentiment and of resolutions for the repose and the greatness of France."

"Given at the Palace of the Elysée, December 2nd, 1851.

"(Signed) "L. N. BONAPARTE."

"IN THE NAME OF THE FRENCH PEOPLE

"The President of the Republic decrees:

"ARTICLE I.

"The National Assembly is dissolved.

"ARTICLE II.

"Universal Suffrage is re-established. The law of May 31 is abrogated.

"ARTICLE III.

"The French People are convoked in their electoral districts from the 14th December to the 21st December following.

"ARTICLE IV.

"The State of Siege is decreed in the district of the first Military Division.

"ARTICLE V.

"The Council of State is dissolved

"ARTICLE VI.

"The Minister of the Interior is charged with the execution of this decree.

"Given at the Palace of the Elysée, 2nd December, 1851.

"LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

"De Morny, Minister of the Interior."

VII.

NO. 70, RUE BLANCHE

THE Cité Gaillard is somewhat difficult to find. It is a deserted alley in that new quarter which separates the Rue des Martyrs from the Rue Blanche. I found it, however. As I reached No. 4, Yvan came out of the gateway and said, "I am here to warn you. The police have an eye upon this house, Michel is waiting for you at No. 70, Rue Blanche, a few steps from here."

I knew No. 70, Rue Blanche. Manin, the celebrated President of the Venetian Republic, lived there. It was not in his rooms, however, that the meeting was to take place.

The porter of No. 70 told me to go up to the first floor. The door was opened, and a handsome, gray-haired woman of some forty summers, the Baroness Coppens, whom I recognised as having seen in society and at my own house, ushered me into a drawing-room.

Michel de Bourges and Alexander Rey were there, the latter an ex-Constituent, an eloquent writer, a brave man. At that time Alexander Rey edited the National.

We shook hands.

Michel said to me,

"Hugo, what will you do?"

I answered him,

"Everything."

"That also is my opinion," said he.

Numerous Representatives arrived, and amongst others Pierre Lefranc Labrousse, Théodore Bac, Noel Parfait, Arnauld (de l'Ariége), Demosthenes Ollivier, an ex-Constituent, and Charamaule. There was deep and unutterable indignation, but no useless words were spoken.

All were imbued with that manly anger whence issue great resolutions.

They talked. They set forth the situation. Each brought forward the news which he had learnt.

Théodore Bac came from Léon Fauchet, who lived in the Rue Blanche. It was he who had awakened Leon Faucher, and had announced the news to him. The first words of Léon Faucher were, "It is an infamous deed."

From the first moment Charamaule displayed a courage which, during the four days of the struggle, never flagged for a single instant. Charamaule is a very tall man, possessed of vigorous features and convincing eloquence; he voted with the Left, but sat with the Right. In the Assembly he was the neighbour of Montalembert and de Riancey. He sometimes had warm disputes with them, which we watched from afar off, and which amused us.

Charamaule had come to the meeting at No. 70 dressed in a sort of blue cloth military cloak, and armed, as we found out later on.

The situation was grave; sixteen Representatives arrested, all the generals of the Assembly, and he who was more than a general, Charras. All the journals suppressed, all the printing offices occupied by soldiers. On the side of Bonaparte an army of 80,000 men which could be doubled in a few hours; on our side nothing. The People deceived, and moreover disarmed. The telegraph at their command. All the walls covered with their placards, and at our disposal not a single printing case, not one sheet of paper. No means of raising the protest, no means of beginning the combat. The Coup d'État was clad with mail, the Republic was naked; the Coup d'État had a speaking trumpet, the Republic wore a gag.

What was to be done?

The raid against the Republic, against the Assembly, against Right, against Law, against Progress, against Civilisation, was commanded by African generals. These heroes had just proved that they were cowards. They had taken their precautions well. Fear alone can engender so much skill. They had arrested all the men of war of the Assembly, and all the men of action of the Left, Baune, Charles Lagrange, Miot, Valentin, Nadaud, Cholat. Add to this that all the possible chiefs of the barricades were in prison. The organisers of the ambuscade had carefully left at liberty Jules Favre, Michel de Bourges, and myself, judging us to be less men of action than of the Tribune; wishing to leave the Left men capable of resistance, but incapable of victory, hoping to dishonour us if we did not fight, and to shoot us if we did fight.

Nevertheless, no one hesitated. The deliberation began. Other Representatives arrived every minute. Edgar Quinet, Doutre, Pelletier, Cassal, Bruckner, Baudin, Chauffour. The room was full, some were seated, most were standing, in confusion, but without tumult.

I was the first to speak.

I said that the struggle ought to be begun at once. Blow for blow.

That it was my opinion that the hundred and fifty Representatives of the Left should put on their scarves of office, should march in procession through the streets and the boulevards as far as the Madeleine, and crying "Vive la République! Vive la Constitution!" should appear before the troops, and alone, calm and unarmed, should summon Might to obey Right. If the soldiers yielded, they should go to the Assembly and make an end of Louis Bonaparte. If the soldiers fired upon their legislators they should disperse throughout Paris, cry "To Arms!" and resort to barricades. Resistance should be begun constitutionally, and if that failed, should be continued revolutionarily. There was no time to be lost.

"High treason," said I, "should be seized red-handed, it is a great mistake to suffer such an outrage to be accepted by the hours as they elapse. Each minute which passes is an accomplice, and endorses the crime. Beware of that calamity called an 'Accomplished fact.' To arms!"

Many warmly supported this advice, among others Edgar Quinet, Pelletier, and Doutre.

Michel de Bourges seriously objected. My instinct was to begin at once, his advice was to wait and see. According to him there was danger in hastening the catastrophe. The Coup d'État was organised, and the People were not. They had been taken unawares. We must not indulge in illusion. The masses could not stir yet. Perfect calm reigned in the faubourgs; Surprise existed, yes; Anger, no. The People of Paris, although so intelligent, did not understand.

Michel added, "We are not in 1830. Charles X., in turning out the 221, exposed himself to this blow, the re-election of the 221. We are not in the same situation. The 221 were popular. The present Assembly is not: a Chamber which has been insultingly dissolved is always sure to conquer, if the People support it. Thus the People rose in 1830. To-day they wait. They are dupes until they shall be victims." Michel de Bourges concluded, "The People must be given time to understand, to grow angry, to rise. As for us, Representatives, we should be rash to precipitate the situation. If we were to march immediately straight upon the troops, we should only be shot to no purpose, and the glorious insurrection for Right would thus be beforehand deprived of its natural leaders—the Representatives of the People. We should decapitate the popular army. Temporary delay, on the contrary, would be beneficial. Too much zeal must be guarded against, self-restraint is necessary, to give way would be to lose the battle before having begun it. Thus, for example, we must not attend the meeting announced by the Right for noon, all those who went there would be arrested. We must remain free, we must remain in readiness, we must remain calm, and must act waiting the advent of the People. Four days of this agitation without fighting would weary the army." Michel, however, advised a beginning, but simply by placarding Article 68 of the Constitution. But where should a printer be found?

Michel de Bourges spoke with an experience of revolutionary procedure which was wanting in me. For many years past he had acquired a certain practical knowledge of the masses. His counsel was wise. It must be added that all the information which came to us seconded him, and appeared conclusive against me. Paris was dejected. The army of the Coup d'État invaded her peaceably. Even the placards were not torn down. Nearly all the Representatives present, even the most daring, agreed with Michel's counsel, to wait and see what would happen. "At night," said they, "the agitation will begin," and they concluded, like Michel de Bourges, that the people must be given time to understand. There would be a risk of being alone in too hasty a beginning. We should not carry the people with us in the first moment. Let us leave the indignation to increase little by little in their hearts. If it were begun prematurely our manifestation would miscarry. These were the sentiments of all. For myself, while listening to them, I felt shaken. Perhaps they were right. It would be a mistake to give the signal for the combat in vain. What good is the lightning which is not followed by the thunderbolt?

To raise a voice, to give vent to a cry, to find a printer, there was the first question. But was there still a free Press?

The brave old ex-chief of the 6th Legion, Colonel Forestier, came in. He took Michel de Bourges and myself aside.

"Listen," said he to us, "I come to you. I have been dismissed. I no longer command my legion, but appoint me in the name of the Left Colonel of the 6th. Sign me an order, and I will go at once and call them to arms. In an hour the regiment will be on foot.

"Colonel," answered I, "I will do more than sign an order, I will accompany you."

And I turned towards Charamaule, who had a carriage in waiting.

"Come with us," said I.

Forestier was sure of two majors of the 6th. We decided to drive to them at once, while Michel and the other Representatives should await us at Bonvalet's, in the Boulevard du Temple, near the Café Turc. There they could consult together.

We started.

We traversed Paris, where people were already beginning to swarm in a threatening manner. The boulevards were thronged with an uneasy crowd. People walked to and fro, passers-by accosted each other without any previous acquaintance, a noteworthy sign of public anxiety; and groups talked in loud voices at the corners of the streets. The shops were being shut.

"Come, this looks better," cried Charamaule.

He had been wandering about the town since the morning, and he had noticed with sadness the apathy of the masses.

We found the two majors at home upon whom Colonel Forestier counted. They were two rich linendrapers, who received us with some embarrassment. The shopmen had gathered together at the windows, and watched us pass by. It was mere curiosity.

In the meanwhile one of the two majors countermanded a journey which he was going to undertake on that day, and promised us his co-operation.

"But," added he, "do not deceive yourselves, one can foresee that we shall be cut to pieces. Few men will march out."

Colonel Forestier said to us: "Watrin, the present colonel of the 6th, does not care for fighting; perhaps he will resign me the command amicably. I will go and find him alone, so as to startle him the less, and will join you at Bonvalet's."

Near the Porte St. Martin we left our carriage, and Charamaule and myself proceeded along the boulevard on foot, in order to observe the groups more closely, and more easily to judge the aspect of the crowd.

The recent levelling of the road had converted the boulevard of the Porte St. Martin into a deep cutting, commanded by two embankments. On the summits of these embankments were the footways, furnished with railings. The carriages drove along the cutting, the foot passengers walked along the footways.

Just as we reached the boulevard, a long column of infantry filed into this ravine with drummers at their head. The thick waves of bayonets filled the square of St. Martin, and lost themselves in the depths of the boulevard Bonne Nouvelle.

An enormous and compact crowd covered the two pavements of the Boulevard St. Martin. Large numbers of workmen, in their blouses, were there, leaning upon the railings.

At the moment when the head of the column entered the defile before the Theatre of the Porte St. Martin a tremendous shout of "Vive la République!" came forth from every mouth as though shouted by one man. The soldiers continued to advance in silence, but it might have been said that their pace slackened, and many of them regarded the crowd with an air of indecision. What did this cry of "Vive la République!" mean? Was it a token of applause? Was it a shout of defiance?

It seemed to me at that moment that the Republic raised its brow, and that the Coup d'État hung its head.

Meanwhile Charamaule said to me, "You are recognised."

In fact, near the Chateau d'Eau the crowd surrounded me. Some young men cried out, "Vive Victor Hugo!" One of them asked me, "Citizen Victor Hugo, what ought we to do?"

I answered, "Tear down the seditious placards of the Coup d'État, and cry, 'Vive la Constitution!'"

"And suppose they fire on us?" said a young workman?

"You will hasten to arms."

"Bravo!" shouted the crowd.

I added, "Louis Bonaparte is a rebel, he has steeped himself to-day in every crime. We, Representatives of the People, declare him an outlaw, but there is no need for our declaration, since he is an outlaw by the mere fact of his treason. Citizens, you have two hands; take in one your Right, and in the other your gun and fall upon Bonaparte."

"Bravo! Bravo!" again shouted the people.

A tradesman who was shutting up his shop said to me, "Don't speak so loud, if they heard you talking like that they would shoot you."

"Well, then," I replied, "you would parade my body, and my death would be a boon if the justice of God could result from it."

All shouted "Long live Victor Hugo!" "Shout 'Long live the Constitution,'" said I.

A great cry of "Vive la Constitution! Vive la République!" came forth from every breast.

Enthusiasm, indignation, anger flashed in the faces of all. I thought then, and I still think, that this, perhaps, was the supreme moment. I was tempted to carry off all that crowd, and to begin the battle.

Charamaule restrained me. He whispered to me,

"You will bring about a useless fusilade. Every one is unarmed. The infantry is only two paces from us, and see, here comes the artillery."

I looked round; in truth several pieces of cannon emerged at a quick trot from the Rue de Bondy, behind the Chateau d'Eau.

The advice to abstain, given by Charamaule, made a deep impression on me. Coming from such a man, and one so dauntless, it was certainly not to be distrusted. Besides, I felt myself bound by the deliberation which had just taken place at the meeting in the Rue Blanche.

I shrank before the responsibility which I should have incurred. To have taken advantage of such a moment might have been victory, it might also have been a massacre. Was I right? Was I wrong?

The crowd thickened around us, and it became difficult to go forward. We were anxious, however, to reach the rendezvous at Bonvalet's.

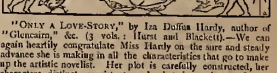
Suddenly some one touched me on the arm. It was Léopold Duras, of the National.

"Go no further," he whispered, "the Restaurant Bonvalet is surrounded. Michel de Bourges has attempted to harangue the People, but the soldiers came up. He barely succeeded in making his escape. Numerous Representatives who came to the meeting have been arrested. Retrace your steps. We are returning to the old rendezvous in the Rue Blanche. I have been looking for you to tell you this."

A cab was passing; Charamaule made a sign to the driver. We jumped in, followed by the crowd, shouting, "Vive la République! Vive Victor Hugo!"

It appears that just at that moment a squadron of sergents de ville arrived on the Boulevard to arrest me. The coachman drove off at full speed. A quarter of an hour afterwards we reached the Rue Blanche.

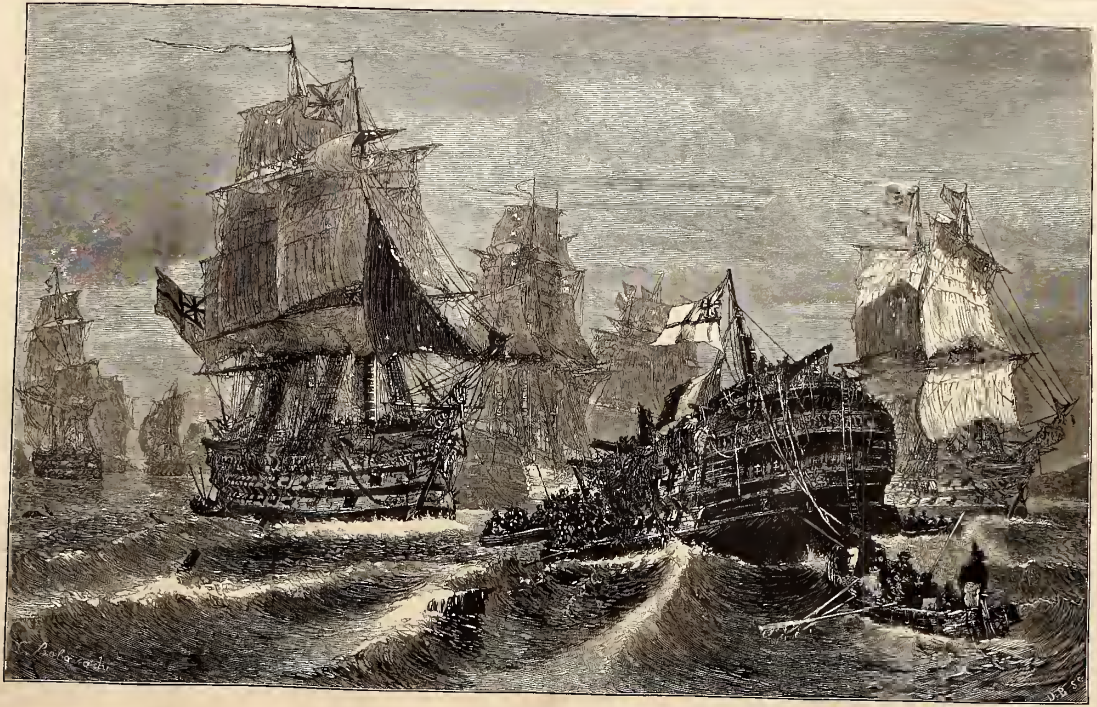
(To be continued)



"ONLY A LOVE-STORY," by Iza Duffus Hardy, author of "Glencairn," &c. (3 vols.: Hurst and Blackett).—We can again heartily congratulate Miss Hardy on the sure and steady advance she is making in all the characteristics that go to make up the artistic novelist. Her plot is carefully constructed, her characters distinct, consistent, and what is, perhaps, of even more importance in the eyes of novel-readers, highly interesting, and her scenes strong without incurring the reproach of sensationalism. And again we note, as we noted in "Glencairn," that both Miss Hardy's conceptions and her manner of developing them are her own; there is so much distinctiveness about her workmanship that we believe that, were she now to publish anonymously or under a feigned name, we should still recognise the book as hers. The tale will probably disappoint many by ending sadly, but we think the author has rightly felt that no more cheerful dénouement would, artistically speaking, have been possible. She has certainly hit upon what, we take it, is a fresh situation in fiction, inasmuch as her heroine, as good and true a girl as could be found, is genuinely and loyally in love with two men at the same time. Calla Yorke is parted from her first lover, Felix Grey, by his own act, because he comes to believe that he has the taint of hereditary insanity in his blood, and must not marry, but his hold over her heart and conscience, though it may sleep at times, remains as potent as ever. And yet she loves Grey's dearest friend, Julius Lusada, the man whose splendid beauty and almost mesmeric personal influence have won her almost against her will, as well as his noble and chivalrous nature deserves to be loved. Calla's position with respect to her lovers is a difficult one to deal with, especially as the two men continue the warmest friends, and Calla is thrown into constant intercourse with both of them, but we think Miss Hardy has treated it satisfactorily, and made us feel it not unnatural or in the least repulsive, unusual as, of course, it is. Felix's sister, Isabel, the dreamy, serene girl, so dominated by habitual despondency and fatalistic fancies, is a singularly finely-conceived and interesting character, of whom, from a hint the author drops, we anticipate we may ere long hear again; and the "circle" in respectable Bohemia in which many of Calla's brightest hours are spent, is very cleverly described, many of its members being plainly sketched from life. But we have not the space to dwell on the merits of the tale as we should like, and must content ourselves with pronouncing it an unqualified success, and recommending it to our readers' attention.

"The Breaking of the Storm," by Friedrich Spielhagen, translated from the German by S. E. A. H. Stephenson (3 vols.: Bentley).—There is a great deal that is really excellent in this novel, though this excellence is marred by the excessive complexity of a plot that almost defies comprehension, and by inordinate length, the story occupying considerably over 1,200 pages. We have in it a picture of Prussian society, such as it has been in the years that have followed the great Franco-German War. The picture is not a pleasant one. The old Prussian simplicity and frugality of life seem to have taken wing for ever, the artisans are represented as impregnated with socialistic theories, and ripe for revolt against the established order of things; the middle class know only one desire, to get rich by any means, fair or foul; and the aristocratic caste, while abating no jot of a pride of birth, coarsely and arrogantly expressed, are ready enough to join hands with the parvenus millionaires whom they despise, if so they may obtain valuable concesssions, and seats on the boards of bubble companies, and feather their own nests at the public expense. The group, which comprises the leading actors in the piece, is, it is true, quite free from the taint of the times, and most of them are as morally winning as all are effectively and spiritedly drawn. Bernhold Schmidt, merchant captain and lieutenant in the reserve, and his high-born lady-love, Elsa von Werben, are a

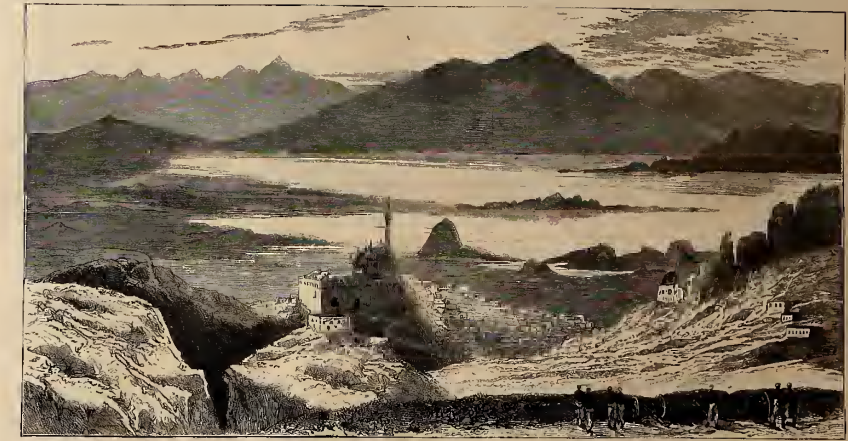
(Continued on page 382)



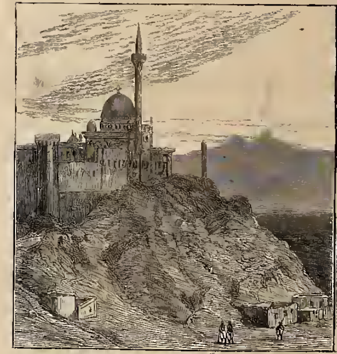
C. Bolanachi
D.B.Sc.

SINKING OF THE "REDOUTABLE" AFTER THE BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR

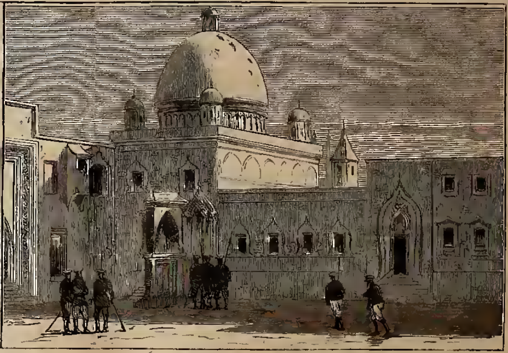
FROM THE PICTURE BY C. BOLANACHI



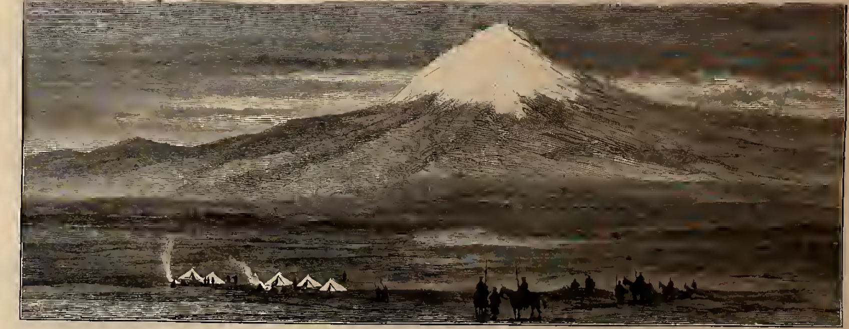
THE TOWN AND CITADEL OF BAYAZID, FROM THE SOUTH-EAST



CITADEL AND MOSQUE, FROM THE TOWN OF BAYAZID



THE QUADRANGLE OF THE CASTLE, BAYAZID



MOUNT ARARAT, FROM THE HEADQUARTERS OF ISMAIL PASHA

WITH THE TURKS AND ISMAIL PASHA IN ASIA

(Continued from page 379)

charming pair of lovers, and the girl's father, General von Werken, is a grand specimen of the old Prussian soldier-noble, to whom unsullied honour was infinitely dearer than wealth, position, or life itself. Nor are these three the only personages whom Herr Spielhagen has succeeded in presenting to us with a skill that leaves little or nothing to be desired. On the other hand, the minor characters are far too numerous, and their action is mysterious and confusing, so that the novel is singularly unequal, and it is only by fits and starts that we are able to see it as it might have been if the author's scheme had been more simple. It is his own fault that a story which contains many situations and passages of real power and beauty should yet leave on the mind a somewhat unsatisfactory impression.

"Against Her Will," by Annie L. Walker, author of "A Canadian Heroine," &c. (3 vols.: Samuel Tinsley).—The heroine of this tale finds herself in the middle of the second volume, very much "against her will," converted by the will of a distant relative, the Earl of Stanmore, into one of the richest heiresses in England, and feels the wealth, of which she holds the successor to the title has been unjustly deprived, a burden and a curse. How she bears herself under her difficulties, anp finally discovers a most satisfactory escape from them, we shall leave readers to discover for themselves. The first volume, in which we see Nora Darcy as the presiding genius of her learned but incapable father's parish—to all intents and purposes, except as regards preaching and reading the service, the Vicaress of Woodside—is, perhaps, the best part of the book, and takes thorough hold of our attention by the brightness and pleasantness of many of the still-life scenes we come upon in the course of it. But, indeed, the book is full of good and careful work from end to end, and very much above the average level of merit.

"Crying for Vengeance," by Ellen C. Clayton, author of "Queens of Song," &c. (3 vols.: Tinsley).—There is a great deal of wickedness perpetrated in these three volumes which may well cry for vengeance, though the hero—so to call him—must we fancy be held a murderer only by accident. The vicissitudes of fortune that befall most of the dramatis personæ are extraordinary, and, in fact, not altogether comprehensible. It might be going too far to call the book unreadable, but it is feeble and inflated, and certainly not worth reading.

DEATH.

On the 12th inst., at the Rectory, Stirchley, Shropshire, the Rev. HUGO MORETON PHILLIPS, M.A., aged 81, for 50 years Rector of the above parish.

THE NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.
Now ready at all the Libraries.

A JEWEL OF A GIRL. By the author of "Queenie," &c. 3 vols.
MAUD LESLIE. By Lady CHARLES THYNNE. 2 vols.
TWO TALES OF MARRIED LIFE: HARD TO BEAR, by GEORGIANA M. CRAIK; and A TRUE MAN, by M. C. STIRLING. 3 vols.
GLORY. By Mrs. G. LINNÆUS BANKS. 3 vols.
ONLY A LOVE STORY. By IZA DUFFUS HARDY. 3 vols.
CHEAP EDITION of PHŒBE, JUNIOR. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 1 vol. 5s. bound and illustrated.
THE SQUIRE'S COURTSHIP. By Mrs. MACKENZIE DANIEL. 3 vols. [Just ready.
HURST and BLACKETT, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.
ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

Price 6d., or free by post, 8d.
MDME. DEMOREST'S
WHAT TO WEAR, AND HOW TO MAKE IT.
Information on Dress and Dressmaking. Contains nearly 500 miniature illustrations of Ladies and Children's Fashions for Autumn and Winter, with full descriptions of latest styles, &c., including materials, trimmings, walking, and outdoor costumes, dinner, evening, and other toilets, jewellery, latest coiffures, millinery, and every new and desirable article connected with Ladies' and Children's Dress.
Just what every lady, milliner, dressmaker, draper, warehouseman, and outfitter wants to know about the Autumn and Winter Fashions.
Sold by all Booksellers and Newsagents, and at every Railway Station.—WILLIAM and ROGERS NEWS CO., General Agents for Demorest's Reliable Patterns, 11, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

24th Edition, 8vo, cloth, pp. 1,102, price 16s.
HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. LAURIE, M.D. Completely re-arranged and revised, by R. S. GUTTERIDGE, M.D. The most comprehensive Guide published for the use of families, emigrants, and missionaries, being free of all technicalities. The present edition contains, in addition to the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of females and children, many important new chapters, comprising among others the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, plain directions for the treatment of accidents, and illustrations delineating the minor operations in surgery. Hydropathic appliances, affection of the eyes (with a description of the eyes and their appendages, and illustrations shewing the various parts of the eye). Full directions are also given for the treatment of diseases prevalent in tropical climates. A new and concise Dictionary of Medical Terms and Treatment, with leading indications of treatment prefixed to the various chapters and divisions.—An Epitome of the above, 29th Edition, price 5s.
LEITH and ROSS, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, and 9, Vere Street, London, W.

STANDARD MUSICAL WORKS for COLLEGES and SCHOOLS. By J. T. STONE.
FOR THE PIANOFORTE: THE FIRST SIX MONTHS AT THE PIANO. 5s.—ELEMENTARY INSTRUCTIONS. Twentieth Edition. 5s.—FACILE INSTRUCTIONS. Sixteenth Edition. 4s.—CONCISE INSTRUCTIONS. 3s.
FOR THE ORGAN: COMPLETE INSTRUCTIONS. Ninth Edition. 5s.—THE CLASSICAL ORGANIST. In Three Vols., £1 1s. each, or in Fifty-four Numbers, 2s. each.—THE ORGAN STUDENT'S COMPANION. In six vols., 7s. 6d. each; or in Twenty-four Books, 2s. each.
FOR THE HARMONIUM: COMPLETE INSTRUCTIONS. 5s.—THE HARMONIUM MISCELLANY. In Twelve Numbers. 3s. each.
FOR SINGING:—THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL INSTRUCTIONS. 6s.
The Publishers confidently direct the attention of Professors and Teachers of Music to the above Works. The whole series have a large and increasing circulation.
London: BREWER and CO., 14 and 15, Poultry, Cheapside, and No. 23, Bishopsgate Street Within.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.
BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.—The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

VIGNETTES BEAUTIFULLY COLOURED for 2s.—Address Mrs. RUSSELL, 30, Seafield, West Brighton.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

THE KENSINGTON SCHOOL OF ART EMBROIDERY will be opened November 1.—A Course of Four Lessons given in any description of Fancy Needlework for 10s. 6d. Crewel, best quality, as used by the School, 1s. 6d. per doz., all materials equally low.—95, High Street, Kensington.

WOOD-CUTTING for AMATEURS.—No previous knowledge required. Thousands of pretty things in Cut Wood, Baskets, Stands for Flowers, &c., Candelabras, Pipe Cases, &c., &c., can be cut by Lorin's Wood-cutting Machines, everything complete. Drawings, saws, &c., from 8s.—Wholesale and Retail, to be had at the Manufacturers, JACQUES LORIN FILS, 3, Rue de la Fidélité, Paris. Catalogues free on application.

THE WIZARD'S BOX of MAGIC. Instructions and Apparatus for performing Ten Capital Conjuring Tricks. One hour's amusement. Post free, 14 stamps.—H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street., W.C.

THE MOST LAUGHABLE THING on EARTH.—A new Parlour Pastime, 50,000 comical transformations for Evening Parties. Post free for 14 stamps.—H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS, 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

MALVERN COLLEGE.
The ANNUAL EXAMINATION for ENTRANCE EXHIBITIONS and SCHOLARSHIPS will be held on December 20th and 21st.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
Mansion House Buildings, City, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S
SPOONS AND FORKS.

Electro-Silver Plate on Nickel.	Fiddle or Plain	Bet. Qual.
12 Tablespoons or Forks, per doz.	£1 10 0	£2 0 0
12 Dessert Spoons	1 4 0	1 12 0
12 Teaspoons	0 12 0	0 16 0
Salt, Mustard, or Egg Spoons	0 5 0	0 8 0
1 Pair Sugar Tongs	0 2 6	0 3 6

MAPPIN and WEBB
MANUFACTURERS,
76, 77, and 78, Oxford Street, West End, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

NOTICE.—Manufacture of Spoons and Forks.—Messrs. ELKINGTON and CO. beg to announce that having succeeded in carrying out several important improvements in the above manufacture, they are now enabled to offer their guaranteed qualities at such prices as, while fully maintaining their high quality, place them within the reach of all classes. Revised Illustrated Price List can be had on application.
ADDRESS—ELKINGTON and CO.
LONDON—22, Regent Street, W.
42, Moorgate Street, E.C.
LIVERPOOL—25, Church Street.
MANCHESTER—St. Ann's Square, or to the Manufactory, NEWHALL STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

NOTICE.—CLEARANCE SALE OF CHINA, EARTHENWARE, and GLASS, commencing OCTOBER 8.
Messrs. DAVENPORT and CO. beg to inform their friends and the Public generally that they intend disposing of the whole of their Surplus Stock of China, Earthenware, and Glass, on their Premises, 82, Fleet Street, London, and 30, Canning Place, Liverpool, at a reduction of 25 per cent. discount off usual prices. Commencing October 8, 1877.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons.—

The Osborne, in pink or green	£3 5 0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3 13 6
The Bramble, in all colours	4 4 0
The One Thousand and Two	5 5 0
The One Thousand and Two A	5 5 0
The Japanese Bamboo	6 6 0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

CHUBB'S SAFES and LOCKS.—128, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, ST. PAUL'S. Communication by Special Private Wire with their West End Branch at 68, St. James's Street, Pall Mall; and Safe Factory, Old Kent Road, S.E. Lock Factory, Wolverhampton. Illustrated Price List sent free.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. 6d. per bushel; households for bread, 10s.; wheat meal for brown bread, 9s. 4d.; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, 5s. 4d. per bushel, or 20s. per sack; buckwheat, maize, and barley meal, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d.; ground pollard, 1s. 6d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG.

COCK'S READING SAUCE
Is the best and most economical Sauce ever manufactured
FOR FISH, ENRICHING SOUPS, GRAVIES, &c.
It only requires a trial to convince the purchaser of its excellence.
CAUTION.—The genuine is protected by Trade Mark, viz., CHARLES COCKS' Signature on a white ground across the Reading Arms.

LEA and PERRINS' SAUCE.—In consequence of Spurious Imitations, which are calculated to deceive the Public, LEA and PERRINS have adopted a New Label, bearing their Signature, "LEA AND PERRINS," which signature is placed on every bottle of WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE, and without which none is genuine.—Sold wholesale by the proprietors, Worcester; Crosse and Blackwell, London, and Export Oilmen generally; Retail, by dealers in sauces throughout the world.

Established 1837.
CUSTARDS WITHOUT EGGS.
ALFRED BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER makes the finest Custards without Eggs, and at one-half the cost and trouble. Sold by all Chemists, Italian Warehousemen, and Grocers.—Wholesale at BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon Street, London.
In packets, price 6d. and 1s. each.
Manufactory—69, Worcester Street, Birmingham.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY | "THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."
Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS. 1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—Mr. Williamson, 9, South Street, Scarborough, writes:—"I have seen their beneficial effect for years in cases of Consumption, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, &c." 1s. 1½d.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
PETER ROBINSON, of Regent Street,
has just completed some large purchases
from the Lyons Manufacturers, at a great advantage,
and can supply really Good Black Silks,
at 2s 6½d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 5s 6d., 6s. 9d., 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 10s 9d.
THE EMPRESS BLACK SILK, at 6s 6d.
is specially recommended for Good Wear
by the Manufacturer.
Also DEGOVE'S PURE BLACK SILK,
which gives Universal Satisfaction,
at 5s., 7s., and 8s.
For Patterns address
PETER ROBINSON, REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262,
where the above can only be obtained.
BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS,
exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s 6d.
A Special Bargain
in LYONS VELVET, at 10s. 9d.
BLACK SILK TRIMMING VELVETS,
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
at PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262.

A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK.

For 4½ & 5 Gs.	formerly 6½ & 7 Guineas.
For 7 Guineas	formerly 9 Guineas.
For 10 Guineas	formerly 14 Guineas.

Perfectly new styles.
Exquisitely cut and trimmed by French Artists.
Photographs and Patterns of the Silks free.
Address PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and the gummed appearance so objectionable to other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Speciality,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
59s. 6d. and 3½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9 guineas
36 inches long for 10½ guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
It is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

GASK and GASK.
NEW VIGONIA CLOTH, 21½d. per yard, in new autumn shades; also FINE French Cachemires, 2s. 11d., double width; and the FASHIONABLE SNOW-FLAKE CLOTH, 16½d.; with a large collection of NEW DRESS FABRICS, from 10d. to 3s 9d. per yard. Patterns free.
Oxford Street and Wells Street.

NEW AUTUMN COSTUMES, made of the Fashionable Foreign and English Fabrics from novel and elegant PARIS MODELS, 2 guineas to 6½ guineas.
RICH BLACK SILK COSTUMES, exceptionally good, 4 guineas.
SILK COSTUME SKIRTS, 21s.; with a vast variety of Costumes of all kinds, equally cheap.
GASK and GASK, Oxford Street, and Wells Street.

GASK and GASK.
NEW LYONS SILKS, Black and Colours, still cheaper. The best makes of BLACK SILKS, recommended for wear, and every shade of colour in all qualities, 3s. 3d. to 7s. 9d. per yard.
NEW FANCY SILKS. Patterns free.
58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street; 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, Wells Street.

WOOLLEN CLOTHS.
Waterproof Tweeds, Matelasse Cloths, Sealskins, Fur Beaters, and other materials for Ladies' Jackets; also every kind of Woollen Goods for Gentlemen's and Boys' wear.
C. MEEKING and CO., Woollen Warehouse,
111 and 112, Hatton Garden, Holborn Circus, London.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.,
IMPORTERS.
TURKEY CARPETS.
PERSIAN CARPETS.
INDIAN CARPETS.
35 and 36, OLD BOND STREET.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)
BOYS' SUITS.
SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

HENRY GLAVE'S
GRAND EXHIBITION OF COSTUMES
AND OTHER NOVELTIES.
At the Grand Autumn Exhibition and Costume Contest just concluded at the Alexandra Palace we exhibited upwards of Fifty very superior Ladies' and Children's French Model Costumes, and many new things in Mantles, Jackets, Millinery, Flowers, &c., which obtained 15 prizes, and were highly commended for style and cheapness.
Patterns of Materials, Photographs, and every particular, post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
GRAND EXHIBITION OF AUTUMN
DRESS FABRICS.
1,000 New Patterns of the choicest Shades and designs, the productions of various European nations.
2,000 yards of Autumn Serge, 10¾d. the yard.
A Diagonal Woven Texture, 6¾d.; wonderfully cheap.
Yachting Serges, 6¾d. and 10¾d. the yard.
Yachting Beges, 8¾d. and 11½d. the yard.
Matelasse Serge, 1s. 3½d. (Sage, Olive Green, &c.)
Estamene Serges, 1s. 3½d. and 1s. 6½d.
Homespun Estamene, 1s. 6½d., 27 in. wide.
New Fabrics, "Snowflakes," "Camel's Hair," and "Vienna Cloths."
Shetland Estamene, 27 in. wide, 1s. 4½d. the yard.
Poil de Chameau, French production, all wool, 20 in. wide, 1s. 9½d. the yard.
The Royal Blue Naval Serge, 1s. 0½d. (all wool).
The "Inflexible" Serge, 1s. 0½d. and 1s. 4½d.
The "Princess" Serge, 1s. 6½d. and 1s. 11½d. yard.
The New Circassian Cord, 11½d. yd., superb colours.
Autumn Matalessé, 10½d. a yard.
Scarboro' Twill, 1s. 0½d.; Derby and Swiss Matelasse, 1s. 0½d.
New Autumn Rink Skirting, 1s. 11½d. the yard, 40 in. wide.
Indian Cashmere, Autumn Shades, 46 in. wide, 2s. 11½d. yard.
These and other Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW SILK PATTERNS are now ready.
The Princess Black Silk, 3s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 4s. 9d. } A New Make of
The Princess Black Silk, 5s. 9d. } Extreme Richness
The Princess Black Silk, 6s. 9d.
BLACK SILKS, 1s. 6½d. to 10s. the yard.
The Queen's Black Silk, 7s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 8s. 11d. } Superb Goods &
The Queen's Black Silk, 9s. 11d. } Splendid Wear.
The Queen's Black Silk, 10s. 11d.
A special parcel of Coloured Silks, 2s. 11½d. yard.
Coloured Gros Grain Silks, 3s. 11½d., 4s. 11d., 5s. 11d., and 6s. 11d. the yard.
Floral Silks for Trimmings, 3s. 9½d.
Japanese Figures, 1s. 3½d.
The Velvet and Velveteen Stock is now complete.
A Special Lot Black Velveteens, 1s. 11½d., and Colours, at 2s. 10½d.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.
Double-width Homespun Serge, 54 in. wide, 12½d. in Blue only.
Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 1s. 3½d.
Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s. 11½d.
Double-width Melton Cloths, 1s. 6½d., 1s. 11½d., and 2s. 11½d.
Any of the above are less by the piece of about 50 yards.
Fine Venetian Twills, 51 in. wide, 4s. 11d. a yard.
60-inch Waterproof Tweeds, 1s. 3½d., 1s. 11½d., 2s. 11d., and 3s. 11d.
Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 6s. 11d.
Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d.
Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard.
All Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
UNDERCLOTHING and OUTFITTING.
A new Illustrated Price List is now ready, and can be sent free to any address.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street.

THE IRISH WAREHOUSE.—AUTUMN, 1877.

IRISH POPLINS. The Latest Fashions for the season, decidedly favouring plain dresses, guarantees a much larger demand than usual for this very favourite and most useful fabric. Amongst our new shades will be found all the latest additions in the several qualities, including our own special make, only to be had from us.
Patterns post free.

IRISH LINENS. IRISH LINENS, ready for immediate use. Every article of Linen requisite for the Household at Civil Service Prices.
IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS, from the least expensive to the finest quality made.

AUTUMN HOSIERY.—Balbriggan, the new quality, brings these celebrated goods within the range of medium price hosiery. Black, Coloured, and Unbleached.
INGLIS and TINCKLER, 147, Regent Street, London, W.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 40s. and 45s. half-dozen.—41 and 44, Poultry. Branch—308, Oxford Street, London.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
The purest Oil, and by Almond flavouring rendered palatable and easy of digestion.
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.
British Medical Journal says—Whilst securing the beneficial results traceable to Cod Liver Oil as a valuable tonic and dietetic, we have found no difficulty in inducing our little patients to take it.
Sanitary Record says—We have tried its effect on the most delicate constitutions with marked effect. So well are the odour and taste of the Oil disguised that children will take the preparation with avidity.
Medical Times says—The taste is decidedly masked by the almond flavouring.
Medical Press—Has an agreeable smell and flavour, and we can testify that the result is satisfactory.
Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists,
And Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited),
Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 82, Southwark St., London.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.,
A LARGE PURCHASE OF
NEW COLOURED SILKS,
at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., and 4s. 4½d. per yard, also a richer quality at 5s. 3d., usually sold at 7s. 6d. per yard. 250 shades to select from. Patterns free.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES OF
BLACK GROS GRAINS.
This extensive purchase comprises Silks of the best and most reliable makes, and are specially recommended. Prices 2s. 6½d., 3s. 3½d., and 3s. 9d. per yard. Also richer goods from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

COLOURED GENOA VELVETS
to match every Silk, short pile, well covered, suitable for Gowns, 6s. 11d. per yard, any length cut. A special purchase of Black Lyons Velvet, all silk, at 9s. 11d. per yard. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

COLOURED SILK COSTUMES
of the latest designs and most fashionable description, in all the new colour Silks, commencing at 6½ guineas. Patterns of the Silks and Engravings post free.

BLACK SILK COSTUMES,
made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, price with bodice complete, 5½ guineas. Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN
WINTER COSTUMES.
Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas.
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling, Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas.
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL AND WEDDING DRESSES.
Now ready several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas.
The "Dora," a favourite dress in Tarlatan, any colour, profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train, one guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 28s. 9d., with material for bodice.
The Styles of the above, with many others, can be seen in the new book of engravings, which is sent post free on application to
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.,
having concluded the purchase of large quantities of
SEAL FUR SKINS
and Squirrel Furs, they are now on sale as quoted below.
Russian Seal Fur Jackets, loose shapes, 24 to 28 inches deep, 6 to 10 guineas.
Ditto fitting shapes, 30 to 36 inches deep, 9 to 20 guineas.
South Sea Seals, loose shapes, 2 to 4 guineas.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN
MANTLES AND PALETOTS,
Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 2 to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL
CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.
The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR WINTER DRESSES,
in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour, From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

IN 62 NEW SHADES OF COLOUR.
CACHEMIRE DE PARIS.
This elegant material is all wool, beautifully soft, and richer in its colourings than any article previously introduced. 48 inches wide, 2s. 11d. and 3s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOS, all wool,
This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

A NEW FABRIC FOR PALETOTS, &c.
POIL DE CHAMEAU (Registered).
This elegant fabric, though very warm, is remarkably light and soft, and can be had in choice shades of Fawn, Drab, Grey, Light Brown, &c. 54 inches wide, from 5s. 6d. per yd. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford St., W.

A VARIETY OF NEW MATERIALS FOR
WARM WINTER PETTICOATS,
including a large assortment of Silk Striped Cloth Skirtings, Reversible Felts, plain colours, New Striped Flannel Cashmere, &c., from 2s. 11d. to 5s. 6d. per yd. Patterns free.

NOW ON SALE AT HALF-PRICE.
1,000 UNMADE PALETOTS (Black),
Richly embroidered on very fine Cashmere or Diagonal Cloth, full size and newest shapes, from 29s. 6d. to 42s. each, formerly 3 to 4 guineas.

IN WHITE, BLACK, AND ALL NEW COLOURS.
VELVET-FINISH'D VELVETEENS,
beautifully soft, rich, and very wide.
This charming Fabric can be had in Black, from 2s. 9d. to 5s. 6d. per yard, and in 35 choice shades of colour, at 3s. 9d. per yard. Patterns free
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CONSTIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: "It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

CONSUMPTION! CONSUMPTION! SILPHIUM CYRENAICUM (the celebrated plant of the Ancients) has now been acknowledged by the principal celebrities of the French faculty to be the only cure for Consumption, and all affections of the Pulmonary Organs, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c., &c. Its effect is magical, and the cure certain. To be obtained from all Chemists, with pamphlets, full instructions, &c. Wholesale from London Patent Medicine houses.

GOUT and RHEUMATISM.—The excruciating pain of gout or rheumatism is quickly relieved and cured in a few days by that celebrated medicine, BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.
They require no restraint of diet during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part.
Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA. The best Remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and safest aperient for delicate constitutions, ladies, and children. Of all Chemists.

DIGESTIVE LOZENGES
OF
VICHY.
Manufactured from the Salts extracted from the Mineral Waters.
The Vichy Lozenges should be taken by those persons whose digestion is difficult, painful, or laborious.
In cases of slow and difficult digestion, a few of the Lozenges should be taken before each repast.
The Lozenges are flavoured with peppermint, lemon, vanilla, rose, orange flowers, or aniseed.
In Boxes, at 1s. and 2s. each.
VICHY SALTS FOR BATHS.
In Packets for one bath, 1s. 6d. each.
VICHY BARLEY SUGAR.
An excellent digestive bonbon. In Boxes, 1s 6d., 2s. 6d., and 3s. 6d.

All these preparations are guaranteed by the French Government. Sold by all respectable Chemists.

BLACK SILKS EXTRAORDINARY. £10,000 worth of Richest Lyons Black Silks. The cheapest ever offered. 1s. 11½d., 2s. 11½d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d. yard. Patterns free.
BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent Street.

SILKS—SILKS—SILKS. The cheapest and best Black, Coloured, Fancy, and Japanese Plain and Figured Silks, from 21s full dress. Patterns free.
BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent Street.

SERGES—SERGES—SERGES. The New Estamene, Devonshire, Somerset, Wellington, Trouville, Scarborough, Plimsoll, stout, medium, and fine hand made Wool Serges of every colour and description, from 8½d. to 2s. 6d. yard. Patterns free.
BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent Street.

AUTUMN DRESS FABRICS.

From 8½d. yard. { All the New Snowflake Tweeds, Camelhair Cloths, Foule Serges, Cashmere, Vicughn, Twilled Flannels, Balcan and Molleton Serges, Fancy Materials, Repps, Satin Cloths, Saxony Wools (very soft), Satin Cloth Skirtings, and 100 other New Costume Cloths, from 8½d. to 2s. 6d. yard. Patterns free.—BAKER and CRISP.

HIMALAYAN and FRENCH CASHMERINOS. 1,000 pieces, consisting of all the new and useful colours for autumn wear; also all the fine light colours for walking, dinner, or wedding costumes, from 15s. 6d. full dress. Patterns free.—198, Regent Street.

MATCHLESS COSTUMES.—CLOAKS. JACKETS.—New Engravings Free. The Newest, most Ladylike, and most reasonable-priced Costumes, Jackets, Ulsters, Cloaks, and Furs of every description. Engravings and Patterns Free.
BAKER and CRISP, Regent Street.

SPECIALITY.—VELVETEENS EXTRAORDINARY. The Rich Lyons Moleskin Silk Velveteens in Black from 17s. 6d. dress. In all the new colour, from 2s. 11d. yard.
Patterns Free.—BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent St.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157a, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157a, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers

---

ROWLAND'S ODONTO. Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

PALACE SOAP, 20s. per lb., for State Apartments.—PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond Street, are the only makers of this exquisite soap. Single cakes, 5s., or six in a carton, 27s. 6d. Piesse and Lubin also make some charming flower-scented soaps, at 10s. per lb., such as opoponax soap, violet soap, frangipanni soap, altar rose soap, and others, in cakes, 2s. 6d. each, suitable for superior use.—Royal Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street.

PIESSE and LUBIN'S SWEET SCENTS.—Opoponax, Jockey Club, Patchouly, Frangipanni, Kiss-me-Quick, White Rose, and 1,000 others from every flower that breathes a fragrance, 2s. 6d. each, 3 bottles in a case, 7s. The above sweet scents in sachet powder, 1s. 6d. each, can be forwarded by post. Sold by fashionable Druggists and Perfumers in all parts of the world.

PIESSE and LUBIN'S PESTACHIO NUT SKIN AND COMPLEXION POWDER imparts a natural whiteness and youthful delicacy to the skin attainable by no other means; also represses the unpleasantness of too copious perspiration.—2, New Bond Street, London, W. May be had of all the fashionable perfumers and druggists throughout the earth. In boxes, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.

NUDA VERITAS.—Grey Hair restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

GOLDEN HAIR.—Robare's Aureoline produces, by two or three applications, the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. of all perfumers and chymists. Wholesale, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough Street, W., and 93 and 95, City Road, E.C., London; Pinaud 44, Meyer, Boul. de Strasbourg, 37, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; and Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

HAIR DESTROYER.—248, High Holborn, London.—ALEX. ROSS's DEPILATORY removes superfluous hair from face and arms without injury. 3s. 6d. Sent post free, carefully packed, for 54 stamps by Alex. Ross.

THE NOSE MACHINE applied to the nose for an hour daily so directs the soft cartilage of the nose that an ill-formed one is quickly shaped, 10s. 6d. Sent for stamps.—ALEX. ROSS, 248, High Holborn, London.

THOMPSON AND CAPPER'S
DENTIFRICE WATER
Arrests Decay in the Teeth and Sweetens the Breath. 55, Bold Street, Liverpool. Sold in 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Bottles, by all Chemists.

MORSON'S
PEPSINE,
AND ITS PREPARATIONS
FOR INDIGESTION.
SEE NAME ON LABEL.
HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

As WINE, in bottles, at 3s., 5s., 9s.
LOZENGES, at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.
GLOBULES, at 2s., 3s. 6d., and 6s. 6d.
And as POWDER, in one-ounce bottles, at 4s. each.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS, AND THE MANUFACTURERS,
MORSON and SON,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQUARE, LONDON.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S EMACERATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing. 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, S.W.; or through any Chemist

---

"FER BRAVAIS."
BRAVAIS' DIALYSED IRON.
THE ONLY PURE SOLUTION OF IRON WITHOUT ACID.
"IRON and OXYGEN combined, to the exclusion of all Acids, or Soluble Hydrate of Peroxide of Iron."
Vide Dr. J. RENGADE'S Report.
Prepared by RAOUL, BRAVAIS, and CO., 13, Rue Lafayette, Paris; London Office: 8, Idol Lane, Tower Street, E.C.
FIRST BRONZE MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1875.
SOLE PRIZE, PHILADELPHIA EXPOSITION, 1876.
This admirable Preparation does not CONSTIPATE, or disturb the digestive organs, and neither injures nor blackens the teeth. Its effect as a reconstituent are rapid and certain. IT HAS NO STYPTIC TASTE, and it is admirably adapted for all continuous treatment by Iron, possessing all the advantages of this MOST APPROVED TONIC in the highest degree. N.B. A LONDON PHYSICIAN WRITES: "I have given it to patients who have been unable to take Iron in any other form." PRICES: Bottle, full size, 4s. 6d.; small ditto, 3s.; in Card Box with drop measure complete. N.B. The full size bottles contain sufficient for about two months' regular treatment.
To be had of all leading Chemists and Druggists.

ESTABLISHED
1832.
NONE
GENUINE EXCEPT IN PINK PAPER
WRAPPERS.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
AMONG THE CULTIVATED AND REFINED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, THIS RENOWNED PREPARATION IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED FAVOURITE WITH BOTH SEXES. OVER FORTY YEARS' TRIAL AND EXPERIENCE HAVE ESTABLISHED ITS SUPERIORITY AND EXCELLENCE.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
IT CANNOT FAIL TO RESTORE GREY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. WHEN THE HAIR TURNS GREY, LOSES ITS LUSTRE, AND FALLS OUT, IT SIMPLY REQUIRES NOURISHMENT. MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER, BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION, STRENGTHENS AND INVIGORATES THE HAIR, AND, BY THE OPERATION OF NATURAL CAUSES, GREY OR WHITE HAIR IS QUICKLY RESTORED TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. IT WILL STOP ITS FALLING, AND INDUCE A HEALTHY AND MOST LUXURIANT GROWTH. USE NO OTHER PREPARATION WITH IT, NOT EVEN OIL OR POMADE, OR ZYLO-BALSAMUM.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
IS THE BEST
TO RESTORE GREY HAIR.
BECAUSE IT IS MADE FROM THE CHOICEST MATERIALS, AND PREPARED WITH THE UTMOST CARE AND SKILL. OVER FORTY YEARS THE FAVOURITE PREPARATION. ENJOYING BY FAR THE LARGEST SALE, IT MUST BE THE BEST. IT DOES NOT DYE THE HAIR, BUT STRENGTHENS IT. GREY HAIRS SOON DISAPPEAR. BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION THE ROOTS ARE STRENGTHENED, THE SOFT AND SILKY TEXTURE OF HEALTHY HAIR FOLLOWS ITS USE.
Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Articles

MRS. S. A. ALLEN
manufactures two entirely distinct Preparations for the Hair.
One or the other is suited to every condition of the Human Hair. Both are never required at one time. For details as to each Preparation, kindly read above and below this paragraph. Readers can easily determine which of the two they require. These Preparations have a world-wide reputation. Enormous and increasing sale through Forty Years.
Every Chemist and Dealer in Toilet Articles has both Preparations.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
ZYLO-BALSAMUM.
For the Growth and Preservation
of the Hair.
It is a cooling, vegetable, and transparent liquid, without sediment

A SIMPLE TONIC AND DRESSING OF INESTIMABLE VALUE TO BOTH SEXES. THE FAVOURITE WITH THE YOUNG AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE NO GREY HAIR. IT WILL NOT CHANGE THE COLOUR OF THE HAIR, BUT, BY EARLY USE, IT WILL PREVENT IT TURNING GREY. PREMATURE LOSS OF THE HAIR, SO COMMON IN THESE DAYS, MAY BE ENTIRELY PREVENTED BY THE USE OF ZYLO-BALSAMUM. PROMPT RELIEF IN THOUSANDS OF CASES HAS BEEN AFFORDED WHERE THE HAIR HAS BEEN COMING OUT IN HANDFULS. IT PROMOTES A HEALTHY AND VIGOROUS GROWTH. HAIR DRESSED WITH ZYLO-BALSAMUM IS ALWAYS CLEAN, FREE FROM DANDRUFF, AND WITH THAT BEAUTIFUL GLOSS ONLY SEEN IN HEALTHY HAIR. IT IS DELIGHTFULLY FRAGRANT. NO OIL OR POMADE SHOULD BE USED WITH IT.
CAUTION!—The Genuine only in Bluish Grey Wrappers.
Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Articles

---

THE FAVOURITE TOILET WATER OF THE AGE.
GOLDEN STAR
BAY LEAF WATER,
TRIPLE DISTILLED FROM THE FRESH LEAVES of the BAY TREE (Myrcia Acris), FOR THE TOILET, NURSERY, AND BATH.
A
Toilet Water
of peculiar and delightful fragrance,
delicate and lasting,
refreshing and soothing.
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,
triple distilled from the fresh leaves of the Bay Tree (Myrcia Acris). Indispensable
and a luxury for the TOILET, NURSERY, and BATH.
A few drops on a Sponge or Towel moistened with water, and the FACE and HANDS bathed with it, is very beneficial to the skin, removing all roughness. Most highly recommended to apply after SHAVING. A small quantity in the BATH gives a delightful aroma, and it has most remarkable CLEANSING PROPERTIES. Particularly adapted to the BATHING OF INFANTS and young children; a few drops are sufficient for a bath of water. Most grateful to INVALIDS and all who suffer from HEADACHE, from mental labour or fatigue. Buy only the genuine
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,
sold in three sizes Toilet Bottles,
2s. 6d., 5s., 8s., by Chemists
and Perfumers, or on receipt of stamps from the wholesale depôt, 114 & 116,
Southampton Row,
London.

DEAR VANITY,—I will begin my letter this week by singing the praises of a medicine which has the valuable property of curing what all the world is suffering from at this season more or less—namely, a cold in the head. Surely that complaint is one of the lesser evils that flesh is heir to, and I think the man who has discovered a sure remedy for this plague ought to be ranked among the benefactors of the human race. The other morning I woke with that most uncomfortable of feelings, a general oppression, which is the certain precursor of a catarrh. A that black despair seized me, but luckily I remembered that if taken in time the mystic contents of a little green glass bottle might save me from the prospect of many days' discomfort to myself and others. I sped to the nearest chemist's, and found the longed for remedy, and before night was cured; it is called "Glykaline," a colourless, tasteless fluid, three drops of which taken at intervals of an hour will infallibly do away with the most obstinate of colds. All this sounds rather like an advertisement, so I beg you to understand that I have no personal or pecuniary interest in the sale of Glykaline, and only sing its praises from a wish to spread its healing properties around, and, by recommending it, confer a boon on the suffering human race.
TALON ROUGE,
Vanity Fair, March 17, 1877.

GLYKALINE,
THE NEW REMEDY,
FOR THE EFFECTUAL CURE OF COLDS, CATARRHS, COUGHS,
HAY FEVER, and
ALL DISORDERS OF THE MUCOUS MEMBRANE.

GLYKALINE is a reliable and speedy Specific; curing Colds in a few hours.

GLYKALINE is very efficacious in Hay Fever, clearing the bronchial tubes.

GLYKALINE is prepared by LEATH and ROSS, Homœopathic Chemists, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C., and 9, Vere Street, Oxford Street, W., and sold by all Chemists, in bottles, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; by post, 1s. 3d. and 3s.

NEURALINE,
THE NEW REMEDY,
GIVES INSTANT RELIEF to TOOTHACHE,
NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM,
GOUT, and
ALL NERVE AND LOCAL PAINS.

NEURALINE, most valuable for Toothache: its timely use frequently obviates the necessity of having a tooth extracted.

NEURALINE is of decided service in all cases of Neuralgia or Tic Doloureaux.

MR. EDGAR, of Butt Lighthouse, Island of Lewis, writing to Sir James Matheson, says "Mrs. Edgar cannot express her thanks to Lady Matheson for the Neuraline. It proved the most successful remedy she had ever applied. The relief experienced was almost instantaneous."—Dated Nov. 27th, 1869.

NEURALINE is now in demand in all parts of the world. It gives relief in every case; in most cases, cures permanently; and, in some cases, is successful by a single application. Prepared by LEATH and ROSS, Homœopathic Chemists, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C., and 9, Vere Street, Oxford Street, W., and sold by all chemists, in bottles, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; by post, 1s. 3d. and 3s. Each bottle is accompanied by illustrated directions for using.

AUROSINE,
THE NEW REMEDY,
FOR THE IMPROVEMENT of
THE HANDS,
THE SKIN,
THE LIPS, and
THE EXCORIATED CUTICLE.

AUROSINE preserves the Hands agreeably soft, supple, white, and free from chaps.

AUROSINE is an excellent preparation for correcting the results of sea-air, and removing roughness of the skin.

AUROSINE will be appreciated by all whose lips are cracked.

AUROSINE is invaluable for Irritation or Excoriation of the Skin.

AUROSINE is not deleterious, is of vegetable origin (without mineral admixture), will not injure the tenderest skin, or soil the most delicate dress.

AUROSINE is recognised as a useful and beautiful toilet requisite, necessary to the proper keeping of the hands and skin. It is prepared by LEATH and ROSS, Homœopathic Chemists, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C., and 9, Vere Street, Oxford Street, W., and sold by all chemists, in bottles, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 4d.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE,
THE NEW PREPARATION
FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF
THE TEETH AND GUMS, is AN ASTRINGENT,
A DETERGENT,
AN ANTISEPTIC, and
A PRESERVATIVE.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE cleanses the Teeth from Tartar and all Incrustations.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE increases the whiteness of the Teeth, brightens their enamel, fastens them when loose, and arrests the advance of decay.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE is in conformity with the natural requirements of the Teeth, and may be implicitly trusted as it contains no objectionable ingredient.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE is invaluable to all whose Gums are spongy, flaccid, or discoloured, as it hardens the substance, restores the brilliant ruby colour, and beautifies the Gums in every respect.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE adds to the external smoothness of the Gums, staunches the bleeding of them, and retains their healthy state.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE sweetens the breath, cools the mouth, dispels the odour of tobacco, and purifies the palate.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE is simple in use, a few drops only being required to be let fall on the moistened toothbrush, or added to a wine glass of water to rinse the mouth.

ANTISEPTIC TINCTURE is prepared in bottles, 1s.; by post, 1s. 4d., by LEATH and ROSS, Homœopathic Chemists, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, and 9, Vere Street, Oxford Street, W., and sold by all Chemists.

LEATH and ROSS'S
PLAIN DIRECTIONS
FOR THE
TREATMENT OF COMMON DISEASES
Gratis and Post Free.

MERCHANT SHIPPERS and the TRADE supplied on the most LIBERAL TERMS with all HOMŒOPATHIC PREPARATIONS, both MEDICINAL and DIETETIC.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER of CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE

Containing the following Popular Dance Music:—

TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
CONSTANTINOPLE QUADRILLE	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
DIE FLEDERMAUS WALTZ	JOHANN STRAUSS.
LES LOINTAINS WALTZ	EMILE WALDTEUFEL.
MAIDEN'S DREAM WALTZ	EDWARD HOFFMAN.
THE SCHONBERG GALOP	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
FLORETTA POLKA	CHAS. D'ALBERT.
PIZZICATO POLKA	J. & J. STRAUSS.
FORGET-ME-NOT GALOP	A. HECKER.

And a New Quadrille,
MOLLIE DARLING. By CHAS. D'ALBERT.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 2d.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG.

THE DISTANT SHORE. New Song by ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd during his Promenade Tour in October. Price (in E flat, F and G) 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE ROWAN TREE. New Song by M. W. BALFE. Will be sung by Madame Antoinette Sterling during her Tour in the Provinces. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

REMINISCENCES OF ENGLAND, IRELAND, and SCOTLAND. Selections of National Airs as played by all the Military Bands in Her Majesty's Service. Arranged for the Pianoforte by FRED GODFREY, B.M. Coldstream Guards. Price 2s. each net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

MARCH of THE PASHAS, for the Pianoforte. By JOHN PRIDHAM. Beautifully illustrated, with Portraits of Mehemet Ali, Suleiman Pasha, and Hobart Pasha. Price, post free, 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE FANFARE POLKA. By Charles D'ALBERT. Illustrated. Price 1s. 6d. net. Orchestra, 3s.; Septett, 2s.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	NET s.	d.
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	2	0
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Work	2	0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2	0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2	0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	1	6
RINK GALOP	2	0

All the above for Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s. each.

N.B. A complete list of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

L'ORGANISTE PRATIQUE. 240 Easy Pieces for Organ or Harmonium. By J. LEYBACH. In 3 vols., price 6s. each net, or in eight parts, each 2s. net. The above will supply a want long felt by amateur performers on the organ or harmonium, as all the pieces are very pretty without being difficult.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE- YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRE.

PIANOFORTES of every description by all the most celebrated makers from Two Guineas a Quarter.

HARMONIUMS, by Alexandre, from One Pound Five Shillings per quarter.

SECOND-HAND PIANOFORTES at immense reductions for Cash, or on the Three Years' System.—50, New Bond Street.

This day, price 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth, gilt edges.

RUBINSTEIN'S 50 BEST SONGS. With German and English Words. Also

RUBINSTEIN'S 18 VOCAL DUETS. With German and English Words. Price 2s. 6d. paper; 4s., cloth, gilt edges.
RUBINSTEIN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. Contains his Eleven Most Celebrated Pieces. Price 1s.
RUBINSTEIN'S SIX PIANOFORTE STUDIES. Price 1s.
RUBINSTEIN'S SIX PIANOFORTE PRELUDES. Price 1s.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

Each vol. price 2s. 6d. paper; 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

BEETHOVEN'S 76 SONGS.
Mendelssohn's 60 Songs.
With German and English words. The Royal Editions.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

Price 2s. 6d. paper; 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

SCHUMANN'S 75 SONGS, with German and English words. The Royal Edition.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

In 1 vol., 2s. 6d.; or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

THE SONGS OF GERMANY. A Collection of 100 of the most celebrated Volkslieder, with German and English words, the latter by Miss Hayes.
The Royal Edition.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

This day, price 1s.

HANDY-BOOK FOR CHORAL SO- CIETIES. By Dr. STARK. A complete guide for the study and practice of Part Music, including 158 Exercises, Part Songs, Rounds, &c. (56 pages.)
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

This day, price 1s.

HENNING'S FIRST BOOK FOR THE VIOLIN. A Celebrated German Method. Now for the first time published in English. It includes 162 Progressive Exercises. 40 pages, music size.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

This day, price 1s.

W. T. BEST'S FIRST ORGAN BOOK. Forty pages, music size. An Elementary and Practical Guide for Organ Students.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

This day, price 1s.

DR. CALLCOTT'S GRAMMAR OF MUSIC. Boosey's New Edition.

NANCY LEE WALTZ. On the Celebrated Song. The Waltz of the Season. Price 2s. net.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

Price 2s. each net

SANTLEY'S POPULAR SONGS.

Polly.	The Vagabond.
Fair is My Love.	The Yeoman's Wedding

Also Santley's New Song Book, in the Musical Cabinet (170), contains 10 songs, published in no other work. Price 1s.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRU- MENTS FOR AMATEURS.

THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.

The above instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co. at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATA- LOGUES of MUSIC.

Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3. HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4. VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.
Sent post free to any part of the World.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

POPULAR CLASSICS.—A series of sterling compositions for the Pianoforte Solo. Selected, edited, and fingered by WALTER MACFARREN. Sixty Numbers, price from 2s. to 5s. each. The series contains some of the most celebrated and beautiful works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Steibelt, Dussek, Hummel, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, &c. Detailed Lists forwarded gratis post free to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

	s.	d.
Figaro. Fantasia on Mozart's Opera	4	0
Cynthia. Serenade	4	0
Souvenir de Bal	4	0
Air Danois	4	0

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SYDNEY SMITH'S PIANOFORTE METHOD.
Price Five Shillings.

This unrivalled work is now firmly established as the Pianoforte Instruction-Book in nearly all the principal educational establishments in Great Britain, Ireland, Canada, the United States of America, India, Australia, New Zealand, &c. It is supplied direct by the Publishers, or may be had of any Musicseller in the world.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SIR WILLIAM STERNDALE BEN- NETT'S BARCAROLLE (from the Fourth Concerto). This beautiful composition, which is universally admitted to be the representative pianoforte piece of this great English musician, is now published in the following forms:

	s.	d.
Piano Solo	4	0
Piano Duet	4	0
Organ, arranged by Dr. Steggall	4	0

ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SELECT PIANOFORTE PIECES of STEPHEN HELLER.

	s.	d.
An Autumn Leaf (Romance, Op. 105, No. 3)	3	0
An even Song (Prelude, Op. 119, No. 16)	3	0
Aubade (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 7)	3	0
Barcarolle (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 23)	3	0
Berceuse (Study, Op. 47, No. 19)	1	0
Chanson de Mai (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 17)	1	0
Chant du Berceau (Prelude, Op. 81, No. 15)	2	6
Chant du Soir (Study, Op. 45, No. 9)	1	0
Cradle Song (Chanson de Berceau, Op. 73, No. 3)	3	0
Feuillet d'Album (Study, Op. 16, No. 15)	2	0
Halte du Chasseur (Dans les Bois, Op. 86, No. 3)	3	0
Huntsman's Song (Chant du Chasseur, Op. 73, No. 1)	3	0
Jagdlied (Study, Op. 90, No. 7)	2	6
L'Avalanche (Study, Op. 45, No. 2)	1	0
La Truite (Caprice Brillant on the Song of Schubert, Op. 33)	4	0
Liedchen (Study, Op. 46, No. 8)	1	0
On Song's bright Pinions (Improvisata on Song of Mendelssohn, Op. 67)	4	0
Ondine (Study, Op. 45, No. 16)	1	0
Parting Song (Mendelssohn's Song transcribed)	3	0
Rêverie au Soir (Study, Op. 45, No. 12)	1	0
The Watermill (Study, Op. 45, No. 20)	2	0
Un Rayon du Soleil (Study, Op. 45, No. 1)	1	0
Une petite Feuille (Op. 110)	3	0
Une petite Histoire (Study, Op. 125, No. 6)	1	0
Wanderstunden (Rêveries d'Artiste, Op. 80, No. 2)	3	0

The above pieces are among the most popular Works of this esteemed Composer. A complete catalogue of his entire Works, Op. 1 to Op. 141, is now ready, and will be forwarded post free (on application) to any part of the world.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC PRIMERS. Edited by Dr. STAINER.

Second Edition, price Two Shillings.

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER (Principal Professor of the Pianoforte at the National Training School for Music). No. 1 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

Ready on October 15.

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. No. 3 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

In the Press.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. No. 2 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

Second Edition, price Two Shillings.

CATHEDRAL PSALTER CHANTS. Edited by Rev. S. FLOOD JONES, M.A., JAMES TURLE, Rev. J. TROUTBECK, M.A., Dr. J. STAINER, and JOSEPH BARNBY.

MENDELSSOHN.—LIEDER OHNE WORTE (Songs without Words). The best and ONLY COMPLETE EDITION, containing the SEVENTH and EIGHTH BOOKS. Handsomely bound, gilt edges, folio, 12s.; octavo, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

RUBINSTEIN'S EIGHTEEN TWO- PART SONGS, with German and English words. The English Version by Madame NATALIA MACFARREN. Octavo, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM, containing Thirty Songs, with English and German words, by ROBERT SCHUMANN. Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM for YOUNG PIANISTS, containing Fifty-six Short Pieces, by ROBERT SCHUMANN (Op. 68 and Op. 15). Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM, containing Forty Songs, with the original German words, and an English version by JOHN OXENFORD. Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.
LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.,
1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20 —GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).— Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 56, Cheapside, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

BEETHOVEN'S SIX FAVOURITE WALTZES for the PIANOFORTE. Edited and Fingered by GEORGE FREDERICK WEST. 3s. each. Mozart's Favourite Waltzes, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, carefully and effectively arranged by Geo. F. West, 3s. each, post free at half-price. "In these days, when many people like to lay hands on little works by great men, these well-arranged trifles will doubtless be highly acceptable."—Vide Midland Counties Herald.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

ANGELS' VISITS. Song written by Mrs. AYLMER. Music by FRANZ ABT. 3s., post free at half-price. Also by the same distinguished composer, two new vocal duets for soprano and contralto, &c., "City Bells" and "Summer Rain." 4s., post free 24 stamps each.
London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO.

NEW SONG by Berthold Tours.

A Message to Heaven. 3s.	The Dog and the Shadow. 3s.
My Little Picture. 3s.	A Little Bird's Story. 4s.

All post free at half-price.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

THE SOLDIER'S DREAM; a Descrip- tive Fantasia for the Pianoforte. By J. PRIDHAM. Illustrated title, 4s.; post free, 24 stamps. THE SAILOR'S DREAM; a Descriptive Fantasia for the Pianoforte. By J. PRIDHAM. Illustrated title. 4s.; post free, 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

NEWEST SONGS, issued by ROBERT COCKS and CO., all post free at half-price.

I Awake and Dream. Song. J. Blumenthal. 3s.	So Far Away. J. L. Roeckel. 3s.
Summer Rain. Vocal Duet. F. Abt. 4s.	The Moss Rose and the Laurel. H. P. Danks. 3s.
The Village Queen. Song. Ch. Schreiber. 3s.	Unforgotten Days. J. L. Roeckel. 3s.
The City Bells. Vocal Duet. F. Abt. 4s.	Droop Not, Young Lover. Handel. 3s.
The Cuckoo's Concert. Song. H. P. Danks. 3s.	Awake. Stephen Adams. 3s.
Spring Morning. Song. F. Abt. 3s.	Steering. F. H. Cowen. 4s.
Biddy Malone. Irish Ballad. W. C. Russell. 3s.	"Ay or No." F. H. Cowen. 4s.
	Don't Forget Me. C. Pinsuti. 3s.

London: 6, New Burlington Street.

COME UNTO ME. Sacred Song. Written by W. H. BELLAMY, Esq. Music by Mrs. M. LINDSAY (Mrs. Worthington Bliss). Finely Illustrated Title, 4s.; post free, 24 stamps. "The melody is graceful and flowing, and beautifully adapted to the words."—Glasgow News.
London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

DUFF and STEWART'S LIST of NEW and most SUCCESSFUL SONGS:

A Bird Sang in a Hawthorn Tree (soprano), Hatton. 4s.	Loved and Lost (mezzo-soprano), Mallet. 4s.
A Maiden Sat Alone One Day (mezzo-soprano), Smart. 4s.	Minet, The (baritone), Tours. 4s.
Angels are Watching (soprano), Abt. 4s.	Only Love Can Tell (soprano), Tours. 4s.
Better Land, The (mezzo-soprano), Gounod. 4s.	O, that We Two were Maying (soprano), Gounod). 4s.
Dream of Angels, Little One (soprano), Abt. 4s.	O, Willie, Boy, Come Home (mezzo-soprano), Virginia Gabriel. 4s.
Fly Forth, O Gentle Dove (soprano), Pinsuti. 4s.	Rose Song, The (tenor), Balfe. 4s.
Gone to their Rest (mezzo-soprano), Roeckel. 4s.	Under the Lamplight (mezzo-soprano), Louisa Gray. 4s.
King and the Beggar Maid, The (baritone), Levey. 4s.	When the Bairnies are Asleep (mezzo-soprano) Lady Baker. 4s.
Lord, whom my Inmost Soul Adoreth (contralto), Hiller. 4s.

Sold at half-price, postage free, 147, Oxford Street.

THE FOUR MARIES. As sung in Mr. Kennedy's Entertainment of the "Songs of Scotland" in St. James's Hall.
Post free for 18 stamps from
METHVEN, SIMPSON, and CO., Dundee; or
C. JEFFERYS, Berners Street, London.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Piano- FORTE SCHOOL.
Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.
For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London: Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

ACCIDENTS by FLOOD and FIELD. —Accidents of all kinds may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.
Hon. A. KINNAIRD, M.P., Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.
£1,120,000 has been paid as compensation.
No. 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Sec.

WILLS' "BRISTOL MIXTURE"
MILD AND FRAGRANT.
WILLS' "SMOKING MIXTURE,"
A CHOICE COMBINATION OF "FIRST GROWTHS."
Sold everywhere in One, Two, and Four Ounce Packets, protected by our Name and Trade Mark, W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

WILLS' "THREE CASTLES." Thackeray, in the "Virginians," says: "There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better brand than the 'Three Castles.'" Sold only in Packets, protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE

PULVERMACHER'S "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."

In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to
J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS.
Sold by all Stationers throughout the World

SPECIAL NOTICE.—On MONDAY and TUESDAY, the 22nd and 23rd October, Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. will OFFER for SALE an immense stock of CARPETS and RUGS of every description; also a quantity of BORDERED CARPET COVERS, just purchased for cash under specially advantageous circumstances, and which will be sold off at prices much below their usual cost. Reduced price lists, with size and description, will be sent post free on application.—OETZMANN and CO., Complete House Furnishers, 67 to 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD, near Tottenham Court Road.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—CRETONNES. —OETZMANN and CO. beg to announce that they have now received all their New Designs in FRENCH CRETONNES for the present Season, amongst which are some beautiful specimens of artistic design and colourings. An early inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZ- MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PRE- MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

PAINTINGS, OLEOS, CHROMOS, PHOTOS, and Engravings; a choice assortment in handsome frames. The paintings are by well-known artists, and the name guaranteed. Also, a large assortment of Bronzes, Statuettes, Vases, Clocks, Antique Furniture, and Artistic Furnishing Items. A catalogue of art department post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DE- PARTMENT.—Best Plate Chimney Glasses, in double gilt frames, elegant pattern, large size, 2 guineas; magnificent ditto, from 5 to 20 guineas; handsome Walnut Cheffoniers, shaped front, and richly carved mountings, 4ft., 3½ guineas; noble Mahogany Sideboards, 5ft., 6 guineas; 6ft., from 8 guineas upwards; Easy Chairs, from 14s. 9d. upwards; Drawing and Dining Room Chairs, from 10s. 6d. each.—OETZMANN and CO.

STANLEY DINING-ROOM SUITE in solid carved Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best maroon leather, comprising a noble couch, two easy chairs, and six chairs. Price 14 guineas. Quality guaranteed. A variety of other patterns on show, from 8 guineas upwards. Massive mahogany telescope dining tables, 8 ft. by 4 ft., patent metallic screw, £6 15s.—OETZMANN and CO.

DRAWING-ROOM SUITES.—OETZ- MANN and CO.—Elegant Drawing Room Suite, richly carved Italian walnut-wood, upholstered very soft and comfortable, in best rep, consisting of a Couch, two Easy Chairs, and six Chairs, price 15 guineas; ditto, very handsome design, upholstered in rich Pekinade, made and finished in superior style, 20 guineas; ditto, very elegant design, richly upholstered in finest satin, and finished in the best possible manner, 33 guineas; also a variety of other Drawing-Room Suites, in Black and Gold, Early English, and other designs.

LODGINGS.—Extra Bed to accommo- date Visitors. A strong IRON FOLDING BEDSTEAD, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 6 in. wide, with a wool mattress, bolster, and pillow, complete for 21s. Same items, 3 ft. wide, 25s. complete. Sent carefully packed; forms a portable package. Also, to suit the above, 2 white calico sheets, 1 ditto bolster-case, 1 pillow-case, 3 white Witney blankets, and 1 counterpane, for 28s. 6d. the set. Iron Easy-Chair Bedstead, 6 ft. by 2 ft., with cushions forming the mattress, price complete, 21s.—Address order to OETZMANN and CO.

BEDSTEADS. BEDDING.
BEDSTEADS. BEDDING.
BEDSTEADS. BEDDING.

LINOLEUM.—OETZMANN and CO. —LINOLEUM.—Warm, soft, carpet-like in appearance, and very durable. ALL the NEW PRIZE DESIGNS are NOW in STOCK. A visit of inspection solicited. Prices below those usually charged for this favourite floor covering. The trade supplied.—OETZMANN and CO.

TURKEY CARPETS.—CLEARANCE SALE.—OETZMANN and CO.—A quantity of Turkey, Indian, Persian, Jabbalpore, Masulipatam, Farahan, Khorassan, Serabend, Koula, Ghiordes, and Kelim Carpets and Rugs, clearing out at greatly reduced prices, ranging from 15s. 9d. to 80 guineas. A reduced Price List, with sizes and description, sent post free on application. Prices will be found much below those usually charged. A quantity of Indian Rugs, 15s. 9d. each; some very handsome ditto, at 35s. to 45s.
OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and Clothing combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable, with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CRETONNES.—OETZMANN & CO. CRETONNES.—An immense assortment of all the choicest designs in this fashionable material, in every variety of style and colourings: excellent imitations of rare Tapestries, some being exact copies of the finest GOBELIN Tapestry. Prices varying from 9¾d. to 4s. 11d. per yard. Patterns sent into the country by stating kind required.

BOMBAY STRIPED CURTAINS.— The cheapest Curtains extant. Effective style, 3 yards long by 46 inches wide, 9s. 9d. per pair; 3½ yards, 11s. 9d.; 4 yards, 13s. 9d. Patterns on application.

KITCHEN REQUISITES.—OETZ- MANN and CO.'S TEN POUND SET (List No. 2A, page 231, in their "GUIDE TO HOUSE FURNISHING," sent post free on application), includes Tables, Chairs, Clock, &c., with the various culinary utensils and requisites, contains all the most useful articles required in every kitchen, each being of superior quality, and is the most practical selection extant.—OETZMANN and CO.

CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICE.— OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGN, a beautiful Grecian shape, meets the great desideratum of art manufactures—viz., the shape best adapted for purposes of use required, combined with the most artistic design and decoration. Prices from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive Price List post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—OCTOBER 20, 1877.

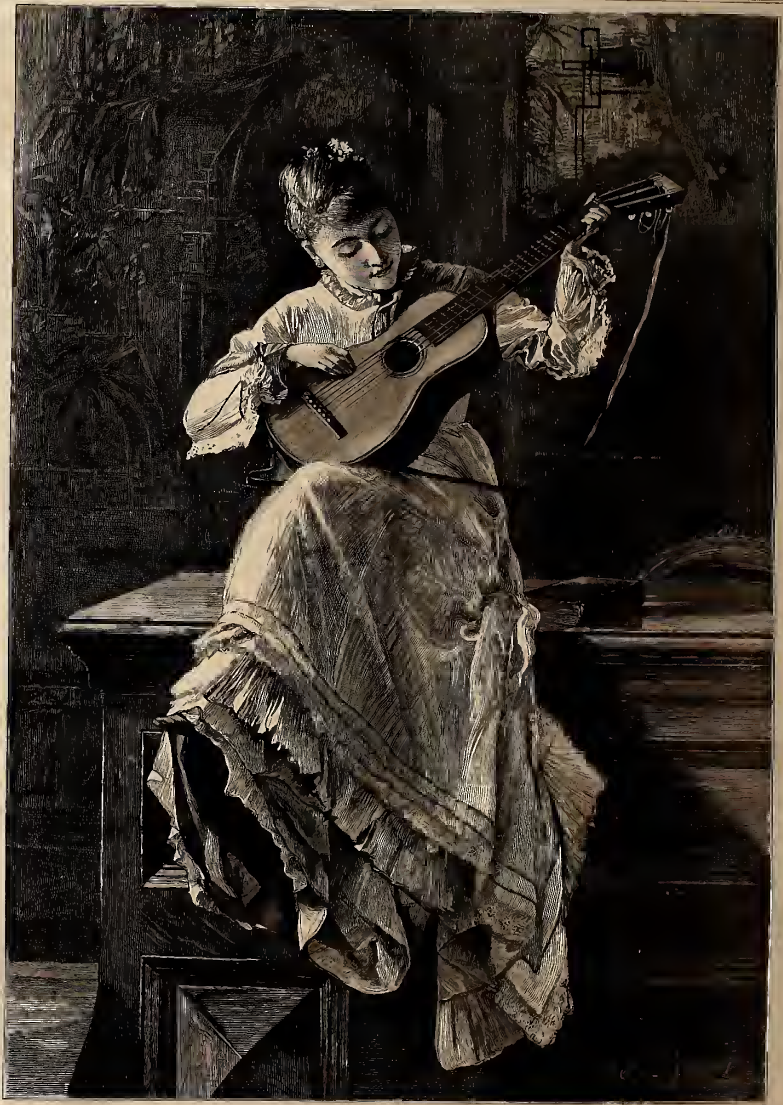
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—NO. 413
Regd. at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



"MUSICAL MEMORIES'

Sitting on the table in an unaffected attitude,
  Finger-tips mechanically straying o'er the strings;
Giving to her instrument considerable latitude,
  Trusting to hap-hazard for the melodies it brings.

First a bit of Mendelssohn, and then a scrap of Offenbach,
  Then some bars of Sullivan, and then a comic air;
Then a nursery ditty sends her thoughts, which 'gin to soften, back
  To days when she wore pinafores, and mother did her hair.

Possibly, however, she is diligently practising,
  Privately rehearsing, with her mind upon the stretch;
If so, we must ask pardon, since so small a slice of fact is in
  The lines in which we've striven to explain the artist's sketch.

ARTHUR LOCKER

Topics of the Week

MINING ACCIDENTS.——It is to be hoped that the terrific explosion at High Blantyre will have at least one good result; that it will force the whole subject of mining accidents thoroughly upon public notice. It is disgraceful that such accidents have not been long ago made practically impossible. The usual remark made when the question is raised is that the men are so careless that it is hopeless to expect them to conform to the most obvious rules of safety. And this is quite true. Familiarity with danger undoubtedly blunts the sense of its greatness. We cannot realise that conditions in the midst of which we live day by day are perilous; and risks are so often run without any bad result that there is a continually recurring temptation to run them again for the sake of some slight convenience. We maintain, however, that the arrangements should in no way depend upon the will of the men. It should be taken for granted that if the smallest loophole is left to them they will recklessly endanger their own lives and those of others. It is idle to say that in that case no remedy is possible. Science has grappled with far more difficult problems, and solved them; and if the nation chooses that it shall be so, science will triumph over this difficulty too. Suppose that by some strange law the sons of all the dukes in the kingdom were compelled to work for a year in mines. Does any one imagine that they would be allowed to run risks? We may be very certain that society would quickly awaken to the necessity of determined action. Within a few weeks means would be devised to make it as safe to ply the pickaxe in a coal pit as to shoot partridges in the Highlands. The plain truth is that many owners of mines, so long as they are allowed to go on in the old way, will not be at the expense of providing thoroughly for the security of those to whose labour they owe their fortunes. It is high time for effective pressure to be brought to bear upon them; and Government will deserve severe blame if it does not forthwith see that the pressure is applied. Much may be hoped from the fact that Mr. Cross has promptly ordered an official inquiry to be made into the causes of the Blantyre disaster.

NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.——The Americans appear sanguine that the Great Indian Council which has lately been meeting at Washington will have important results, and that the removal of the Sioux and Arrapahoes from the Black Hills Country to the waters of the Upper Missouri will put an end to the wars and massacres which have raged for twenty years past on the north-west frontier. The speeches of Spotted Tail and his companions display a curious but by no means unusual mixture of child-like simplicity and shrewdness. There is something pathetic in their idea—supposing that they honestly entertain it—that the possession of farming apparatus and seed will at once eradicate their nomad instincts, and make them as patiently laborious as New England farmers; while their preference for short-horn cattle proves that they have their eyes widely open to the qualities of stock. Altogether, they are such interesting savages that we earnestly hope their forced emigration from their native homes may be of benefit both to themselves and to the whites. Yet the prospect, it must be confessed, is somewhat discouraging. As years go on, the ceaseless tide of white emigration will reach the Upper Missouri, and then, as President Hayes forcibly told the Indian delegates, "If you live roaming about without homes, the white people will sweep over you like a great flood of water." It has often been asked—and by none more so than by those Americans who are weary of the scandal and misery of these Indian wars—how it comes to pass that the Indians are so much better managed in British America than in the United States. This is partly due to the fact that the central government is far more powerful in the British Empire than in the American Republic. The authority of the Queen carries as much, if not more weight in the remotest part of her dominions as under the shadow of Windsor Castle. But in the back-settlements of the United States the pretensions of Uncle Sam are little regarded, and the inhabitants are law-abiding or lawless just as it pleases them. Hence in British America the Government looks after the rights of the aboriginal population, who, on the Republican side of the border, are left to the tender mercies of hunters, trappers, and miners. But besides this, it is but fair to remember that the greater part of British North America is little more than a vast hunting-field, and that the Indians can be profitably employed in this congenial occupation; whereas further south the savages roam over vast tracts of soil so fertile that industry is alone needed to convert them into rich corn lands. At the same time, we cannot but think that the American Government might do more for the Indians than they have done hitherto. Between the life of a wild huntsman and the life of a plodding farmer there are many degrees, and the red man might surely be fitted for some of these occupations, as for example, stock-raising and sheep-breeding. And at the worst, it would be cheaper to feed and clothe every warrior, squaw, and papoose in the United States than to continue these miserable wars.

THE SITUATION IN FRANCE.——A considerable change has passed over public feeling in France since the results of the general election were made known. M. Gambetta had so confidently predicted that the nation would return 400 Republicans that the first impulse of nearly every one was to consider that he and his party had suffered a serious check. Subsequent reflection has brought out the real character of the national decision. The general feeling now is surprise that M. De Fourtou, notwithstanding his unscrupulous exercise of authority, achieved so little; and all France sees how grave is the position of Marshal MacMahon, confronted as he is by a majority of more than 120 ardent Republicans. The only course open to him, if he is honourably to maintain his place, is to admit that he was misled by rash counsellors, and to accept the will of the country. But he so foolishly committed himself to a side that there is little prospect of his immediately adopting this plan. Yet he seems determined not to resign. On the other hand, the Republicans are not less resolved to offer an uncompromising opposition to his policy; and it is impossible to blame them, since the country has entrusted them with a definite task, to neglect which would be to violate all the obligations imposed upon them by a genuine Parliamentary system. There is a report that the Marshal intends, if the Chamber refuses to vote the supplies, to demand a fresh dissolution. In this way the difficulty would be simply postponed, for it is incredible that the constituencies would return to a new appeal any other answer than that which they have already given. But, according to the most trustworthy evidence, the Senate would not consent to a demand for another general election. Should this prove to be the case, it is asserted by some observers that Marshal MacMahon will try a plébiscite. The statement seems scarcely probable; but if he does not make so rash an experiment, and will neither submit nor resign, his only alternative will be a coup d'état. Even he, confident as he appears to be in the power of his personal influence, cannot be sure that he would be supported in such a step by the army. There is nothing in his career, or in the hopes he can hold out, to stir enthusiasm; and, besides, the Republicans will take good care not to give him an excuse for violent action. On the whole, the chances seem to be altogether against him. His friends have driven him into a corner from which there is literally no agreeable mode of escape. He may well look upon them coldly, for never was a man in a great position more completely deceived by a set of reckless conspirators.

MAD DOGS.——The public have good reason to feel serious uneasiness at the present time on the subject of hydrophobia. No less than thirteen deaths from this frightful disease have been registered in London alone during the present year, and a large portion of the columns of last week's Lancet (a journal not likely to be unduly alarmist) was occupied with reports of cases and correspondence on this subject. As far as our present knowledge extends, we may take it for granted that canine rabies, either in man or beast, is incurable. Alleged specifics have been set forth, but hitherto they have failed when practically tested. Pending therefore the discovery of a genuine remedy, nothing but prevention remains. At present, no clear information exists as to how rabies originates. The old theory, that it was caused by the heat and drought of summer, is not supported by facts. Hydrophobia is more prevalent in the temperate zones than in the tropics, and it occurs in the temperate zones at all seasons of the year. This much, however, is significant. The mysterious dog, which appears in a town or village, and which bites or attempts to bite the human beings and animals there, is usually a masterless wastrel. Does not this point to the conclusion that misery and neglect help to originate this frightful malady? We do not believe in muzzling. The annoyance produced—even by the humane wire muzzle of the Continent—overbalances the possible protection afforded. The best preventive remedy is that every one who owns dogs should see that they have proper food and exercise, and that they are not allowed to stray about uncontrolled. All dogs found without a master should be remorselessly seized by the police, and only released on payment of a small fine by the owners. This is supposed to be the law now, but it is not carried out with sufficient stringency. Lastly, the Inland Revenue would benefit, and many stray curs would be put to death, if the dog-tax were more equitably levied. No man who begins to own a dog, say in October, likes to pay a whole year's impost for the privilege of keeping the animal between that time and the 31st December—so he often shirks the tax altogether. Either the year should be computed from the day the tax is paid—for example, a certificate taken out October 26th should be good till the 25th October following—or else the tax should be payable quarterly, say in eighteen-penny instalments, so as to give an advantage of a shilling to those who pay up a whole year on January 1st.

A PARLIAMENT WITHOUT MINISTERS.——The Prussian Parliament, which was opened last Sunday, came together in anything but good humour. It had been announced that during the Session the great question of debate would be a scheme of municipal reorganisation, to be proposed by Count Eulenburg, the Minister of the Interior, as the completion of his measures of administrative reform. Before the meeting of Parliament, however, Prince Bismarck intervened, and the scheme was either wholly given up, or so modified that Count Eulenburg insisted on resigning. Instead of accepting his resignation, the Emperor gave him six months' leave of absence, arranging that his place should be temporarily taken by the Minister of Agriculture. In like manner the office of Prince Bismarck as President of the Cabinet is temporarily occupied by Herr Camphausen, the Minister of Finance. Thus the two most important members of the Government are away; and this means that for a time no legislation of any particular value can be attempted, since their substitutes can do no more than carry on routine business. Much indignation has been expressed at this state of things, and with good reason. Prussia is not yet in so happy a position that her Parliament can afford to spend a whole Session in doing nothing. On the contrary, there are many problems which urgently require solution. Above all, the financial state of the country is eminently unsatisfactory. There is a large deficit in the Exchequer, and at the same time public works must be begun, partly to give employment to the multitudes of labourers who are out of work. The truth is, however, that Prince Bismarck is not in the mood for troubling himself about the internal affairs of the kingdom. He is a thorough Conservative, and wishes to leave what he considers well alone, devoting his whole energy to the business of the Empire, and to the international relations of Germany. The Prussian Liberals, who have hitherto supported him, are becoming restive under this treatment, but he is not likely to give much heed to their expostulations. He acts as a thorough autocrat, and the aged Sovereign never ventures to call his decisions in question. For any real change in the policy of the Government the party of progress must wait until the Chancellor has retired.

AUCTIONEERS AND THEIR VICTIMS.——In a recent issue of the Echo a correspondent tells a story, which, we presume, must be substantially true, as no contradiction of it has yet appeared, and which, if true, deserves the fullest publicity. A poor widow, having failed to make a livelihood by letting lodgings, determined to sell the best part of her furniture by auction, with the object of starting a small shop. An auctioneer, to whom she applied, entered fully into her views, and generously insisted, although unasked, upon advancing her 30*l.* on account, assuring her that it would cost her nothing. There, however, his good nature ceased, for the sale, which took place at her house, was conducted in a most unsatisfactory manner. Her best things were recklessly sacrificed, being knocked down almost as soon as put up; and her instructions as to reserve bids were entirely ignored. Then a week elapsed before, in spite of repeated applications, she could obtain a settlement. The amount realised by the sale was only 70*l.* 6*s.*, from which the following deductions were made: Cash advanced, 30*l.*; goods bought in, 5*l.* 6*s.*; interest on advance, 10*l.*; commission, at 5 per cent., 1*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*; expenses of auction (held, be it remembered, at the poor woman's own house) 14*l.* 16*s.*, leaving a miserable balance of 8*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* payable to the widow. The exorbitancy of the items, "interest on advance," and "auction expenses" is too glaring to need any comment, and it is plain that, even if the sale was fairly conducted, one-third of the proceeds have been unjustly retained by the auctioneer. The experience furnished by subsequent correspondents of the Echo, added to our own personal knowledge, leads us to the conviction that helpless and ignorant persons are very grossly victimised by unworthy members of the auctioneering fraternity. We are not in general too fond of invoking Government interference, but with regard to this particular trade we think the State is bound to exercise a more efficient control than now exists. Publicans are subject to fine and loss of license for numerous trade offences; pawnbrokers are restricted to a certain rate of interest; why not carry this paternal legislation a little further, and take care that the auctioneer, who pays an annual fee of 10*l.* to the Crown for the privilege of carrying on his calling, is a fit man to exercise such a calling. If the renewal of license was withdrawn from persons guilty of such malpractices as those described above, a good many familiar faces, we suspect, would cease to appear in the commercial "pulpit."

HIGHER EDUCATION FOR THE POOR.——In his speech to the Huddersfield Mechanics' Institution on Tuesday Mr. Forster urgently insisted that we should not be content with the degree of education which is at present imparted in Board Schools. Nearly all Englishmen will agree with him that it is highly desirable to give every child in the kingdom as good a training as circumstances will permit; but it may be questioned whether the particular method of which he approves is the best that could be devised. He proposes that the masters of elementary schools should teach more and higher subjects than they now attempt. In other words, our primary institutions should be made, as nearly as possible, like secondary schools. But this scheme is not upheld by the history of the various educational systems throughout Europe. It has hitherto been found that when the same teacher is obliged to give both elementary and advanced instruction, his tendency is to devote too much time to pupils likely to do him credit. It is impossible for him to make truly cultured men of them, yet the attention he bestows upon them withdraws his energy from the mass of children under his care. A far better plan is one which has often been urged by educational reformers. We mean a system in which there would be regularly graduated institutions, ample scholarships being provided which should be within the reach of every clever and energetic pupil. According to this method, the elementary schoolmaster would confine himself to his proper work; yet exceptional talent would have full opportunity and stimulus for development. The great difficulty is, how are the scholarships to be obtained? So many appeals are now made to private generosity that it seems almost hopeless to expect large sums for this purpose. We should not despair, however, if the proposal were taken up in earnest by those interested in popular education. It is certain that rich men who are anxious to do some good with their money could find no better channel for any surplus funds at their disposal.

NOTICE.——The Half-Sheet this week, though delivered in the middle of the paper, must be placed for binding between pages 396 and 405.

AMUSEMENTS

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8, THE DEAD SECRET. Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Messrs. Clifford, Cooper, Odell, Edmund Lyons, Pinero, Jenner, &c.; Misses Virginia Francis, Ewell, &c. Preceded by at 7, MARCH HARE HUNT. Mr. C. Cooper and Miss K. Pattison. Concluding with SHOULD THIS MEET THE EYE. Mr. E. Lyons.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD RIGHTON.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, £200 A-YEAR. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. Also, THE LION'S TAIL. Messrs. Ryder, F. H. Macklin, Garner, A. H. Warren, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames E. Ritta, Compton, L. Clifton, C. Jecks, and Rachel Sanger. Acting Manager, Mr. E. CLIFTON.

MORNING PERFORMANCES every Saturday, at 2.—TO-DAY, Saturday, Oct. 27, at 2, THE RIVALS. Messrs. Ryder, C. Warner, and E. Righton; Mesdames E. Ritta and Mrs. Stirling.—GLOBE THEATRE.

THE MOONSTONE. By Wilkie Collins. A New Drama, altered from the Novel. EVERY EVENING, at 8.30. Box-office open daily from 11.0 to 5.0. No booking fees.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

MORNING PERFORMANCE of THE MOONSTONE, TO-DAY, SATURDAY, Oct. 27, at 2.30. Carriages at 5. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. No Fees for Booking.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

SURREY THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, at Seven, THE DRESS COAT. At 7.45, FATES AND FURIES. Mr. G. M. Ciprico. Messrs. J. A. Arnold. H. Taylor, H. C. Sidney, A. Williams, A. C. Lilly, W. D. Gresham, W. Brunton, F. Hinde, &c.; Mesdames Lamartine, A. Stuart, Nellie Russell, L. Lilly, Mrs. Brunton.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—EVERY EVENING (Wednesday excepted), at 6.45, CHARLES THE SECOND. MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. The Pholtes, Minnie Gough, D'Alvini, Emmeline Cole. Concluding with (Saturday excepted) when it will be played first, DEOCH AN' DUR'ASS. Reddy Ryland, Mrs S. Lane. Concluding on Saturday with GUY FAUX and Grand Display of Fireworks.

NEW GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—NOTICE: The New Grecian Theatre will be opened on Monday, October 29.—On Monday night will be produced a new and original drama by Messrs. George Conquest and Henry Pettitt, entitled BOUND TO SUCCEED. Messrs. George Conquest, W. James, Sennett, Syms, Birchenough, George Conquest, jun., &c. To conclude with FALSE AND TRUE. Dancing on the New Platform. The grounds brilliantly illuminated.—Acting Manager, Mr. ALPHONSE ROQUES.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening ditto.

MR. WALTER BACHE'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL (sixth season), on Monday, November 5, at St. James's Hall, at half-past 3. Vocalist, Mr. Santley. Accompanyist, Mr. Zerbini. Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; admission 1s.—Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co., 84, New Bond Street; Chappell's; usual agents; and Austin's, St. James's Hall.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN. — NOTICE. — These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Children of T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales. Also on view Portrait Models of the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, Count de Tourville, M. Thiers, and the Penge convicts. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

THE ANNUAL WINTER EXHIBITION OF HIGH CLASS PICTURES is NOW OPEN at ARTHUR TOOTH'S GALLERY, 5, Haymarket (Opposite Her Majesty's Theatre), from 10 till 7 o'clock. Admission One Shilling, including Catalogue.

BRIGHTON.—A PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAIN runs Every Day between Victoria and Brighton, leaving Victoria, 10.0 a.m. Weekdays, and 10.45 a.m. Sundays; and Brighton, 5.45 p.m. Weekdays, and 8.30 p.m. Sundays.

EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m. calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.

Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, via Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.

The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.

J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE. — Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Opening of the Winter Season.—MONDAY, Oct. 29, for the Benefit of Mrs H. NYE CHART, commencing at 7, with WHICH OF THE TWO? Concluding with MONEY. Mr. H. M. Pitt, Mrs. H. Nye Chart, &c. On THURSDAY and FRIDAY, Nov. 1 and 2, GRAND AMATEUR DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES for the Benefit of the Sussex County Hospital, &c. Thursday, SCHOOL and MONSIEUR JACQUES. Friday, OURS and BOX AND COX.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom, £1 10 0 | United States, . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia, Ceylon, China } Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition. { India, Japan, New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher.

Our Illustrations

"MUSICAL MEMORIES"

See page 375.

RUSSIAN FEMALE REVOLUTIONISTS

IF a sturdy British Radical who departed this life some three-and-twenty years ago were to wake up at the present time, he would rub his eyes with astonishment. "What, my old mates!" he would exclaim, "are you on the side of Russia, the very incarnation of despotism, absolutism, and tyranny; the oppressor of Poland and Hungary, the land of the knout, of the secret police, and of Siberian exile?" Whereupon, the modern Radicals, Messrs. Gladstone, Freeman, and Co., would hasten to explain to their defunct friend that nous avons changé tout cela; that the existing Czar, unlike Nicholas, is a very nice man, that he has extinguished serfdom, and that substantially the mass of the people have as much freedom as they wish for.

There can be no doubt that Russia has made considerable progress, both material and political, since the severe lessons of the Crimean War, and the collapse of the Emperor Nicholas's autocratic ascendancy over his neighbours, but much of the old leaven of official oppression and corruption still taints the body politic, and consequently discontent is rife. Discontent is a sentiment which is easily convertible into disaffection and disloyalty, and in Russia these feelings take the outward visible shape of so-called Secret Societies, whose members aim at emulating the deeds of the Revolutionary heroes of France. We use the qualifying adjective, "so-called," because the existence of these secret societies is too often known to the police from the outset. Their proceedings are reported by spies, who assume the guise of rabid patriots, and then, when "the pear is ripe," the police make a melodramatic ending of the affair. A small army of gendarmes, horse and foot, surround the houses of the devoted socialists at dead of night. Then a detachment of police, booted, spurred, and armed with sabres and revolvers, seize the suspected persons. Among them are sure to be some students, both male and female, a sprinkling of educated artisans, some Civil Service clerks out of employment, and a bankrupt tradesman or two. They are dragged from their beds, and conveyed in covered vans to the nearest prison. The day following the arrest a jury is empanelled. Ostensibly it is an impartial one; but in reality it is as "packed" as autocratic science can make it. During the course of the trial scanty reports appear in the columns of the daily press, and finally, the culprits, having all been found guilty by the jury, are sentenced either to imprisonment in a fortress, to hard labour in the penitentiaries, or to exile in Siberia. We have borrowed some of the above details from the Globe of July 31st, and an interesting paper by Mr. Mackenzie Wallace on the same subject appeared in the Fortnightly Review of last August.

A fortnight before the declaration of war against Turkey, one of these political trials took place at St. Petersburg. Of fifty accused, forty-seven were condemned, of whom seventeen were women. Of eight of these women we publish the portraits. They were all students of medicine at the Zurich University, from whence in 1873 they were withdrawn by an edict of the Czar, which threatened with punishment any who remained. The charge against them was that they belonged to a revolutionary society, and that they were disseminating seditious literature among the working classes. Their behaviour during their trial was becoming, and excited general commendation. Some commutations of the sentences (which are given underneath each portrait) have since been made. The six years' penal servitude, which was superadded to perpetual exile, is remitted in the case of Vera Lubatovich, who now is simply exiled for life, with loss of all rights as a noblewoman. Mr. Ernest Seidhold, to whom we are indebted for these portraits and for some of the above information, tells us that another batch of 195 revolutionists are now awaiting trial under a new law expressly made for the occasion.—The portraits are from photographs by A. and J. Bool, 86, Warwick Street, and 14, Stockbridge Terrace, S.W.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH THE TURKS—ON THE LOM

THE battle of Tcherkovna was fought on Sept. 21st between Mehemet Ali Pasha, his Egyptian ally, Prince Hassan, on the Lom, and the Russians posted at Yenin Verboca. We have already given a full account of the battle, in which the Turks, who were the attacking party, failed in their attempt to dislodge the Russians from their positions, and we need only reproduce our artist's notes:—"My sketch depicts the battle of Tcherkovna or Yenin Verboca. In the foreground is Verboca lying between the hills. Below, at the foot of the left hill, is a large wood. On the shoulder of the hill, lying to the right of Verboca, is a vineyard, the remainder of the upper part of the incline being covered with wood. The attack was made by a long flank march of Ismail Pasha's division. He reached the right of the enemy about 1 P.M., and sent into action his Turkish battalion, he himself remaining well in the rear. The Turks behaved magnificently, but not receiving any reinforcements, had to retire, although they had actually reached the enemy's guns which were on that side. An attack was then made from our hill on the left of the foreground. As, however, the Turks had to traverse a good deal of ground to reach the Russian positions, the intended diversion was a failure. A last attack on the vineyard was then made. The vineyard and the village were taken, but, no supports being forthcoming, they had to retire; in fact, the whole expedition was ruined by the extraordinary economy which the commanders displayed in affording reinforcements. The Egyptians did not go into action at all; while the Turks had only nine battalions engaged out of forty-eight, and twenty-three guns out of fifty-four. Everything failed."

BAKER PASHA AND HIS STAFF

"AFTER the battle of of Tcherkovna I sketched the pretty little camp of General Baker Pasha, which is on a grassy slope within 500 yards of the Turkish batteries. The tent in the foreground is that of Baker Pasha and Major Sartorius, while the one on the extreme left is occupied by his two staff officers—Col. Briscoe (late of the 15th Hussars), and Major Allix (late of the Grenadier Guards). Of General Baker, his gallantry and his exploits are well-known. The same may almost be said of Col. Briscoe and Major Allix, who were engaged in the two days' fighting at Yenikoi. There, under General Baker, they led the famous attack when, with only 200 men and fifty cavalry, they gained the principal heights under a fire of two batteries of Russian guns, the heights being occupied by 8,000 Russian troops. In this position they remained unsupported for two hours, when reinforcements came up. These officers were next present at the battle of Kara-hassankoi, where their gallantry was rewarded by General Baker being decorated with the order of the Osmanie, and Col. Briscoe and Major Allix with the Medjidié, on the field of battle. These officers were also engaged at the battle of Cherkovna. I may add that at the battle of Kara-hassankoi, a shell bursting between them badly wounded the horses of Baker Pasha and Col. Briscoe.

"Another of my sketches represent a Council of War held in Baker Pasha's tent, where it is reported that many good plans were determined upon, of which none were ever carried out. These Turkish councils of war in their deliberations and ensuing results represent the pavement of the road to a certain district below. While this council was being held a Red Cross man was brought in who walked straight into our lines. He was strongly suspected of being a spy, but as he has the red cross on his arm he is simply to be sent back, but naturally by another way than that which he came. He says he is a Polish Jew, and won't go back, but wants to join the Polish Legion. Still, in any case, they won't keep him, as it might lead to misunderstandings."

MAJOR SARTORIUS

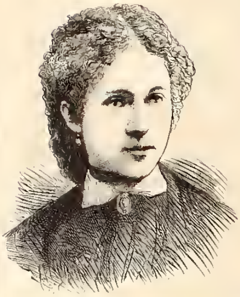
THIS officer, who belongs to the Bombay Staff Corps, is the military correspondent of the Daily Telegraph with the Turks in Bulgaria. "His well-known military capacity," writes our artist, "and his accuracy of description lend to his letters peculiar interest, while his genial disposition and good-nature render him deservedly popular in the camp. His one fault lies in his too reckless exposure to danger in the discharge of his duties."

WITH THE TURKS

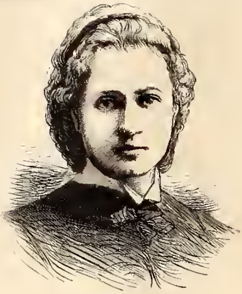
SOME of our sketches on pages 389 and 396 are sufficiently explained by their titles, but respecting "A Turkish Look-Out" we may mention that the hut in question was constructed of faggots of brushwood, supported by poles, and was situated on a hill overlooking Papaskoi. In the background soldiers are at work throwing up a battery. "The Bulgarian Church" depicted was sketched at Kopatche, a small village situated some twenty miles east of Biela. As there was considerable want of accommodation for the sick, the Turkish authorities transformed the building into a hospital—all the sacred pictures and books being turned out into the graveyard; even the tombstones receiving scanty respect, as they were chipped and broken by the ruthless Bashi-Bazouks.

BUCHAREST—OUTSIDE THE BOURSE

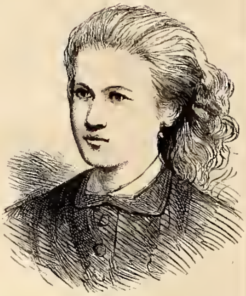
WE have heard a great deal of the harsh treatment of members of the Israelite persuasion in Roumania of late years, how, although born in Roumania they are not Roumans, how that they cannot reside in any town or village without special permission, and how that they are prohibited from purchasing or renting land, or keeping inns, or even from trading in tobacco, but on further examination there seems to be some reason for all these harsh measures. The Roumanians, from the greatest Boyard to the humblest peasant, are all head and ears in debt, and nevertheless insist on maintaining a magnificent style, which necessitates great expense. Bucharest tries to imitate Paris and her fashions, and as the Roumanians by no means possess the income or resources of the Parisians, they have but one alternative, to borrow money. "The Roumanian," writes a Standard correspondent, "is quite happy when his love affairs go smoothly, and the usurer has advanced 25 per cent. upon his whole revenue. . . . What matters any 'necessary' in the world if costly superfluities be obtainable at any price, and Chloe do not frown. They ask nothing of the gods but to be left in peace to their eternal lovemaking, until the deluge comes and the Jews have



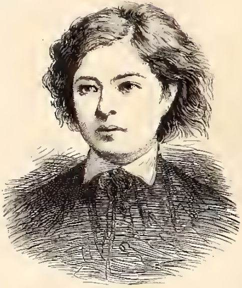
MARIA SOOBOTIN
Exiled to Siberia



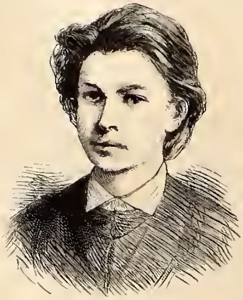
VERA LUBATOVITCH
Exiled to Siberia, with Six Years' Hard Labour



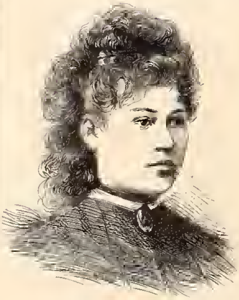
EUGÉNIE SOOBOTIN
Exiled to Siberia



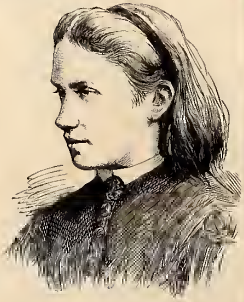
OLGA LUBATOVITCH
Exiled to Siberia, with Nine Years' Hard Labour



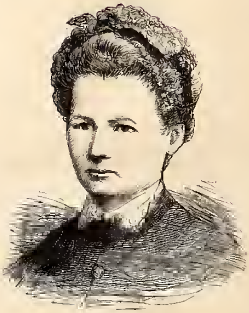
ALEXANDRA KHORJEVSKI
Exiled to Siberia, with Five Years' Hard Labour



KATHERINE HAMKRCLIDZE
Sentenced to Six Weeks' Imprisonment

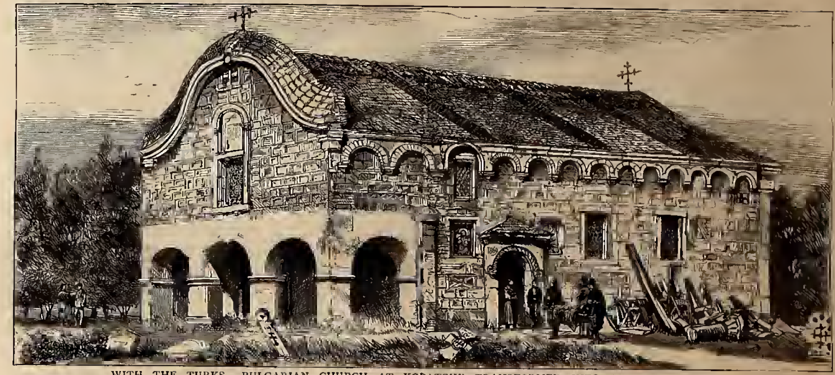


ANNA TOPORKOFF
Sentenced to Imprisonment with Four Years' Hard Labour

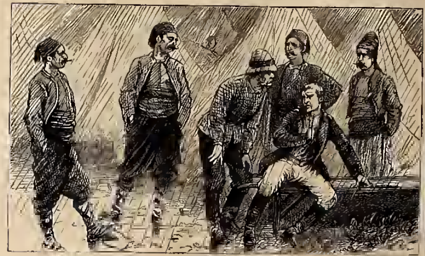


SOPHIA BARDIN
Exiled to Siberia, with Nine Years' Hard Labour

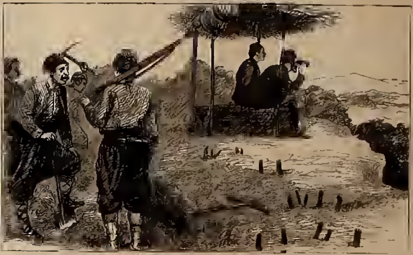
SECRET SOCIETIES IN RUSSIA—CONDEMNED FEMALE REVOLUTIONISTS



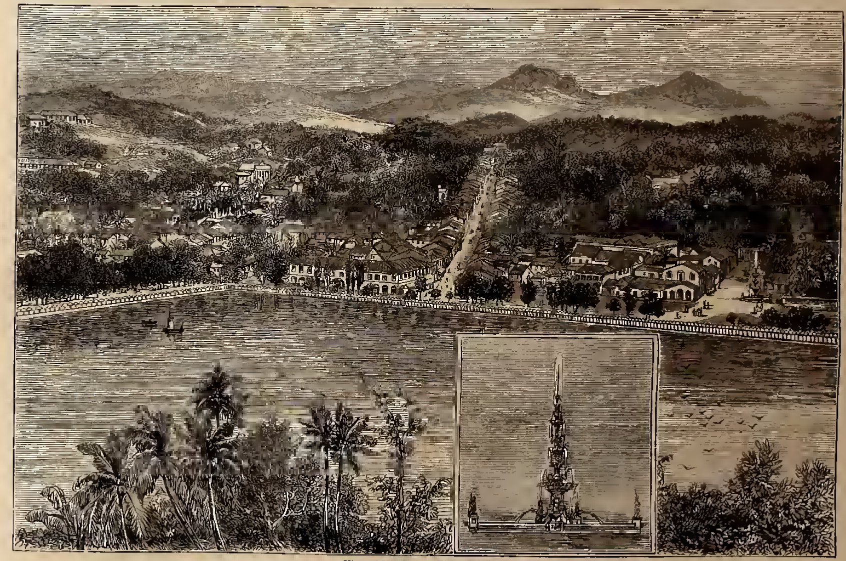
WITH THE TURKS—BULGARIAN CHURCH AT KOPATCHE TRANSFORMED INTO A TURKISH HOSPITAL



A RUSSIAN PRISONER



TURKISH LOOK-OUT OVER PAPASKOI



1. View of Kandy.—2. The Fountain.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S VISIT TO INDIA—MEMORIAL FOUNTAIN, KANDY, CEYLON eaten them up." After this it is hardly to be wondered at that the Government is doing its best to stave off the "deluge," for if the Jews were allowed to hold land, and admitted to all social and mercantile privileges, there is little doubt but that the Roumanian himself would quickly sink into a position of utter poverty and insignificance. Our sketch represents the exterior of the Bucharest Bourse, now somewhat more thronged than usual with gentlemen of the Israelitish persuasion, who have, as may be seen by their white caps, taken service in large quantities under the Russian Government in the Commissariat and Supply Department, a branch of army business which Jews have almost monopolised from time immemorial.

DRINKING FOUNTAIN AT KANDY, CEYLON

KANDY, which is the largest inland town of Ceylon, and the headquarters of the great coffee interest of the island, is built on the shores of an artificial lake, over a mile in length and a quarter of a mile in breadth, which stands at an elevation of 1,678 feet above the sea. Here the Governor and most of the leading officials have residences, that of the former being the finest building in the island. The town is girdled by a rampart of hills.

When the Prince of Wales visited Ceylon at the close of 1875 a fund was subscribed by the planting community to make H.R.H.'s reception worthy of the occasion, and, as a balance remained after all expenses were defrayed, it was resolved to spend it in erecting a drinking fountain for the town of Kandy as a memorial of the Prince's visit. The column of the fountain stands in a basin, 14 feet across, surrounded by a dwarf wall, on four points of which boy-figures stand on water jars, from which water flows. The column itself is adorned by boy figures sitting on dragons, from whose mouths water is spouted. Above these is a smaller basin, from which water falls drippingly, producing rainbow effects when the sun is low. Above this are four dragons throwing up jets of water, and two smaller basins again above these. From the open top of the column water is thrown to the height of three or four feet. From the base to the highest reach of ejected water the distance is nearly twenty feet, and the fountain when completed will add another charm to the lovely esplanade of the mountain capital. The fountain has been designed by Mr. G. E. Philip, 19, Waterloo Street, Glasgow; and the work executed by Messrs. George Smith and Co., of the Sun Foundry, Glasgow. The cost on this side has been about 300*l*. The fountain bears the following inscription:—" Erected by the Coffee Planters of Ceylon in commemoration of the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to Kandy in December, 1875." The fountain is now on its way to the East, and will, it is expected, be publicly inaugurated on or about the second anniversary of the Royal visit.

THE VOYAGE OF THE "CLEOPATRA"

MR. DIXON'S ingeniously constructed vessel enclosing the "Needle" left Alexandria in tow of the Olga on the 21st inst. She was built of iron and rigged as a cutter, and had a crew of eight men, including the captain, Mr. H. Carter. The Olga, commanded by Captain Booth, was a small vessel of 130 horse-power, but this was considered ample, as it would not have been practicable to tow the obelisk at any great speed. All went well until the night of Sunday, the 14th inst., when after several hours' squally weather a violent gale arose, the two vessels being then in the Bay of Biscay. The ballast of the Cleopatra shifted, and she was struck by a heavy sea, which threw her on her beam ends. Captain Carter tried to right her by replacing the ballast, but had only partially succeeded when she was again thrown over. A boat from the Olga then went to her assistance, but the six brave men who manned it were unable to hold the rope thrown to them, and the little craft drifted away and was doubtless soon swamped in that fearful sea. The life-boat of the Cleopatra was got out, but was immediately smashed under the rudder yoke. The mast was then cut away, and the ballast being again replaced, the vessel nearly righted, but falling off with the wind, was thrown over on her port beam ends, and the tow-rope connecting her with the Olga was cast off. Very skilfully and at great risk Captain Booth manœuvred his vessel close enough to cast a line to the Cleopatra, whose crew were then rescued by hauling a small boat to and fro between the vessels. After steaming about for some time in the hope of picking up the lost boat's crew, the Olga gave up the search, and as nothing was now to be seen of the Cleopatra, Captain Booth made for Falmouth, which be reached on the following Wednesday. Meanwhile the Cleopatra was on Tuesday picked about up ninety miles north of Ferrol Bay by the steamer Fitzmaurice, and she is now safely at anchor in Ferrol Bay, where she must remain until the difficult question of salvage is satisfactorily settled. As an antiquarian relic the Obelisk may be considered beyond all price; but, on the other hand, the intrinsic value of the stone is almost nil, so that, unless the owners of the Fitzmaurice are liberal-minded, there will be some nice work for the lawyers. Whatever may be the solution of this knotty question, we trust that the fund which has been started for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the six brave men who lost their lives in the endeavour to save those of their comrades, and which has been headed with a donation of 250*l*. from Mr. Dixon, will swell to such proportions as the nation need not be ashamed of. Perhaps the best means of collecting subscriptions would be by at once placing a box at the foot of the model obelisk in Parliament Square, and another in a similar position at the base of the monolith itself whenever and wherever it may be erected. The condition of things shown in our engraving is well described in the last entry made by Captain Carter in his log at five P.M. on the night before the Cleopatra was abandoned —"This is a most unpleasant night; the swell of the sea is very high, and the Olga seems determined to tow us through or under the water. Almost wish she would break down. The great pitching (16 pitches per minute) is almost unbearable. The water is rolling over us fore and aft. My bed on the foresail is saturated with water, and I prefer walking the deck to staying below, where all is unbearable and hot."

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 397.

THE YOUNG PRINCES ON BOARD THE "BRITANNIA"

PRINCES ALBERT VICTOR AND GEORGE, the sons of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, having the characteristic British liking for a seafaring life, have just commenced their professional studies on board H.M.S. Britannia, which is now stationed at Dartmouth. The vessel is used as an academy or college for naval cadets, and the young princes are in no way privileged above their fellow students except in being accommodated with private apartments which have been specially fitted up for them in the poop of the vessel. The ages of the cadets vary from thirteen to sixteen, and the daily routine of their life is as follows:—They rise at 6.30 A.M., winter and summer alike, and, after taking a morning bath and drilling from 7.15 to 8 o'clock, assemble for prayers and breakfast. At 8.45 the muster-roll is called over, and the rest of the forenoon is devoted to study. They dine at 12.15, after which they have an hour on shore, and then resume study until 4 P.M., when they again go ashore to indulge in cricket or other games until 6.30, when they return on board to tea, which is served at seven o'clock. This is followed by another hour's tuition, and at 9.15 they assemble for prayer, and retire to rest at 9.30. Their diet is of a liberal and wholesome kind, the menu being varied on certain days of the week, and such little luxuries as blancmange, jellies, &c., appearing on the table on Sundays. The private apartments of the young Princes are fitted up and furnished in a very plain but comfortable manner, the statement that their decoration cost 2,000*l*. being of course an absurd exaggeration. The young Princes, who are now in their fourteenth and fifteenth years, joined the Britannia on Thursday last week, having been taken down to Dartmouth by the Prince of Wales himself, who was cordially welcomed by the inhabitants and Corporation of the town, and who remained the guest of Captain Fairfax until the following day. The town was gaily decorated during the day, and brilliantly illuminated at night. The uniform worn by the Britannia cadets is of the usual Navy blue, with buttons and capbands of gold. The Royal cadets are shown no special favour in consequence of their rank, but have been placed in the starboard watch and in the lowest class, from which they will rise, like their fellow students, with greater or less rapidity, according to the progress which they may make in their studies. That they may be successful in those studies, and one day become distinguished members of the profession they have chosen, must be the fervent hope of every loyal British heart.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO'S new work is continued on page 402.

THE GREAT TAY BRIDGE

THIS triumph of engineering skill is the work of Mr. Bouch, C.E., the engineer of the North British Railway Company, for whose traffic it has been constructed by a specially formed Company at a cost of about 350,000*l*., the foundation-stone having been laid in July, 1871. The bridge begins about a mile and a half above Newport, on the south side of the river, where the depth of water at high spring tides is 45 feet, and the velocity of the current sometimes reaches five knots an hour. It consists of 85 spans, varying in length from 67 to 245 feet, the central portion of thirteen spans having a clear height of 88 feet above high water, from which it slopes down to the Fife side with a gentle gradient, and also towards the Dundee side, where it takes a curve to the eastward in order to join the land line. The first twelve piers on the Fife side are of brick, and the remainder are iron cylinders filled in with brickwork and concrete. Each span is formed by two girders, connected by transverse braces, the depths varying according to the width of the space to be crossed, the minimum being twelve feet. To provide for expansion by heat, which will amount to about seven feet in the whole length of the bridge, the girders have been adjusted to the piers to allow a certain amount of free play. The bridge has been calculated for a rolling load of a ton and a half to the foot run, a greater burden than could be brought upon any span by filling its whole length with loaded goods waggons. No part of the structure will have to undergo a strain of more than four tons to the square inch, but it is actually capable of sustaining a strain of twenty-one tons to the square inch. The bridge is connected with the main line of the North British Railway by a branch striking off at Leuchars Junction and running up to the south end of the bridge, the distance being about five miles. On the north side a junction is formed with the Caledonian Railway by means of a viaduct, and afterwards a tunnel carried alongside the Dundee Docks. The contractors were Messrs. Hopkins, Gilkes, and Co., of Middlesborough.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——Lord Hartington is to visit Edinburgh on the 6th prox., when a great Liberal Demonstration will be made and several meetings held, at the chief of which Lord Rosebery will preside. On the 7th he goes to Glasgow, where he will be presented with the Freedom of that city, where more political gatherings will take place.—Lord Lyttelton, speaking the other day at a meeting of the Worcestershire Union of Workmen's Clubs and Institutes, of which be is the President for the year, recommended good novels as the best kind of reading for working-men, and said that it was absurd to expect them after a hard day's work to read anything but fiction. Referring to the Eastern Question, he recommended them to weigh it well, so that they could form a right judgment, by which England should come out of the matter without material loss or dishonour. How they are to do this if they confine their studies to fiction he did not condescend to explain.—Professor Fawcett has commenced a series of lectures on "Free Trade and Protection" the Arts School at Cambridge.—Speaking at a Nottinghamshire agricultural dinner on Tuesday, Earl Cowper said that though he was rather glad the Russians did not at once march to Constantinople, yet considering how terrible would be the fate of the Christian subjects of Turkey if the Russians were driven out, and if their provinces were reoccupied by Mohammedans, for the sake of humanity he must hope that Russia would be successful in the end.

MR. GLADSTONE IN IRELAND.——The ex-Premier seems to be getting on famously with the Irish people. His welcome at Kilruddery was of course a warm one, and he remained in that neighbourhood until Saturday, when he visited Dublin, and after being conducted over Christ Church by Mr. Street, the architect to whom the restoration of the building is confided, he was received by the Duke of Marlborough at the Viceregal Lodge. While walking in the streets, a policeman on duty stood at "attention" as he passed, and a couple of labourers recognised and saluted him. On Sunday he attended Divine Service at Bray, and on his way back was button-holed by Mr. Joseph Barnes, the eccentric barrister, who has cut rather a prominent figure at Trinity College Elections and in the Hall of the Four Courts for some years, and who persisted, notwithstanding several rebuffs from Mr. Gladstone and Lord Meath, in condemning "the blunders" of the ex-Premier's Administration, contending that the Clerkenwell Explosion was "got up" by persons in the pay of the Government of the day, and that the man who was hung in connexion with the affair was in Manchester at the time it occurred. He continued to expound to Mr. Gladstone his views of Fenianism and other Irish questions, until at last, as the party approached Kilruddery Castle, Lord Meath dismissed him in terms that were not to be mistaken. On Monday Mr. Gladstone went to Trinity College, the students of which succeeded in extracting a short and good-humoured speech from him. He afterwards made a visit to the Bank, outside of which he was greeted by a crowd of admirers, who shouted "God be wid ye," "Good luck to ye," and other salutations equally friendly. There is some talk of offering him the Freedom of the City of Dublin, but it is considered doubtful whether he will accept the honour.

MISCELLANEOUS.——The colliery explosion at Wigan which we reported last week has been eclipsed by a disaster still more terrible at Blantyre, in Scotland, more than 200 lives having been lost. The cause of the catastrophe is not yet known, but it seems that the suicidal practice of using naked lights was in vogue in the pit. An official inquiry has been ordered by the Home Secretary. Her Majesty the Queen has expressed her sympathy and anxiety by frequent telegrams asking for news as to the success of the exploring parties. At a meeting of miners at Hanley on Tuesday Mr. Macdonald, M.P., said that he cared not what men called these "disasters," he unhesitatingly proclaimed in the face of the civilised world that they were murders, and murders of the worst kind, because they were carried on to get cheap coal irrespective of care for human life. He proceeded to say that in Scotland there were no coroner's inquests in such cases, and called upon the meeting to pass a resolution demanding a Government inquiry into the Blantyre explosion, an invitation which was unanimously acceded to.—General Grant, who started for Paris on Tuesday, was on Saturday the guest of the Corporation of Brighton at a banquet given in the Royal Pavilion. In responding to the toast of the evening he said that if England and the United States remained as good friends as they now were the English-speaking peoples would become the greatest in the world.—The Barnardo Investigation, which has occupied the attention of the arbitrators for so long, has ended in a manner hardly satisfactory to either party. The judgment exonerates Dr. Barnardo from most of the charges brought against him, but the arbitrators confess that their opinions might have been materially modified had not Dr. Barnardo declined to answer the question which was put to him respecting the authorship of the letters signed "A Clerical Junius," and thus caused Mr. Reynolds to withdraw from the inquiry. It is rather singular that the trustees of the Institution, whom one would imagine should be more anxious than any one to have the matter cleared up, have now forbidden Dr. Barnardo to publish the reply which he has prepared to the accusations of the Charity Organisation Society.—The Court of Aldermen have elected Mr. Breffit as Alderman of the Ward of Cheap, but Sir John Beanett's supporters have decided to stick by him, and not to recognise in any way the nominee of the Court of Aldermen. Mr. Under-Sheriff Crawford has published a letter, in which he cites a complete precedent for the action taken by the Court. It occurred in 1831, when Mr. Scales was thrice elected for the Ward of Portsoken, and as many times rejected by the Aldermen. The case went on appeal through the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer, and finally to the House of Lords, and was everywhere decided in favour of the right of veto.—This is the thirteenth week of the London masons' strike, and the dispute is still unsettled. Some Italian and German workmen are engaged upon the New Low Courts, and the former having been last week mobbed and maltreated by some roughs, with whom the men on strike disclaim all connection, now live and sleep in the building itself. On Wednesday about sixty workmen arrived from America; but the vigilant "pickets" met them on landing, and; without any attempt at coercion, carried one-sixth of their number off in triumph. It is said that these foreign workmen were told that they were not required in consequence of a strike, but this is denied by the employers.—Last week a singular collision occurred in the Channel. The steamer Knapton Hall seeing a dismantled ship (the Loch Fyne) in distress, went to her assistance, but was driven into her by the force of the wind and waves, and was so badly damaged that she sank soon afterwards. Captain Murray and eleven of the crew went down with her, but his wife and the rest whom he had put into a boat were taken on board the Loch Fyne and saved. —Two persons were killed and several badly injured in a railway collision which took place last week between Northampton and Wellingborough.—A fatal fire occurred at Mile End on Tuesday. One of the persons killed was an invalid youth, and the other was his father, who sacrificed his own life in the endeavour to save that of his son. Complaints are made respecting the late arrival of the engines and fire-escapes.

THEATRES

THE promise of a new play, "of a very superior class, and totally differing from the so-called Transpontine drama," together with the announcement of the first appearance of a "great American actor" in the leading character, attracted a large audience to the SURREY Theatre on Saturday last. The title of the play is Fates and Furies; the name of the actor is Ciprico. Fates and Furies is one of those elaborate spectacular dramas, dealing with the period of the old régime and the first French Revolution, in which the playwrights of the Porte St. Martin were wont to exhibit an inexhaustible faith. Of late years these pieces have been more rare; but they have all borne a strong resemblance to each other, and he who has seen one will have no difficulty in imagining the stirring incidents, the magniloquent speeches, the exaltation of honest poverty, the uncompromising exposure of wealthy villainy and subtle craft, furnishing the principal matter of the six acts into which this formidable production is divided. To give even the barest outline of the story of the persecuted hero, "Albert the Artist," would make a larger demand upon our space than it is possible to satisfy. We will therefore content ourselves with a synopsis of scenes as given in the playbill, which indeed will convey, to one who is not familiar with works of this kind, a very fair notion of the character of the piece. The synopsis is as follows:—"Tableau I.: Albert's Villa, near the Tuileries, Paris, 1791—The Slumbering Revolution—The Artist's Studio—The Glass of Milk—The Recognition. Tableau II.: Mansion of Mons. Martilly—Evening Reception—Matilde's Love for Albert—Reynard's Hatred—Albert's Disgrace—The Duel. Tableau III. : The Desolate Home—Auction Sale of the Artist's Pictures—The Dying Daughter—The Political Offence—Albert's Banishment. Tableau IV. : St. Hedwig's Church, Berlin—Winter—The Cold Snow—The Broken-hearted Wanderer—Albert's Awakened Hope—The Clue. Tableau V. : Fisherman's Hut on the Tiber, Rome—The Coliseum—Struggle in the Dark—The Lightning Flash—The Assassin's Knife—A Watery Grave—The Bandit—Albert's Rescue. Tableau VI. : House of Martilly, Paris, 1794—The French Convention—Reign of Terror—The Guillotine—Matilde's Sacrifice—The Approaching Marriage—Albert's Return—The Fates have Smiled at Last—The Triumph."

The American author of this drama, Mr. C. B. Densmore, is, it appears, a poet, for though his dialogue is in prose he moralises in the playbill on the dénouement as follows :—

What is Life? 'Tis a beautiful shell,
Thrown up by Eternity's flow;
On Time's bank of quicksands to dwell,
And a moment its loveliness show;
Gone back to its element grand,
In the billow that washed it ashore,
See! another now washes the strand,
And the beautiful shell is no more.

Fates and Furies exhibits a considerable degree of the playwright's skill, but it is skill of a coarse kind, and altogether the managerial repudiation of the "so-called Transpontine drama" does not on this occasion come with a good grace. As regards Mr. Ciprico it is not quite correct to call him a "great actor," though he has some qualifications for melodrama. Like the piece in which he acts, his style is showy, and his art is essentially of the suburban melodramatic kind. He is somewhat short in stature, but of most robust physique, and the play in which he chose to make his début gave him ample opportunity of displaying his muscular development by frequent and picturesque changes of costume. Miss Augusta Stuart and Miss Lamartine, specially engaged to support him, acted with much grace and intelligence, and amongst the members of the regular company the most noticeable were Mr. Arnold and Mr. Sydney. The new scenery, consisting of six elaborate set scenes, was very effectively arranged, and the crowded audience of Saturday last was enthusiastic in its demonstrations of approval.

The experiment of reducing prices by one half at the QUEEN'S Theatre—henceforth to be called the NATIONAL—is a bold one, and if it succeeds the fact will be of some importance to playgoers of slender means. The new management, who will open their doors this evening with a romantic play entitled Russia—an adaptation, we believe, of Les Exilés, recently produced in Paris with great success—appear to think that it is better to have a full house at low charges than a house only half full at the ordinary prices of admission. In this they are no doubt right, though the temptation is naturally very strong to maintain prices in the height of the season when theatres fill easily. The stage of the National is admirably suited for romantic plays which require scenic illustration and breadth of handling—being large enough without that gloomy vastness which renders it impossible to distinguish the finer qualities of acting. Of course if there were to be a corresponding fall in the standard of performances, there would be little reason to congratulate playgoers on the new scale of prices; but the National reopens with a very strong company, including Messrs. Hermann Vezin, Billington, Brooke, Shiel Barry, and Miss Henrietta Hodson, Miss Carlisle, and Miss Eleanor Bufton, and there are other tokens of a spirited policy.

The late Mr. Halliday's drama, entitled Amy Robsart, has been revived at DRURY LANE with all the original pictorial effects. This is a stirring romantic play of the kind to which the frequenters of Drury Lane have been accustomed. Its spirited revival will help to atone for the production of Mr. Wills's adaptation of "Peveril of the Peak," which has been withdrawn after a brief career of unpopularity.—The management of the ADELPHI also continue to rely upon revival of past successes. This evening Mr. Boucicault's Formosa will be substituted for the same author's After Dark.

The new burlesque at the GAIETY—Little Doctor Faust, by Mr. Byron—has proved to have great attractions for visitors to that popular house. The Gaiety matinées will shortly recommence.

The programme of morning performances at the AQUARIUM Theatre is of a very extensive and varied kind. Some of the best standard comedies are to be revived, supported by Messrs. Phelps, Farren, C. Warner, and Mrs. John Wood, Miss Litton, Miss Brennan, and other popular performers. During the present week Breach of Promise and Trial by Jury have been performed daily. On Monday, the management will revive London Assurance.

◆

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Settler and the Savage: R. M. Ballantyne. James Nisbet and Co.

Letters on Music: Louis Ehler. W. Reeves.

Some Fancy Stationery from Mullord Bros., Hoxton.

Victoria C. Woodhull's Life Sketches.

Lessing, His Life and Writings (2 vols.): J. Sime; The Mount: Thomas Sinclair, M.A.; The Barent's Relics: J. K. J. de Jonge. Trübner and Co.

History of French Literature, Henri Van Laun: Agamemnon of Æschylus: Robert Browning. Smith, Elder, and Co.

Illustrious Irishwomen (2 vols.): E. Owens Blackburne. Tinsley Bros.

History of Protestantism, Vol. III.: Rev. J. A. Wylie: The Chicken Market, and other Fairy Tales: Henry Morley; Pet's Posy of Pictures and Stories; Little Talks with Little People; Woodland Romances: C. L. Matéaux; Stories of Girlhood: Sarah Doudney. Cassell.

Matthew Morrison: S. R. Whitehead; Cooper's Poetical Works; Side Lights on Scripture Texts: Francis Jacox, B.A.; The Origin of the World: J. W. Dawson, M.D., F.R.S. Hodder and Stoughton.

Thoreau, His Life and Aims: H. A. Page; Cyclopædia of Costume, Part XVII. Chatto and Windus.

European Colonies (Historical Course for Schools): E. J. Payne. Macmillan.

Our Trip to Blunderland: Jean Jambon; Col. Meadows Taylor—The Story of My Life: Edited by his Daughter. W. Blackwood and Sons.

A Knight of the Nineteenth Century: Rev. E. P. Roe; Two Men of Sandy Bar, &c.: Bret Harte. Ward, Lock, and Co.

The Sixth Year of the Crèche: Marie Hilton. Morgan and Scott.

Eastern Christianity and the War: Joseph Brown, Esq., Q.C.: Handbook of Brazil: M. G. and E. T. Mulhall. E. Stanford.

A New System of Needlework: by a Lady Manager. Central School Depôt.

A Jewel of a Girl (3 vols.): by the Author of "Queenie;" Phœbe Junior: Mrs. Oliphant. Hurst and Blackett.

The Egyptian Obelisk: Erasmus Wilson, F.R.S. Brain and Co.

May Young England Smoke? S. W. Partridge and Co.

The Queen of Bohemia (2 vols.): J. Hatton; Sir Robert Walpole: A. C. Ewald. Chapman and Hall.

Little Rainbow: Mrs. C. Garnett; "Them Boots:" William Gilbert. Daldy, Isbister, and Co.

Essex (a Play): D. C. D. Campbell. Williams and Norgate.

Annals of N. America: Edward Howland. Sampson, Low, and Co.

Fénelon's Spiritual Letters to Women. Rivingtons.

The Story of Avis: E. S. Phelps. Routledge.

The Précis Book: W. Cosmo Monkhouse. Crosby, Lockwood, and Co.

Hand and Heart, Vol. II.

Mists of the Valley (Second Edition): Agnes Giberne: Oriental Records: W. H. Rule; Egyptian Obelisks: W. R. Cooper. S. Bagster and Sons.

Shelley, a Critical Biography: George Barnett Smith. David Douglas, Edinburgh.

Tales and Poems: John Harris. Hamilton, Adams, and Co.

Practical Observations on the Teeth: Edwin Cox. Elliot Stock.

NEW MUSIC

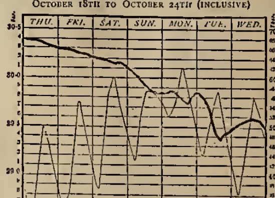
J. BATH.——A merry song for Christmastide, or any feast-tide, is "Our Toast," written and composed for a bass voice by Messrs. R. Reece and W. C. Levey.—Smoothly written and sentimental, but somewhat tame, is "Unfulfilled," a ballad for a medium voice, words by Augusta Webster, music by J. E. Webster.—Book IV. of "Bath's Musical Museum for the Harmonium," selected and arranged by Michael Watson, is as cheap a shilling's-worth as can be met with in the musical publishing world. It contains twenty-two pieces for that instrument, including a popular "Volkslied," by Mendelssohn, the "Kyrie Eleison" from Mozart's "Twelfth Mass," a "Rondo," by Dussek, a "Bourée" and Gavotte, by Bach—in fact, most of our great ancient and modern composers have contributed a share to this excellent little work.—Different in its character, but equally useful in its way, is "Bath's Shilling Dance Album," which contains six contributions from various popular dance-music writers; the coloured frontispiece is prettily got-up by Messrs. Stannard and Son, who have been equally successful in their department with "The Adeline Waltz," the music of which, by G. J. Ruhlni, is not up to his usual standard of excellence.—"The Sleigh Bells Galop," by G. Richardson, and "The Myrtle Waltz," by J. C. Drane, are carefully written, and will be found useful for the coming winter season at carpet dances, &c.

MESSRS. HOWARD AND CO.——W. Fitz-Norman Ellis has supplied the fairly poetical words for four ballads, entitled respectively, "Bid the Welcome Home," the music of which by Berthold Tours (for a tenor) is pleasing; "Floweret in the Desert," by W. J. Wrighton; "Amy," by W. C. Levey; and "Footsteps at the Gate," by A. Harvey, are of a very ordinary type, and will add nothing to their composers' fame.

◆

WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

OCTOBER 18TH TO OCTOBER 24TH (INCLUSIVE)



EXPLANATION.—The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

REMARKS.——The weather during this week has been much more generally wet and unsettled than that for several weeks preceding it. The barometer fell continuously from the beginning of the period till Sunday night, the 21st instant, after which the fall became very irregular. The weather then became dull and showery. On Tuesday, the 23rd instant, the rainfall was very heavy in many of the northern counties; but in the south the fall was only about three-tenths of an inch. The barometer was highest (30·38 inches) on Thursday, the 18th instant; lowest (29·36 inches) on Tuesday, the 23rd instant; range, 1·02 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (62°) on Monday, the 22nd instant; lowest (32°) on Thursday and Friday, the 18th and 19th; range, 30°. Sharp frosts occurred on the grass on Thursday, the 18th, Friday, the 19th, and Wednesday, the 24th. Rainfall: Total fall, 0·38 inches, on four days; greatest fall, 0·29 inches, on Tuesday, the 23rd instant. The barometer was falling the whole of Wednesday night, the 24th instant, and the weather was very dull and rainy on Thursday morning, the 25th instant.

M. OFFENBACH has been seriously ill, but has now nearly recovered.

THE SHAH OF PERSIA is going to revisit Europe next spring. This time he will travel incognito.

THE LATE MISS MARY CARPENTER is to be commemorated at Bristol by the erection of Homes for Working Boys and Girls.

A SECOND INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION is to be held at Capetown next April, in consequence of the great success of the first.

THE WELL-KNOWN "PIPING BULLFINCH" which was shown at the London Exhibition of 1862 has at last found a home in San Francisco.

THE ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF DRAWINGS executed by the Students of the Female School of Art, Queen Square, was held at the School yesterday (Friday) and to-day.

ENGLISH FOX-HUNTING is to be introduced across the Atlantic, and meets are to be held twice a week this autumn at Long Island, near New York. Coaching has already been imported with considerable success.

THE FAÇADE OF THE DUOMO AT FLORENCE, so long left unfinished, is at length likely to be completed, and the Pope has duly blessed the designs. His Holiness has given a beautiful mosaic of Raphael's "Madonna di Foligno" (now in the Vatican), to be placed in the Duomo.

SEASON TICKET HOLDERS at the Paris Exhibition, following the fashion of the Philadelphians last year, will all have to paste a photograph on their vouchers, a duplicate photograph being pasted in the book whence the voucher was withdrawn. The price of the season-ticket will be 4*l*.

THE COMPANION OBELISK TO CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE has been offered by the Khedive, says the New York World, to the American nation, and an English firm have proposed to undertake the transit operations for 20,000*l*. American engineers, however, are anxious to manage the transport themselves, as they put in a plea for home talent.

A PUGILISTIC GHOST—the spirit of J. C. Heenan has been materialised at Rochester, New York State, for a few moments, when the departed Benicia Boy invited any disbeliever to "stand up." No one, however, felt inclined to put the realism of the vision to so practical a test, so J. C. Heenan's spirit quietly returned to its resting-place, leaving a profound impression upon the more than usually gratified spiritualistic audience.

THE QUEEN'S SHORTHORNS.——Mr. Thornton sold forty-four cattle from the Shaw Farm, Windsor, on Tuesday. No fancy prices were realised, the highest for a cow being 72 guineas. Her Majesty has wisely resolved to confine her attention to a class of shorthorns profitable as milkers and meat-producers. The whole forty-four did not value much more than a fourth portion of one heifer sold at Windermere the other week; but 4,100 guineas was quite an adventitious price. It will rejoice farmers' hearts to find that superior animals of excellent pedigree can be bought for sums to which their purse is equal, and that such animals are the kind Her Majesty delights to honour.

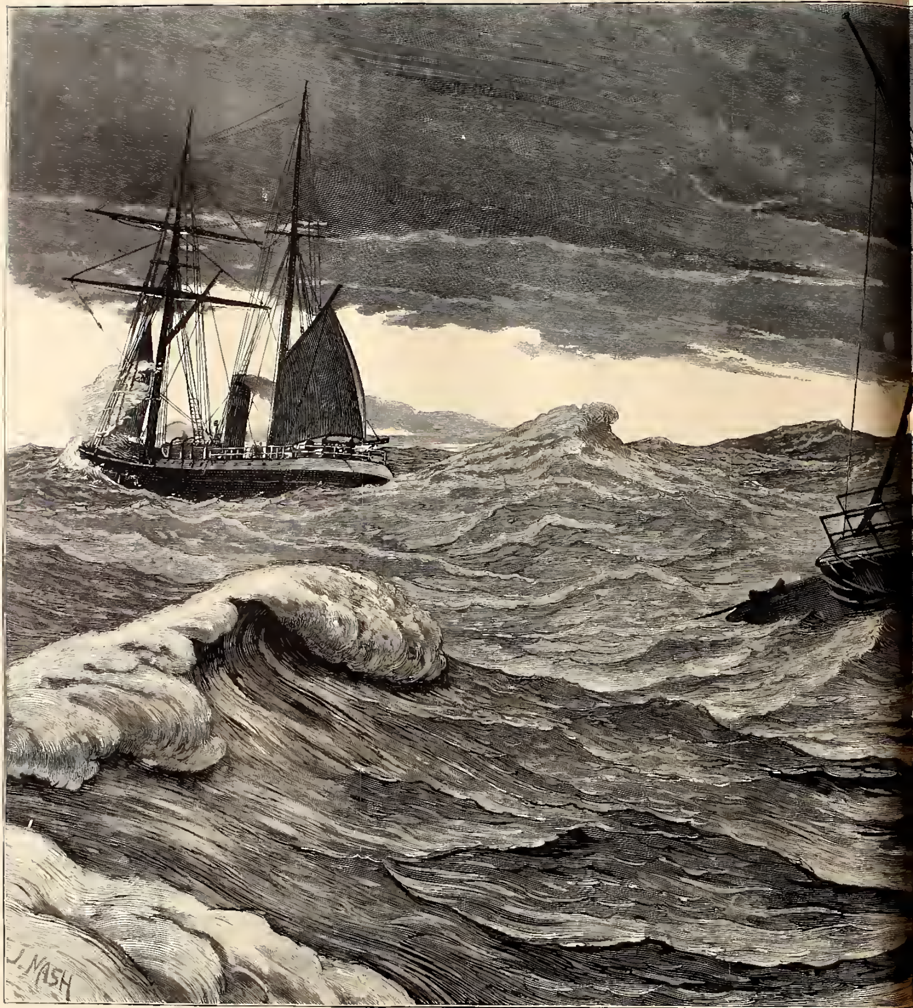
A MEMENTO OF TRAFALGAR is threatened with destruction according to a correspondent of The Times. Two pieces of wood from the Victory—apparently portions of the bowsprit or yard-arm, and perforated with musket shots—were secured by William IV. when Duke of Clarence, and placed in a temple on the lawn of Bushey House, where he was then living. When, however, the Duc de Nemours removed to Bushey the pieces of wood were taken to Hampton Court, and the obscure outbuilding containing them is now being pulled down; so, as the inscription on the wood is nearly illegible, and few of the Palace officials are aware of these facts, there is every prospect of the relics being thrown away as lumber. The correspondent suggests the removal of these remnants of Nelson's old ship to some secure place where they might be publicly exhibited.

THE CONSUMPTION OF ALCOHOL IN FRANCE has increased enormously within the last 40 years, and the increase is specially noticeable since 1873, when 55,000 cases of drunkenness were tried against 82,000 in 1876. The hardest drinkers are in Brittany, Normandy, and round Paris, while the least alcohol is taken in the southern departments. Wine is habitually drunk in 72 departments, cider in 7 of the north-eastern districts, and beer in 4 of the northern departments, although the use of cider is gradually diminishing and that of beer proportionately augmenting. Spirits distilled from corn, potatoes, beetroot, and molasses are found to be far more harmful than those made from wine, as cases of violent death and madness are most frequent in the departments which consume these drinks. The white wines however produced in the Vendée and the Charente Inférieure are fully as dangerous as spirits.

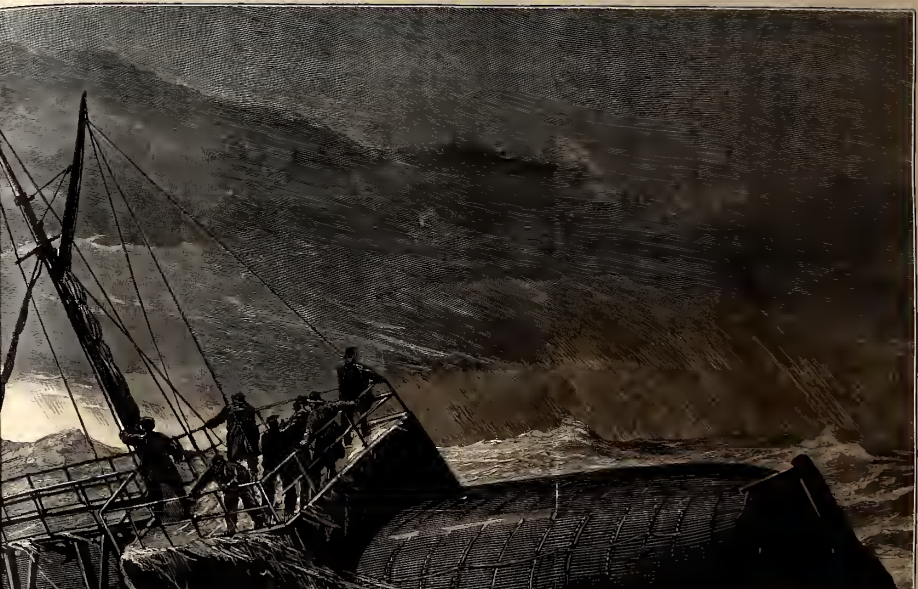
LONDON MORTALITY still continues to increase, and last week 1,403 deaths were registered against 1,321 during the previous seven days, an increase of 82, but being 48 below the average, and at the rate of 20.7 per 1,000. There were 8 deaths from small-pox (a decline of 6), 36 from measles (a decline of 3), 68 from scarlet fever (an increase of 18), 9 from diphtheria, 21 from whooping-cough (an increase of 11), 47 from different forms of fever (an increase of 18, showing the highest number returned in any week since October, 1873, and being 10 above the average), and 25 from diarrhœa (a decline of 23). Deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 297 (an increase of 40), of which 178 resulted from bronchitis and 89 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 47 deaths; 39 were the result of negligence or accident, one being referred to hydrophobia, being the thirteenth fatal case that has been registered in London since the beginning of the present year. There were 2,527 births last week, being 103 above the average. The duration of registered sunshine was 35 hours, the sun being 73.7 hours above the horizon. The mean temperature was 46·7 deg., or 3·1 deg. below the average.

ART IN HOSPITALS.——Dr. Lawrence Hamilton, whose praiseworthy efforts to promote cheerfulness in hospital wards by means of numerous bright pictures we have often mentioned, has designed a special picture-frame for hospitals, noticeable alike for cheapness and for hygienic advantages. Dr. Hamilton's frame is constructed of some metal such as tin, has a smooth surface, and is japanned black, and thus being non-absorbent can be cleaned by soap and water, carbolic acid, or baked in a disinfecting oven without sustaining the slightest injury. It is reversible, being made to contain two pictures, not glass-covered but varnished, one on each side of a central plate, a plan which not only abolishes the absorbent backs of porous wood and brown paper, but enables the picture to be varied at will. If each frame were reversed regularly once a week it would thus exhibit two pictures at the cost of one, and would furnish a proof that the frames had been properly dusted. Dr. Hamilton also calls attention to the usual practice of hanging pictures in private houses, by tilting the upper edge forward, and so forming an "aerial dust-bin," which remains undisturbed for months. His frames would hang flat to the wall, and would also be procurable at the moderate rate of 4*s*. for a frame measuring 26 in. by 20 in.

THE WRECK CHART AND REGISTER FOR 1875-6 shows a larger number of wrecks and casualties than have been recorded in any previous year, although the increase is partially due to the return of minor accidents, which formerly would not have been registered. Three thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven wrecks, casualties, and collisions occurred on our coasts during the twelve months ending June 30, 1876, an excess of 167 on the preceding year, but, happily, thanks in a great measure to the efforts of the lifeboats, only 778 lives were lost—148 less than in 1874-5. In these 3,757 disasters 2,982 were wrecks and casualties, including 425 cases of total loss, and 775 collisions, 77 resulting in total loss; 4,554 ships were concerned, while of the 502 total losses 37 were iron ships, 31 of these being steamers. The East Coast was, as usual, most prolific of wrecks, but the largest number of lives were lost on the West Coast. Out of the 425 total wrecks 176 are registered as from stress of weather, 111 from carelessness, inattention, or neglect, 29 from defects in the ship, 64 from various causes, and the remainder as unknown. There were 851 serious and 1,706 minor casualties, of which 357 and 1,099 respectively were caused by the weather, 202 and 221 by carelessness, and 94 and 86 by defects in the ship. The 775 collisions included 41 between two steamships both under way. River disasters amounted to 1,011, of which 39 were total losses, 286 serious casualties, and 686 minor disasters, while this number includes 610 collisions, of which 79 were between steamships under way. The loss of life was at the rate of 1 in every 22 disasters, occurred in 171 ships, and is divided into 73 persons drowned in foundered vessels, 166 in collisions, 325 in stranded ships, 158 in missing vessels, and the remaining 56 were lost from various causes. The lifeboats of the National Lifeboat Institution, however, which now comprise a fleet of 267, assisted by the Board of Trade rocket apparatus, and boats belonging to ships, coastguards, and fishermen, saved no fewer than 4,358 lives during the year.



CLEOPATRA'S NEE



DLE—ON THE VOYAGE

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——The Turks can chronicle a success since our last record—once more at Plevna, where a Roumanian assault upon a redoubt has been completely repulsed. For some weeks the Roumanians had been pushing forward their operations from the Gravitza redoubt, and on the 19th they left their 4th parallel to storm the nearest redoubt. They succeeded in reaching the trenches, but were received with a withering fire from the Turks which forced them to retire with losses admitted by official sources to be 1,000 killed and wounded. The Russians took no part whatever in the affair, and are wholly occupied with drawing round the town that "circle of steel" which General Todleben has promised. The Imperial Guard are arriving in detachments, and General Gourko, with a cavalry force of some 13,000 men, is doing his utmost to complete the "circle" on the western or Orkhanie side. As no correspondents whatever on the Russian side are admitted round Plevna, it is difficult to gain a correct estimate of the actual situation, for while on the one side The Times' correspondent of Monday gave a most glowing description of the comfort—nay, almost luxury, in which the Russian troops were living—their horses "standing up to their knees in hay," and a most deplorable account of the starvation and miseries the Turks are enduring in Plevna, the Daily Telegraph and Standard correspondents (who, be it said, have been in Plevna, and do not write from Bucharest), represent matters as fairly prosperous in the town, state that the investing "circle" is by no means complete, and draw the most desponding pictures of the Russians in Bulgaria—officers and men alike being half-starved, the horses dying at a terrible rate, some being actually suffocated by the liquid mud with which the roads are covered. That the Russians are not in such clover as The Times' correspondent (whom the Pall Mall Gazette facetiously terms Imperial Cock Crower to the Czar of All the Russias) would make out is manifest—both from impartial accounts and the recent revelations of the immense frauds and shortcomings in the Commissariat department—but other revelations regarding the manner in which The Times' correspondents are treated by the Russians may perhaps account for his rose-coloured spectacles. To come back to Plevna, however, the Russians appear to be carrying on a vigorous bombardment, and there is little doubt that they are exerting themselves to the utmost to reduce Ghazi Osman to surrender, and that the "victorious" Pasha, even with his army of 60,000 men, will find it difficult to hold out against the practised tactics of the hero of Sebastopol, whose forces now amount to upwards of 100,000 men.

Farther east Suleiman Pasha, professedly sent to supersede Mehemet Ali, because the latter showed a disposition to retreat, has created considerable surprise by quietly carrying out his predecessor's plans, and withdrawing altogether from the line of the Lom, where he was facing the Czarevitch, and taking up his position further south, at direct right angles to his former front. This movement, which manifests unexpected and admirable generalship on Suleiman's part, is due to a sudden disposition of General Zimmerman and his Dobrudscha army to show signs of life, and acting with the Czarevitch to take Suleiman Pasha between two fires. Now, however, by throwing his right wing upon Bazardjick, his centre upon Rasgrad and Shumla, and his left upon Eski Juma, Suleiman has frustrated the design, has shown both the Czarevitch and Zimmerman a firm front, and moreover by his left has covered the passes of the Balkans by which he can receive reinforcements from the south, while Varna is well guarded by his centre and right. The only drawback to this manœuvre is that Rustchuk and Silistria are left open to investment, but they are exceedingly strongly fortified, and well able to take care of themselves. Prince Hassan and his Egyptians, unable to withstand the rigorous weather of the autumn, have gone into winter quarters at Varna.

In the Shipka Pass there appears to have been some desultory bombarding, but Reouf Pasha is principally devoting his attention to interrupting the Russian communications on the Gabrova side, and thus reducing Mount St. Nicholas by starvation.

To turn to ASIA, the Russian victory which the Grand Duke Michael, General Melikoff, and General Heimann gained on the heights of Evlin Tepé over Mouktar Pasha, turns out to have been a serious disaster for the Turks, although hardly so crushing as at first reported. Mouktar Pasha is at Yenikoi on the western side of the Saghanli Dagh, where he is re-collecting his army, but Ismail Kurd Pasha is in a dangerous position on the Sara Dagh, being closely pursued and harassed by General Tergukassof. The report that the Russians at once intended to re-invest Kars seems to have been exaggerated, as no decided steps to that effect have as yet been recorded.

The headquarters of the Czar still remain at Gorny Studen, which, however, is represented as being eminently unhealthy, and infested with a perfect plague of mice. Great rejoicings celebrated the recent victory, throughout the Russian lines from Gorny Studen to St. Petersburg, which city is sorely perplexed with money matters, and with the continual frauds practised by the army contractors. Terrible sickness undeniably prevails in both Turkish and Russian camps, and typhus and typhoid fevers are carrying off thousands, including many doctors and non-combatants. This week Dr. Greck of the Red Crescent and Major Leader, the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, are included in the list of the victims, while Dr. Harry Crookshank lies seriously ill at Varna.

There have been the usual weekly rumours of "mediation," of Servian participation in the conflict, and of the resumption of active hostilities by the Montenegrins, of which the last named is the best founded.

FRANCE.——The situation remains unchanged, and the Ministers having announced by an official note that they do not intend to resign before the Chamber meets, all eyes are anxiously fixed upon to-morrow's complementary elections and the elections to the Councils-General on Sunday week, the 4th prox. The latter are creating almost all-absorbing interest, for in January, 1879, seventy-five senators will have to retire, according to the terms of the Constitution, and it will be the duty of the General and other Departmental councils to fill up the vacancies, and moreover, by the Treveneuc law, if the Assembly is forcibly dissolved at any time it will be their duty to organise a National Assembly among themselves. The Marshal and his advisers show no signs of giving way, and are as energetically exercising all possible official pressure and influence as during the recent Parliamentary elections. The most incredible, illegal, and disgraceful measures appear to have been practised by the Government in the Departments in order to compel the peasants o vote for the official candidates—newspaper offices have been surrounded by gendarmes at the hour of going to press, and the proofs taken to the Prefect before a copy is allowed to be printed, opposition candidates' addresses torn down from the walls, and reports spread abroad that they have been arrested, gendarmes stationed in the polling-places (contrary to law), and the electors' tickets inspected, so that if their vote was unfavourable to the Government it was designedly mutilated by the gendarme and refused reception by the Maire, polling places violently closed, and only Government voters admitted by ticket, troops being employed to keep the Republican electors back—such are the means of terrorism which the admirable provincial correspondent of The Times tells us the Duc de Broglie has employed to wrest 50 seats from the Republican grasp. Moreover another correspondent tells us that even in Paris the Duc takes the most stringent measures to prevent any one penetrating to the Marshal, who is as isolated as the Chinese Emperor or the old Tycoon of Japan. Only properly edited papers, such as the Figaro, are permitted within the Elysée, while the Marshal is told that as he has won fifty seats this time, another dissolution will bring him sixty more—in fact a majority. Thus both in Conservative and Republican circles there is a general feeling that the Marshal, on the meeting of the Assembly will at once request the Lower Chamber to vote the Budget, and if the Deputies venture to suggest that the Ministry should be censured or impeached as a preliminary measure, that he will then ask the Senate for a second dissolution. Some considerable doubt is felt whether his request will be granted, for as it is the Conservative majority in the Upper House are anything but homogeneous, and the Republicans may possibly succeed in defeating the Marshal on his own ground. Moreover, the Orleanists are beginning to doubt the prudence of further extreme high-handed measures, and while the Constitutionel advocates a compromise Ministry, the Soleil advises the Marshal frankly to accept the verdict of the country in favour of a Republican and Parliamentary Government. If at the last moment the Marshal should show signs of yielding to the popular voice, it is thought that he will send for M. Andral, Vice President of the Council of State, and a thorough man of "Conciliation."

Nevertheless the Republicans on their side are working as hard as ever, and if not so cool-headed and dignified as a few months ago, still continue to show admirable signs of discipline and moderation. M. Grévy, their nominal leader, has selected Dôle, not Paris, as his future seat, the candidate for the vacancy in the capital being M. Devoucoux, who proposed the want of confidence vote in the late Chamber. M. Gambetta, their actual leader, has gone to the Nièvre to superintend the election of the Republican candidate to-morrow. Although condemned to two separate terms of imprisonment, neither he nor various other deputies who have been condemned for "insulting the Marshal" in their electoral addresses can be arrested—except by special permission of the Chamber—until the end of the Session. The Left of the Senate have issued a circular, exhorting their followers to vote unwaveringly in the Departmental elections. In the meantime the Press carry on a brisk wordy war; the Republican organs, undeterred by the sentence on their leader, never weary of repeating that the Marshal must "submit or resign;" while their Conservative contemporaries are equally addicted to quoting the President's favourite mottoes, J'y suis, J'y reste, and "My duty becomes greater with the peril. I will not submit to the dictates of the Demagogy."

Paris has been apparently very quiet throughout the crisis, and the crowds round the newspaper kiosques have been the only signs of the intense inward agitation which is prevailing. Socially speaking, the signs of the coming season are multiplying, and the inevitable "first representations" are beginning. At the Opéra a talented young Conservatoire pupil, Mdlle. Richard, has made a most successful début in the Favorita; the Odéon has reopened with George Sand's Mauprat; at the Cluny, M. Louis Figuier has brought out a magnificent five-act spectacular drama, Les Six Parties du Monde, which, despite the scenery, is next door to a failure, and at the Château d'Eau there has been a revival of Les Pauvres de Paris, the original of the Streets of London.

GERMANY.——There are symptoms of a very severe Parliamentary storm in the Prussian Diet, which is by no means satisfied with the extended leave of absence accorded to Prince Bismarck and Count Eulenberg, and which has been somewhat surprised by the Government asking for permission to raise a loan ostensibly for "public works," but actually to support the tremendous military preparations which it is still thought necessary to push forward. The Diet was opened on Sunday with a Speech from the Throne, read by Herr Camphausen, which principally dealt with finance, and promising as a sop to the Chamber measures completing the "administrative reforms" which have been inaugurated in the towns and will now be carried into the provinces. The speech concluded with expressions of gratitude for the warm reception of the Emperor by the provinces during his recent tour.

As with the Government, "finance" is becoming a serious difficulty with the people. Large quantities of Russian securities are held in Berlin, and indeed throughout all Germany, and are being buoyed up fictitiously in the hope of Russian successes, while the Stettin failure has brought about the liquidation of the bank of Henckel and Lange, the most aristocratic firm in the country, and largely used by great landowners.—A monument commemorating the war of 1870 has been unveiled at Hamburg by the Grand Duke of Mecklenberg-Schwerin.

INDIA.——Rain continues to fall, and prospects are universally brighter. The recent relief measures are beginning to bear fruit, the decrease of the number on the relief works in Madras being 56,929, and of those fed gratuitously being 237,289, while 300,000 persons have returned to their ordinary avocations. Prices are falling, and the crops are in flourishing condition.—Uneasiness still prevails with regard to the Khelat frontier, and the Khan is stated to be thoroughly dissatisfied with his position.

UNITED STATES.——The Indian difficulty continues to occupy considerable attention, and the subject has been opened by the recent visit of the friendly chiefs to Washington, during which they displayed some dissatisfaction at being transferred into the Missouri district, though ultimately appearing ready to obey the "Great Father." As, however, they were to be treated as white settlers, they asked for various advantages which white settlers possessed, and each chief made unlimited demands for carts, oxen, mowing machines, ploughs, sheep, big school-houses, Catholic priests in long robes to teach their children, overcoats, and portmanteaus wherein to stow the overcoats. The two last named requests were accorded, together with a small sum of money, and the chiefs returned to their agencies rejoicing; although whether they will definitively abandon the war-paint and feathers in which they paid their first visit to the Great Father Hayes for the coats and white ties in which they appeared at the second interview may be regarded as somewhat doubtful.

The wheat crop is said to be the largest ever produced in the United States.—The majority of the Congressional Silver Commission have reported to the Senate in favour of the full restoration of the double standard gold and silver currency, and the unlimited coinage of both.—A motion has been made in the Senate for the appointment of a Select Committee to revise the law now in force for ascertaining and declaring the result of the Presidential election.

MISCELLANEOUS.——Another fire has occurred in St. Johns, NEW BRUNSWICK, 2,000 persons being rendered homeless.—Signor Crispi has terminated his visit to AUSTRIA, and returned to ITALY. He saw Count Andrassy, but nothing is known about the interview. The Pope has insisted upon the expulsion of Father Curci from the Society of Jesus for denying that the possession of temporal power is necessary to the Pope.—The King of GREECE will stay at the camp at Thebes for a fortnight. The camp will be maintained during the winter.—In VICTORIA (Australia) the Budget was presented to Parliament on August 16th. The financial year closed with a credit balance of 205,671*l.* The Government has proposed new taxes amounting to 250,000*l.*, the expenditure for the coming year being estimated at 4,860,000*l.*—In NEW ZEALAND a new Ministry has been formed by Sir George Grey, who assumes office as Premier, with Messrs. Larnach, M'Andrew, Sheehan, and Fisher.—From CAPE TOWN we learn that fighting has commenced in the Transkei, the Galekas having attacked the Fingoes and police at South Mapassa.

THE COURT

THE Queen and the Princess Beatrice returned to Balmoral at the end of last week, after a stay of three days at the Glassalt Shiel. On Saturday the Princess of Wales and her three little girls lunched with Her Majesty, and the Duke of Richmond and Gordon joined the Royal party at dinner. Next morning Divine Service was held at the castle, when the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold were present, and the Princess of Wales and her daughters came over from Abergeldie to attend the service. On Monday Her Majesty drove out with the Princess of Wales, and in the evening the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Marquis of Hertford, Sir T. M. and Lady Biddulph, and Mr. Charles Peel, dined with the Queen. On Tuesday Her Majesty held a Council.—The weather continues very cold in the Highlands, and the snowfall has been heavier round Balmoral than in any other district.

The Prince of Wales returned to town last week from Dartmouth, leaving his two sons on board the Britannia. On Saturday he went down to Windsor and had a day's pheasant shooting with Prince Christian in the Park, lunching afterwards with Princess Christian. On Monday the Prince left town for Newmarket to stay with Mr. Chaplin, and on the following day was present at the race for the Cambridgeshire.—The Princess of Wales remains at Abergeldie with Miss Knollys, who continues in a weak condition, although the crisis of the illness has passed favourably. There was an alarm of fire at Abergeldie last week some woodwork in one of the bedrooms having become ignited. The fire, however, was discovered in time and was speedily extinguished.—There is some talk of the Prince and Princess spending Christmas at Copenhagen with the Danish Royal family.

The Duchess of Edinburgh and her children reached Berlin on Sunday, and after paying and receiving visits from the Emperor, and the Imperial Prince and Princess, left next day for Marseilles to meet the Duke, who had arrived in the Sultan some days previously. The Sultan has excited great interest at Marseilles, and numerous visitors have been viewing the vessel. Some of the visitors, however, met with slight accidents in going up the side as, there being but one ladder for ascent and descent, a slight crowding caused several persons to fall into the water. They were, however, immediately rescued. The Duchess arrived at Marseilles on Wednesday, being received by the Duke, the Prefect, and the various municipal authorities.—The Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne have gone to Rosencath with the Duke and Duchess of Argyll.

The Empress of Austria will probably come to England soon after Christmas.—Ex-Queen Isabella of Spain is going to spend the winter in Madrid. She will previously stay for a few weeks at Seville, and will pay a short visit to her mother, Queen Christina, at Paris.—General Grant has gone to Paris.

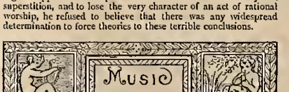
CHURCH NEWS

REOPENING OF THE CATHEDRALS OF EXETER AND BRISTOL.——The reopening services at Exeter Cathedral, the restoration of which has occupied seven years, and cost 50,000*l.*, were held last week. On Thursday the Bishops of Winchester, Oxford, Exeter, Truro, Salisbury, Bath and Wells, and Bishop Tozer, and 300 clergymen joined in the inaugural procession. (The Guardian says that the respectful demeanour of the spectators towards this surpliced throng marked a curious change from the days when a single clergyman was subjected to personal violence and abuse for wearing his white robe in the pulpit of St. Sidwell's in the same city.) The preachers were the Bishops of Winchester and Oxford, and after the service Dr. Temple was presented with a handsome pastoral staff of ebony and ivory, subscribed for by a number of residents in his diocese. On Friday the services were continued, the Bishop carrying his staff in procession, and sermons being delivered by the Bishop of Salisbury and the Bishop of Bath and Wells.—On Tuesday the new nave of Bristol Cathedral, which has cost about 15,000*l.*, and has been ten years in progress, was opened with a special service. The inaugural ceremony consisted of a mixed procession of clerical and civic dignitaries, but owing, it is said, to some misunderstanding between the Dean and the clergy of the city, there was not a very large attendance. Besides this, the unfortunate dispute respecting the statues of the four Latin fathers which were removed from the north porch has not been cleared up, as was shown by the absence of Mr. Wait, M.P., the donor of the north porch, and Canon Norris, who were specially named in the Bishop's sermon as the principal promoters of the work, together with Canon Wade, who opposed in the Chapter the removal of the statues.

Mr. Samuel Morley, the member for the city, attended, but Mr. Hodgson, his colleague, was too unwell to do so. A few members of the Restoration Committee also attended, though they threw up the work when the statues were removed. The morning sermon was preached by Bishop Ellicott, and that in the evening by the Bishop of Bath and Wells. On Wednesday there was a continuation of the services, the preachers being the Deans of Westminster and Canterbury.

CHURCH DIFFERENCES.——Archdeacon Denison, speaking last week at the annual meeting of the English Church Union at Bristol, referred to what he called "the supremely ridiculous, the painfully absurd platitudes and conventionalities which had been expressed at the Croydon Congress." It was simply silly idle mockery, if it were not worse, to talk about "agreeing and being at peace," and about "non-essentials" and the like trash. Within the pale of the Church of England there had been for some 300 years past two religions—the Catholic and the Protestant, but now there were sub-divisions both of Catholic and Protestant. There was the Catholic Ritualist; the non-Catholic Ritualist, the old Evangelical, and the young Evangelical. When he was prosecuted more than twenty years ago for teaching the doctrine of the Real Presence he had more sympathy from the old Evangelicals than from the High Churchmen of that time. It was the young Evangelicals who tried to stamp him out. Then there was the religion of the Acts of Parliament, which was a very young religion. Of this sort of religion he was obliged to speak, because the time for mincing one's words had gone by, and he could think of no two more notable examples than the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of that diocese. It was a great question what those men meant. Their religion was not his religion. He would no more think of going to them about any point of doctrine, than they would think of going to him. They were as opposed to each other as it was possible for any two persons to be opposed, and that being so, what was to become of that nonsense of agreement? Then there was the Broad Church, which some people called the Church of the future. The only certain thing known about it was that it had no resemblance of any kind to the Church of the past and the present. It was the Church of intellectual license, not of "the faith." Now, did any man in his senses, who was not filled up to the brim with either ignorance or prejudice, suppose that these elements of belief and unbelief were going to be fused together? If there were such a man he ought to be caught and preserved in spirits at the British Museum. Referring to the question about the book called "The Priest in Absolution," he said the Church Association was very crafty, and the Primate of England was the craftiest man he ever knew. He ventured to say that it was not possible to cram into any other year so much ignorance as had been crammed down the mouths of English people and into their ears as had been done this year about that book and about the subject of Confession. No number of Archbishops and Bishops should make him take their religion instead of his own, and his advice to his hearers was "Stand fast and give up nothing."

VARIOUS.——The Post learns "with astonishment, not to say alarm" that a few influential authorities both in Church and State are bent upon the revision of the Baptismal and Ordination Services, as well as the Office for the Visitation of the Sick, with a view to the elimination of those parts which appear to sanction the doctrine of the Apostolical Succession and Auricular Confession.—The Church Times prints a letter from the Rev. P. C. Ellis, of Llanfairfechan Rectory, referring to the recent letter sent by the Bishop of Bath and Wells to the Church of England Working Men's Society, in which he said that "It is sad that men professing to fear God should be the first to essert that seven of the most eminent judges have wilfully given a judgment contrary to the plain letter of the law." Mr. Ellis writes for the encouragement of these men, to let them know that they are not the first to make this assertion, and that in doing so, they are in accord with the opinion very strongly expressed to him in July last, by the Lord Chief Baron Kelly, when he was in attendance upon him as Sheriff's Chaplain. "His lordship's words were, that the judgment was 'an iniquitous one, that it was not a judgment based upon law, but upon policy.'"—The Right Hon. Lord Plunkett, Bishop of Meath, speaking a few days ago at the Annual Diocesan Synod, said that the dear old Church was at last emerging from the ordeal to which she had been subjected for the last six or seven years. He always felt sanguine, but never more so than at present, as to the future of the Irish Church.—The Bishop of Manchester, preaching last Sunday at Oxford University, on "The Moral Basis of Christianity," said that though a degrading materialism seemed to be infecting many types of religious thought, and some of our sacramental theories which claimed to be the highest appeared to drop into an almost unfathomable abyss of superstition, and to lose the very character of an act of rational worship, he refused to believe that there was any widespread determination to force theories to these terrible conclusions.



MUSIC

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.——The Director of Her Majesty's Theatre announces his intention to give a series of performances of Italian Opera during the forthcoming winter. In the list of his principal singers we find the names of several more or less distinguished during the spring and summer season of the actual year. Among the ladies, for example, are Caroline Salla, Mila Rodani, Marie Rôze, and Alwina Valleria, each of whom will be heartily welcome, inasmuch as each possesses not only unquestionable talent but a certain individuality prepossessing on its own account. These, with the addition of Mdlle. Anna de Belocca, whose successful début at Her Majesty's Opera (Drury Lane) two or three years since as Rosina in the Barbiere di Siviglia is not unremembered, form a sufficiently attractive company; and if the characters are so dealt out as to allow them all a fair chance of shining in the sphere of action best suited to their immediate capacities they will have little reason to complain. With no Titiens, Nilsson, Gerster, Trebelli, &c. to absorb the chief leading parts of the repertory, a proportionate distribution of labour must be easy enough for an experienced manager who has learnt how to humour the fancies and caprices inseparable from the various members of his "troop" (pass the word). Thus—since the respectable phrase, "comprimaria," signifying plainly "seconda donna," has gone out of date, and every aspiring operatic songstress is now "prima donna assolutissima di primo cartello," or nothing—each "prima donna" will have cause for satisfaction, and for mentally exclaiming, "contentissima son' io!" Then in the catalogue we perceive the names of the veteran contralto, Madame de Merie Lablache, who can safely undertake anything and everything, and the scarcely less versatile light soprano, Madame Bauermeister. Two débutantes are also advertised—Mdlles. Parodi and Lisa Perdi, about whom, knowing nothing, we can say nothing. If Mdlle. Parodi has any consanguinity with her namesake, the late Mr. Benjamin Lumley's Parodi, at Her Majesty's Theatre many years ago, we have a right to expect something from her as from one springing from a legitimate source. When it is added that Signors Fancelli, Gillandi, Rinaldi, and Bettini are among the tenors, Signors Del Puente and Galassi being the chief baritones, Signor Zoboli the "buffo," Signor Foli the principal bass, and that with them are associated others more or less esteemed (among them Signor Runcio, a stranger), it will be seen that the masculine department promises to be no less efficient than the feminine. About the orchestra and chorus we have as yet no definite particulars; but it is said that the conductor will be Mr. Weist Hill, who at the Alexandra Palace showed himself so zealous and competent a director of orchestral performances. The Director enters into some explanations as to the advisability and the feasibility of his present undertaking. References are made to the old arguments about England being considered or not considered "a musical nation," Italian opera being, or not being, "an entertainment exclusively intended for the aristocracy," and about "favourable opportunities afforded" for doing virtually what is not done during the halcyon period when "fashionable classes" (for Fashion's sake) do not object to high prices—all, by the way, beside the question. Further than this, the Director rejoices in the occasion offered him of departing "from the ordinary routine, by which no operas are presented to the public but those with which it is thoroughly familiar." Such a preamble was wholly superfluous. Few can be unaware that in "extra seasons," when cheap prices are adopted and "evening dress is waived," the attractive works are those in which opera-goers generally take most delight. Ordinary amateurs cannot afford the charges maintained during the "fashionable period," and for that reason avail themselves eagerly of the chance to hear such works while the "unfashionable" prevails. No one knows this better than the Director of Her Majesty's Theatre, who might have dispensed with a preamble so utterly worn out. A simple invitation to support his proposed series of operatic performances would have answered all purposes—the more emphatically because all that is promised by way of novelty is an opera on the subject of Ruy Blas, by Signor Marchetti—"represented with great success in every part of Italy" (no powerful recommendation by the way), and Verdi's revised edition of La Forza del Destino, produced at the old theatre in the Haymarket some years ago, and, as the Director himself may remember, with indifferent results. Nevertheless, we heartily wish prosperity to the winter season of Italian Opera, because it cannot fail to interest a large number of amateurs unable to attend under different conditions, and because, judging by the official announcement, care seems to have been taken that the performances shall be as good as practicable. No special pleading was necessary in laying the scheme before the public. It is a fair, above-ground undertaking; and, if carried out in the spirit of the prospectus, deserves success on its own merits.

WAIFS.——Mr. Arthur Chappell begins the twentieth series of his unprecedentedly successful "Popular Concerts" on the evening of Monday fortnight. Before that date we shall have some few remarks to offer upon the intentions of the active director and the general prospects of his forthcoming season.—It is said that the Adelphi Theatre has been chosen for the next series of representations by the Carl Rosa Opera Company, which has recently been performing with great success at various towns in Scotland.—Some of the German papers inform us that the entire Tetralogy of Wagner's Ring des Niebelungen will be given at Munich, in the summer of 1878, and that the town itself accepts all the responsibilities..

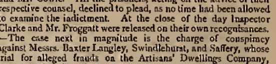
SPORTING

THE TURF.——The Houghton Meeting at Newmarket has been hardly a whit less interesting than the Second October a fortnight ago. It was hardly favoured with as fine weather, but in all other respects was as enjoyable a gathering as a lover of racing pure and simple could wish to take part in. Every year Newmarket loses more and more of its old exclusiveness, and increases in popularity with the multitude, and it may be safely said that on no previous occasion did so many spectators witness the race for the Cambridgeshire on Tuesday. The Prince of Wales was present on more than one day, and seemed to enjoy himself thoroughly in galloping about the heath on his piebald cob, though the colour of his animal must to a consider-extent have prevented his Royal Highness preserving that incognito he desires on such occasions. Business began as usual on the Monday, the chief race of which was the Criterion Stakes, which fell to Lord Falmouth by aid of the hitherto unbeaten Jannette, Clementine, the Doncaster Champagne winner, being second. In a field of seventeen, Lord Stamford's Emily filly, over a course just suited to her, managed to get home first; and two rogues, Chevron and The Ghost, for once took it into their heads to run straight, and secured the First Welter and Flying Stakes respectively. The great short-distance handicap of the season, known now for nearly forty years as the Cambridgeshire, came on for decision, according to custom, on the Tuesday. Though there had been some changes in the speculation market during the few days previous to the race, the three favourites of the previous week, Hilarious, Manœuvre, and Rosy Cross, maintained their position, the last-named assuming the first place at 4 to 1 before the start, so confident of success were the trainer and the Heath House party. Not less satisfied with their prospects were those who believed that Hilarious, the Cesarewitch winner, would, like Rosebery last year, carry his 14 lb. penalty to victory. What the Stanton stable really thought of their chances with Manœuvre may be hard to say, but a very large body of the public and many first-class judges considered the mare could not well lose if she only ran up to her St. Leger form with Lady Golightly. Of the outsiders the erratic Shillelagh and Belphœbe seemed backed to win and for a place for most money. Thirty-four runners came to the post after drawing lots for places, and for the first time a considerable portion of the course was flagged out as a guidance to the jockeys. Rosy Cross was the only strongly-fancied animal which drew a place far down on the lower ground, the disadvantages of which are so manifest that the wonder is the Jockey Club still adheres to the old course when so many other tracts are available. After several breaks away a capital start was effected, and Avontes, with the Monk in attendance, was the first to show in advance. It would require almost a column to give the details of the race, and we therefore must content ourselves by saying that before the Red Post was reached the favourites had held out signs of distress. After passing the Old Duke's Stand Avontes was beaten, and Monk took up the running, but was soon done for. The race then became left to Jongleur, Belphœbe, and Gladia, who passed the winning post in the order mentioned, Arbitrator being fourth, and Avontes fifth. The Cambridgeshire of 1877 will be long remembered if only for the fact that not one of the three first favourites were in the first ten at the finish. The sporting prophets, who had been unusually voluminous and confident about the race, have been floored to a man. The performance of the winner was for a three-year-old a most excellent one—perhaps the best handicap performance of modern days, as he carried no less than 8 st. 4 lbs., See-Saw as a three-year-old having had 2 lbs. less on his back when he won in 1868, and Montargis 5 lbs. in 1873. Jongleur is a French horse, the property of Prince d'Arenberg, and among other races has won the Criterion Stakes at Newmarket and the French Derby. At the Second October Meeting he beat Thunderstone and Placida, giving them both weight, and he was forthwith made a Cambridgeshire favourite; but on succumbing to Lady Golightly later in the week his chances were put down as almost hopeless, though no very long odds were laid against him. It would seem however that the fact of the French horse giving 11 lbs. to Lady Golightly was not duly taken into consideration. It is to be noted that of the last five Cambridgeshires no less than three have been taken by French horses, Montargis and Peut-être being the winners in 1873 and 1874, and that the veteran Harry Jennings was the trainer of them all. Perhaps the victory of Jongleur will tend to resuscitate the question of "Turf reciprocity;" but, however this may be, the gallant victory of a good horse could not have been better received than was that of Jongleur on Tuesday last, the cheering being literally, as the reporters often say, "loud and continuous." How many thousands of English sovereigns will follow Jongleur to France it would be impossible to say; but certain it is that "perfidious Albion" will suffer considerably in pocket; while the third, Gladia, also a French animal, will abstract additional coin. The enthusiasm of the French division at Newmarket was unbounded, and several of the most enthusiastic embraced the trainer then and there after the manner of their country. One main feature of the race was that Rosebery, who came in first last year, came in last this, having been pulled up lame. On the Cambridgeshire day that grand horse Trappist took the All Aged Stakes, and made another winning mark on the Wednesday by beating ten others in the Stand Handicap.

COURSING.——The Lurgan Open Meeting, under the patronage of Lord Lurgan, was everything that could be desired. The Derrymacash Stakes were divided between Mr. Hornby's Herzegovina and Mr. Wise's Wedding Tour, and the Brownlow Cup was won by Lord Headley's Wild Orphan.

AQUATICS.——The new match between Boyd and Higgins has not yet been concluded, the latter still holding out for the employment of cutters. It is by no means unlikely that Boyd will give way on this point.—The old antagonists and the ex-champions Sadler and Kelly are both reported well and in good fettle for their match, which is to come off on Monday week.

PEDESTRIANISM.——Gale has started on another walk at the Agricultural Hall, having set himself the task of walking 4,000 quarter miles in 4,000 consecutive ten minutes. The whole thing is much to be regretted, as it is simply a question of testing a man as to his powers of doing without sleep. There is not a particle of sport in it, and if the public would only absent themselves from such absurd or rather painful exhibitions, they would not be persevered in, as they would not pay.

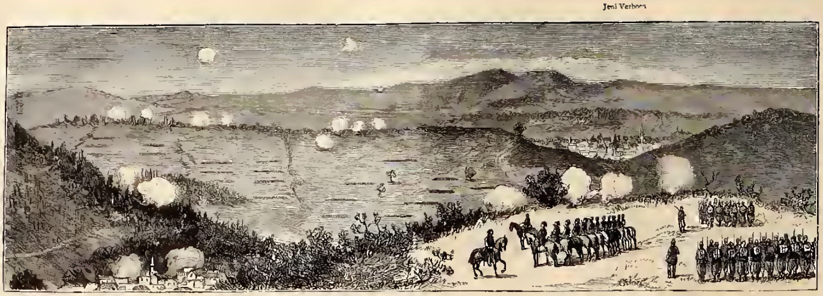


LEGAL

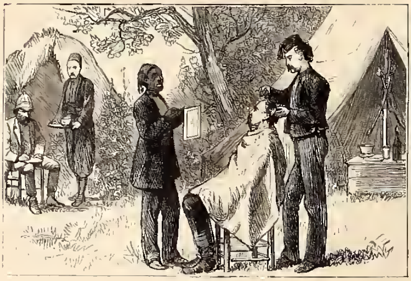
TRIALS AT THE CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.——The two foolish youths who disported themselves as highwaymen on Blackheath have been convicted and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.—The "big thing" of the sessions will be the trial of the detectives and Mr. Froggatt for their complicity in the De Goncourt frauds. There are four indictments, one of which contains 220 counts, and 110 witnesses have been subpœnaed for the prosecution. The case began on Wednesday before Mr. Baron Pollock, the prosecution being conducted by the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Gorst, Q.C., Mr. Bowen, and Mr. Cowie. All the prisoners, acting on the advice of their respective counsel, declined to plead, as no time had been allowed to examine the indictment. At the close of the day Inspector Clarke and Mr. Froggatt were released on their own recognisances.—The case next in magnitude is the charge of conspiracy against Messrs. Baxter Langley, Swindlehurst, and Saffery, whose trial for alleged frauds on the Artisans' Dwellings Company, commenced on Tuesday.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.——Lord Justice Amphlett is about to retire from his seat in the Court of Appeal. It is said that Sir J. Hannen will be his successor, and that Baron Huddleston will be transferred to the Probate Division.—The Home Secretary has declined to receive a deputation respecting the death of the young man Chalkley, who was wrongfully charged with the City Road burglary. It is, however, stated that the alleged misconduct of the police is being "carefully considered."—The men of the 19th Hussars who were concerned in the recent emeute at the Curragh Camp, have been tried by court-martial at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, and the finding of the Court is now under consideration at the War Office.—The Middlesex Magistrates have decided the question of Gin v. Gin-and-water, their judgment being that it is not legal to sell the latter under the name of the former. The disappointed publicans will therefore have to pay not only their original fines, but also the costs of the appeal. The Hull stipendiary magistrate has taken a similar common-sense view.—A singular charge of abduction was inquired into the other day at Greenwich, whither a little girl of eight, who resided in Lambeth, had been taken by a young man who gave a false name and address. The journey was performed in a tramcar, and the crying of the child attracted the attention of the conductor, who put the affair into the hands of a policeman.—A Sheffield tradesman being annoyed by the smoke which issued from the wigwam of a travelling photographer which had been pitched near his house, put an end to the nuisance by the very

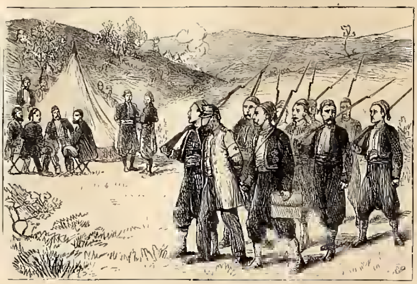
(Continued on page 406)



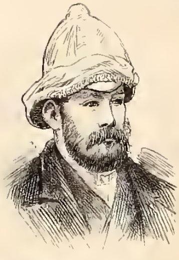
THE BATTLE OF CHERKOVNA, OR JENI VERBOCA



THE CAMP BARBER



A "RED CROSS" OFFICIAL ARRESTED AS A SPY



CAPTAIN SARTORIUS
Military Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph

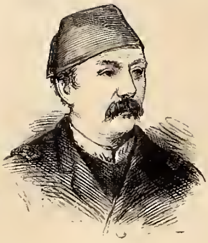
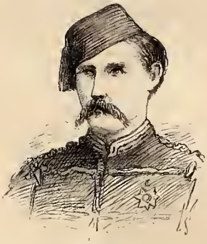
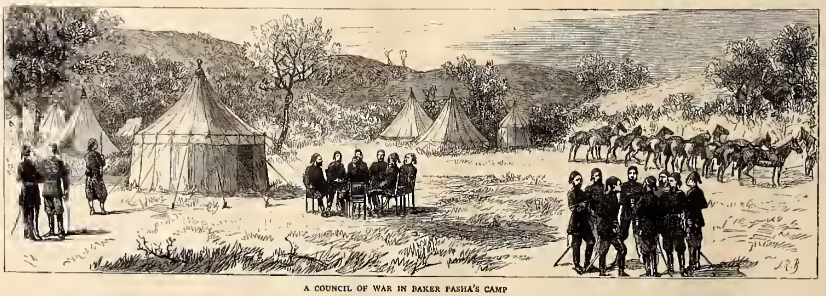
COLONEL BRISCOE
Formerly of the 15th Hussars, now Staff Officer to Baker Pasha



BAKER PASHA



MAJOR ALLIX
Formerly of the Grenadier Guards, now Staff Officer to Baker Pasha



A COUNCIL OF WAR IN BAKER PASHA'S CAMP

WITH THE TURKS—ON THE LOM

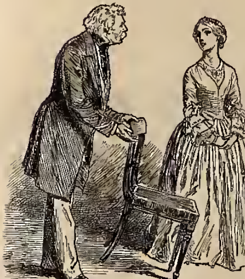
BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XVII.

AN OLD PROMISE



AFTER a disquieted and uneasy night, haunted with Cassandra-like visions of coming trouble, I arose, anxious and nervous. "Am I going to kill the girl? Wait till she was eighteen?" What could these words mean except one thing? To connect Celia, even in thought, with this smooth and cynical old German was worse than any union of May and December. Innocence and trust: belief in high aims and pure motives on the one hand—on the other that perfect knowledge of evil which easteth out faith. A maiden whose chief charm, next to her beauty, to the adept of sixty, was her strange and unwonted ignorance of the world and its wickedness. And yet—and yet—we were in this nineteenth century, and we were in England, where men do not give away or sell their daughters, unless in novels: how could it be possible that a man of the world, a successful man, like Mr. Tyrrell, should contemplate, even for a moment, the sacrifice of his only child on such an altar?

As our misfortunes always fall together, I received, the next morning, on my way home from giving my last lesson, a second blow, from an equally unexpected quarter. This time it was from Wassielewski. The old man, who had been dejected and resigned since the failure of his schemes in 1854, was walking along upright, swinging his arms with an elated air. When he saw me he threw up his long arms, and waved them like the sails of a windmill.

"It is coming," he cried. "It is coming once more. This time it will be no failure. And you shall take your part. Only wait a week, Ladislas Pulaski, and you shall know all. Silence, until you are admitted into our plans."

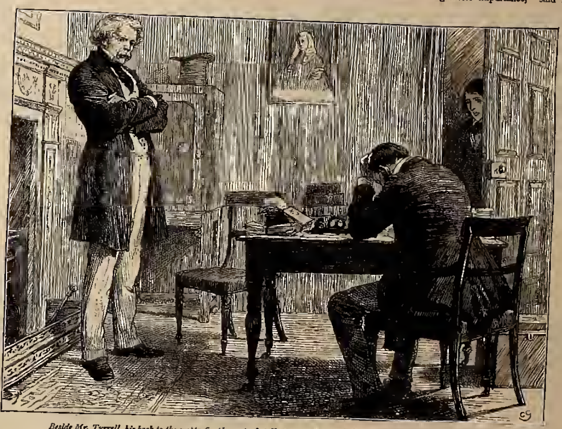
He shook my hand with a pressure which meant more than his words, and left me, with his head thrown back, his long white hair streaming in the wind, tossing his arms and gesticulating.

I had almost forgotten that I was a Pole, and the reminder came upon me with a disagreeable shock. It was like being told of some responsibility you would willingly let sleep—some duty you would devolve upon others. And to take my part? Strange transformation of a cripple and a music-master into a conspirator and a rebel.

For a week nothing was said by Mr. Tyrrell, and I was forgetting my anxiety on that score when, one afternoon, I went, as usual, to see Celia. There were, as I have said, two entrances, that of the front door, which was also the office door, and that at the end of the garden, which was used by Celia and myself. This afternoon, by some accident of choice, I went to the front door. To the right was Mr. Tyrrell's private office; as I passed I saw that the door was open—that he was sitting at his table, his head upon his hand in a dejected position, and that beside him, his back to the empty fireplace, stood, tall, commanding, as if the place belonged to him, Herr Räumer.

He saw me, and beckoned me to enter the office.

"Here is Celia's private tutor, adviser, and most confidential friend," he said, in his mocking tones. "Here is Ladislas Pulaski. Why not confide the task to him? Let him speak to Celia first, if you will not."



Beside Mr. Tyrrell his back to the empty fireplace, stood, tall, commanding, as if the place belonged to him, Herr Räumer

What task?

Mr. Tyrrell raised his face, and looked at me. I think I have never seen a more sorrowful face than his at that moment—more sorrowful, or more humiliated. I had always known him bold, confident, self-reliant, of a proud and independent bearing. All that was gone, and in a single night. He looked crushed. Now, it was as if another spirit possessed the well-known features, for they were transformed. What had this man done to him—what power over him did he possess that could work this great and sorrowful transformation?

Herr Räumer had taken off his blue spectacles, and his sharp keen eyes were glittering like steel. If the man was cynical, he was also resolute. Years of self-indulgence had not softened the determination with which he carried out a purpose.

"Ladislas Pulaski," he went on, seeing that Mr. Tyrrell did not speak, "knows Celia better than you, even—her father—or than myself, her future husband."

"Your what!" I cried, as he announced the thing in a calm judicial way, like the voice of Fate.

"Her future husband," he repeated. "The words are intelligible, are they not? Celia will become my wife. Why do you look from Mr. Tyrrell to me in that extraordinary manner? Is there, then, something monstrous in the fact?"

"Yes," I replied, boldly. "Celia is eighteen, and you are sixty."

"I am sixty-two," he said. "I shall live, I dare say, another eight or ten years. Celia will make these ten years happy. She will then be at liberty to marry anybody else."

"What you hear, Ladislas," said Mr. Tyrrell, speaking with an effort, and shading his eyes as if he did not venture to look me in the face; "what you hear from Herr Räumer is quite true. Celia does not know yet—we were considering when you arrived how to tell her—does not know—yet—our friend here insists upon her being told at once. The fact is, my dear Ladislas," he went on, trying to speak at his ease, and as if it were quite an ordinary transaction, "some years since——"

"Ten years," said Herr Räumer.

"Ten years since, our friend here did me a service of some importance."

"Of some importance only, my dear Tyrrell?"

"Of very great importance—of vital importance. Never mind of what nature."

"That does not matter, at present," said Herr Räumer. "Proceed, my father-in-law."

"As an acknowledgment of that favour—as I then believed—yes, Räumer, it is the truth, and you know it—as I then believed, in a sort of joke——"

"I never joke," said the German.

"——I promised that he should marry Celia."

"That promise I have never since alluded to until last night," Herr Räumer explained. "It was a verbal promise, but I knew that it would be kept. There were no papers or agreements between us; but they were unnecessary. As friends we gave a pledge to each other. 'My dear Tyrrell,' I said, 'you are much younger than I am; almost young enough to be my son. You have a daughter. If I am still in this town when she is eighteen years of age you must let me marry her, if I am then of the same mind.' My friend here laughed and acceded."

"But I did not think—I did not understand——"

"That is beside the mark. It was a promise. Celia was a pretty child then, and has grown into a beautiful woman. I shall be proud of my wife. Because, Tyrrell,"—his brow contracted—"I am quite certain that the promise will be kept."

"The promise did not, and could not, amount to more than an engagement to use my influence with Celia."

"Much more," said the other. "Very much more. I find myself, against my anticipations, still in this quiet town of yours. I find the girl grown up. I find myself getting old. I say to myself—'That was a lucky service you rendered Mr. Tyrrell.' And it was of a nature which would make the most grateful man wish silence to be kept about it. And the promise was most providential. Now will my declining years be rich in comfort."

"Providential or not," said Celia's father, plucking up his courage; "if Celia will not accept you, the thing is ended."

"Not ended," said Herr Räumer, softly. "Just beginning."

"Then God help us," burst out the poor man, with a groan.

"Certainly," responded his persecutor. "By all means, for you will want all the help that is to be got. Mr. Pulaski, who is entirely ami de famille, is now in a position to understand the main facts. There are two contracting parties. One breaks his part of the contract—the other, not by way of revenge, but in pursuance of a just policy, breaks his. The consequences fall on the first man's head. Now, Tyrrell, let us have no more foolish scruples. I will make a better husband for your girl than any young fellow. She shall have her own way; she shall do what she likes, and dress—and—all the rest of it, just as she chooses. What on earth do women want more?"

I felt sick and dizzy. Poor Celia!

Herr Räumer placed his hand upon the bell.

"I am going to send for her," he said. "If you do not speak to her yourself I will do so. As Ladislas Pulaski is here to give us moral support"—the man could not speak without a sneer—"it will be quite a conseil de famille, and we shall not have to trouble Mrs. Tyrrell at all. You can tell her this evening, if necessary."

He rang. Augustus Brambler, as the junior clerk, answered the bell. I noticed that his eyes looked from one to the other of us, as he took the message from the German, in a mild wonder. Augustus ran messages of all sorts with equal alacrity, provided they were connected with the office. He would have blacked boots, had he been told to do so, and considered it all part of the majesty of the law.

When Celia came Herr Räumer made her a very profound and polite bow, and placed a chair for her.

She looked at her father, who sat still with his head on his hand, and then at me.

"What is it, papa? What is it, Laddy?" she asked.

"Your father has a communication to make to you of the very greatest importance," said Herr Räumer, softly and greatly. "Of so great importance that it concerns the happiness of two lives."

I hardly knew the man. He was soft, he was winning, he was even young, as he murmured these words with another bow of greater profundity than would have become an Englishman.

Then Mr. Tyrrell rose to the occasion. Any man, unless he is an abject coward, can rise to the occasion, if necessary, and act a part becomingly, if not nobly. You rarely hear of a man having to be carried to the gallows, for instance, though the short walk there must have a thousand pangs for every footfall. Mr. Tyrrell rose, and tried to smile through the black clouds of shame and humiliation.

"Celia, my dear child," he said, "Herr Räumer to-day has asked my consent to his becoming, if you consent, my son-in-law."

"Your son-in-law, papa?"

"My son-in-law, Celia," he replied, firmly; the plunge once made the rest of the work appear easier. "I am quite aware that there are many objections to be advanced at the outset. Herr Räumer, you will permit me, my friend, to allude once and for all to——"

"To the disparity of age?"

No wooer of five-and-twenty could have been more airily bland, as if the matter were not worth mentioning seriously.

"The disparity of age? Certainly. I have the great misfortune to be forty-four years older than Miss Tyrrell. Let us face the fact."

"Quite so. Once stated—it is faced," said Mr. Tyrrell, gaining courage every moment. "The objection is met by the fact that our friend is no weak old man, to want a nurse, but strong and vigorous, still in the prime of life."

"The prime of life," echoed the suitor, smiling.

"He is, it may also be objected," said Mr. Tyrrell, as if anxious to get at the worst aspect of the case at once; "he is a foreigner—a German. What then? If there is a nation with which we have a national sympathy, it is the German nation. And as regards other things he has the honour of——"

"Say of an Englishman, my friend. Say of an English lawyer and gentleman."

Mr. Tyrrell winced for a moment.

"He is honourable and upright, of an excellent disposition, gentle in his instincts, sympathetic and thoughtful for others——"

"My dear friend," the Herr interposed, "is not that too much? Miss Tyrrell will not believe that one man can have all those perfections."

"Celia will find out for herself," said her father, laughing.

"And now, my child, that you know so much, and that we have considered all possible objections, there remains something more to be said. It is now ten years since this project was first talked over between us."

"Ten years!" cried Celia.

"As a project only, because it was impossible to tell where we might be after so long a time. It was first spoken of between us after an affair, a matter of business, with which I will only so far trouble you as to say that it laid me under the most lively obligations to Herr Raumer. Remember, my dear, that the gratitude you owe to this gentleman is beyond all that any act of yours can repay. But we do not wish you to accept Herr Räumer from gratitude. I want you to feel that you have here a chance of happiness such as seldom falls to any girl."

"In my country, Miss Tyrrell," said Herr Räumer, gravely, "it is considered right for the suitor to seek first the approbation of the parents. I am aware that in England the young lady is often addressed before the parents know anything of—of—of the attachment. If I have behaved after the manner of my people, you will, I doubt not, forgive me."

I ventured to look at Celia. She sat in the chair which Herr Raumer had given her at the foot of the table, upright and motionless. Her cheeks had a touch of angry red in them, and her eyes sought her father's, as if trying to read the truth in them. "You should know, dear Celia," Mr. Tyrell went on, "not only from my friend's wish, but also mine, I—I—I think, that we can hardly expect an answer yet."

"Not yet," he murmured; "Miss Tyrrell will give me another opportunity, alone, of pleading my own cause. It is enough to day that she knows what her father's hopes are, and what are mine. I would ask only to say a few words, if Miss Tyrrell will allow me."

He bowed again.

"Ten years ago, when this project—call it the fancy of a man for a child as yet unformed,—came into my brain, I began to watch your progress and your education. I saw with pleasure that you were not sent to those schools where girls' minds are easily imbued with worldly ideas"—good Heavens! was Herr Räumer about to put on the garb of religion?—"Later on I saw with greater pleasure that your chief companion and principal tutor was Mr. Ladislas Pulaski, a gentleman whose birth alone should inspire with noble thoughts. Under his care I watched you, Miss Tyrrell, growing gradually from infancy into womanhood. I saw that your natural genius was developed; that you were becoming a musician of high order, and that by the sweetness of your natural disposition you were possessing yourself of a manner which I, who have known Courts, must be allowed to pronounce—Perfect. It is not too much to say that I have asked a gift which any man, of whatever exalted rank, would be proud to have; that there is no position however lofty which Miss Tyrrell would not grace; and that I am deeply conscious of my own demerits. At the same time I yield to no one in the resolution to make that home happy which it is in Miss Tyrrell's power to give me. The slightest wish shall be gratified; the most trifling want shall be anticipated. If we may, for once, claim a little superiority over the English, it is in that power of divining beforehand, of guessing from a look or a gesture, the wishes of those we love, which belongs to us Germans."

It was the first and the last time I have ever heard this mysterious power spoken of. No doubt, as Herr Raumer claimed it for his countrymen, they do possess it. Most Germans I have ever seen have struck me as being singularly cold persons, far behind the French in that subtle sympathy which makes a man divine in the manner spoken of by Herr Räumer.

The speech was lengthy and wordy; it was delivered in the softest voice, and with a certain impressiveness. Somehow—so far, at least, as I was concerned, it failed to produce a favourable effect. There was not the true ring about it. Celia made a slight acknowledgment, and looked again at her father.

Then Herr Raumer turned effusively to me.

"I have no words," he said, "to express the very great thanks which I—which we—owe to you for the watchful and brotherly care which you have given to Miss Tyrrell. It is not in the power of money——"

"There has never been any question of money," said Mr. Tyrrell, quickly, "between Ladislas and us."

"I know. There are disinterested people in the world, after all," Herr Räumer said with a smile. "You are one of them, Mr. Pulaski. At the same time," he added airily, "you cannot escape our thanks. You will have to go through life laden with our gratitude."

Celia got up and gave me her hand.

"You do not want me to say anything now, Papa," she said. "We will go. Come, Laddy."

We closed the door of the office behind us, and escaped into the garden, where the apple blossoms were in their pink and white beauty; through the gate at the end, to our own resort and rest, by Celia's Arbour. We leaned against the rampart and looked out, over the broad sloping bank of bright green turf, set with buttercups as with golden buttons, across the sunny expanse of the harbour. The grass of the bastion was strewn with the brown casings of the newly-born leaves, the scabbards which had kept them from the frost. We could not speak. Her hand held mine.

Presently she whispered—

"Laddy, is it real? Does Papa mean it?"

"Yes, Celia."

"And yesterday I was so happy."

Then we were silent again, for I had no word of comfort.

"Laddy," she cried, with a start of hope, "what is to day? The first of June. Then in three weeks' time Leonard will be home again. I will give no answer for three weeks. Leonard will help us. All will be right for us when Leonard comes home."

CHAPTER XVIII.

FROM THE ORGAN LOFT

In three weeks. Leonard would be home in three weeks. We had been so long looking forward that, now the time was close at hand, the realisation of its approach came on us like a shock.

We stared at each other.

"Three weeks, Cis! How will he come home?"

"I do not know. He will come home triumphant. Laddy, a moment ago I was so wretched—now I am so hopeful. He will come home and help us. We are like shipwrecked sailors in sight of land."

We did not doubt but that he would be another Perseus to the new Andromeda. What he was to do, more than we could do ourselves, we did not know. But he would do something. And that conviction, in the three weeks which followed, was our only stay and hope. We could not take counsel with the Captain, and even Mrs. Tyrrell was not informed of what had happened. She was to be told when Celia gave her answer. Meantime, Celia's lover made for the moment no sign of impatience. He came to the house in the evenings. He listened to Celia's playing and singing; he ventured with deference on a little criticism; he treated her with such respect as a lady might get from a preux chevalier of the old school; he loaded her with petits soins; he never alluded in the slightest way to their interview in the office; his talk was soft, and in presence of the girl he seldom displayed any of the cynical sayings which generally garnished his conversation; and he assumed the manner of a Christian gentleman of great philanthropic experience, and some disappointment with human nature. I was a good deal amused by the change, but a little disquieted, because it showed that he was in earnest. There was to be no brutal force, no melodramatic marriage by reluctant consent to save a father from something or other indefinite. He was laying siege in due form, hoping to make the fortress surrender in due time, knowing that the defences were undermined by the influence of her father.

The Sunday after the first breaking of the matter he astonished me by appearing in the Tyrrells' square pew. I saw him from the organ loft, and watched him with the utmost admiration. He was certainly a well set-up man, tall and straight. His full white moustache gave him a soldierlike look. He wore a tightly-buttoned frock, which was not the fashion of the day, with a rosebud in the button-hole, and new light lavender gloves. The general effect produced was exactly what he desired, that of a man no longer young, but still in vigorous life; a man remarkable in appearance, and probably remarkable, did the congregation know it, for his personal history. In church he laid aside the blue spectacles which he always wore in the street. His manner was almost theatrically reverential, although he showed a little uncertainty about getting up and sitting down. I have already explained that this was leisurely among occupants of the square pews at St. Faith's, so that his hesitation was less marked than it would be in an advanced church of the more recent type. I do not know whether he sang, because my back was necessarily turned to the congregation while I played for them, and among the curious mixture of discordances which rose to the organ loft, and together made up the hymn, I could not distinguish the German's deep bass with the unmistakeable rasp in it. There was the squawk of the old ladies who sat along the aisle—you made that out easily by reason of their being always half-a-dozen notes behind; there was the impetuous rush of those irregular cavalry, the charity children, who sat round the altar rails, and always sang a few notes in advance; there was the long-drawn hum of the congregational "joining in," which, taken in the lump, as one got it up in the organ loft, was like the air played slowly on a barrel organ with a cold, or like a multitude attempting a tune through their noses. And there were sporadic sounds, issuing, I had reason to suppose, from individual singers, from him who tried tenor, and from her who attempted an alto. And sometimes I thought I could distinguish the sweet voice of Celia, but that was probably fancy.

The hymn over, I was free to turn round, and, through an uplifted corner of the red curtain to watch Herr Räumer. The preacher on this Sunday was the Rev. John Pontifex, and it was a pretty sight to see the rapt attention with which the Teutonic proselyte followed the argument, as if it was something strange, original, and novel. As a matter of fact, it was Mr. Pontifex's one sermon. He only had one. Like Single-speech Hamilton, he concentrated all the logic at his command into one argumentative discourse. Unlike Single-speech, he went on preaching it whenever he was asked to preach at all. To be sure, he introduced variations in the text, in the exordium, and in the peroration. But the body of the discourse was invariably the same. And it was not a cheerful sermon. On the contrary, it was condemnatory, and sent people home to their dinners with a certainty about the future which ought to have taken away all their appetites.

Up in the organ loft you had advantages over your fellows. The church lay at your feet, with the people in their pews sitting mute and quiet, and yet each man preserving in his attitude, in his eyes, in the pose of his head, his own individuality. Mr. Tyrrell, for instance, showed that he was ill at ease by his downcast eyes and drooping head. His daughter and I alone knew the reason of his disquietude, with that stranger who sat in the same pew with him. Behind Mr. Tyrrell was the Captain in a long pew. Years before he had sat there Sunday after Sunday with two boys. Was the old man thinking that in three more Sundays he might sit there with the wanderer back again? He entertained great respect for a sermon, as part of a chaplain's duties ashore, but it would have been difficult to discover from any subsequent remarks that he ever listened. Looking at him now, from my lofty coign of vantage, I see from his eyes that his thoughts are far away. Perhaps he is with Leonard, perhaps he is tossing on a stormbeat sea, or slave-chasing off the West Coast, or running again into Navarino Bay on a certain eventful afternoon. There is a calm about the old man's face which speaks of peace. What are the denunciations of the Rev. John Pontifex to him?

"——Whither you will all of you—alas!—most infallibly go unless you change your ways——"

Within the Communion rails, the Rev. Mr. Broughton, his legs stretched out, his feet upon a footstool, and his hands clasped across his portly form, is sitting comfortably. His part of the morning exercises is finished. His eyes are closed and his head nodding. Happy Perpetual Curate! On the red baize cushions round the rails are twenty or thirty school children, recipients of some charity. Why do they dress the poor girls in so perfectly Awful a uniform? And why is the verger allowed to creep round during the sermon, cane in hand, to remind any erring infant that be must not sleep in church? It ought not to be allowed.

Look at the faces of the congregation as they are turned up vacantly to the roof. No one is listening—except Herr Räumer. What are they all thinking about? In this hive of a thousand people, there is not one but has his heart and brain full of his own hopes and fears. What are the terrible forebodings of the preacher—"No hope for any but the Elect. Alas! They are very few in number. For the rest of you, my brethren"——What are these words, which ought to generate a maddening despair, to the present anxieties and troubles of the people? The fat and prosperous grocer in the square pew is worried about a bill that falls due to-morrow; his daughter is thinking that a dear friend has treacherously copied the trimmings of her bonnet; the boys are wishing it was over; and so on. Did such words as the Rev. John Pontifex is now uttering ever have any real meaning? Or did they always lose their force by being applied, as we apply them now, to our neighbours. "Elect? Well, of course, I am one. Let us hope that our friends are also in the number. But I have my fears." We are in a Dead Church, with a Preacher of Dead Words; the old Calvinistic utterances drop upon hearts which have fallen away from the dogma and are no longer open to their terrors. Such a sermon as the one preached by the Rev. John Pontifex on that Sunday morning would be impossible now. Then it was only part of the regular Church business. Well, that is all changed; we have new dangers and new enemies; among them is no longer the old listlessness of service.

"Lastly, my brethren——" See,—Mr. Broughton wakes up; the children nudge each other; the Captain's eyes come back to the present, and he instinctively gathers together the "tools," and puts them back in their box; a twitter of expectancy, with a faint preliminary rustle of feminine garments, ascends to my perch.

"Remember, that you, too, are included, one and all, in the sentence upon Ca—per—na—um."

So; he has finished. Herr Räumer sits back with a long breath, as if the argument had convinced him. Mrs. Tyrrell shakes her head solemnly. The clerk gives out the final hymn.

Oh! may our earthly Sabbaths prove
A foretaste of the joys above.

Poor charity children! They go home to a cold collation insufficient in quantity; they have been caned for inattention; they have to attend three services like this every Sunday. And yet they pray for a continuance of these joys.

"Oh! Ladislas," cries Mrs. Tyrrell, with a sigh of rapture, when I came up with the party after playing them out. "What a sermon! What Gospel truth! What force of expression! It is astonishing to me that Uncle Pontifex has never been made a bishop. He is coming to dinner on Tuesday," she resumes, with an entirely secular change of voice, "with Aunt Jane. Come, too, Ladislas, and talk to aunt. There will be the loveliest pair of ducks."

Herr Räumer is walking beside Celia. She is pale, and, from the manner in which she carries her parasol, I should say that she is a little afraid lest her suitor should say something. But he does not. He is content to hover round her; to be seen with her; to accustom people to the association of himself with Celia Tyrrell. It is easy to divine his purpose. Suddenly to announce an engagement between an elderly man of sixty and a girl of less than twenty would be to make a nine days' wonder. Let them be seen together, so that when the right moment shall arrive to make the announcement there shall seem nothing strange about it.

One thing let me say. I have, least of all men, reason to love this German. That will be presently apparent. But I wish to be just to him. And I think he loved Celia honestly.

I am, indeed, sure he did. I saw it in the way he followed her about with his eyes, in the softened tone of his voice; in the way in which he sought me out, and tried to learn from me what were her favourite books, her music, her tastes, so that he might anticipate them. The jealousy of my own affection for Celia sharpened my senses. What I saw in him I recognised as my own. I wonder how much that strange passion of love might have done to softening the man. For as regards the rest of the world he remained the same as before, cold, cynical, emotionless, without affections or pity. A man turned out by a machine could not have been more devoid of human sympathy. For instance, he was lodged in Augustus Brambler's first floor, and he was waited on by the best and prettiest of all Augustus's numerous olive branches, little Forty-Four. She was like her father, inasmuch as she was unceasingly active, always cheerful and brave, always patient and hopeful, always happy in herself. Unlike her father, the work she did was good work. She kept her lodger in luxurious comfort, cooked his dinner as he loved it, and left him nothing to desire.

Yet he never spoke a word to her that was not a command, never thanked her, never took the slightest notice of her presence. This bright-eyed, pleasant-faced, obliging girl, who did a hundred things for him which were not in the bond, was, in fact, no more to him than a mere machine. Sometimes, observing this strange disregard of all human creatures, it occurred to me that he might have learned it by long continuance in military service. A soldier is a creature who carries out orders—among other things. Perhaps the soldiers in Herr Räumer's corps were nothing else. That would be a delightful world where all the men were drilled soldiers, and military manœuvres the principal occupation, the art of war the only study, and victory the only glory. And yet to this we are tending. Whenever I tried to interest him in his landlord's family he would listen patiently, and change the subject.

"The Brambler people?" he asked with no show of interest. "Yes—I have seen them—father who runs messages." Poor Augustus! This all the majesty of the Law!—"uncle who reports for paper—children who fall down the stairs. What have I to do with these canaille?"

I ventured to suggest that they were poor and deserving—that, &c.

"Bah!" he said. "That is the cant of English charity, my young friend. You will tell me next that men are all brothers. Do not, I beg, fall into that trap set for the benevolent."

"I will not, with you," I said. "I suppose you think that men are all enemies."

I said this with my most withering and sarcastic smile.

"I do," he replied, solemnly. "All men are enemies. For our own advantage, and for no other reason, we do not kill each other, but unite in societies and kill our neighbours. Come, you want me to pretend benevolent sympathy with the people in this house, because the father is a fool and they are poor. There are an infinite number of poor people in the world. Some of them, even, are starving. Well, it is not my fault. Let them starve. It is my business to live, and get the most out of life."

"Do all your countrymen think like you?" I asked.

"All," he replied. "In Berlin we are a clear-sighted people. We put self-preservation first. That means everything. I do not say that we have no delusions. Machinery called charitable exists: not to so extensive and ruinous a degree as in England: still there is hope for the weakest when he goes to the wall that some one will take care of him."

"You would let him die."

"I do not actively wish him to die. If I saw that his life would be of the slightest use to me, I should help him to live. Let us talk of more agreeable things. Let us talk of Celia. Take a glass of hock. So."

He lit another cigar and lay back in his chair, murmuring enjoyable words.

"You told me, a little while ago, that the man you admired most in the world, the noblest and the best, I think you said, after the Captain, was Mr. Tyrrell. Do you think so now?"

I was silent.

"You do not. You cannot. That is a lesson for you, Ladislas Pulaski. Remember that there is no man noblest and best. Think of yourself at your worst, and then persuade yourself that all other men are like that."

I said nothing to that, because there was nothing to say. It is one way of looking at the world; the best way, it seems to me, to drag yourself down and to keep down everybody round you.

"I said then, but you were too indignant to accept the doctrine, that every man had his price. You may guess Mr. Tyrrell's. Every woman has her's. Celia's price is—her father; I have bought her at that price, which I was fortunately able to command."

"You do not know yet."

"Yes, I do know. All in good time. I can wait. Now, Ladislas Pulaski, I will be frank with you. I intended this coup all along, and have prepared the way for it. I admire the young lady extremely. Let me, even, say that I love her. She is, I am sure, as good and virtuous as she is pretty. Of all girls I have ever seen, I think Celia Tyrrell is the best. It is, I know, partly due to your training. She is the pearl of your pupils. Her manner is perfect; her face is perfect; her conversation is admirable; her general cultivation is good."

"She is all that you say," I replied.

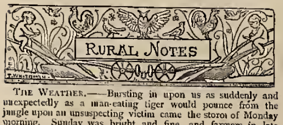
"You love her, I believe, like a brother. At least, Celia says so. When I was your age, if I did not love a young lady like a brother I made it a rule always to tell her so at the earliest opportunity. That inability to love a girl after the brotherly fashion has more than once endangered my life. Like a brother, is it not?"

"Like a brother," I murmured, passing over the covert sneer.

"Very well, then. It is a weakness on my part, but I am willing to make sacrifices for this girl. I will study her wishes. She shall be treated with the greatest forbearance and patience. I do not expect that she will love me as I love her. That would be absurd. But I hope that, in a little while, a month or two,"—I breathed freely, because I feared he was going to say a day or two,—"she will receive my attentions with pleasure, and learn to give me the esteem which young wives may feel for elderly husbands. I am not going to be ridiculous; I am not a Blue Beard; I know that women can be coaxed when they cannot be forced. J'ai conté fleurettes—it is not for the first time in life that one makes love at sixty.

"After all," he went on, cheerfully, "Celia ought to be a happy girl. I shall die in ten years, I suppose. She will be a widow at eight-and-twenty. Just the age to enjoy life. Just the time when a woman wants her full liberty. What a thing—to be eight-and-twenty, to bury an old husband, and to have his money!"

(To be continued)



RURAL NOTES

The Weather.——Bursting in upon us as suddenly and unexpectedly as a man-eating tiger would pounce from the jungle upon an unsuspecting victim came the storm of Monday morning. Sunday was bright and fine, and farmers in late districts were congratulating themselves that soon the later corn would be ready for reaping, and that that in stooks would be garnered speedily. Those who had got their crops in and their fields cleared for cultivation feared no harm. The Sabbath's evening sky looked peaceful—the morrow showed stacks in the farmyards overturned, unthatched, barns unroofed, and portions of the not too plentiful crop blown away altogether. In the north of Scotland, where harvest is very late, much damage was done by rivers overflowing their banks, and it was with difficulty that stock could be rescued from pastures adjoining the angry waters. The Tay rose six feet above its normal autumn flow, and whirled away the stooks standing in the fields remorselessly. From the North of England there are numerous reports all agreeing that the crop is short, that turnips and mangolds are not looking growthy, and that potatoes are getting touched with disease, in some districts very virulently so. From the west of Scotland the tenor of the communications are that the cut crops are in a miserable plight, and where they have been carted and stacked heating has ensued, which, of course, means pulling down and rebuilding, which means deterioration in quality of the grain and expense to the farmer. Autumn cultivation in the Home and Midland counties is fairly forward.

The Wheat Crop of this Year.——Mr. J. B. Lawes, of Rothamsted, the great agricultural scientist, and not above practice, who for thirty years in succession has grown wheat on the same plots without and with the aid of different kinds of manures, is of opinion that the yield of wheat as tested on the threshing floor is not so deficient as he had expected from its look in the fields. Without farmyard manure the result was a little better in quantity this year than last, so also was it with dung, but on certain plots manured with artificial compounds there was a falling-off. Noticeably, however, there is a sad lack of quality this year as compared with last, and the opinion arrived at by this eminent authority is that we shan't have more than 10,000,000 quarters of home produce, and that consequently we shall need about 13,000,000 quarters from abroad. It should not be forgotten that such estimates by the best calculators are at this time of the year only rough guess work.

Landlords, Farmers, and Labourers.——There has been a truce to the feud between farmer and labourer. The hot-headedness of the latter has been cooled down by a slight douche of experience, mingled with a modicum of common sense, and farmers also have found it advisable not to be quite so contumacious as they were three or four years ago. So far as farmers and labourers are concerned, the agricultural mills are working pretty smoothly at present, so far as can be judged from the hiring fairs now going on. Changes are not frequent, and wages, in some places a little lower, in others a little higher, than at the previous hiring, are taken and given without growling. We were extremely glad to see that Sir H. Selwin Ibbetson the other day urged upon landlords the necessity of building better cottages for the sons of the soil. Ever since the agricultural strike was inaugurated it has been maintained in this column of The Graphic that the want of decent house accommodation for ploughmen lay at the root of the agitation. The Under Home Secretary entirely bears out our views, and we trust that, coming from such an authority, they will have due effect. His words were that "he hoped to see the welfare of the labourer promoted by a combination of the landlords throughout the country to give him a better house." With a better cottage, let to him, as it ought to be, at a reasonable rent, Hodge would be "able to live and labour in hard times like these without striking for an increase of wages." A man who is bound to live in a hovel worse than a pig stye, which many of the English labourers have to do, is not likely to cherish much regard for those who compel him to live in such a condition.

Cattle Disease.—It is gratifying to note from the reports made at the various quarter sessions throughout the county that there is a great diminution in pleuro-pneumonia and foot-and-mouth disease. In the great dairy county of Cheshire the cases of pleuro-pneumonia had decreased from 77 in 1876 to 32 in 1877. In Warwickshire there are only 5 cases, as compared with 80 in the corresponding term of last year. In other counties the area of disease has been proportionately reduced, and some even show a clean bill of health. The reduction of pleuro-pneumonia is attributed to the stringent measures taken at the beginning of the year to prevent ravages by cattle plague. Speaking of pleuro-pneumonia, it may be noted that two reports have recently been made by scientific men as to whether the flesh of cattle affected with pleuro-pneumonia was injurious to health or not. One report was made under the auspices of the Irish Cattle Defence Association, the other under the direction of the Dublin Sanitary Association. The framers of the former do not think that there is any evidence to show that meat cut from cattle affected with pleuro in its incipient stage is harmful, while the latter reporters would not allow such meat to be sold at any price whatever. In our own experience we have seen the flesh of animals slightly affected with lung complaint eaten freely without the slightest injurious results, but we should hardly recommend such beef to our friends for all that.

Miscellaneous.——The late Prince Consort's handsome twenty guinea cups presented by the Queen for the best root cultivation in the Royal East Berks and Royal South Bucks district have been awarded to field crops of Sutton's improved varieties of roots.—The stubbornness and stupidity of the pig have been recognised by all naturalists and Irish pigowners, but there is one quality that has hitherto escaped their notice—viz., "Grumphy's" life-saving powers. A Welsh pig fell into a brick kiln, and, being unable to extricate itself, it was confined, therefore, without meat or drink for sixteen days. When rescued we are told the pig was able to eat, and did not seem at all in a bad condition. If the pig bears not a charmed life the tenacity is wonderful, if true.—The prices of donkeys in Poitou ranges from 200*l*. to 400*l*. The one shown by Mr. Sutherland at the dairy show, and illustrated in The Graphic of October 13, cost 300*l*. This jackass at thirty months old stands 14 hands 3 inches high, has strong bone, and great substance. He is intended for breeding draught mules from cart mares.—The gale in the Atlantic has caused great loss of Canadian and Spanish cattle and American meat—altogether on three consignments about 2,000.

New Novels

"Glory," by Mrs. Linnæus Banks, author of "The Manchester Man," &c. (3 vols.: Hurst and Blackett).—There can hardly be said to be an attempt at plot in this novel, and it does not contain a single character of anything like fascinating interest; but, all the same, we have seldom come upon a story that takes a stronger hold upon the reader's attention. Partly, no doubt, this is due to the freshness and novelty of Mrs. Banks' theme, but still more, we fancy, to the effective realism of her treatment of it. The book is, in the main, a picture of English rural life at the close of the last and the opening of the present century, and the author writes of the period of the great French war as though she had herself lived through it. Her hero is one Jesse Wilton, wheelwright and small farmer in a straggling Wiltshire village on the highway between Marlborough and Devizes, whose acquaintance we first make in the year 1796. Well pleased we watch him prospering in his calling, and in his wooing of the good and pretty Rosanna Beckingham, daughter of the clerk of St. Mary's, Marlborough, and follow him through the first happy years of his married life. Then Jesse, under artful instigation, little by little slides into habits of intemperance, and allows himself to be so carried away by the martial ardour prevailing at the time throughout the country that he can think or speak of nothing but "glory," the glory of being a soldier, and doing battle in the cause of Old England. At last, in a fit of intoxication, he is entrapped into taking the King's shilling, and so puts himself under the power of the base and cruel young officer who hates him for having carried off the girl whose dishonour this fine Lieutenant Tempest was plotting. The latter takes every opportunity that his position gives to wreak his spite in persecution and injustice. We follow Jesse as a soldier to Holland, to Egypt, and to the Peninsula, and the author's sketches of actual warfare, if they do not seem quite so real as those of life in Wiltshire country towns and villages, are certainly vivid and forcible—the description of Sir John Moore's famous retreat upon Corunna, in particular, deserving very high praise. How Rosanna plays the part of the devoted wife through all her unfortunate husband's trials and troubles, and how he ultimately comes out of them, we cannot attempt to tell here. We must remark, however, that Mrs. Banks writes of military glory too much as if under the inspiration of Mr. Bright. She appears to regard all wars as acts of criminal infatuation on the part of the nation that wages them, and all soldiers as fools insensible to the claims of duty. Yet she seems ready enough to denounce the ambition of Napoleon as a menace to England and to Europe which had to be resisted, and how was it to be resisted except by war? But if we think her ethics mistaken, this does not detract from the pleasure we have found in her unusually attractive story.

"Pauline," by L. B. Walford, author of "Mr. Smith: a Part of His Life" 2 vols.: Blackwood).—Clever book as this is, we cannot help feeling it somewhat unsatisfactory. The central interest—the love of the pure, high-minded, and deeply conscientious Pauline La Sarte for the scapegrace Ralph Blundell—strikes us as weak, because we do not see or know enough of Blundell to comprehend the fascination he exercises over a girl like Pauline, to whom a man's reputation for wildness would be anything but an attraction. In fact, what we are to think of Blundell, and whether we are to hold him really a reprobate or not, remains a mystery to the end, and we are driven to the conclusion that the author had not the power to work out his own conception. His method of telling his story, too, is not always the best; it is apt to be obscure and jerky, and to make rather heavy demands on the reader's acuteness and attention. At the same time there can be no question of his ability, or of the excellence of large portions of his work. Perhaps the best scenes are the pictures of the upper sections of the society of a country neighbourhood, and of those who would fain be thought to belong to the upper sections, in the second part of the story entitled "Blundellsaye." The silly, vain, good-hearted widow, Mrs. Wyndham, Pauline's aunt; her vulgar, toadying sister-in-law, Mrs. Jermyn, and the latter's clever and outspoken daughter Charlotte, who has such a gift for mimicry, are enough of themselves to save the reputation of a book with which there was more fault to find than there is with "Pauline." Pauline's devices for outwitting her aunt Lady Calverly, so as to give her brother Tom an opportunity of coming to an "understanding" with his pretty, petulant cousin Elsie, form another episode of great spirit and humour. If only the heroine's own love-history had been set before us with less vagueness we think we might have congratulated the author on a success equal to that achieved in "Mr. Smith."

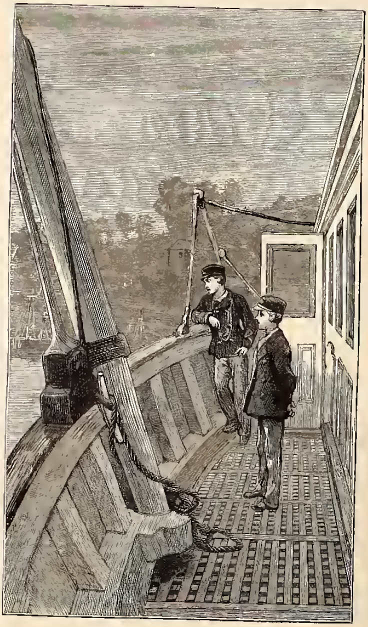
"A Thing of Beauty," by Mrs. Alexander Fraser, author of "Guardian and Lover," &c. (3 vols.: Hurst and Blackett).—Plot, characters, sentiment, and dialogue here are all conventional and, so to say, "common-form," showing perhaps the influence of Miss Broughton more than of any other writer; but the story is far from being a bad one of its kind. The exquisitely beautiful and wilful heroine, with one of those faces for which, from the time of Samson, men have been fools enough to go blind and mad, to lay down "life and honour," &c., the humble and faithful boy-lover whom she snubs, and the haughty and cynical lover, the sad stern man with a past, before whom she bows, are all familiar acquaintances, and the complications to which the story introduces us cannot boast of much in the way of novelty. Still, there is no harm either in Val Egerton, the "Thing of Beauty," or in her history, and, as novels go, it may be pronounced lively enough to be readable.

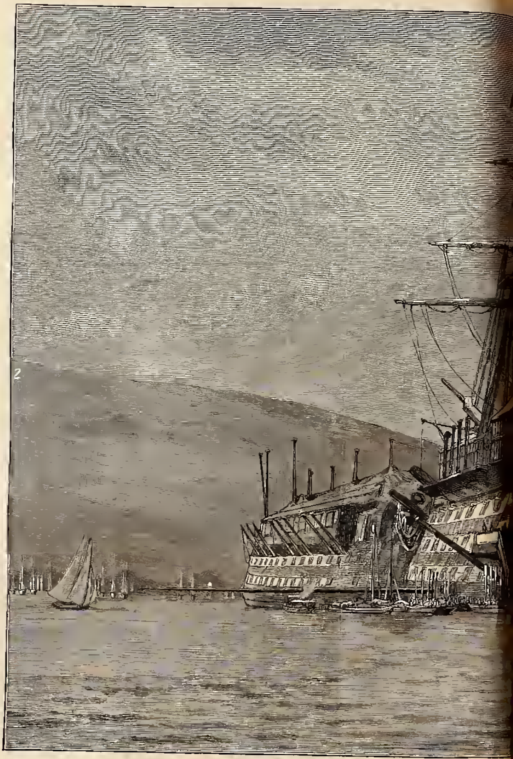
THE READER

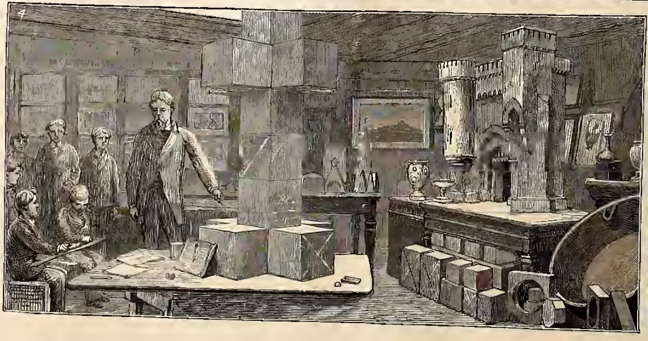
"Lessing: His Life and Writings," by James Sime (2 vols.: Trübner and Co.), is a work of genuine interest and worth. A classic now as ever in his own country, to few Englishmen even of those fairly up in Schiller, Goethe, or Heine, is Lessing more than the shadow of a name. Beyond his famous but rarely read "Laocoon," his "Nathan the Wise," and "Emilia Galeotti," it might puzzle them to name another of his works. Yet the father of modern German literature well deserves to be better known alike for his own merits and for his almost unique position in the history of letters. Critic, poet, dramatist, philosopher, he filled in eighteenth-century Germany a place hardly smaller than that occupied by Voltaire in France; from the purely artistic point of view, one indeed, that was even higher. In his hands the language of the German people became once more a literary weapon. The Thirty Years' War, which some eighty years before his birth had all but destroyed Germany as a nation, had quite destroyed for many a long day her culture and her literature. The language of the Saxon Bible, of the Heldenbuch, of the Meister-Sänger had been expelled from the polite world. The early bloom of the German Renascence had withered in the cold shade of theological disputations. The famous Leibnitz, like his follower Wolff and his precursor Spinoza, wrote by preference in Latin. The Court of the Great Frederick thought French the only tongue for the well-born. To France or to England Germany turned instinctively for all models of prose or verse. There was need at once of a critical intellect and a creative genius to restore the nation to itself, and in Lessing happily it found them both. Mr. Sime's clever introductory sketch of this twilight of German literature, and of the precise period at which young Lessing took up the pen—the period of that prehistoric war of Classicism and Romanticism, which raged under the now-forgotten banners of Gottsched and Bodmer—prepares us pleasantly for his very successful attempt to weave into a threefold cord of narrative the incidents of Lessing's life, the character of his literary activity, and the analysis of his greater works. Nor in all this have we servile imitation simply of Stähr or Danzel, but good evidence of original thought and independent judgment based on the best of all foundations, a careful study of the master's writings. Space would fail us did we attempt to linger on the light and shades of Lessing's history, the passing clouds of slight Bohemianism, the brief contentment of his wedded life, his incessant but ever honourably conducted warfare against the pretentious and the false in philosophy and art; or trace the phases of a literary career that ranged from lyrics upon love and wine to the subtle thought of the "Education of the Human Race." Enough to say that Mr. Sime has given us a careful loving study of Lessing and his writings from every side—one too which even readers with little taste for Leibnitzian philosophy or Aristotelian criticism, will find amply worth perusal for its pleasant naturally told story of the life of Lessing, as the dramatist and the scholar.

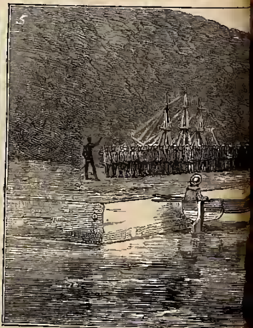
For the biography of another famous German—a greater even in his kind than Lessing—we may turn to Lady Wallace's graceful translation of the sympathetic, if somewhat gushing, "Life of Mozart," by Dr. Ludwig Nohl (Longmans, Green, and Co.). The complement rather than the rival of the earlier but more purely scientific memoir by Otto Jahn, it reveals to us the man no less than the artist—if in Mozart the two can ever be conceived as separate; in its first volume, through his Wander-jahre from Salzburg to Italy, to Munich, and to Paris, with a gay heart under every trouble, even the tyranny of the Archbishop of Salzburg or the indifference of the Elector of Bavaria, and an infinite capacity for making love to the Bäsle, the Cannabich, Aloysia Weber, and a hundred more; in its second, though though his maturer Meister-jahre in Vienna or at his beloved Prague, a married man but to Costanze not to her sister Aloysia, with a spirit refined by bitter trial, though lightsome and elastic still, and led, through contact with the deeper musical thought of the Northern Germans, in the works of Handel, and above all of Bach, to a knowledge of the higher things of art, till from the powerful but dramatically incomplete Idomeneo, or the light Church music of his Salzburg days, we rise to the heights of the Flauto Magico and the Requiem. A life not to be read without a tinge of sadness—so hard, it seems, that its brightness should be marred by jealous rivals and niggard patrons till proffered wealth comes all too late—but one which will be welcome to every lover of the art, sad to many will indicate whole stores of musical wealth of which a generation that chiefly knows Mozart from the Figaro, the Don Juan, and the Flauto Magico is hardly conscious.

We seem to touch the confines of romance—in taking up "A Man of Other Days; or, Recollections of the Marquis Henri Joseph Costa de Beauregard," by his great-grandson, edited from the French by Charlotte M. Yonge (2 vols.: Hurst and Blackett). The scene is on the mountains of Savoy, the time the period between the earliest mutterings of the revolutionary storm and the absorption, by "the man of Marengo," of Piedmont and Savoy in France. To the lords of Chateau Villard and of Beauregard, the patriarchal Seigneurs of a feudal tenantry, the Revolution was as an evil dream, its partisans as demons from the Pit. Living in



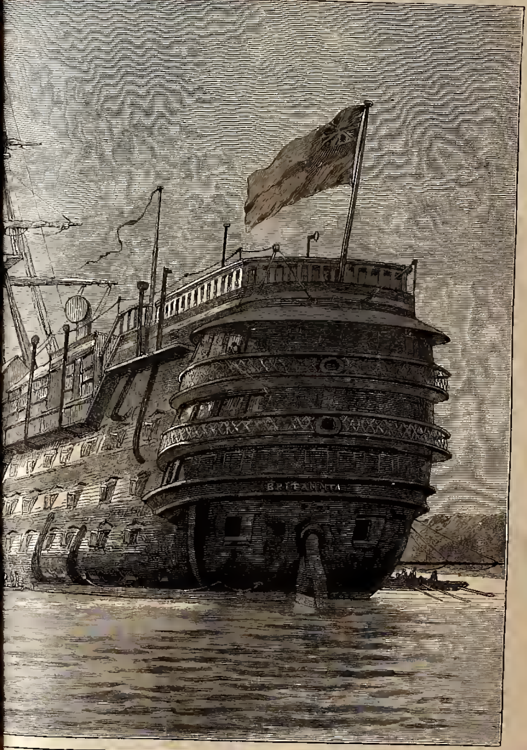


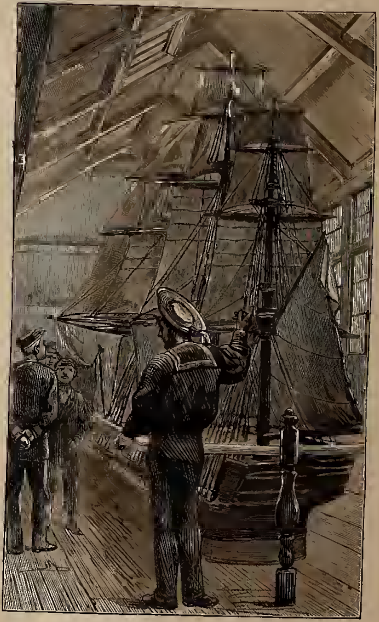


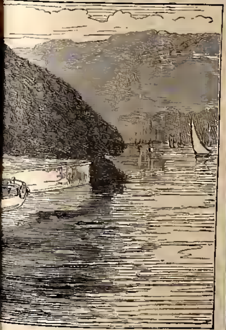


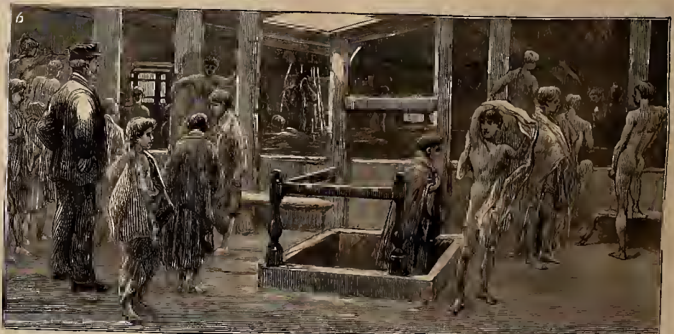
1. THE PRINCES' QUARTERS.—2. H.M.S. "BRITANNIA" AND "HINDOSTAN."—3. THE

THE HOME OF THE YOUNG PRINCES — THE









DEL SHIP.—4. THE DRAWING STUDY.—5. DRILL ASHORE.—6. THE BATH, 6 A.M.

RAINING-SHIP "BRITANNIA" AT DARTMOUTH

stately retirement with a faithful Abbé and a Chevalier or two of Malta as honoured guests in perpetuity, doing acts of charity to the poor, explaining away the problems of the State, much as the Abbé explained the tale of Joseph to the young demoiselles of the Chateau, fighting, if need be, for the Crown, "though it hung upon a bush"—was not this the best of worlds? In such an atmosphere grew up the Marquis Henry—a bright, clever, slightly priggish boy of fourteen, with a taste for painting which he was wise enough to give up on making the acquaintance of Raphael and Titian—a true soldier in his adult years when fighting for his King against the French—a man, despite his bringing up, of much breadth and liberality of mind, a bosom friend through life of the severer and better-known De Maistre. The gems of the narrative are the sketches of simple life in the Savoyard château—the "bringing home of the bride," above all—the descriptions of the war between 1792 and 1800, more especially the accounts of interviews with Bonaparte and with Suwarrow, and the somewhat touching picture of the emigrés life at Lausanne, and the visit of the Marquis to ruined Beauregard across the lake. A book on the whole, which it is good to read, though not without an occasional mental reserve, more especially where the hero's great-grandson has done his best to spoil it with a commentary.

As stout a soldier even as De Beauregard, yet one whose higher glory it was to rank among those rarer Englishmen of modern times, who like the Outrams and the Lawrences have really touched the hearts of the natives of India, is he whose history is told from his own lips in "The Story of My Life, by the late Col. Meadows Taylor" (2 vols.: Blackwood and Son). No novel reader of thirty-seven years ago will have forgotten the author of "Confessions of a Thug," that startling tale of secret murders, on the track of whose perpetrators Col. (then Capt.) Taylor was the first to light, though circumstances compelled him to abandon the quest to other hands. Few, interested in Indian stories, will have failed to glance at those later novels—"Seeta" and "Tara" perhaps the best—which hardly seemed the work of Western hands. The last of the "European adventurers," who owed their start in life neither to Crown nor Company, and to whom the Indian Government when it took them over dealt out the hard measure due to "uncovenanted servants," Meadows Taylor was all the more brought into early contact with the natives. It was as an officer of the Nizam that he first made a name; it was in the somewhat ambiguous position of agent at the semi-independent Court of Shorapoor that he laid the foundations of that popularity among the tribes of Southern India which enabled him in the Mutiny to hold Berar for the Company single-handed. No Competition Wallah who aspires in due time to become a Commissioner or a Resident should fail to get Colonel Taylor's book, and learn from his own narrative and letters how such things are done. We may add for the lovers of the marvellous that it contains two most curious instances of the fulfilment of a horoscope.

Last, strangest, and in some respects most interesting of our five biographies—though more a "study" than a memoir—comes "Thoreau: His Life and aims" (Chatto and Windus), by H. A. Page. The hermit of "Walden Pond, near Concord, Mass.," the man from whom Hawthorne took the first hint of his Donatello, who, like St. Francis, could lure the fish from the stream, and the squirrel from the woods, has often been taken for a moody egotist. That he was anything but this, the briefest survey of his life, the testimony of friends like Emerson and Channing, his own enthusiasm in the cause of abolition, are ample proof. That the keen observer who went out into the woods that he might live his life and widen his sympathies by the study of nature, who could analyse John Field, the Irish emigrant, or the Canadian hired man with the same keen insight and quiet humour with which he would morally dissect the squirrel or the woodpecker, had something in him of the Stoic is probable enough. For our own part we should be content to take Thoreau as we find him at Walden, the naturalist who realised above all his fellows the mysterious brotherhood of man and bird and beast, the observer in whose every line despite some harshness of expression we find such truth as in a sketch of Bewick's. And as such we cannot study him to more advantage than in this little volume of Mr. Page, with its charming collection of extracts from his papers.

The mantle of Jules Verne has fallen upon M. Léon Cahun, whose tales of adventure are very similar in character to the fictions of his brother novelist. M. Cahun, however, chooses historical subjects rather than the miraculous, and goes back to very ancient days. Thus last year he took us among the Phœnicians, and now "The Blue Banner," translated by R. Collett-Sandars (Sampson Low), depicts the times of Genghis Khan, when that doughty conqueror was as yet beginning his victories, and was only known as simple Temujin. Pleasantly combining truth and fiction, M. Cahun has produced a novel and interesting work.—Christmas stories come early this year with the frosts, and "The Christmas Story Teller" (Sampson Low), a collection of amusing stories both old and new, will be acceptable light reading for winter evenings; while a tasteful gift book for children is "Prince Ritto," by F. W. Currey (Sampson Low), a prettily-written fairy tale with some fair illustrations.

Abandoning the vein of humour which has won him his reputation, Mr. J. Habberton, in "Some Folks" (Routledge), trespasses on Mr. Bret Harte's domain by his glimpses of mining life. Cleverly drawn and heartily amusing as the sketches are, they lack the delicate touches of "Sandy Bar" and its fellows, while they certainly suffer from being collected together, as there is too much similarity in the volume. The author is more happy in his scenes in the provincial villages. A batch of American stories comes from the same publishers. "The Four Irrepressibles" is a milk-and-watery imitation of the everlasting "Helen's Babies;" the evils of a mother's residence with her married children are duly bewailed by a victim in "My Mother-in-Law," and "Mr. Miggs of Danbury," by J. M. Bailey, is a specimen of American humour scarcely likely to be appreciated on this side of the Atlantic, as it consists of a would-be witty chronicle of events in a country village, which reads like roughly-collected clippings from Transatlantic journals.—Of a very different type is "The Ross-shire Buffs," by J. Grant (Routledge), wherein Mr. Grant is thoroughly at home with his pet themes of Scotland and soldiering; while "When We Were Young," by M. M. Pollard (F. Warne), affords a refreshing change from stories of the present day by recording the history of a West Country farmer's family in the times of Nelson and Trafalgar.—The heroine of "Cast Adrift," by Mrs. Martin (Griffith and Farran), first makes her appearance as a lost child at a country railway station, and after being adopted by a charitable lady, passes through many vicissitudes until we leave her on the eve of a happy marriage. Mrs. Martin adopts the religious tone without any cant, and "Cast Adrift" is thoroughly fitted for a gift book.—Insurance companies might well circulate Mrs. G. L. Banks' "Geoffrey Olivant's Folly" (J. W. Allingham) as an advertisement, for dire are the misfortunes which overtake those of Mrs. Banks's characters who have failed to insure either their lives or property, while the prudent and fully-insured personages flourish and grow rich.—Reminiscences of an autumn trip to Sussex are recorded in "Figaro at Hastings—St. Leonards," by Cuthbert Bede (A. Heywood), a lively series of letters which have already appeared in the Figaro.—Salmon-preserving in Wales does not meet with much assistance from the natives, if we are to credit "The Confessions of a Welsh Salmon Poacher," by Griffith Jones (J. M. Johnston). Squire, minister, and farmer alike conspire to evade the laws and blind the water-bailiffs, while the very magistrates who try the fishery cases are themselves head and chief of the poachers.

Now that gardens are beginning to look bare and wintry, Mr. D. T. Fish's "Bulbs and Bulb Culture," Part I. (The Bazaar Office), will prove useful to amateurs intending to plant their beds ready for spring.—"Lawn Tennis" (the Country Office) comes rather late in the season, but novices will do well to study this practical treatise in order to be versed in the laws of the game by next summer.—Jokes and pictures galore adorn the pages of "The Funny Fellows' Comic Annual" (Ward, Lock, and Tyler), while "Attire and Attraction" (A. Lynes) queerly intermingles light fiction and clothing advertisements.

As a prophet has no honour in his own country, so the beauties of England are scantily appreciated by numbers of Englishmen. "English Pictures drawn with Pen and Pencil," by the Revs. S. Manning and C. Greene (Religious Tract Society), points out the many lovely spots of our own land, and the artistic drawings and pleasant descriptions will tempt many a traveller to choose a field nearer home for his next holiday.—Boys are fond of collecting curiosities in their rambles, and the arrangement of these collections is a fertile source of amusement. "The Home Naturalist," by H. Coultas (Religious Tract Society), is intended to assist young collectors, and gives sound advice as to the best means of capture, preservation, and arrangement of insects, fish, plants, minerals, &c. From the same Society come "Harrison Weir's Animal Pictures for Children," excellent coloured drawings with simple descriptions; a number of similar pictures and letterpress on detached sheets fit for nursery walls; "Words of Cheer and Comfort," a tasteful series of texts surrounded by flower-wreaths; and "Floral Greetings," similar productions on a less elaborate scale.—We have also received "Self-Examination Questions on the Ten Commandments," by the Rev. G. H. Wilkinson (W. Wells Gardner.)

THE INDIAN FAMINE FUND.——An entertainment in aid of this fund will be given on Saturday evening next, (Nov. 3rd), at St. James's Theatre, by Mr. Marlande Clarke, the well-known Reader and Lecturer. The performance, which is under the special patronage of the Lord Mayor and the Mansion House Committee, will consist of selections from Hamlet, Macbeth, Romeo and Juliet, and The Lady of Lyons, in which Mr. Clarke will be supported by Miss M. Harlande as Juliet and Pauline; and Mrs. Sedley as the Queen of Denmark and Lady Macbeth. There will also be vocal and instrumental music by Miss A. Sinclair, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Rudolph (of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels), and Mr. Alfred Cox.

The History of a Crime:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

VIII.

"VIOLATION OF THE CHAMBER"

AT seven o'clock in the morning the Pont de la Concorde was still free. The large grated gate of the Palace of the Assembly was closed; through the bars might be seen the flight of steps, that flight of steps whence the Republic had been proclaimed on the 4th May, 1848, covered with soldiers; and their piled arms might be distinguished upon the platform behind those high columns, which during the time of the Constituent Assembly, after the 15th of May and the 23rd June, masked small mountain mortars, loaded and pointed.

A porter with a red collar, wearing the livery of the Assembly, stood by the little door of the grating. From time to time Representatives arrived. The porter said, "Gentlemen, are you Representatives?" and opened the door. Sometimes he asked their names.

M. Dupin's quarters could be entered without hindrance. In the great gallery, in the dining-room, in the salon d'honneur of the Presidency, liveried attendants silently opened the doors as usual.

Before daylight, immediately after the arrest of the Questors MM. Baze and Le Flô, M. de Panat, the only Questor who remained free, having been spared or disdained as a Legitimist, awoke M. Dupin and begged him to summon immediately the Representatives from their own homes. M. Dupin returned this unprecedented answer, "I do not see any urgency."

Almost at the same time as M. Panat, the Representative Jerôme Bonaparte had hastened thither. He had summoned M. Dupin to place himself at the head of the Assembly. M. Dupin had answered, "I cannot, I am guarded." Jerôme Bonaparte burst out laughing. In fact, no one had deigned to place a sentinel at M. Dupin's door; they knew that it was guarded by his meanness.

It was only later on, towards noon, that they took pity on him. They felt that the contempt was too great, and allotted him two sentinels.

At half-past seven fifteen or twenty Representatives, among whom were MM. Eugène Sue, Joret, de Rességuier, and de Talhouet, met together in M. Dupin's room. They also had vainly argued with M. Dupin. In the recess of a window a clever member of the Majority, M. Desmousseaux de Givré, who was a little deaf and exceedingly exasperated, almost quarrelled with a Representative of the Right like himself whom he wrongly supposed to be favourable to the Coup d'État.

M. Dupin, apart from the group of Representatives, alone, dressed in black, his hands behind his back, his head sunk on his breast, walked up and down before the fireplace, where a large fire was burning. In his own room, and in his very presence, they were talking loudly about himself, yet he seemed not to hear.

Two members of the Left came in, Benoît (du Rhône), and Crestin. Crestin entered the room, went straight up to M. Dupin, and said to him, "President, you know what is going on? How is it that the Assembly has not yet been convened?"

M. Dupin halted, and answered with a shrug which was habitual with him.

"There is nothing to be done."

And he resumed his walk.

"It is enough," said M. de Rességuier.

"It is too much," said Eugène Sue.

All the Representatives left the room.

In the meantime the Pont de la Concorde became covered with troops. Among them General Vast-Vimeux, lean, old, and little; his lank white hair plastered over his temples, in full uniform, with his laced hat on his head. He was laden with two huge epaulets, and displayed his scarf, not that of a Representative, but of a general, which scarf, being too long, trailed on the ground. He crossed the bridge on foot, shouting to the soldiers inarticulate cries of enthusiasm for the Empire and the Coup d'État. Such figures as these were seen in 1814. Only instead of wearing a large tri-coloured cockade, they wore a large white cockade. In the main the same phenomenon; old men crying, "Long live the Past!" Almost at the same moment M. de Larochejaquelein crossed the Place de la Concorde, surrounded by a hundred men in blouses, who followed him in silence, and with an air of curiosity. Numerous regiments of cavalry were drawn up in the grand avenue of the Champs Elysées.

At eight o'clock a formidable force invested the Legislative Palace. All the approaches were guarded, all the doors were shut. Some Representatives nevertheless succeeded in penetrating into the interior of the Palace, not, as has been wrongly stated, by the passage of the President's house at the side of the Esplanade of the Invalides, but by the little door of the Rue de Bourgogne, called the Black Door. This door, by what omission or what connivance I do not know, remained open till noon on the 2nd December. The Rue de Bourgogne was nevertheless full of troops. Squads of soldiers scattered here and there in the Rue de l'Université allowed passers by, who were few and far between, to use it as a thoroughfare.

The Representatives, who entered by the door in the Rue de Bourgogne, penetrated as far as the Salle des Conferences, where they met their colleagues coming out from M. Dupin.

A numerous group of men, representing every shade of opinion in the Assembly, was speedily assembled in this hall, amongst whom were M.M. Eugène Sue, Richardet, Fayolle, Joret, Marc Dufraisse, Benoît (du Rhône), Canet, Gambon, d'Adelsward, Crépu, Répellin, Teillard-Latérisse, Rantion, General Leydet, Paulin Durrieu, Chanay, Brilliez, Collas (de la Gironde) Monet, Gaston, Favreau, and Albert de Rességuier.

Each new comer accosted M. de Panat.

"Where are the Vice-Presidents?"

"In prison."

"And the two other Questors?"

"Also in prison. And I beg you to believe, gentlemen," added M. de Panat, "that I have had nothing to do with the insult which has been offered me, in not arresting me."

Indignation was at its height; every political shade was blended in the same sentiment of contempt and anger, and M. de Rességuier was no less energetic than Eugène Sue. For the first time the Assembly seemed only to have one heart and one voice. Each at length said what he thought of the man of the Elysée, and it was then seen that for a long time past Louis Bonaparte had imperceptibly created a profound unanimity in the Assembly—the unanimity of contempt.

M. Collas (of the Gironde) gesticulated and told his story. He came from the Ministry of the Interior. He had seen M. de Morny, he had spoken to him, and he, M. Collas, was incensed beyond measure at M. Bonaparte's crime. Since then that crime has made him Councillor of State.

M. de Panat went hither and thither among the groups, announcing to the Representatives that he had convened the Assembly for one o'clock. But it was impossible to wait until that hour. Time pressed. At the Palais Bourbon, as in the Rue Blanche, it was the universal feeling that each hour which passed by helped to accomplish the Coup d'État. Every one felt as a reproach the weight of his silence or of his inaction; the circle of iron was closing in, the tide of soldiers rose unceasingly, and silently invaded the Palace; at each instant a sentinel the more was found at a door, which a moment before had been free. Still, the group of Representatives assembled together in the Salle des Conferences was as yet respected. It was necessary to act, to speak, to deliberate, to struggle, and not to lose a minute.

Gambon said, "Let us try Dupin once more; he is our official man, we have need of him." They went to look for him. They could not find him. He was no longer there, he had disappeared, he was away, hidden, crouching, cowering, concealed, he had vanished, he was buried. Where? No one knew. Cowardice has unknown holes.

Suddenly a man entered the hall. A man who was a stranger to the Assembly, in uniform, wearing the epaulet of a superior officer and a sword by his side. He was a major of the 42nd, who came to summon the Representatives to quit their own House. All, Royalists and Republicans alike, rushed upon him. Such was the expression of an indignant eyewitness. General Leydet addressed him in language such as leaves an impression on the cheek rather than on the ear.

"I do my duty, I fulfil my instructions," stammered the officer.

"You are an idiot, if you think you are doing your duty," cried Leydet to him, "and you are a scoundrel if you know that you are committing a crime. Your name? What do you call yourself? Give me your name."

The officer refused to give his name, and replied, "So, gentlemen, you will not withdraw?"

"No."

"I shall go and obtain force."

"Do so."

He left the room, and in actual fact went to obtain orders from the Ministry of the Interior.

The Representatives waited in that kind of indescribable agitation which might be called the Strangling of Right by Violence.

In a short time one of them who had gone out came back hastily, and warned them that two companies of the Gendarmerie Mobile were coming with their guns in their hands.

Marc Dufraisse cried out, "Let the outrage be thorough. Let the Coup d'État find us on our seats. Let us go to the Salle des Séances," he added. "Since things have come to such a pass, let us afford the genuine and living spectacle of an 18th Brumaire."

They all repaired to the Hall of Assembly. The passage was free. The Salle Casimir-Perier was not yet occupied by the soldiers.

They numbered about sixty. Several were girded with their scarves of offices. They entered the Hall meditatively.

There, M. de Rességnier, undoubtedly with a good purpose, and in order to form a more compact group, urged that they should all instal themselves on the Right side.

"No," said Marc Dufraisse, "every one to his bench." They scattered themselves about the Hall, each in his usual place.

M. Monet, who sat on one of the lower benches of the Left Centre, held in his hand a copy of the Constitution.

Several minutes elapsed. No one spoke. It was the silence of expectation which precedes decisive deeds and final crises, and during which every one seems to respectfully listen to the last instructions of his conscience.

Suddenly the soldiers of the Gendarmerie Mobile, headed by a captain with his sword drawn, appeared on the threshold. The Hall of Assembly was violated. The Representatives rose from their seats simultaneously, shouting "Vive la République!"

The Representative Monet alone remained standing, and in a loud and indignant voice, which resounded through the empty hall like a trumpet, ordered the soldiers to halt.

The soldiers halted, looking at the Representatives with a bewildered air.

The soldiers as yet only blocked up the lobby of the Left, and had not passed beyond the Tribune.

Then the Representative Monet read the Articles 36, 37, and 68 of the Constitution.

Articles 36 and 37 established the inviolability of the Representatives. Article 68 deposed the President in the event of treason.

That moment was a solemn one. The soldiers listened in silence.

The Articles having been read, Representative d'Adelsward, who sat on the first lower bench of the Left, and who was nearest to the soldiers, turned towards them and said:

"Soldiers, you see that the President of the Republic is a traitor, and would make traitors of you. You violate the sacred precinct of National Representation. In the name of the Constitution, in the name of the Law, we order you to withdraw."

While Adelsward was speaking, the major commanding the Gendarmerie Mobile had entered.

"Gentlemen," said he, "I have orders to request you to retire, and, if you do not withdraw of your own accord, to expel you."

"Orders to expel us!" exclaimed d'Adelsward, and all the Representatives added, "Whose orders? Let us see the orders! Who signed the orders?"

The major drew forth a paper and unfolded it. Scarcely had he unfolded it than he attempted to replace it in his pocket, but General Leydet threw himself upon him and seized his arm. Several Representatives leant forward, and read the order for the expulsion of the Assembly, signed "Fortoul, Minister of the Marine."

Marc Dufraisse turned towards the Gendarmes Mobiles, and cried out to them:

"Soldiers, your very presence here is an act of treason. Leave the Hall."

The soldiers seemed undecided. Suddenly a second column emerged from the door on the right, and at a signal from the commander, the captain shouted,

"Forward! Turn them all out!"

Then began an indescribable hand-to-hand fight between the gendarmes and the legislators. The soldiers, with their guns in their hands, invaded the benches of the Senate. Repellin, Chanay, Rantion, were forcibly torn from their seats. Two gendarmes rushed upon Marc Dufraisse, two upon Gambon. A long struggle took place on the first bench of the Right, the same place where MM. Odilon Barrot and Abbatucci were in the habit of sitting. Paulin Durrieu resisted violence by force, it needed three men to drag him from his bench. Monet was thrown down upon the benches of the Commissaries. They seized d'Adelsward by the throat and thrust him outside the Hall. Richardet, a feeble man, was thrown down and brutally treated. Some were pricked with the points of the bayonets; nearly all had their clothes torn.

The commander shouted to the soldiers: "Rake them out."

It was thus that sixty Representatives of the People were taken by the collar by the Coup d'État, and driven from their seats. The manner in which the deed was executed completed the treason. The physical performance was worthy of the moral performance.

The three last to come out were Fayolle, Teillard-Latérisse, and Paulin Durrieu.

They were allowed to pass by the great door of the Palace, and they found themselves in the Place Bourgogne.

The Place Bourgogne was occupied by the 42nd Regiment of the Line, under the orders of Colonel Garderens.

Between the Palace and the statue of the Republic, which occupied the centre of the square, a piece of artillery was pointed at the Assembly opposite the great door.

By the side of the cannon some Chasseurs de Vincennes were loading their guns and biting their cartridges.

Colonel Garderens was on horseback near a group of soldiers, which attracted the attention of the Representatives Teillard-Latérisse, Fayolle, and Paulin Durrieu.

In the middle of this group three men, who had been arrested, were struggling vigorously, crying "Long live the Constitution! Vive la Republique!"

Fayolle, Paulin Durrieu, and Teillard-Latérisse approached, and recognised in the three prisoners three members of the majority, Representatives Toupet-des-Vignes, Radoubt Lafosse, and Arbey.

Representative Arbey was warmly protesting. As he raised his voice, Colonel Garderens cut him short with these words, which are worthy of preservation:—

"Hold your tongue! One word more and I will have you thrashed with the butt-end of a musket."

The three Representatives of the Left indignantly called upon the Colonel to release their colleagues.

"Colonel," said Fayolle, "you break the law three-fold."

"I will break it six-fold," answered the Colonel, and he arrested Fayolle, Durrieu, and Teillard-Latérisse.

The soldiers were ordered to conduct them to the guard-house of the Palace, then being built for the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

On the way the six prisoners marching between a double file of bayonets met three of their colleagues, Representatives Eugène Sue, Chanay, and Benoît (du Rhône).

Eugène Sue placed himself before the officer who commanded the detachment, and said to him,

"We summon you to set our colleagues at liberty."

"I cannot do so," answered the officer."

"In that case complete your crimes," said Eugène Sue. "We summon you to arrest us also."

The officer arrested them.

They were taken to the Guardhouse of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, and, later on, to the barracks of the Quay d'Orsay. It was not till night that two companies of the line came to transfer them to this ultimate resting place.

While placing them between his soldiers the commanding officer bowed down to the ground, politely remarking, "Gentlemen, my men's guns are loaded."

The clearance of the Hall was carried out, as we have said, in a disorderly fashion, the soldiers pushing the Representatives before them through all the outlets.

Some, and amongst the number those of whom we have just spoken, went out by the Rue de Bourgogne, others were dragged through the Salle des Pas Perdus towards the grating opposite the Pont de la Concorde.*

The Salle des Pas Perdus has an ante-chamber, a sort of crossway room, upon which opened the staircase of the High Tribune, and several doors, amongst others the great glass door of the gallery which leads to the apartments of the President of the Assembly.

As soon as they had reached this crossway room which adjoins the little rotunda, where the side door of exit of the Palace is situated, the soldiers set the Representatives free.

There, in a few moments, a group was formed, in which the Representatives Canet and Favreau began to speak. One universal cry was raised, "Let us search for Dupin, let us drag him here if it is necessary."

They opened the glass door, and rushed into the Gallery. This time M. Dupin was at home. M. Dupin, having learnt that the gendarmes had cleared out the Hall, had come out of his hiding-place. The Assembly being thrown prostrate, Dupin stood erect. The Law being made prisoner this man felt himself set free.

The group of Representatives, led by MM. Canet and Favreau, found him in his study.

There a dialogue ensued. The Representatives summoned the President to put himself at their head, and to re-enter the Hall, he, the man of the Assembly, with them, the men of the Nation.

M. Dupin refused point blank, maintained his ground, was very firm, and clung bravely to his nonentity.

"What do you want me to do?" said he, mingling with his alarmed protests many law maxims and Latin quotations, an instinct of chattering jays, who pour forth all their vocabulary when they are frightened. "What do you want me to do? Who am I? What can I do? I am nothing. No one is any longer anything. Ubi nihil, nihil. Might is there. Where there is Might the people lose their Rights. Novus nascitur ordo. Shape your course accordingly. I am obliged to submit. Dura lex, sed lex. A law of necessity we admit, but not a law of right. But what is to be done? I ask to be let alone. I can do nothing. I do what I can. I am not wanting in good will. If I had a corporal and four men I would have them killed."

"This man only recognises force," said the Representatives. "Very well, let us employ force."

They used violence towards him, they girded him with a scarf like a cord round his neck, and, as they had said, they dragged him towards the Hall, begging for his "liberty," moaning, kicking—I would say, wrestling if the word were not too exalted.

Some minutes after the clearance, this Salle des Pas Perdus, which had just witnessed Representatives pass by in the clutch of gendarmes, saw M. Dupin in the clutch of the Representatives.

They did not get far. Soldiers barred the great green folding doors. Colonel Espinasse hurried thither, the commander of the gendarmerie came up. The butt ends of a pair of pistols were seen peeping out of the commander's pocket.

The colonel was pale, the commander was pale, M. Dupin was livid. Both sides were afraid. M. Dupin was afraid of the colonel; the colonel assuredly was not afraid of M. Dupin, but behind this laughable and miserable figure he saw a terrible phantom rise up—his crime, and he trembled. In Homer there is a scene where Nemesis appears behind Thersites.

M. Dupin remained for some moments stupefied, bewildered, and speechless.

The Representative Gambon exclaimed to him:

"Now then, speak, M. Dupin, the Left does not interrupt you."

Then, with the words of the Representatives at his back, and the bayonets of the soldiers at his breast, the unhappy man spoke. What his mouth uttered at this moment, what the President of the Sovereign Assembly of France stammered to the gendarmes at this intensely critical moment, no one could gather.

Those who heard the last gasps of this moribund cowardice hastened to purify their ears. It appears, however, that he stuttered forth something like this:—

"You are Might, you have bayonets, I invoke Right, and I leave you. I have the honour to wish you good day."

He went away.

They let him go. At the moment of leaving he turned round and let fall a few more words. We will not gather them up. History has no rag-picker's basket.

IX.

AN END WORSE THAN DEATH.

We should have been glad to have put aside, never to have spoken of him again, this man who had borne for three years this most honourable title, President of the National Assembly of France, and who had only known how to be lacquey to the majority. He contrived in his last hour to sink even lower than could have been believed possible even for him. His career in the Assembly had been that of a valet, his end was that of a scullion.

The unprecedented attitude that M. Dupin assumed before the gendarmes when uttering with a grimace his mockery of a protest, even engendered suspicion. Gambon exclaimed, "He resists like an accomplice. He knew all."

We believe these suspicions to be unjust. M. Dupin knew nothing. Who indeed amongst the organisers of the Coup d'État would have taken the trouble to make sure of his joining them? Corrupt M. Dupin! Was it possible? And, further, to what purpose? To pay him? Why? It would be money wasted when fear alone was enough. Some connivances are secured before they are sought for. Cowardice is the old fawner upon felony. The blood of the law is quickly wiped up. Behind the assassin who holds the poniard, comes the trembling wretch who holds the sponge.

Dupin took refuge in his study. They followed him.

"My God!" he cried, "can't they understand that I want to be left in peace?"

In truth they had tortured him ever since the morning, in order to extract from him an impossible scrap of courage.

"You ill-treat me worse than the gendarmes," said he.

The Representatives installed themselves in his study, seated themselves at his table, and while he groaned and scolded in an arm-chair, they drew up a formal report of what had just taken place, as they wished to leave an official record of the outrage in the archives.

When the official report was ended Representative Canet read it to the President, and offered him a pen.

"What do you want me to do with this?" he asked.

"You are the President," answered Canet. "This is our last sitting. It is your duty to sign the official report."

This man refused.

X.

THE BLACK DOOR.

M. Dupin is a matchless disgrace.

Later on he had his reward. It appears that he became some sort of an attorney-general at the Court of Appeal.

M. Dupin renders to Louis Bonaparte the service of being in his place the meanest of men.

To continue this dismal history.

The Representatives of the Right, in their first bewilderment, caused by the Coup d'État, hastened in large numbers to M. Daru, who was Vice-President of the Assembly, and at the same time one of the Presidents of the Pyramid Club. This Association had always supported the policy of the Elysée, but without believing that a Coup d'État was premeditated. M. Daru lived at No. 75, Rue de Lille.

Toward ten o'clock in the morning about a hundred of these Representatives had assembled at M. Daru's home. They resolved to attempt to penetrate into the Hall where the Assembly held its sittings. The Rue de Lille opens out into the Rue de Bourgogne, almost opposite the little door by which the Palace is entered, and which is called the Black Door.

They turned their steps towards this door, with M. Daru at their head. They marched arm in arm and three abreast. Some of them had put on their scarves of office. They took them off later on.

The Black Door, half-open as usual, was only guarded by two sentries.

Some of the most indignant, and amongst them M. de Kerdrel, rushed towards this door and tried to pass. The door, however, was violently shut, and there ensued between the Representatives and the sergents de ville who hastened up a species of struggle in which a Representative had his wrist sprained.

At the same time a battalion which was drawn up on the Place de Bourgogne moved on and came at the double towards the group of Representatives. M. Daru, stately and firm, signed to the commander to stop; the battalion halted, and M. Daru, in the name of the Constitution, and in his capacity as Vice-President of the Assembly, summoned the soldiers to lay down their arms, and to give free passage to the Representatives of the Sovereign People.

The commander of the battalion replied by an order to clear the street immediately, declaring that there was no longer an Assembly; that as for himself he did not know what the Representatives of the People were, and that if those persons before him did not retire of their own accord he would drive them back by force.

"We will only yield to violence," said M. Daru.

"You commit high treason," added M. de Kerdrel.

The officer gave the order to charge.

The soldiers advanced in close order.

There was a moment of confusion. Almost a collision. The Representatives, forcibly driven back, ebbed into the Rue de Lille. Some of them fell down. Several members of the Right were rolled in the mud by the soldiers. One of them, M. Etienne, received a blow on the shoulder from the butt-end of a musket. We may here add that a week afterwards M. Etienne was a member of that concern which they styled the Consultative Committee. He found the Coup d'État to his taste, the blow with the butt-end of a musket included.

They went back to M. Daru's house, and on the way the scattered group re-united, and was even strengthened by some new comers.

"Gentlemen," said M. Daru, "the President has failed us, the Hall is closed against us. I am the Vice-President; my house is the Palace of the Assembly.

He opened a large room, and there the Representatives of the Right installed themselves. At first the discussions were somewhat noisy. M. Daru, however, observed that the moments were precious, and silence was restored.

The first measure to be taken was evidently the deposition of the President of the Republic by virtue of Article 68 of the Constitution. Some Representatives of the party which was called Burgraves sat round a table and prepared the deed of deposition.

As they were about to read it aloud a Representative who came in from out of doors appeared at the door of the room, and announced to the Assembly that the Rue de Lille was becoming filled with troops, and that the house was being surrounded.

There was not a moment to lose.

M. Benoît d'Azy said, "Gentlemen, let us go to the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement, there we shall be able to deliberate under the protection of the Tenth Legion of which our colleague, General Lauriston, is the Colonel."

M. Daru's house had a back entrance by a little door which was at the bottom of the garden. Most of the Representatives went out that way.

M. Daru was about to follow them. Only himself, M. Odilon Barrot, and two or three others remained in the room when the door opened. A captain entered, and said to M. Daru,

"Sir, you are my prisoner."

"Where am I to follow you?" asked M. Daru.

"I have orders to watch over you in your own house."

The house, in truth, was militarily occupied, and it was thus that M. Daru was prevented from taking part in the sitting at the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement.

The officer allowed M. Odilon Barrot to go out.

XI.

THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE

While all this was taking place on the left bank of the river, towards noon a man was noticed walking up and down the great Salle des Pas Perdus of the Palace of Justice. This man, carefully buttoned up in an overcoat, appeared to be attended at a distance by several possible supporters—for certain police enterprises employ assistants whose dubious appearance renders the passers-by uneasy, so much so that they wonder whether they are magistrates or thieves. The man in the buttoned-up overcoat loitered from door to door, from lobby to lobby, exchanging signs of intelligence with the myrmidons who followed him; then came back to the great Hall, stopping on the way the barristers, solicitors, ushers, clerks, and attendants, and repeating to all in a low voice, so as not to be heard by the passers-by, the same question. To this question some answered "Yes," others replied "No." And the man set to work again prowling about the Palace of Justice with the appearance of a bloodhound seeking the trail.

---

* This grating was closed on December 2, and was not reopened until the 12th March, when M. Louis Bonaparte came to inspect the works of the Hall of the Corps Legislatif.

He was a commissary of the Arsenal police.

What was he looking for?

The High Court of Justice.

What was the High Court of Justice doing?

It was hiding.

Why? To sit in judgment?

Yes and no.

The commissary of the arsenal police had that morning received from the Prefect Maupas the order to search everywhere for the place where the High Court of Justice might be sitting, if perchance it thought it its duty to meet. Confusing the High Court with the Council of State the Commissary of Police had first gone to the Quai d'Orsay. Having found nothing, not even the Council of State, he had come away empty-handed, at all events had turned his steps towards the Palace of Justice, thinking that as he had to search for justice he would perhaps find it there.

Not finding it he went away.

The High Court, however, had nevertheless met together.

Where, and how? We shall see.

At the period whose annals we are now chronicling, before the present reconstructions of the old buildings of Paris, when the Palace of Justice was reached by the Cour de Harlay, a staircase the reverse of majestic led thither by turning out into a long corridor called the Gallerie Mercière. Towards the middle of this corridor there were two doors, one on the right which led to the Court of Appeal, the other on the left which led to the Court of Cassation. The folding-doors to the left opened upon an old gallery called St. Louis, recently restored, and which serves at the present time for a Salle de Pas Perdus to the barristers of the Court of Cassation. A wooden statue of St. Louis stood opposite the entrance door. An entrance contrived in a niche to the right of this statue led into a winding lobby ending in a sort of blind passage, which apparently was closed by two double doors. On the door to the right might be read "First President's Room;" on the door to the left, "Council Chamber." Between these two doors, for the convenience of the barristers going from the Hall to the Civil Chamber, which formerly was the Great Chamber of Parliament, had been formed a narrow and dark passage, in which, as one of them remarked, "every crime could be committed with impunity."

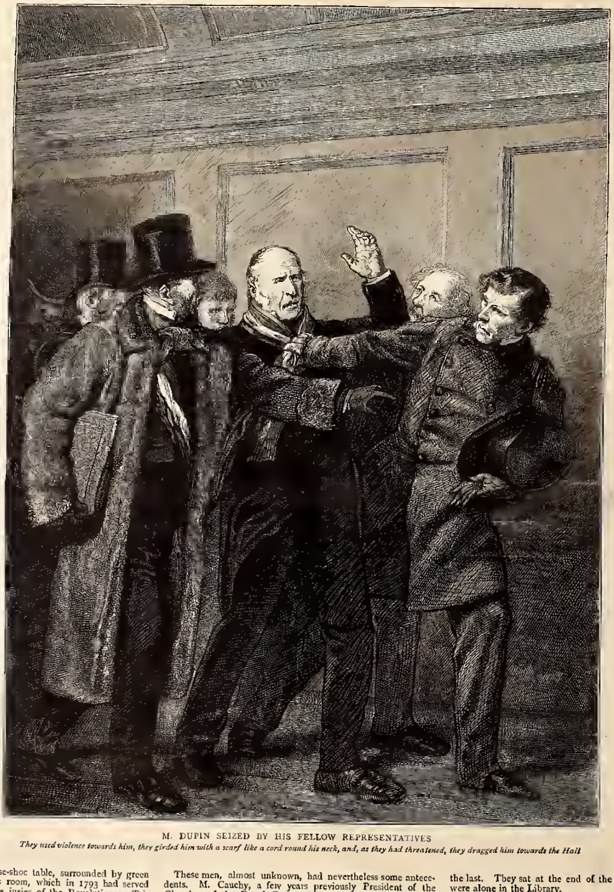
Leaving on one side the First President's room, and opening the door which bore the inscription "Council Chamber," a large room was crossed, furnished with a huge horse-shoe table, surrounded by green chairs. At the end of this room, which in 1793 had served as a deliberating hall for the juries of the Revolutionary Tribunal, there was a door placed in the wainscoting, which led into a little lobby, where were two doors on the right, the door of the room appertaining to the President of the Criminal Chamber, on the left the door of the Refreshment Room. "Sentenced to death!—Now let us go and dine!" These two ideas, Death and Dinner, have jostled against each other for centuries. A third door closed the extremity of this lobby. This door was, so to speak, the last of the Palace of Justice, the farthest off, the least known, the most hidden; it opened into what was called the Library of the Cour de Cassation, a large square room lighted by two windows overlooking the great inner yard of the Conciergerie, furnished with a few leather chairs, a large table covered with green cloth, and with law books lining the walls from the floor to the ceiling.

This room, as may be seen, is the most secluded and the best hidden of any in the Palace.

It was here,—in this room, that there arrived successively on the 2nd December, towards eleven o'clock in the morning, numerous men dressed in black, without robes, without badges of office, affrighted, bewildered, shaking their heads, and whispering together. These trembling men were the High Court of Justice.

The High Court of Justice, according to the terms of the Constitution, was composed of seven magistrates; a President, four Judges, and two Assistants, chosen by the Court of Cassation from among its own members and renewed every year.

In December, 1851, these seven judges were named Hardouin, Pataille, Moreau, Delapalme, Cauchy, Grandet, and Quesnault, the two last-named being Assistants.



M. DUPIN SEIZED BY HIS FELLOW REPRESENTATIVES

They used violence towards him, they girded him with a scarf like a cord round his neck, and, as they had threatened, they dragged him towards the Hall

These men, almost unknown, had nevertheless some antecedents. M. Cauchy, a few years previously President of the Chamber of the Royal Court of Paris, an amiable man and easily frightened, was the brother of the mathematician, member of the Institute, to whom we owe the computation of waves of sound, and of the ex-Registrar Archivist of the Chamber of Peers. M. Delapalme had been Advocate-General, and had taken a prominent part in the Press trials under the Restoration; M. Pataille had been Deputy of the Centre under the Monarchy of July; M. Moreau (de la Seine) was noteworthy, inasmuch as he had been nicknamed "de la Seine" to distinguish him from M. Moreau (de la Meurthe), who on his side was noteworthy, inasmuch as he had been nicknamed "de la Meurthe" to distinguish him from M. Moreau (de la Seine). The first Assistant, M. Grandet, had been President of the Chamber at Paris. I have read this panegyric of him: "He is known to possess no individuality or opinion of his own whatsoever." The second Assistant, M. Quesnault, a Liberal, a Deputy, a Public Functionary, Advocate General, a Conservative, learned, obedient, had attained, by making a stepping-stone of each of these attributes, to the Criminal Chamber of the Court of Cassation, where he was known as one of the most severe members. 1848 had shocked his notion of Right, he had resigned after the 24th of February, he did not resign after the 2nd December.

M. Hardouin, who presided over the High Court, was an ex-President of Assizes, a religious man, a rigid Jansenist, noted amongst his colleagues as a "scrupulous magistrate," living in Port Royal, a diligent reader of Nicolle, belonging to the race of the old Parliamentarians of the Marais, who used to go to the Palais de Justice mounted on a mule; the mule had now gone out of fashion, and whoever visited President Hardouin would have found no more obstinacy in his stable than in his conscience.

On the morning of the 2nd December, at nine o'clock, two men mounted the stairs of M. Hardouin's house, No. 10, Rue de Condé, and met together at his door. One was M. Pataille; the other, one of the most prominent members of the Bar of the Court of Cassation, was the ex-Constituent Martin (of Strasbourg). M. Pataille had just placed himself at M. Hardouin's disposal.

M. Martin's first thought, while reading the placards of the Coup d'État, had been for the High Court. M. Hardouin ushered M. Pataille into a room adjoining his study, and received Martin (of Strasbourg) as a man to whom he did not wish to speak before witnesses. Being formally requested by Martin (of Strasbourg) to convene the High Court, he begged that he would leave him alone, declared that the High Court would "do its duty," but that first he must "confer with his colleagues," concluding with this expression, "It shall be done to-day or to-morrow." "To-day or to-morrow!" exclaimed Martin (of Strasbourg); "Mr. President, the safety of the Republic, the safety of the country, perhaps, depends on what the High Court will or will not do. Your responsibility is great; bear that in mind. The High Court of Justice does not do its duty to-day or to-morrow; it does it at once, at the moment, without losing a minute, without an instant's hesitation."

Martin (of Strasbourg) was right, Justice always belongs to To-day.

Martin (of Strasbourg) added, "If you want a man for active work I am at your service." M. Hardouin declined the offer; declared that he would not lose a moment, and begged Martin (of Strasbourg) to leave him to "confer" with his colleague, M. Pataille.

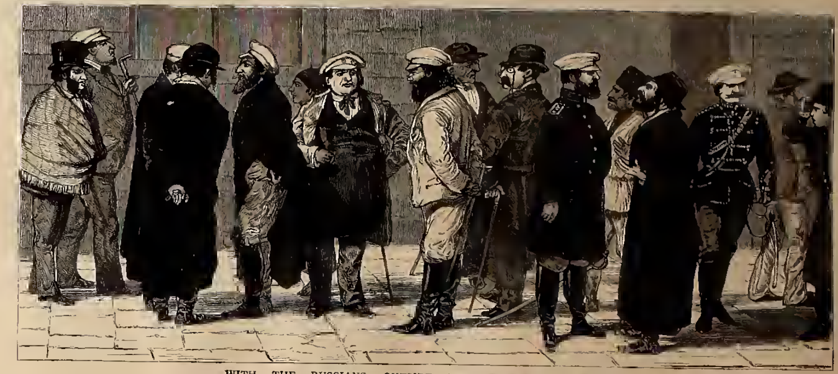
In fact, he called together the High Court for eleven o'clock, and it was settled that the meeting should take place in the Hall of the Library.

The Judges were punctual. At a quarter-past eleven they were all assembled. M. Pataille arrived the last. They sat at the end of the great green table. They were alone in the Library.

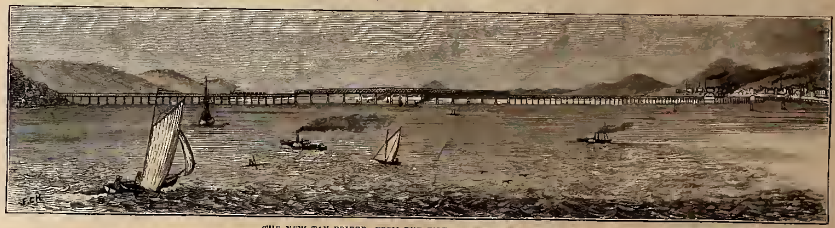
There was no ceremonial. President Hardouin thus opened the debate: "Gentlemen, there is no need to explain the situation, we all know what it is."

Article 68 of the Constitution was imperative. It was necessary that the High Court should meet under penalty of high treason. They gained time, they swore themselves in, they appointed as Recorder of the High Court M. Bernard, Recorder of the Court of Cassation, and they sent to fetch him, and while waiting requested the librarian, M. Denevers, to hold his pen in readiness. They settled the time and place for an evening meeting. They talked of the conduct of the Constituent Martin (of Strasbourg), with which they were offended, regarding it almost as a nudge of the elbow given by Politics to Justice. They spoke a little of Socialism, of the Mountain, and of the Red Republic, and a little also of the judgment which they had to pronounce. They chatted, they told stories, they found fault, they speculated, they spun out the time. What were they waiting for?

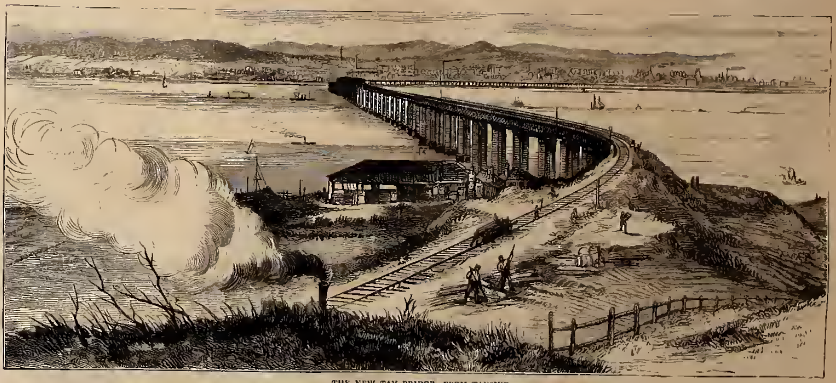
(To be continued)



WITH THE RUSSIANS—OUTSIDE THE BOURSE AT BUCHAREST



THE NEW TAY BRIDGE, FROM THE FIRTH, LOOKING UP STREAM



THE NEW TAY BRIDGE, FROM TAYSIDE

THE LONGEST RAILWAY BRIDGE IN THE WORLD

(Continued from page 395)

summary process of pouring water down the chimney. The result was that the art-treasures of the "gallery" were irretrievably ruined, and the artist has recovered 50*l*. damages by a county court action.—The Birmingham police made a raid on Saturday last on the "Caledonian Club," which is said to have been illegally conducted. About sixty persons were found in the billiard-room, all of whom, as well as to the proprietor, will be prosecuted.—Mr. Atkinson, the secretary of the Leeds Anti-Vaccination Society, has been fined for the sixth time for refusing to have his children vaccinated. He did not appear in answer to the summons, but instead sent the following polite note:—"To Mr. Thomas Holmes, Vaccination Spy, Guardians' Office, Leeds.—John Ewbank Atkinson is not going to be murdered to please you or a thousand spies, tools, fools, guardians, Local Government Board, or anybody else. Take that for your answer, inform the Mercury of it, and take proceedings as soon as you like." Has Mr. Atkinson ever heard of "contempt of court," or of the Keighley Guardians?"—A miserly old dairyman of Brighton, who though living in a most penurious manner had between 700 and 800 sovereigns in his house, has been robbed of his hoard by a burglar, who was cunning enough to leave untouched a roll of bank notes and a valuable watch which lay beside the gold.—A burglar armed with a loaded revolver has been arrested in flagrante delicto at Sunbury, and has confessed himself to be the perpetrator of several house-robberies which have been committed in the neighbourhood during the last few weeks, and which had so alarmed the inhabitants that a "vigilance committee" had been formed to patrol the streets.—Another burglar has been committed for trial at Chesterfield. He broke into a house occupied by a brave old lady of eighty-eight, who grappled with and held him for some time, and though he ultimately got away, leaving her senseless upon the floor, he dropped a cap and key, and these, with certain scratches on his face and neck led, to his apprehension and identification.—A dreadful double murder was committed at Wymondham, near Norwich, on Saturday last by a blacksmith, who, having quarrelled with a fellow workman, knocked him down with his fist and afterwards beat him about the head with a heavy bar of iron, saying as he did so that he might as well kill him at once as he should be hung for it. His employer, an old man of seventy, who ran across the road to expostulate with the assassin, was immediately knocked down with the same weapon, and died shortly afterwards. The whole scene was witnessed by a servant girl from an opposite window.

MARRIAGES.

On the 8th Inst., at St Giles's, Camberwell, Mr. CHARLES T. GARNER, of 14, Peckham Grove, to ANNIE CAROLINE, only daughter of Mr. HENRY WELLS.

On the 23rd inst., at Holy Trinity Church, Cloudesley Square, Islington, by the Rev. A. L. Hunt, JOHN ANGOLD, eldest son of Mr JOHN ANGOLD, of Diss, Norfolk, to CAROLINE, only daughter of Mr GEORGE ANGOLD, of Islington.

DEATH.

On the 25th Inst., at 25, Walnut Tree Walk, Lambeth, the eldest son of J. A. GALLOWAY, aged 12 years.

Now ready. Price 7d.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for NOVEMBER contains—

WOMEN WHO HAVE RISEN.
HOW THE STOCK EXCHANGE IS MANAGED.
WHAT IS PRODUCED BY HEAT.
A DOCTOR'S HOLIDAY.
SOME NEGLECTED ARTICLES OF FOOD.
THE VALUE OF SIMPLE REMEDIES.
HOUSE LINEN: ITS WEAR AND TEAR.
TWO COBWEBS: AN OLD MAN'S TALE.
CHIT-CHAT ON DRESS. By Our Paris Correspondent.
MEMORY. Song with Music.
PAUL KNOX, PITMAN. Serial Story.
STONE STEPS AND WOODEN STAIRS. Serial Story.
THE GATHERER, &c.

Now Ready, price 6d.

THE QUIVER FOR NOVEMBER.
Forming the First Part of a New Volume.
CONTENTS:

THE RESTING-PLACES OF OUR SAVIOUR AND THE SCENES OF HIS SECLUSION.
LAST WORDS OF THE BOOKS OF GOD.
SCRIPTURE LESSONS FOR SCHOOL AND HOME.
OUT-OF-THE-WAY PAPERS.
WHAT HE WAS MADE FOR.
"THE QUIVER" BIBLE CLASS.
EARLY PILGRIMS: THEIR JOURNEYING, AND THEIR REST.
CHRIST OUR EXAMPLE.
HEIRS OF GOD.
THE PARABLES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.
"JESUS SHALL REIGN!" New Hymn Tune.
MORE THAN CONQUEROR. New Serial Story.
A CHRONICLE OF BARHAM. New Serial Story, &c.

Now ready, price 6d.

LITTLE FOLKS FOR NOVEMBER, containing:

THE ADVENTURES OF A SNAIL.
A CHAT ABOUT VIRGIL AND HIS WORKS.
PRETTY WORK FOR LITTLE FINGERS—TATTING.
THE PROPHETS OF THE BIBLE—ISAIAH.
DAD RYAN'S LUCK.
THE STORY OF THE MONTH—NOVEMBER.
A TRIP TO WOOLWICH ARSENAL.
THE DOGS OF ST. BERNARD.
STORIES ABOUT THOR.
THE STORY OF A SOAP BUBBLE.
THE DESERT HORSE.
MUSIC—PEASE PUDDING HOT.
PAGES FOR VERY LITTLE FOLKS.
THE YOUNG BERRINGTONS; or, The Boy Explorers. Serial Story.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE of CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN'S PUBLICATIONS, containing a List of SEVERAL HUNDRED VOLUMES, including Bibles and Religious Works, Fine-Art Volumes, Children's Books, Dictionaries, Educational Works, History, Natural History, Household and Domestic Treatises, Hand-Books and Guides, Science, Travels, &c., together with a Synopsis of their numerous Illustrated Serial Publications, sent post free on application to CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN, Ludgate Hill, London.

THE NEW WEEKLY PAPER.
On November 3, 1877, and every succeeding Saturday.

BRIEF: a Weekly Epitome of Current NEWS, THOUGHT, and CRITICISM.

"An abstract and brief Chronicle of the time."—Shakespeare.

Under the above title will be published, every Saturday, at the price of One Penny, a popular summary of the sayings and doing of the current week, as recorded in the public Press. The First Number will appear on Saturday, November 3rd, 1877.

"BRIEF," presenting the Press compressed—concentrated essence of Press in fact—giving a bird's-eye view of the contents of many Journals; marshalling together the different opinions of various Leaders of National Thought; impartially representing all Parties and Schools of Politics, Literature, Science, and Art, must appeal to a very large number of readers, and, while indispensable to many, prove acceptable to all. "BRIEF" will be thoroughly well printed on good paper.

Yearly Subscription, post free, 6s. 6d.
OFFICE: 81, GREAT QUEEN STREET, W.C.

WITH THE LADIES' TREASURY for NOVEMBER will be given ELEVEN DESIGNS for WINTER MANTLES of the NEWEST SHAPES. With also Ten Engravings of the Latest Fashions, and a Large Coloured Fashion Plate, Designs in Needlework, &c. Price 6d.; by post, 7d.
BEMROSE'S, 10, Paternoster Buildings, London.

Price 6d., or free by post, 6d.
MDME. DEMOREST'S

WHAT TO WEAR, AND HOW TO MAKE IT.

Information on Dress and Dressmaking. Contains nearly 500 miniature illustrations of Ladies and Children's Fashions for Autumn and Winter, with full descriptions of latest styles, &c., including materials, trimmings, walking, and outdoor costumes, dinner, evening, and other toilets, jewellery, laces, coiffures, millinery, and every new and desirable article connected with Ladies' and Children's Dress.

Just what every lady, milliner, dressmaker, draper, warehouseman, and outfitter wants to know about the Autumn and Winter Fashions.

Sold by all Booksellers and Newsagents, and at every Railway Station.—WILLIAM and ROGERS NEWS CO., General Agents for Demorest's Reliable Patterns, 11, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will begin on Monday, January 28.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

THE FOUR MARIES. As sung in Mr. Kennedy's Entertainment of the "Songs of Scotland" in St. James's Hall.
Post free for 18 stamps from
METHVEN, SIMPSON, and CO., Dundee; or
C. JEFFERYS, Berners Street, London.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

STANDARD MUSICAL WORKS for COLLEGES and SCHOOLS. By J. T. STONE.
FOR THE PIANOFORTE: THE FIRST SIX MONTHS AT THE PIANO. 5s.—ELEMENTARY INSTRUCTIONS. Twentieth Edition. 5s.—FACILE INSTRUCTIONS. Sixteenth Edition. 4s.—CONCISE INSTRUCTIONS. 3s.
FOR THE ORGAN: COMPLETE INSTRUCTIONS. Ninth Edition. 5s.—THE CLASSICAL ORGANIST. In Three Vols., £1 1s. each, or in Fifty-four Numbers, 3s. each.—THE ORGAN STUDENT'S COMPANION. In six vols., 7s. 6d. each; or in Twenty-four Books, 2s. each.
FOR THE HARMONIUM: COMPLETE INSTRUCTIONS. 5s.—THE HARMONIUM MISCELLANY. In Twelve Numbers. 3s. each.
FOR SINGING:—THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL INSTRUCTIONS. 6s.—The Publishers confidently direct the attention of Professors and Teachers of Music to the above Works. The whole series have a large and increasing circulation.—London: BREWER and CO., 14 and 15, Poultry, Cheapside, and No. 23, Bishopsgate Street Within.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.
All for Her. No. 1 sop., No. 2 contralto. A. S. Gatty.
Maiden May. Two keys. A. S. Gatty. Sung by Madame Care-Ashton.
Before the Storm. Baritone. A. S. Gatty.
Mcha. No. 1 tenor, No. 2 baritone. V. Capoul. Sung by M. Capoul.
Be My Love. Baritone. G. Fox.
My Star. No. 1, contralto, No. 2 mezzo-sop. Julia Woolf.
Little Nannie. Soprano. Julia Woolf. Sung by Mrs. Osgood.
The Trooper's Dream. Baritone. Julia Woolf.
Post free 24 stamps each.
ENOCH and SONS, 19, Holles Street, W.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Pianoforte SCHOOL.
Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.
For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

NEW WALTZ, DER LETZTE KUSS (The Last Kiss). By OTTO MULLER. Performed at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden Theatre. This charming waltz, by the composer of the celebrated "Geliebt and Verloren" (Loved and Lost) Waltz, may be had of all Musicsellers. Solo or duet, price 2s. net.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

LOVED AND LOST (Geliebt und Verloren) WALTZES, by OTTO MULLER (performed at the Promenade Concerts, Theatre Royal, Covent Garden). These Celebrated WALTZES may be had of all Musicsellers. Solo or Duet, 2s net.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

THE Popular Song, LOVED AND LOST. The Words by PERCY FITZGERALD, adapted to MULLER'S Beautiful Waltz, "Geliebt und Verloren." Sold by every Musicseller in the United Kingdom. Post free, 2s.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20 —GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.
BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

ESTY AMERICAN ORGANS, cheapest and best for quality, &c. LOW PRICES FOR CASH, or by monthly payments (in London and Suburbs only). Lists on application.—J. A. MILLS, 60, Moorgate Street, E.C.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 22, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price, £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

COLLECTIONS of PHOTOGRAPHS, PRINTS, &c., arranged.—MARION and CO., 22 and 23, Soho Square, undertake to PUT INTO ORDER COLLECTIONS of PHOTOGRAPHS, Prints, &c.—to make them into convenient volumes for reference—to frame them for the Library or Dining Room—or to portfolio them with partitions in order to keep Countries separate—Patent Portfolios, folding into small space. Portraits enlarged, framed, and cased. Estimates given for work in general.

WOOD-CUTTING for AMATEURS. —No previous knowledge required. Thousands of pretty things in Cut Wood, Baskets, Stands for Flowers, &c. Candelabras, Pipe Cases, &c., &c., can be cut by Lorin's Wood-cutting Machines, everything complete. Drawings, saws, &c., from 8s.—Wholesale and Retail, to be had at the Manufacturers, JACQUES LORIN FILS, 3, Rue de la Fidelité, Paris. Catalogues free on application.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

E. DENT and CO., 61, Strand, and 34, Royal Exchange, London, Manufacturers of CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, CLOCKS, &c. (Catalogues free) to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and Foreign Sovereigns.
Makers of the Great Westminster Clock and of the New Standard Clock of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

MAPPIN and WEBB
MANUFACTURERS,
Mansion House Buildings, City, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S TABLE CUTLERY.—BEST QUALITY DOUBLE SHEAR STEEL.

	Table	Dessert	Carver
3½ inch ivory, per doz.	15s. od.	11s. od.	7s. od.
3½ inch ivory, balance, per doz.	19s. od.	15s. od.	7s. od.
3¾ inch ivory, balance, per doz.	22s. od.	16s. od.	7s. 6d.
3¾ inch ivory, stout, per doz.	32s. od.	23s. od.	9s. 6d.
4 inch fine ivory, per doz.	34s. od.	24s. od.	10s. 6d.

Oak Boxes always kept ready in stock.
Illustrated catalogues post free.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
76, 77, and 78, Oxford Street, West End, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

NOTICE.—Manufacture of Spoons and Forks.—Messrs. ELKINGTON and CO. beg to announce that having succeeded in carrying out several important improvements in the above manufacture, they are now enabled to offer their guaranteed qualities at such prices as, while fully maintaining their high quality, place them within the reach of all classes. Revised Illustrated Price Lists can be had on application.
ADDRESS—ELKINGTON and CO.
LONDON—22, Regent Street, W.
42, Moorgate Street, E.C.
LIVERPOOL—25, Church Street.
MANCHESTER—St. Ann's Square, or to the Manufactory,
NEWHALL STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

	£	s.	d.
The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	5	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

DUPLEX TABLE LAMP, with instantaneous extinguisher.—The Lamp of the Season for petroleum or rock oil, gives an intense, pure, and beautiful light, equal to that of 24 sperm candles, at a cost of about one farthing per hour. Deane and Co. have a large stock on sale in Crystal, China, Ormoulu, and Bronzes. Prices from 17s. 6d. to £6 6s.
Deane and Co.'s Illustrated Priced List for 1877 post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, King William St., London Bridge.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S
STEEL PENS.
Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 2 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

GROSVENOR SCHOOL OF ART, 16, NORTH AUDLEY STREET, W. Miss DIGBY WILLIAMS, Principal. Preparations for Royal Academy and South Kensington Examinations. Separate Day and Evening Classes for Ladies and Gentlemen. Life Model and Antique, &c.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
The purest Oil, and by Almond flavouring rendered palatable and easy of digestion.
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.

British Medical Journal says—Whilst securing the beneficial results traceable to Cod Liver Oil as a valuable tonic and dietetic, we have found no difficulty in inducing our little patients to take it.

Sanitary Record says—We have tried its effect on the most delicate constitutions with marked effect. So well are the odour and taste of the Oil disguised that children will take the preparation with avidity.

Medical Times says—The taste is decidedly masked by the almond flavouring.

Medical Press—Has an agreeable smell and flavour, and we can certify that the result is satisfactory.

Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists,
And Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited),
Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the finest purifiers of the blood. They speedily correct all disorders of the liver and stomach, are invaluable in cases of dysentery, and as a general family medicine have no equal.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.,
A LARGE PURCHASE OF
NEW COLOURED SILKS,
at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., and 4s. 4½d. per yard, also a richer quality at 5s. 3d., usually sold at 7s. 6d. per yard.
250 shades to select from. Patterns free.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES OF
BLACK GROS GRAINS.
This extensive purchase comprises Silks of the best and most reliable makes, and are specially recommended.
Prices 2s. 6½d., 3s. 3½d., and 3s. 9d. per yard.
Also richer goods from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

COLOURED GENOA VELVETS
to match every Silk, short pile, well covered, suitable for Gowns, 6s. 11d. per yard, any length cut.
A special purchase of Black Lyons Velvet, all silk,
at 9s. 11d. per yard. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

COLOURED SILK COSTUMES
of the latest designs and most fashionable description,
in all the new colour Silks, commencing at 6½ guineas.
Patterns of the Silks and Engravings post free.

BLACK SILK COSTUMES,
made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, price with bodice complete, 5½ guineas.
Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN
WINTER COSTUMES,
Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas.
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling,
Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas.
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL AND WEDDING DRESSES.
Now ready several thousand charming Dresses
in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas.
Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.
THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black),
profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train,
1 guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours,
for 28s. 9d., with material for bodice.
Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR WINTER DRESSES,
in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour,
From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

IN 62 NEW SHADES OF COLOUR.
CACHEMIRE DE PARIS.
This elegant material is all wool, beautifully soft, and richer in its colourings than any article previously introduced.
48 inches wide, 2s. 11d. and 3s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool,
This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 3d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

A NEW FABRIC FOR PALETOTS, &c.
POIL DE CHAMEAU (Registered).
This elegant fabric, though very warm, is remarkably light and soft, and can be had in choice shades of Fawn, Drab,
Grey, Light Brown, &c. 54 inches wide, from 5s. 6d. per yd.
Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford St., W.

A VARIETY OF NEW MATERIALS FOR
WARM WINTER PETTICOATS, including a large assortment of Silk Striped Cloth
Skirtings, Reversible Felts, plain colours, New Striped Flannel
Cashmere, &c., from 2s. 11d. to 5s. 6d. per yd. Patterns free.

NOW ON SALE AT HALF-PRICE.
1,000 UNMADE PALETOTS (Black),
Richly embroidered on very fine Cashmere or
Diagonal Cloth, full size and newest shapes, from 29s. 6d. to 42s. each, formerly 3 to 4 guineas.

IN WHITE, BLACK, AND ALL NEW COLOURS.
VELVET-FINISH'D VELVETEENS,
beautifully soft, rich, and very wide.
This charming Fabric can be had in Black,
from 2s. 9d. to 5s. 6d. per yard, and in 35 choice shades
of colour, at 3s. 9d. per yard. Patterns free
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.,
having concluded the purchase of large quantities of
SEAL FUR SKINS
and Squirrel Furs, they are now on sale as quoted below.
Russian Seal Fur Jackets, loose shapes,
24 to 28 inches deep, 6 to 10 guineas.
Ditto fitting shapes, 30 to 36 inches deep, 9 to 20 guineas.
South Sea Seals, loose shapes, 2 to 4 guineas.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN
MANTLES AND PALETOTS,
Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 2 to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL
CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.
The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s.
Patterns and Engravings free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP of
GASK and GASK.
SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK of
Silk Mercery, General Drapery, &c.
ALL NEW THIS SEASON.
Commencing on MONDAY NEXT.
Mr. HENRY GASK being compelled by ill-health
to retire from the business.
Great reductions in price will be made throughout all the departments, and all goods marked in plain figures at the lowest prices,
for ready money only.
Silks, Costumes, Mantles, Dress Fabrics, Linens,
Blankets, Gloves, Hosiery, Lace Goods, Mournings, &c., &c.
Doors will be opened at 10 o'clock.
GASK and GASK,
58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street, and Wells Street.

WOOLLEN CLOTHS. Waterproof Tweeds, Matelasse Cloths, Sealskins, Fur Beavers, and other materials for Ladies' Jackets; also every kind of Woollen Goods for Gentlemen's and Boys' wear.
C. MEEKING and CO., Woollen Warehouse,
111 and 112, Hatton Garden, Holborn Circus, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
GRAND EXHIBITION OF AUTUMN DRESS GOODS.

1,000 New Patterns of the choicest Shades and designs, the productions of various European nations.
7,000 yards of Autumn Serge, at 6¾d. and 10½d.
Autumn Beges, 8¾d. and 11½d. the yard.
Matelasse Serge, 1s. 3½d. (Sage, Olive Green, &c.)
Estamene Serges, 1s. 3½d. and 1s. 6½d.
Homespun Estamene, 1s. 6½d., 27 in. wide.
New Snowflakes, Camel's Hair, and Vienna Cloths.
Shetland Estamene, 27 in. wide, 1s. 4¾d. the yard.
Poil de Chameau, French production, all wool, 30 in. wide, 1s. 9¾d. the yard.
The Royal Blue Naval Serge, 1s. 0½d. (all wool).
The "Inflexible" Serge, 1s. 0½d. and 1s. 4½d.
The "Princess" Serge, 1s. 6½d. and 1s. 11½d. yard.
The New Circassian Cord, 11½d. yd., superb colours.
Autumn Matelassé, 10½d. a yard.
Scarboro' Twill, 1s. 0½d.; Derby and Swiss Matelasse, 1s. 0½d.; New Autumn Rich Skirting, 1s. 11½d. the yard, 40 in. wide; Indian Cashmere, Autumn Shades, 48 in. wide, 2s. 11½d. yard.
These and other Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW SILK PATTERNS are now ready.

The Princess Black Silk, 3s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 4s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 5s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 6s. 9d.
A New Make of Extreme Richness
BLACK SILKS, 1s. 6½d. to 10s. the yard.
The Queen's Black Silk, 7s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 8s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 9s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 10s. 11d.
Superb Goods & Splendid Wear.
A special parcel of Coloured Silks, 2s. 11½d. yard.
Coloured Gros Grain Silks, 3s. 11½d., 4s. 11d., 5s. 11d., and 6s. 11d. the yard.
Floral Silks for Trimmings, 3s. 9½d.
Japanese Figures, 1s. 3½d.
The Velvet and Velveteen Stock is now complete.
A Special Lot Black Velveteens, 1s. 11½d., and Colours, at 2s. 10½d.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.

Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 1s. 3½d.
Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s. 11½d.
Double-width Melton Cloths, 1s. 6½d., 1s. 11½d., and 2s. 11½d.
Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s. 11d. to 6s. 11d.
Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d.
Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard. All Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
GRAND EXHIBITION OF COSTUMES, &c.

as lately shown at the Grand Autumn Exhibition and Costumes Contest at the Alexandra Palace.
"Harrogate"—Bronze Green Cachmere and Velveteen Costumes, £4 4s.
"Ventnor"—Fawn, Homespun, and Brown Braid, Jacket and Hat, £3 18s 6d.
"Silverton"—Brown Cachmere and Velveteen, £3 18s. 6d.
"Glenthorne"—Prune Snowflake and Pink Silk, £2 10s. 6d.
"Bromley"—Bronze Cachmere and Blue Silk, with Cape, £4 4s.
"Clairmont"—Fawn Serge and Brown Velveteen, £2 10s. 6d.
"Christine"—Black Velveteen and Silk Jacket and Hat, £5 5s.
"Lymington"—Fawn Matelasse and Velvet Galloon, Jacket and Hat, £4 10s 6d.
"Zarel"—Brown Velveteen and Cream Brocaded Silk, £4 4s.
"Moscow"—Fawn Camel's Hair Cloth, with Lynx Fur Jacket, Hat and Muff, £6 6s.
"Clyde"—Fawn, Chameau, Cloth and Raccoon Fur, Jacket, Hat and Muff, £5 10s. 6d.
"St. Malo"—Prune Velveteen and Grey Fur, Jacket, Hat, and Muff, £5 18s. 6d.
"Bonnie Fishwife"—Blue Serge and Red Twill, with Cap, £2 18s. 6d.
"Normandy"—Green Serge and White Braid Jacket and Hat, £2 18s. 6d.
"Chiswick"—Deep Mourning Costume. Black Cachmere and Crape, with Bonnet, £4 10s. 6d.
"Chislehurst"—Complimentary Mourning Richly Trimmed Black Silk, £6 6s.
Patterns of Materials, Photographs, and every particular, post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
UNDERCLOTHING and OUTFITTING.

A new Illustrated Price List is now ready, and can be sent free to any address.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street.

HENRY GLAVE'S
Photographs of the new Lace Sets, Collarettes, and Cuffs, in real and imitation Valenciennes, Torchon and Maltese Lace. Sets, 1s. 6d., 1s. 11d., 2s. 11d., 3s. 11d., 6s. 11d., 7s. 11d., 10s. 9d., 15s. 9d., 21s., 25s. 6d. Collarettes, 6¾d., 9¾d., 1s. 0½d., 1s. 11d., 2s. 11d., 3s. 11d., 6s. 11d., 10s. 9d. Cuffs, 6¾d., 9¾d., 1s. 0½d., 1s. 6d., 3s. 11d.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
£20,000 worth.

Faithfully recommended to their Customers by Messrs. JAY. These Silks are unweighted, pure in quality, and may be fully relied on to wear well.

Present price . .	3s. 9d.	Last year's price . .		5s. 9d.
"	4s. 3d.	"	" . .	6s. 6d.
"	4s. 9d.	"	" . .	7s. 3d.
"	5s. 3d.	"	" . .	8s. 3d.
"	5s. 9d.	"	" . .	9s. 6d.
"	6s. 9d.	"	" . .	10s. 3d.

JAY'S,
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
Regent Street, W.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The
most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 30s., 40s., 45s. half-dozen.

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER-
SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk. It will entirely dispense with the ever-shrinking coloured flannel, 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-measure free by post.—FORD and CO., 41 and 44, Poultry, London.

MILLINERY.—See our Autumn Novelties in Bonnets and Hats in all the newest designs and colours. Our Guinea Bonnet and Hat will be found worthy of special attention.
N.B.—G. W. JONES, 101, Oxford Street.

CAPS and HEAD-DRESSES, in choice and extensive variety, from the simple Bow or Coiffure to the Old Ladies' Cap.
N.B.—G. W. JONES, 101, Oxford Street,
Corner of Great Portland Street.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.
BRUSSELS CARPETS.

VELVET CARPETS, &c.

EXHIBITION MEDALS, 1851, 1862: DUBLIN, 1865.
34 and 36, OLD BOND STREET, W.

HEALTHY SKIN AND GOOD COMPLEXION.
PEARS'S TRANSPARENT SOAP,
Is the Best for the
TOILET, NURSERY, & SHAVING.
Recommended in the Journal of Cutaneous Medicine, edited by Mr.
ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., used by
THE ROYAL FAMILY,
and Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER
or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well
as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
PETER ROBINSON, of Regent Street,
has just completed some large purchases
from the Lyons Manufacturers, at a great advantage,
and can supply really Good Black Silks,
at 2s. 6½d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d., 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 10s. 9d.
THE EMPRESS BLACK SILK, at 6s. 6d.
is specially recommended for Good Wear
by the Manufacturer.
Also DEGOVE'S PURE BLACK SILK,
which gives Universal Satisfaction,
at 5s., 7s., and 8s.
For Patterns address
PETER ROBINSON, REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 261,
where the above can only be obtained.
BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS,
exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in LYONS VELVET, at 10s 9d.
BLACK SILK TRIMMING VELVETS,
at 4s. 6d., 5s 6d., 6s. 9d.
at PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262.

A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK.
For 4½ & 5 Gs. . . . . . formerly 6½ & 7 Guineas.
For 7 Guineas . . . . . formerly 9 Guineas.
For 10 Guineas . . . . . formerly 14 Guineas.
Perfectly new styles.
Exquisitely cut and trimmed by French Artists,
Photographs and Patterns of the Silks free.
Address PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialité,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
59s. 6d. and 3½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9 guineas.
36 inches long for 10½ guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
it is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

MR. HERON, 10, Arthur Street, Belfast, writes: "DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS allayed the inflammation of my throat, relieved the cough, and gave me ease at once." Price 1s. 1½d.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S
EMACIATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing. 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, S.W.; or through any Chemist.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR INDIGESTION, WIND, & HEARTBURN, &c.
Also unrivalled as a Tonic, Purifying, Family Aperient Medicine, without Mercury.

DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER
PILLS, prepared by W. LAMBERT, 1a, Vere Street, London, W. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box; post free for 15 or 35 penny stamps, or of all Chemists. See you have the right Pills, "Dr. Scott's," which are wrapped in a square green package.

TAMAR-INDIEN, a laxative, refreshing,
and medicated Fruit Lozenge—the effectual Cure of Constipation, Headache, Bile, Hæmorrhoids, &c. Tamar (unlike pills and the usual purgatives) is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation. 2s. 6d. per box; post free, 2s. 8d. E. GRILLON, Wool Exchange, E.C., and of all Chemists.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.
VICHY.
Property of the French Government.

CELESTINS.—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.
HAUTERIVE.—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.
GRANDE-GRILLE.—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.
HOPITAL.—For Stomach complaints, &c.
VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.
CAUTION.—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.
Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants.
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

PALACE SOAP, 20s. per lb., for State
Apartments.—PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond Street, are the only makers of this exquisite soap. Single cakes, 5s., or six in a carton, 27s. 6d. Piesse and Lubin also make some charming flower-scented soaps, at 10s. per lb., such as opoponax soap, violet soap, frangipanni soap, attar rose soap, and others, in cakes, 2s. 6d. each, suitable for superior use.—Royal Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street.

PIESSE and LUBIN'S SWEET
SCENTS.—Opoponax, Jockey Club, Patchouly, Frangipanni, Kiss-me-Quick, White Rose, and 1,000 others from every flower that breathes a fragrance, 2s. 6d. each, 3 bottles in a case, 7s. The above sweet scents in sachet powder, 1s. 6d. each, can be forwarded by post. Sold by fashionable Druggists and Perfumers in all parts of the world.

PIESSE and LUBIN'S PESTACHIO
NUT SKIN AND COMPLEXION POWDER imparts a natural whiteness and youthful delicacy to the skin attainable by no other means; also represses the unpleasantness of too copious perspiration.—2, New Bond Street, London, W. May be had of all the fashionable perfumers and druggists throughout the earth. In boxes, 2s. 6d., 4s 6d.

AMERICAN CENTENNIAL
PRIZE MEDAL.
FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.
"The Caracas Cocoa of such choice quality."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.

FRY'S EXTRACT OF COCOA.
Of great value to invalids who wish to avoid rich articles of diet.
"Which really consists of Cocoa Nibs deprived of the superfluous oil."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.
TENTH INTERNATIONAL MEDAL
awarded to J. S. FRY and SONS.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.
Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.
Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted.
Four times the strength of Cocoas Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, Starch, &c., and really cheaper.
The Faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestive Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER," and invaluable for Invalids and Children. Keeps in all Climates. Requires no Cooking. A teaspoonful in Breakfast cup costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis.
H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam Street, London, W.C.

FOR BLANC-MANGE, PUDDINGS, CUSTARDS,

CHILDREN AND INVALIDS' DIET,

AND ALL THE USES OF ARROWROOT,

BROWN and POLSON'S
CORN FLOUR

HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION,

AND IS DISTINGUISHED FOR

UNIFORMLY SUPERIOR QUALITY.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.
JAMES EPPS AND CO.,
HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN
COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. 6d. per bushel; households for bread, 10s.; wheat meal for brown bread, 9s. 4d; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, 5s. 6d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat and maize, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; barley meal, 5s. 6d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; Indian corn, 5s. 6d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d.; ground pollard, 1s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for Invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG.

FISH AND ICE.—EDWIN GILSON,
Fishmonger by Appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, 10, Haymarket, S.W., supplies country families with the best Fish the market produces at lowest possible prices. A choice dish of fish forwarded carriage free within fifty miles of London for Half-a-crown.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.—
The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—
Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY
"THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY."
UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."
Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS.
5, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

HEDGES and Butler, 155, Regent Street,
London, and 30 and 74, King's Road, Brighton, invite attention to their
CLARET, at 14s., 18s., 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., to 84s.
SHERRY, at 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., to 60s.
CHAMPAGNE, at 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., 66s., to 78s.
OLD PORT, at 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., to 96s.
Fine old Pale Brandy, 48s., 60s., 72s., 84s.

WILLS' "BEST BIRD'S-EYE"
CIGARETTES
Sold everywhere in Sixpenny Packets (containing Ten), protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

WILLS' "THREE CASTLES."
"There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—Vide "The Virginians." Sold only in Packets, protected by the Name and Trade Mark of
W. D. and H. O. WILLS.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION, with soft and lustrous skin, also teeth of pearl-like whiteness, and fragrant breath, assured by using Dr. DURAND'S HEALTH SOAP and DENTIFRICE. 6d. per tablet, 5s. per box of 12.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, London, S.W., or of any Chemist.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT
BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE
OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO.
Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

HAIR DESTROYER.—248, High Hol-
born, London.—ALEX. ROSS'S DEPILATORY removes superfluous hair from face and arms without injury. 3s. 6d. Sent post free, carefully packed, for 54 stamps by Alex. Ross.

THE NOSE MACHINE applied to the nose for an hour daily so directs the soft cartilage of the nose that an ill-formed one is quickly shaped, 10s. 6d. Sent for stamps.—ALEX. ROSS, 248, High Holborn, London.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS
POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 80, Southwark St., London.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-
STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 65, Southwark Street, London.

CONSUMPTION.
WHY HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
ENTIRELY SUPERSEDES the use of plain COD LIVER OIL.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) is equal to ten times the quantity of Cod Liver Oil. The nauseous taste of Cod Liver Oil is removed by Hydration. Easier to administer than Cod Liver Oil. Contains ready-digested Cod Liver Oil. Can be taken by the most delicate stomach. Is immediately assimilated. Produces rapid increase in flesh and weight. HYDROLEINE has been described as partially-digested oil, which will nourish and produce increase in weight in those cases where oils or fats not so treated are difficult or impossible to digest. All tendency to emaciation and loss of weight is arrested by the regular use of HYDROLEINE, which may be discontinued when the usual average weight has been permanently regained. Hydrated Oil is superior to any Emulsion or Pancreatised Oil ever known.

THE CHEMICAL PRINCIPLES upon which Hydrated Oil is prepared were first described in a Treatise on the "ASSIMILATION AND DIGESTION OF FATS IN THE HUMAN BODY," by H. C. BARTLETT, Ph.D., F.C.S. (Published by Messrs. J. and A. Churchill, New Burlington Street, London)—"Fat in the Human Body." Page 41. "Nothing appears to restore the healthy functions of the liver and pancreas in these cases except the frequent ingestion of oil or liquid fat, so treated artificially that it is already partially transformed by fermentation and the reaction of bile. Seized on with avidity by the absorbents, it is insensibly assimilated by the digestive organs, until they gradually become strengthened, not only to provide their own nourishment, but to transform a sufficient quantity of fat to supply the inevitable waste throughout the body." And in "NOTES ON CONSUMPTION AND WASTING DISEASES SUCCESSFULLY TREATED BY HYDRATED OIL, WITH CASES SHOWING THE IMMEDIATE INCREASE IN WEIGHT PRODUCED BY IT." G. OVEREND DREWRY, M.D., Physician to the National Free Dispensary for Consumption and Wasting Diseases, Gower Street, W., Author of "Common Sense Management of the Stomach," &c. (Published by Diprose, Bateman, and Co., Sheffield Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields), referring to Cases treated at the National Free Dispensary, says that "Hydrated Oil produces an effect such as neither Cod Liver Oil nor any preparation of it with which I am acquainted even faintly approaches."—Page 15. And on page 21, "Patients are unanimous in the statement that the appetite is much increased by taking Hydrated Oil, and that so far from possessing the unpleasant taste of ordinary Cod Liver Oil, the taste of Hydrated Oil is agreeable rather than the reverse, and is described by some as resembling Devonshire cream. These, I submit, are very important points, in cases usually attended by great irritability of stomach." "The general improvement in strength shown within a fortnight was in many instances surprising even to myself, who had seen already in private practice many startling results from its use. My experience, however, shows that in cases where Cod Liver Oil or an emulsion of it has been depended upon, increase of weight is rarely obtained."—Page 26.

"THERE are many in these days of feverish work and continued strain who insensibly are drifting towards degeneration of nerve tissue, without the evidence of any special disease, excepting nervous irritability and sleeplessness. In these cases I have found Hydrated Oil act like a charm, tranquillising and restoring tone to the nervous system with startling rapidity (Page 44). It is an exceedingly difficult preparation to make: but from many hundred samples examined by Dr. Bartlett and myself, I am in a position to say that in the Hydrated Oil manufactured by Messrs. J. M. RICHARDS and CO., of Great Russell Street, London, all the chemical changes necessary to transform the oil from its original state to one of partial solubility in water are perfectly produced. The unstable nature of such a combination is one of its most valuable characteristics, and it frequently happens that changes of temperature and exposure to light cause a certain small separation of watery extractives from the essential hydration, which is, however, invariably permanent to the requisite extent. This is of no consequence, sufficient combination being again produced instantaneously by shaking the bottle" (Page 35).

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) is not a SECRET PREPARATION. Is not a PATENT MEDICINE. The Formula is on every Bottle.

HYDROLEINE is economical in use and certain in result. The agreeable character of HYDRATED OIL is conclusively shown by the fact that Delicate Women and Young Children take it with avidity; and in the case of Infants who do not thrive upon the food given, the nourished and well-conditioned appearance of the child after this treatment is most marked. To Brain Workers of all classes, HYDRATED OIL is invaluable, supplying as it does THE TRUE NERVE FOOD. The ordinary so-called emulsions of Cod Liver Oil and other fats, whether pancreatised or not, merely remain in the form of a coarse mechanical mixture for a short time after agitation. The digestion of oil, having in no sense been artificially produced, still devolves upon those functional powers the deficiency of which is the most prominent symptom in these cases.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). From its valuable tonic effect on the nervous system, in addition to its special stimulating action on the organs concerned in the production of fat in the body, it also causes marked increase in weight in persons of naturally thin habit who do not present any evidences of disease. The permanence and perfection of the emulsion and the extreme solubility of the HYDRATED OIL is shown by its retaining its cream-like condition as long as the purest Cod Liver Oil will retain its sweetness. Unlike the preparations mentioned, or simple Cod Liver Oil, it produces no unpleasant eructation or sense of nausea, and should be taken in such very much smaller doses, according to the directions, as will ensure its complete assimilation; this at the same time renders its use economical in the highest degree.

ANALYTICAL REPORT.
HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).
Laboratory, 39, Duke Street, Grosvenor Sq., W.,
July 31, 1877.

Messrs. J. M. Richards and Co.

Gentlemen,—In compliance with your instructions I have to report that the samples of Hydrated Oil (Hydroleine) taken by me from bulk before bottling during the last nine months have in every instance been composed in accordance with the formula given on the labels. The necessary conditions of transformation of the oil have always been attained in the manufacture, and by means of the artificial digestion so produced this preparation is far more easy of assimilation than ordinary Cod Liver Oil, or any emulsion of fat or oil which I have analysed.—I am, faithfully yours,

H. C. BARTLETT, Ph.D., F.C.S.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) is immediately assimilated. Unlike ordinary Cod Liver Oil, it does not Purge, does not produce Sickness, or what is so well known as biliousness, nor does it pass through the body unchanged, as it is already partially digested, and suitable for immediate absorption and assimilation. Hence its economical value, none being wasted.

WEAKLY INFANTS thrive on it.
Appetite is improved, digestion assisted, and strength increased by HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). A true Nerve Tonic, a REAL DIGESTIVE, and POWERFUL NUTRITIVE.

ALL Persons taking HYDROLEINE are particularly urged to keep an ACCOUNT FROM WEEK TO WEEK of THEIR WEIGHT, that the gain and improvement may be shown.

MESSRS. J. M. RICHARDS and CO.,
having devoted special attention to perfecting a process by means of which uniformity in the production of HYDRATED OIL is secured, desire to direct the attention of the medical profession and the public to this preparation, to distinguish which the name of HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been registered under the Trade Marks Act by them.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil), in Half-pound Bottles, price 4s. 6d.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS.

MANUFACTURED by

J. M. RICHARDS and CO.—Office and Warehouse, Great Russell Street Buildings, Great Russell Street (corner of Charlotte Street, Bloomsbury), London.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER of CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE.
Containing the following Popular Dance Music:—

TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS	Chas. D'Albert.
CONSTANTINOPLE QUADRILLE	Chas. D'Albert.
DIE FLEDERMAUS WALTZ	Johann Strauss.
LES LOINTAINS WALTZ	Emile Waldteufel.
MAIDEN'S DREAM WALTZ	Edward Hoffman.
THE SCHOMBERG GALOP	Chas. D'Albert.
FLORETTA POLKA	Chas. D'Albert.
PIZZICATO POLKA	J. & J. Strauss.
FORGET-ME-NOT GALOP	A. Hecker.

And a New Quadrille,
MOLLIE DARLING. By Chas. D'Albert.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 2d.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE BALKANS. Descriptive Piece for the Pianoforte, by Jules de Sivrai, introducing Turkish and Russian airs; illustrated, 2s. net.
SCHIPKA PASS. Grand March for the Pianoforte, by Wm. Smallwood; illustrated, 1s. 6d. net.
MARCH OF THE PASHAS. For the Pianoforte, by J. Pridham; illustrated, 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG.
THE DISTANT SHORE. New Song by Arthur Sullivan. Sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd during his Promenade Tour in October. Price (in E flat, F and G) 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE ROWAN TREE. New Song by M. W. Balfe. Will be sung by Madame Antoinette Sterling during her Tour in the Provinces. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

MAIDEN MINE. By W. Sterndale Bennett. Mr. W. Shakespeare will sing the above favourite song at all Concerts during his provincial tour. Price 2s net.—CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THOU'RT PASSING HENCE. Mr. Santley will sing Arthur Sullivan's new song at the first Saturday Popular Concert, on November 17th, at St. James's Hall. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE FANFARE POLKA. By Charles D'Albert. Illustrated. Price 1s. 6d. net. Orchestra, 3s.; Septett, 2s.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	NET
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Work	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	1 6
RINK GALOP	2 0

All the above for Orchestra, 3s; Septet, 2s. each.
N.B. A complete list of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

L'ORGANISTE PRATIQUE. 240 Easy Pieces for Organ or Harmonium. By J. Leybach. In 2 vols., price 6s. each net, or in eight parts, each 2s. net. The above will supply a want long felt by amateur performers on the organ or harmonium, as all the pieces are very pretty without being difficult.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRE.

PIANOFORTES of every description by all the most celebrated makers from Two Guineas a Quarter.

HARMONIUMS, by Alexandre, from One Pound Five Shillings per quarter.

SECOND-HAND PIANOFORTES at immense reductions for Cash, or on the Three Years' System.—50, New Bond Street.

LOUIS DIEHL'S SONGS.—DEAR ENGLAND, C to F.—Signor Foli always receives an ovation with this song. "True Hearts," D to F; "Mother, the Tots and Me," E to F. Each post free for 18 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

LATEST SONGS, issued by ROBERT COCKS and CO., all post free at half-price.

I Awake and Dream. Song. J. Blumenthal. 3s.	So Far Away. J. L. Roeckel. 3s.
Summer Rain. Vocal Duet. F. Abt. 4s.	The Moss Rose and the Laurel. H. P. Danks. 3s.
The Village Queen. Song. Ch. Schreiber. 3s.	Unforgotten Days. J. L. Roeckel. 3s.
The City Bells. Vocal Duet. F. Abt. 4s.	Droop Not, Young Lover. Handel. 3s.
The Cuckoo's Concert. Song. H. P. Danks. 3s.	Awake. Stephen Adams 3s.
Spring Morning. Song. F. Abt. 3s.	Steering. F. H. Cowen. 4s.
Biddy Malone. Irish Ballad. W. C. Russell. 3s.	"Aye or No." F. H. Cowen. 4s.
Gold and Gray. O. Barri. 3s.	Don't Forget Me. C. Pinsuti. 3s.
	The Lifeboat. H. F. Limpus. 3s.

London: 6, New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

MIDLOTHIAN. Fantasia for the Pianoforte on the Scotch Air, "Donald." By W. S. Rockstro. Post free for 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

TWEEDSIDE. Fantasia for the Piano on an ancient Scotch melody attributed to David Rizzio. By W. S. Rockstro. Post free for 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC PRIMERS. Edited by Dr. Stainer.

Second Edition, price Two Shillings.
THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By Ernst Pauer (Principal Professor of the Pianoforte at the National Training School for Music). No. 1 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

Now Ready.
THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. Stainer. No. 3 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

In the Press.
THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. Cummings. No. 2 of Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.

Second Edition, price Two Shillings.
CATHEDRAL PSALTER CHANTS. Edited by Rev. S. Flood Jones, M.A., James Turle, Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A., Dr. J. Stainer, and Joseph Barnby.

MENDELSSOHN.—LIEDER OHNE WORTE (Songs without Words). The best and ONLY COMPLETE EDITION, containing the SEVENTH and EIGHTH BOOKS. Handsomely bound, gilt edges, folio, 12s.; octavo, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

RUBINSTEIN'S EIGHTEEN TWO-PART SONGS, with German and English words. The English Version by Madame Natalia Macfarren. Octavo, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM, containing Thirty Songs, with English and German words, by Robert Schumann. Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM for YOUNG PIANISTS, containing Fifty-six Short Pieces, by Robert Schumann (Op. 68 and Op. 15). Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.

GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM, containing Forty Songs, with the original German words, and an English version by John Oxenford. Paper covers, 2s. 6d. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.
LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.,
1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d. each volume, paper; 4s. cloth, gilt edges.
THE ROYAL SONG BOOKS.
RUBINSTEIN'S 50 SONGS.
RUBINSTEIN'S 18 VOCAL DUETS.
BEETHOVEN'S 76 SONGS.
MENDELSSOHN'S 60 SONGS.
SCHUMANN'S 75 SONGS.
THE SONGS OF GERMANY (100 Volkslieder).
The above have all German and English words.
THE SONGS OF ENGLAND (100 songs).
THE SONGS OF SCOTLAND (150 songs).
THE SONGS OF IRELAND (108 Songs).
THE SONGS OF WALES (62 songs).
The above form a complete collection of National Songs.
SACRED SONGS, ANCIENT AND MODERN (100 Songs).
HUMOROUS SONGS (72 New and Old Songs).
CHOICE DUETS FOR LADIES' VOICES (24 duets).
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEYS' SHILLING INSTRUC-TORS.
DR. CALLCOTT'S GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.
W. T. BEST'S FIRST ORGAN BOOK.
J. W. ELLIOTT'S NEW HARMONIUM TUTOR.
HENNINGS' FIRST BOOK FOR THE VIOLIN.
CASE'S VIOLIN TUTOR.
BRINLEY RICHARDS' FIRST LESSONS FOR THE PIANO.
GEORGE MOUNT'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
DR. SPARK'S HANDY-BOOK OF CHORAL SINGING.
BALFE'S BALLAD TUTOR.
VACCAJ'S SINGING METHOD, without Solfeggi.
HATTON'S SINGING TUTOR FOR LADIES' VOICES.
HATTON'S SINGING TUTOR FOR MEN'S VOICES.
KAPPEY'S CLARIONET TUTOR.
EDWARD HOWELL'S FIRST BOOK for the VIOLONCELLO.
R. S. PRATTEN'S FLUTE TUTOR.
STANTON JONES' CORNET TUTOR.
CASE'S ENGLISH CONCERTINA TUTOR.

Price 1s. each Book.
BOOSEYS' CABINET CLASSICS.
203. RUBINSTEIN'S ALBUM (11 best pieces). 1s.
206. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX STUDIES, 1s.
207. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX PRELUDES, 1s.
204. BRAHMS' ALBUM (including 16 waltzes). 1s.
205. RAFF'S ALBUM (6 best pieces), 1s.
80. HELLER'S ALBUM (12 pieces). 1s.
161. HELLER'S PETIT ALBUM (10 pieces). 1s.
85. HELLER'S PROMENADES D'UN SOLITAIRE. 1s.
140. HELLER'S 24 STUDIES. 1s.
100. SCHUMANN'S KINDERSCENEN, &c. 1s.
113. SCHUMANN'S 1st ALBUM FOR YOUTH. 1s.
159. SCHUMANN'S 2nd ALBUM FOR YOUTH. 1s.
160. SCHUMANN'S 3rd ALBUM FOR YOUTH. 1s.
117. CHOPIN'S WALTZES, complete. 1s.
143. CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS, complete. 1s.
171. CHOPIN'S NOCTURNES, complete. 1s.
208. CHOPIN'S 25 PRELUDES.
190. FIELD'S TEN NOCTURNES (all the best). 1s.
33-35. MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS (Six books).
214. BEETHOVEN'S WALTZ ALBUM (45 waltzes).

BOOSEYS' SHILLING BALLAD BOOKS, in the MUSICAL CABINET.

Santley's 10 New Songs.	A. S. Gatty's 12 Ballads.
Santley & Foli's 22 New Songs.	Claribel's 12 Ballads.
Arthur Sullivan's 10 Songs.	Virginia Gabriel's 10 Songs.
Hatton's 10 New Songs.	Dolores' 12 Songs.
Longfellow & Balfe's 10 Songs.	Gounod's 10 Songs.

BOOSEYS' SHILLING OPERAS for PIANOFORTE SOLO.

Ballo in Maschera.	Lohengrin (2s.).
Barbière.	Lucia.
Crown Diamonds.	Lucrezia Borgia.
Dame Blanche.	Madame Angot.
Dinorah (2s.).	Martha.
Domino Noir.	Masaniello.
Don Juan.	Norma.
Don Pasquale.	Nozze di Figaro.
Ernani.	Oberon.
Favorita.	Rigoletto.
Fidelio.	Robert le Diable.
Figlia del Reggimento.	Semiramide.
Flauto Magico.	Sonnambula.
Flying Dutchman (2s.).	Tannhäuser (2s.).
Fra Diavolo.	Traviata.
Freischütz.	Trovatore.
Grand Duchess.	William Tell.
Huguenots (2s.)	Zampa.

BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEYS' SHILLING ORATORIOS and MASSES.

Beethoven's Mount of Olives. 1s.	Haydn's Creation (8vo.). 1s.
Bach's Passion (S. Matthew). 1s. 6d.	Haydn's Creation (4to.). 1s.
Bach's Passion (Chorales). 6d.	Haydn's Imperial Mass. 1s.
Handel's Messiah (8vo.). 1s.	Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night. 1s.
Handel's Messiah (4to.). 1s.	Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise. 1s.
Handel's Acis and Galatea. 1s.	Mozart Twelfth Mass. 1s.
Handel's Dettingen Te Deum. 1s.	Mozart's Requiem Mass. 1s.
Handel's Israel in Egypt. 1s.	Rossini's Stabat Mater. 1s.
Handel's Judas Maccabæus. 1s.	Beethoven's Mass in C. 1s.
	Gounod's Messe Solennelle. 1s.

BOOSEYS' SHILLING ORGAN BOOKS.
BACH'S 100 CHORALES.
HENRY SMART'S 50 PRELUDES AND INTERLUDES.
JOHNSON'S CONCLUDING VOLUNTARIES.
BATISTE'S 67 PRELUDES, INTERLUDES, &c.
HATTON'S SMALL ORGAN BOOK.
HILES' SHORT VOLUNTARIES (WITHOUT PEDALS).
WELY'S OFFERTORIES.
ANDRE AND HESSE'S VOLUNTARIES.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

Price 2s. each net.
SANTLEY'S POPULAR SONGS.

Polly.	The Vagabond.
Fair Is My Love.	The Yeoman's Wedding.

Also Santley's New Song Book, in the Musical Cabinet (170), containing 10 songs, published in no other work. Price 1s.
Nava's Baritone Method. Edited by Santley. Price 10s. 6d.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

NANCY LEE WALTZ. On the Celebrated Song. The Waltz of the Season. Price 2s. net.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRU-MENTS FOR AMATEURS.
THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.
The above instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO.
No. 1 CONTAINS:

Reise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.
Six Waltzes by Joseph Gung'l.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Grafenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancée Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps.
N.B.—Violin and Concert Accompaniments to each number 6d. each.
A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."
LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE. OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.
The undermentioned arrangements are in the press:
QUADRILLES by Arban. Price 4s.
SUITE DE VALSES by O. Metra. Price 4s.
BRILLIANT FANTASIA by E. Moniot. Price 3s.
COMPLETE OPERA PIANO SOLO. Price 2s. 6d. net.
SELECTIONS OF AIRS IN TWO BOOKS by Cramer. 3s. each.
N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.
London: JOSEPH WILLIAMS, 24, Berners Street, W., and 123, Cheapside.

SIR MICHAEL COSTA'S NAAMAN.
Vocal Score, complete, Octavo Edition. 4s. net.
Do. do. bound in cloth. 6s. net.
All the numbers of "Naaman" can also be had separately, including the celebrated Aria, "I Dreamt I was in Heaven," 3s.; and the Triumphal March, "Naaman," as Piano Solo, 3s. Piano Duet, 3s.; and also as Organ Solo, with Pedal, 3s.

SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT'S WORKS for the PIANOFORTE, in two vols. Cheap Edition now ready, including the celebrated Toccato, Scherzo, Op. 13; Capriccio, Op. 27; Three Sketches, &c. Price 6s. net each vol.; or, bound, cloth, 8s. net.

FRANZ ABT'S NEWEST SONGS.
ONE LITTLE WORD. 3s.
"Destined to be one of the reigning favourites. This gifted composer has written nothing more beautiful since 'When the Swallows.'"—Empire.
'TIS I, MY LOVE. 3s.
"The music is of Abt's best, the melody is full of variety and charm."—Illustrated News.
New Vocal Duets by same Composer:—
THE FAIRY DELL. 3s. EVENTIDE. 3s.
FAIR JEANETTE. 3s.

AS SUNG BY SIGNOR GIANINI AT PROMENADE CONCERTS, COVENT GARDEN.
DAWN SONG (L'AURORA).
Florian Pascal.
Compass E to F Sharp. Key of D.
English and Italian words. Post free 18 stamps.

MAIDEN'S FLOWER SONG.
Composed by Ciro Pinsuti.
"A boon to sopranos."
Compass D to E. Key of G. Post free 18 stamps.

NEW NATIONAL SONG.
WE ROAM AND RULE THE SEA.
Words by Dr. W. C. Bennett. Music by J. B. Waldeck.
"A truly patriotic song."
Compass A to E (in G).
Post free, 18 stamps.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach.
ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS.
"A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play."
Compass D to F (in C).
Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.
LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A). Compass E to G flat.
THE SIRENS (in F). Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S NEW PIECES.
PRES DU LAC (Meditation), artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
UN BIJOU PERDU, artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
BERCEUSE. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LES VIEUX TEMPS. Gavotte. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LA PRINCESSE. Gavotte moderne. 1s. 6d. net.
TRANSCRIPTIO BRILLANTE (Braham). As played by Madame Arabella Goddard). 2s. 6d. net.

A BOON TO YOUNG PIANISTS.
A. GRENVILLE'S LA PRINCESSE. Price 1s. 3d. net.
A. GRENVILLE'S AIR DE BALLET. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S BELLONA POLKA MAZURKA. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S CHASSE GALOP. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S LUCY VALSE. Price 1s. 3d. net.
PETITE COQUETTE POLKA. Price 1s. 3d. net.

NEW PIANO DUETS.
FOUR HANDS.

Pascal's Gavotte, Louis XIV.	Rummel's Preciosa (Weber).
Pascal's Marche Au Tournoi.	Rummel's La Sirène (Auber).
Hill's March	Rummel's Der Freischutz (Weber).
Nollet's La Perle du Rivage.	Rummel's Pré Aux Clercs (Herold).
Nollet's L'Heure de Couvre-feu.	Rummel's Othello (Rossini).
L'Gregh, Les Bergers Watteau.	Rummel's Figaro (Mozart).

POPULAR COMIC SONGS.

The Agreeable Young Man	Harry Clifton.
Don't Be After Ten	Do.
Artful Joe	Geo. Leybourne.
Captain De Wellington Boots	Do.
The Fairy Queen	Do.
Father Says I May	Do.
Ephriam Fox	Henry Clark.
Glycerina	Walter Howard.
It's Very Aggravating	G. Hunt.
Keep It a Secret	G. W. Moore.
Oh Nicodemus	Fred Coyne.
Paddy's Dream	G. Ware.

All the above are illustrated; may be sung anywhere by anybody, and sent post free, 18 stamps each.

POPULAR MOTTO SONGS.

Broken Down	Harry Clifton.
Pulling Hard Against the Stream	Do.
Seventy-two and as Hard as Steel	Do.
Shabby Genteel	Do.
Wait for the Turn of the Tide	Do.
Pull Slow and Steady	Harry Lynn.
Out in the Green Field	Walter Field.
Shun the Thing That's Wrong, Friend.

All the above are specially recommended, being full of point and entirely free from all vulgarity. Post free, 18 stamps each.

HARRY HUNTER'S MOTTO SONGS.

Cheerily Ever.	Nulli Secundus.
Keep a Good Heart.	Take Things as They Are.
There's Danger in Delay.	Jolly Good Humour.

Post free, 18 stamps each.

ARDITI'S L'INGÉNUE. Morceau a la Gavotte. 3s. Performed at the Promenade Concerts with enormous success.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.
Berceuse. 3s. Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
La Princesse. 3s. (Gavotte). Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
Performed with great success at the Promenade Concerts.
Pres le Lac, sixième Meditation. 3s.
Les Vieux Temps (Gavotte). 3s.
Pavane Royale de Louis XIV. 3s.
Air de Ballet. New Simplified Edition by Arthur Grenville. 3s.
Thematic lists of this favourite composer's sent free on application.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—AUTREFOIS (Souvenir de Marguerite de Valois). This charming little morceaux has already run through several editions, and seems likely to rival the ever popular "Danse Favorite" of the same composer. Post free, 18 stamps.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—UN BIJOU PERDU.—"M. Pascal is to be congratulated upon having rescued from oblivion this really exquisite little gem, the melody of which is so captivating that we venture to predict for it great popularity." As piano solo, now ready, 18 stamps.

CATALOGUES GRATIS AND POST FREE.
Shipping Orders on most favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

ROYAL WORCESTER CHINA, from the celebrated ROYAL PORCELAIN WORKS, can be obtained from OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, who are also SOLE VENDORS of the CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICES (ewer, basin, &c., complete—9 pieces), from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive price lists of the same can be had post free on application.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZ-MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a home throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PRE-MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

DINING-ROOM SUITES.—OETZ-MANN and CO.—Handsome Mohogany Dining-Room Suite, consisting of a Couch, Six Chairs, and Two Easy Chairs, well upholstered in best leather, price 20 guineas; Superior ditto in Oak or Spanish Mahogany, with handsome Lounge, Six Stuffed Back Chairs, and Two Easy Chairs, upholstered in best leather, and finished in a superior manner, price 28 guineas; Handsome Early English and Mediæval Dining-room Suites, in Oak, consisting of a large Divan Lounge, Six Chairs, and Two Noble Easy Chairs, upholstered in best leather and finished in the best possible manner, price 35 gs.

THE SANDRINGHAM EASY CHAIR, full size, upholstered very soft and comfortable, suitable for any room, price 25s.; lady's ditto, smaller size, 21s. Also the Sandringham Couch, upholstered very soft and comfortable, price 2 guineas. Every one about to furnish should see these marvels of excellence and economy. Packed free and despatched same day on receipt of order per post.

THE "NONPAREIL" Bedroom Suite, complete, 6½ guineas, superior to any hitherto produced at the price, is enamelled imitation of Amboyna, Satinwood, or any other handsome Woods—also enamelled in Drab or White ground, decorated with fine lines—any colour. Ditto, but having a larger Wardrobe with Silvered Plate Glass in door, and a marble top to washstand complete, 9 guineas.

ARTISTIC CANE WINDOW BLINDS and SCREENS.—These fashionable Blinds can now be had from stock or made to order in any size or design; also Cane and Wicker Chairs, Ladies' Needlework Mounts, Flower Stands, &c., in colours or black and gold. Prices considerably below those usually charged for these goods. Illustrated price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPETS.	FLOORCLOTH.
CARPETS.	FLOORCLOTH.
CARPETS.	FLOORCLOTH.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at a little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPET DEPARTMENT.—A quan-tity of ready-made carpets will be cleared out a bargain. Quotations forwarded per post upon receiving size and description required. Large-size Hearthrugs, 4s. 9d. each; super ditto, 8s. 11d.; Axminster ditto, 12s. 9d.; best Axminster ditto, 15s. 6d.—usual price, 21s.; stout Floor Cloth at 9d. per yard; Patent Linoleum Floor Cloth and Stair Cloth, from 2s. 9d. per yard; Hemp Dutch Carpet, yard wide, 8d. per yard; large Kitchen Hearth Rug, 3s. 9d.; Sheepskin Hearthrugs, from 15s. 9d. upwards; ditto mats, from 2s.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CURTAIN DEPARTMENT.—Hand-some Damask and Rep Curtains, from 25s. per pair, the largest, cheapest, and best assortment in London; Cretonne ditto, from 15s. per pair; Madeid stripe ditto, all wool, 15s. per pair; Muslin and Lace Curtains, elegant designs, 3 yards long by 40 and 52 inches wide, 4s. 11d. per pair, worth 7s. 6d.; very handsome ditto, 4 yards long by 52 to 64 inches wide, 10s. 6d., worth 16s. 9d.; magnificent Guipure Lace Curtains, 4 yards long by 60 inches wide, 14s. 9d. per pair.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY DE-PARTMENT.—Strong bronzed Fenders, from 1s. 6d. each; super ditto, 3s. 9d.; handsome drawing-room fenders, steel top, 8s. 9d.; ditto, with polished steel mouldings, new design, from 12s. 9d. to 5 guineas; fire-irons, from 1s. 9d. per set; handsome ditto, 4s. 9d.; burnished steel ditto, from 7s. 6d. to 2 guineas per set; Japanned Oval Tea Trays, from 3s. 11d. per set of three—16, 24, and 30 inches; handsome ditto, chaste pattern, gilt and enamelled, 7s. 6d. per set; elegant ditto, from 12s. 6d. to 5 guineas per set.

CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICE.— OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGN, a beautiful Grecian shape, meets the great desideratum of art manufactures—viz., the shape best adapted for purposes of use required, combined with the most artistic design and decoration. Prices from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive Price List post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

WEDDING PRESENTS, USEFUL and ARTISTIC.—Intending Purchasers should inspect OETZMANN and CO.'S vast Display of ELEGANT VASES, Lustres, Figures, Clocks, Bronzes, Pictures, Cut-Glass Decanters, Wines, Tumblers, &c.; Electro Silver Plate and Table Cutlery, best quality, at lowest possible prices. A Descriptive Catalogue post-free. Country orders taken from the Catalogue receive prompt and careful attention.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE,
THE BEST FURNISHING GUIDE
EXTANT,
POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by Edward Joseph Mansfield, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—October 27, 1877.

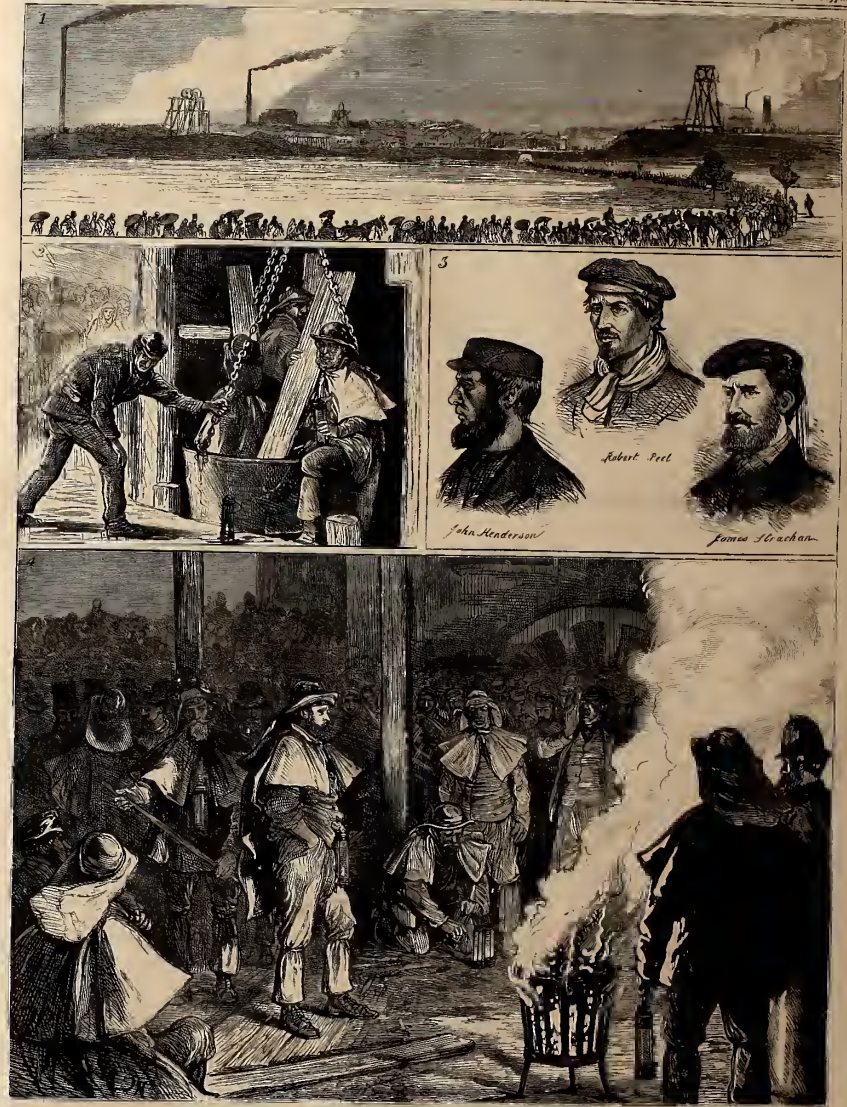
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 414
Regd. at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



1
2
3
4
Robert Peel
John Henderson
James Strachan

1. General View of the District, looking South.—2. "Shankers" descending in the "Kettle" to clear the "Shank."—3. Some of the First Volunteer Explorers.—4. Volunteer "Shankers" waiting their Turn to descend, October 23, 12.30 P.M.

THE COLLIERY EXPLOSION AT HIGH BLANTYRE

Topics of the Week

Marshal MacMahon's Dilemma.——During the present week the opinion has gained ground in France that Marshal MacMahon will so far yield to the popular will as to accept a Ministry from the Left. If he will neither resign nor attempt a coup d'état, and if the Senate will not consent to a fresh dissolution, there is absolutely no other course open to him. Should he submit to the inevitable, his humiliation will be greater than any which has been forced upon a public man in our time. For in the struggle which preceded the elections he exhausted every means in his power to convince France that he would never carry on the government by means of the Radicals; and by the Radicals he showed that he meant the most moderate as well as the most extreme Republicans. To act as if he had never taken up this position would be to convict himself of incredible rashness, weakness, and folly. We suspect that his submission would only be temporary. There seems to be no doubt that he is wholly subject to priestly influences. These induced him to dismiss M. Jules Simon, and it is all but certain that they would sooner or later induce him to dismiss M. Grévy. He is evidently, although sincere, a man of the narrowest type of intellect; and nothing would be easier than to convince him that France was going to ruin, and that it was his clear duty to save her. There would then be a repetition of the violent conflict in which he and his friends have played so undignified a part. On the whole, the best solution both for France and for himself would be his resignation. That would afford the best possible proof that he has the sense of honour and self-respect which are expected in a Marshal of France. M. Thiers resigned when he saw that he was no longer in harmony with the Assembly. It is the nation itself which has pronounced against Marshal MacMahon; and it has done so in spite of all sorts of pressure brought to bear upon it from the highest quarters. The reasons for Marshal MacMahon's resignation are, therefore, far more urgent than those which determined the action of M. Thiers. Only very sanguine politicians, however, hope that the problem will be thus directly and simply solved. The Marshal has convinced himself that he has a "mission," and it is doubtful whether he even yet realises how completely he has been rejected by France. Should he persist in the policy he has hitherto pursued, he will be driven steadily in the direction of a coup d'état; and all the most trustworthy evidence goes to prove that any attempt of that kind would result in his own ruin.

The Next Pope.——The individual character of the personage who is destined—probably at no very distant period—to succeed Pope Pius the Ninth is perhaps a matter of less importance than some people imagine. All the possible aspirants to the Papacy form a very limited body, most of them are of an age when people are more likely to be too cautious than too rash, while the method of the election renders it likely that, other things being equal, a "safe" commonplace man will get more votes than a man of energy and originality. Such being the case, it is not probable that the attitude towards the outer world of the Roman Catholic Church—itself the most unchanging of corporations—will undergo any noteworthy alteration because one Cardinal has taken the place of another in St. Peter's Chair. The personal power of the Pope, speaking generically, is, like that of most other official chiefs, much smaller than appears at first sight; he is, after all, little more than the spokesman and declarant of the feelings and wishes of the multitude, lay and clerical, who own his allegiance, and his public acts and words are usually the faithful echo of their demands. The present Pope, it is true, exercises a considerable personal influence, but this will not easily be accorded to his successors, unless they can match his great age and the vicissitudes of his career. Then comes the interesting and important question, Does the Roman Catholic body throughout the world on the whole approve of that line of conduct—commonly known as Ultramontanism—which at present finds favour at the Vatican, or would it prefer a return to the colourless and unaggressive policy which characterised the Popes of two or three generations ago? If it would prefer the latter, the accession of a new Pope would undoubtedly form a favourable opportunity for effecting a change, but it must be confessed that few symptoms are apparent of a change in this direction being desired either by clergy or laity. Notwithstanding that Spain and Italy, the ancient strongholds of Romanism, have become Voltairian and indifferent, France and Belgium are blazing with a newly-kindled religious fervour; while Irish immigration and Ritualistic tendencies have furnished a host of zealous recruits for the Pope in countries which were not long ago almost entirely Protestant, namely in Great Britain and the United States. And any influence which may be exerted at the time of the Pope's demise by Governments avowedly hostile to the Papacy, such as those of Germany and Italy, will assuredly tend to increase rather than lessen the sympathy for Ultramontanism among the general body of Roman Catholics.

The Penge Convicts.——Mr. Cross had a very trying duty to perform in revising the sentence upon the Penge convicts, and we do not think he could have decided the question more satisfactorily. Whatever may be thought of the character of Alice Rhodes, she was certainly not bound to attend to the wants of Harriet Staunton; and, even if it had been admitted that the latter was murdered, there would not have been sufficient proof to convict her of cognisance of the fact. The three others may or may not have committed murder, but it must be allowed that there is a doubt in the case. The majority of medical men unquestionably agree in representing that death may have been caused, not by starvation, but by disease. That the sufferer was treated with shameful neglect is, however, certain. Nothing was ever more clearly proved than the brutal heartlessness of the husband and his two relatives; and their failure in fulfilling the most elementary duties of humanity must, of course, have hastened the end of the deceased woman. Whether murderers or not, they stand, at any rate, only on a slightly lower level of guilt; so that to have set them free, or to have inflicted upon them any less penalty than that which they have actually to endure, would have been culpable weakness. It is to be hoped we have now heard the last of the vile case, and that it will at least have one good effect—that of forcing upon public attention the question whether our present arrangements for the exercise of the Royal prerogative of mercy are quite satisfactory. It may be doubted whether it is right to throw upon a single individual the whole responsibility of granting or withholding a free pardon. The Home Secretary himself would probably prefer that a regularly appointed Council should be associated with him in deciding such questions. The judgment of such a body would naturally carry with it greater weight than can be attached to the opinion of even the wisest Minister.

Household Suffrage in Counties.——Just because at present there is no popular enthusiasm about the suffrage question, a good opportunity is afforded for discussing it dispassionately, and the public have the advantage of listening to two distinguished champions of either side in the persons of Messrs. Gladstone and Lowe. The worst of Mr. Lowe's arguments is that they are too convincing. They not only prove that household suffrage in counties is objectionable, but that all suffrages whatever are objectionable. In the abstract, there is a good deal to be said in favour of Mr. Lowe's views. A National Council in lieu of the present House of Commons, nominated by the Crown, with the same sense of serious responsibility under which Bishops and Judges are now nominated, would be probably a far more efficient law-making machine than the "collective wisdom" which is now gathered together at St. Stephen's by what Mr. Carlyle styles "count of heads." But somehow, however admirable as individuals the members of nominee Legislative Chambers may be, the experience of France and of our own colonies in former days proves that out-of-doors such bodies are either disliked or are regarded as dummies, simply because they lack the popular breath. It may seem absurd to discuss such an obsolete conception as that of a nominee Assembly, but if it be true that its powers are paralysed for want of a vox populi behind it, it seems to follow that the wider the constituency which chooses a legislative body the more powerful that body ought to become. In practice, however, this is not found to be the case; the British House of Commons undoubtedly commands more influence with a restricted suffrage than its French and American congeners with a universal suffrage, and it was probably more influential before 1867, when the suffrage was enlarged, than it is now. Moderate minded men then might incline to say, Why not leave matters as they now are? The objection to this is that the present restrictions are very invidious. The town artisan or labourer possesses a privilege which is denied to the rural workman, who in morals, if not in intellect, is generally the better man of the two. The present Government, if only from motives of policy, would probably be willing to put the countryman on the same footing as the townsman, were it not for the inevitable redistribution of seats which must follow, and which would probably tend more to alter the character of the House of Commons than any mere extension of voting power. As might be expected, Mr. Gladstone, who has intellectually little affinity to Mr. Lowe, takes the genial popular side; he has no fear of the multitude, he believes that the privilege of a vote is in itself an educational influence, and though he admits that the old unreformed Parliaments before 1832 were in some respects superior to their successors, he holds that it is more important to have "an alert, well-taught, and satisfied people than a theoretically good legislative machine."

The War.——For some back the Russians have unquestionably been making the most of their successes. They tried to make the world believe that the Turks were negotiating for the capitulation of Kars; but it is now tolerably certain that no such negotiations were ever begun. At any rate, if they were, they have been very speedily broken off. We hear also of a Russian bombardment of the town; but until the outworks fall, there can be no bombardment in the true sense, and if there is an ample supply of provisions the place should hold out for many weeks to come. The same spirit of exaggeration has marked the Russian reports from the seat of war in Europe. Teliche was not taken with the éclat at first described, nor does the capture of Dubnik seem to have been so complete a success as was originally represented. At the same time, it must be allowed that the fortune of war has of late been decidedly against the Turks. It is in their favour that the winter will soon set in; but if the road between Plevna and Sophia is really blocked, their immediate prospects are by no means bright. For our part, we have never doubted that the ultimate success of the Russians was only a question of time. We think they are engaged in a most unjust war; and now that we have the important testimony of Mr. Archibald Forbes as to the circumstances and character of the Bulgarians, a good many people who have hitherto stood up for Russia are likely to revise their opinions. But, whether just or unjust, the Russians have the largest resources on which to fall back; and the history of the American Civil War is the best proof that in the long run the weakest must go to the wall. If Turkey were wise, therefore, she would conclude peace at the earliest possible opportunity. Were she to show herself willing even at this late date to adopt a scheme of genuine reform, both England and Austria would be only too glad to do what they could for her. To both these Powers the triumph of Russia would bring with it serious perils.

Glove Fights.——Two exhibitions have lately taken place at Sadler's Wells Theatre, high prices being paid for admission, which, save and except that the combatants wore gloves, bore a very close resemblance to the prize fights of former days, which are now forbidden by law. But an admirer of the P.R. may say, "The use of the gloves makes all the difference; these were merely innocent and elegant sparring exercises." The reports of the respective combats do not bear out this conclusion. In the contest between Goode and Rees the former in the third round had his left arm broken just above the wrist, a circumstance which was evident to all the spectators, yet they allowed the poor plucky fellow to endure the punishment of his antagonist for nearly two hours afterwards, until the police marched upon the stage, and stopped what was, to all intents and purposes, a prize fight. In the contest between Gilbert and Allen, the men were very unequally matched, and Gilbert, the smaller and weaker man, was so severely punished by his opponent, whose gloves were saturated with blood, that he lost his temper, seized him round the loins, and attempted to throw him. Whereupon Tom Allen "picked him up, raised him on a level with his head, and dashed him with great force on the wooden stage, the 'thud' resounding through the building. This closed the fray, which ended in great disorder, Gilbert's second claiming the fight as a "foul." These facts show that the gloves act rather as a screen against the police than as a protection to the limbs and features of the combatants, and though we are by no means opposed to the acquisition of the "noble art of self-defence," when administered in the form of legitimate boxing lessons, we are strongly of opinion that such exhibitions as these are brutalising both to actors and spectators, and should be put down forthwith.

Provincial Universities.——One of the Governors of Owen's College, Manchester, wrote to The Times this week, protesting against the idea of conferring on that institution the right of granting degrees. His chief argument was that if the concession is made to one educational establishment, there will be no logical reason for refusing it to several others. It does not seem to have occurred to him that this is one of the circumstances which commend the scheme to a good many people; yet such is the case. We see no sufficient ground for drawing a hard and fast line, and saying that beyond that the number of Universities in the land shall not be allowed to go. On the contrary, it appears to us that it would be a very good thing to have a University in every important centre of life in England. The prestige of Oxford and Cambridge is so great that the wealthy classes will always send their sons to one or other of these Universities; but there are many persons who would like to secure a University education for their children, but are not able to give them the highest advantages. No doubt there is the London University; but it merely gives degrees, it does not provide that there shall be a regularly graduated system of instruction carried on under the best intellectual influences. Why should not England have as many Universities as Germany, in proportion to its population? The plan works admirably in that country, for the Universities not only educate the youth of the neighbourhood in which they are situated, but diffuse around them a spirit of intelligence and culture. We hope the Manchester people will not rest until they have obtained their University, and that when they have succeeded their example will be followed by the inhabitants of half a dozen other cities.

AMUSEMENTS

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8, THE DEAD SECRET. Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Messrs. Clifford, Cooper, Odell, Edmund Lyons, Pinero, Jenner, &c.; Misses Virginia Francis, Ewell, &c. Preceded by at 7, MARCH HARE HUNT. Mr. C. Cooper and Miss K. Pattison. Concluding with SHOULD THIS MEET THE EYE. Mr. E. Lyons.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD RIGHTON.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, £200 A-YEAR. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. At 9.45, ISAAC OF YORK. Messrs. Ryder, F. H. Macklin, Garner, A. H. Warren, C. Collette, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames C. Loseby, C. Lewis, Lucette, E. Ritta, Compton, I. Clifton, R. Sanger. Acting Manager, Mr. E. Clifton.

MORNING PERFORMANCES every Saturday, at 2.—TO-DAY, Saturday, Nov. 3, the highly successful Drama, LIZ. Messrs. J. G. Taylor, J. H. Beveridge, A. Matthison, F. Gould, and Miss Rose Leclercq.—GLOBE THEATRE.

THE MOONSTONE. By Wilkie Collins. A New Drama, altered from the Novel. EVERY EVENING, at 8.30. Box-office open daily from 11.0 to 5.0. No booking fees.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

LAST MORNING PERFORMANCE of THE MOONSTONE, SATURDAY, Nov. 10, at 2.30. Carriages at 5. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. No Fees for Booking.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

SURREY THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, at Seven, THE DRESS COAT. At 7.45, FATES AND FURIES. Mr. E. M. Ciprico. Messrs. J. A. Arnold, H. Taylor, H. C. Sidney, A. Williams, A. C. Lilly, W. D. Gresham, W. Brunton, F. Hinde, &c.; Mesdames Lamartine, A. Stuart, Nellie Russell, L. Lilly, Mrs. Brunton.

NEW GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, BOUND TO SUCCEED. Messrs. George Conquest, W. James, Sennett, Syms, Birchenough, George Conquest, jun., &c. To conclude with on Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday, GUY FAWKES and Grand Display of Fireworks. On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, FALSE AND TRUE. Dancing on the New Platform. The grounds brilliantly illuminated.—Acting Manager, Mr. ALPHONSE ROQUES.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—MONDAY and SATURDAY, at 6.45, DEOCH AN' DUR'ASS. Reddy Ryland, Mrs S. Lane. GUY FAUX and Fireworks. WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, and FRIDAY, CHARLOTTE CORDAY. Concluding with DEOCH AN' DUR'ASS. Every Evening, about 8 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. The Phoites, Minnie Gongh, W. W. Whitlock, Slater and Dora.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening ditto.

MR. WALTER BACHE'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL (sixth season), on Monday, November 5, at St. James's Hall, at half-past 3. Vocalist, Mr. Santley. Accompanyist, Mr. Zerbini. Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; admission 1s.—Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co., 84, New Bond Street; Chappell's; usual agents; and Austin's, St. James's Hall.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN.—NOTICE.—These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. Amor.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Children of T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales. Also on view Portrait Models of the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, Count de Tourville, M. Thiers, and the Penge convicts. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE.—Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Engagement of the Celebrated Artiste, Miss ADA CAVENDISH (for Twelve Nights only, commencing on MONDAY, November 5). Monday, Nov. 5, THE LADY OF LYONS. Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 6 and 7, ROMEO AND JULIET. Thursday, Nov. 8, SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL. Friday, Nov. 9, AS YOU LIKE IT. Saturday, Nov. 10, CLANCARTY. SPECIAL MORNING PERFORMANCE TO-DAY (Saturday, Nov. 3), of STOLEN KISSES, supported by Mr. Righton's entire Globe Company.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom. £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia } Via Brindisi, { India
Ceylon } 36s. thin edition. { Japan
China } 45s. thick edition. { New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD, 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher.

Our Illustrations

THE COLLIERY EXPLOSION AT HIGH BLANTYRE

THIS terrible disaster, beside which the Pemberton catastrophe sinks into insignificance, occurred on the 19th inst., and though the work of exploration has been going on unceasingly since then, the task is not yet complete. The long delay was caused by the blocking up of the shaft and some part of the workings by the force of the explosion, which blew away the supports and dislodged huge masses of earth through which a new passage had to be cut ere the workings beyond could be explored. The number of those who have perished is set down as 208, representing the almost total annihilation of the male population of the village of Stonefield. A Relief Fund which has been established, headed by Her Majesty the Queen with a donation of 100 guineas, has already reached 1,500*l.* The cause of the disaster is at present the subject of conjecture, the incautious use of naked lights being thought to be the most probable theory. The Government inquiry will, however, be of the most searching character, and without endorsing the extreme views propounded by Mr. Macdonald as to the responsibility of pit-owners, we cannot help hoping that it may lead to some more stringent legislation than has hitherto been in force. Our artist describes the scene in the smithy where the bodies were laid out for identification as most heartrending. There were men of all ages, but the majority were in the prime of life and of splendid physique. One, in particular, he noticed, might have served as the model for Foley's "Caractacus," whilst beside him lay that of a young lad whose calm features told of a sudden and painless death. Many, however, were scorched and mutilated in a shocking manner.

THE PEMBERTON COLLIERY EXPLOSION

WE have here the portraits of three of the gallant fellows who led the first exploring party after the recent disastrous explosion at the King's Pit, Pemberton, near Wigan, which resulted in the loss of forty-seven lives. The first intimation of the accident was given by a cloud of dust and smoke issuing from the pit's mouth. Messrs. Watkin, Cook, and Laverick at once formed an exploring party and descended into the workings; and, like the brave men they were, they went forward leaving the others in the main air-way. These at length became alarmed at their long absence, and on search being made they were found about 200 yards from the mouth of the working lying prostrate and unconscious, with their heads in the direction of the shaft, towards which they had evidently turned when they found the fatal gas rushing upon them. They were carried to the ventilated portion of the pit, and every means was used to restore life; but the choke-damp had done its fatal work, and by-and-bye the bodies of the noble martyrs were removed from the pit and carried to their homes through crowds of mourning men and weeping women. Mr. Watkin, who was only thirty-nine years of age, was the son of S. Watkin, Esq., of Penshaw House, Durham, and Kennet Park, North Wales, and was married to a daughter of the late Thomas Douglas, a shipowner, of Sunderland.—Our portrait of him is from a photograph by S. Eastham, 217, Lord Street, Southport; that of Mr. Laverick from one by J. Cooper, Wigan; and that of Mr. Cook by C. Watson, Tudhoe Grange, Market Place, Spennymoor.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH THE RUSSIANS—A STREET CORNER IN SIMNITZA

MUD is one of the great difficulties with which the Russians have to contend in their Bulgarian campaign. In summer, notwithstanding the scorching sun and the simooms of dust, in winter, despite the deep snow and the terrible icy winds from the mountains, locomotion is possible; but when the spring and autumn rains transform the highways and by-ways into seas of liquid filth deep enough to drown a fallen horse, and through which it is impossible to drag cannon or even provision waggons, all operations come virtually to a standstill. Our sketch depicts the aspects of Simnitza after a storm. "The streets," writes our artist, "are literally lakes of mud, with dead horses and cattle planted at every few paces. Simnitza now resembles an American backwoods' mushroom city in its streets and people—the Jews always excepted. Gambling goes on openly night and day; horse-trading is a favourite pursuit; and there is a constant noisy wrangle in the streets. Booths line the highways, where every conceivable article can be bought for fabulous prices. Restaurants are enormously dear, and lodgings almost unattainable at any price, for hotel-keepers have given up their best rooms to gamblers."

THE IMPERIAL GUARD ON THE MARCH

OUR sketch represents a detachment of those long-wished-for troops, the Imperial Guard of Russia, who are looked upon as the flower of the Russian army, and whose special mission now is to retrieve all the recent misfortunes which Russian arms have suffered. Their first destination is Plevna, and large bodies have been passing through Roumania to the front for the past few weeks, while the Czar has been holding reviews of them at Gorny Studen. To all appearance they are magnificent men, though whether they will stand the inevitable hardships and unhealthiness of a Bulgarian autumn and winter any better than their colleagues of the Line may be somewhat doubted. In numbers they muster when complete upwards of 77,000 of all ranks and arms, and at their full war strength comprise 49,000 bayonets, 7,500 sabres, 144 field-pieces, and 36 horse-artillery guns. The Czarevitch is their nominal commander, but at the present time they are acting under Generals Todleben and Gourko.

GENERAL TODLEBEN

THIS well-known general, whose celebrated defence of Sebastopol in 1853 has ever been regarded as one of the most marvellous feats of military engineering, has been entrusted with the task of subduing Ghazi Osman Pasha and his army at Plevna. He has already shown proof of his cool calculation and skill by avoiding all such rash hot-headed onslaughts as have twice brought about defeat and havoc in the Russian ranks, and by slowly and surely drawing round the doomed city a "circle of steel," which, combined with patient waiting, will sooner or later bring the Turkish pasha to terms through the dread medium of starvation. General Todleben, at the time of the siege of Sebastopol, was only a second captain, and was barely thirty-five years of age. After the war he was promoted to the rank of general for his great services, and has since gained laurels in another field by his "History of the Crimean War," written from a Russian point of view, and which, in all that regards the Russian army and its proceedings, is accepted by all as unimpeachable. After the second failure of the Russians in their attacks on Plevna, General Todleben was appointed Chief of the Staff to Prince Charles of Roumania, and subsequently was placed in practical charge of all the operations before Plevna.

WITH THE RUSSIANS—RECONNAISSANCE ON THE LOM

THESE sketches portray an incident during a recent reconnaissance of some cavalry regiments of the army of the Czarevich on the Lom under Prince Manlerloff and Baron Kaulbars. Various Bashi-Bazouks were captured, and in a valley near Solenlik a company of Hussars found a camp of regular cavalry, Circassians, and Bashi-Bazouks. They surprised the whole band asleep on mats in the straw huts, and killed and captured twenty-five. "I was on the spot," writes our artist, "immediately afterwards; but nothing of value was discovered in the camp, the weapons excepted." The Bashi-Bazouks were conducted, in the manner shown in our second sketch, to the village of Kara Verbovcka, on the Lom, where they were taken before Baron Kaulbars. They all expressed considerable surprise at not being killed at once by the soldiers instead of being merely made prisoners.

WITH THE TURKS—PRINCE HASSAN

PRINCE HASSAN, who commands the Egyptian contingent of troops which the Khedive has sent his Suzerain to assist his army in fighting the Russians in Bulgaria, is the third son of the Khedive, and is twenty-four years old. He has received a thorough military education in Germany, being a lieutenant in a Prussian dragoon regiment, and has already seen a good share of practical warfare in the recent Abyssinian war under Gordon Pasha. In the present campaign, however, he has done nothing whatever, and his apparent reluctance to support the Turkish troops in action has been the subject of general remark. He has now retired with his troops to winter quarters at Varna, as it is thought that the constitution of the Egyptians would be unable to stand the rigour of a Bulgarian winter in the field. Prince Hassan was made a D.C.L. of Oxford in 1872, and in 1876 again visited England, and was received by the Queen.

THE MONTENEGRIN CAMPAIGN—NICSICS

THIS important fortress, which so long held out against the attacks of the Montenegrins, and which ultimately succumbed to Prince Nikita a few weeks since, stands on a plateau commanding the whole of South-eastern Herzegovina, and constitutes the principal entrance to that district. Indeed, the only practicable path from the plateau into the Herzegovinian Valley leads directly under the guns of the fortress. Our artist writes:—"A road runs from the Ostrog to the Duga Pass across the plain of Nicsics, and the town stands nearly in the middle of the plain, this road forming its 'bazaar' street. It is a straggling city, whose scattered houses cover a large area. Round it rise rocky eminences which are all crowned by rough fortifications. Its chief defence is the citadel, and this—except one far smaller building—is the only work constructed of regular masonry. Under the shadow of the great rock, crowned by the citadel, the town of Nicsics has grown up. The rough broken walls and the three great towers of the citadel bear in their splintered masonry evident marks of the obstinacy with which they were defended, and its white walls and red roofs are exceedingly picturesque. I showed the second of these sketches to a Turkish lieutenant whom I met in the Adriatic. He had been with Suleiman Pasha in the Ostrog Pass last year, and his eyes glistened excitedly as he explained how the Turkish army had to traverse the regular pass which winds round the foot of the great bluff seen in the distance, terribly galled meanwhile by the mountaineers who had posted themselves on the top. It was lower down in the pass that the severest fighting occurred." The Turks are highly confident of being able to retake Nicsics, and the Montenegrins are equally so that they can keep it, especially as they hold all the forts which command the town and in the Duga Pass. Our sketches, "With the Turks—"Forgotten" and "A Wounded Circassian," are sufficiently explained by their titles.

RUSSIANS CAROUSING AFTER A VICTORY

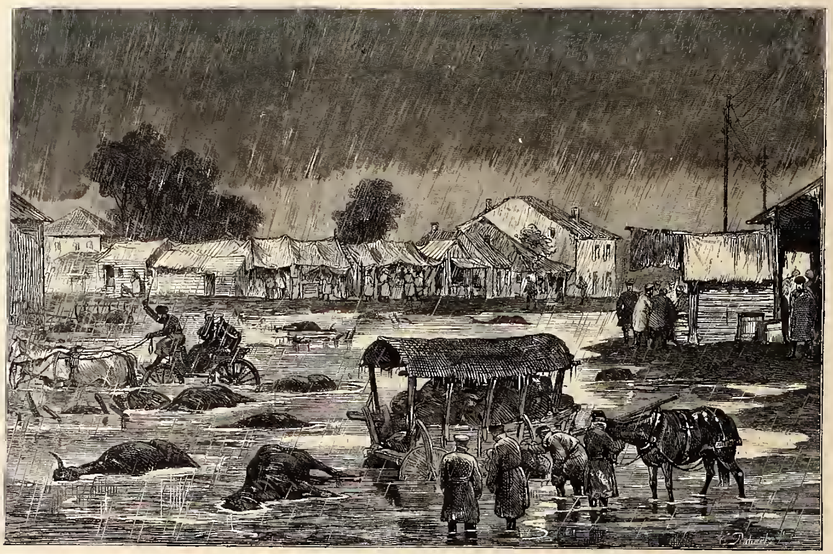
HERE we have a party of the gallant Muscovite "defenders of the Cross" making merry over the defeat of the hated Moslem. The scene is eminently characteristic of the Russian soldier. Dauntless in the hour of danger, he is reckless in his hours of leisure, and will speedily spend his last copeck on the filthy vodka with which the Jew camp-followers of the army are only too ready to supply him at an exorbitant rate. Far better would it be for him if he would imitate the one virtue which even the most arrant Turcophobist is ever willing to acknowledge that his hereditary foe possesses—sobriety—a virtue which has other than theoretical advantages in the field, for the Turkish soldier with less than ordinary care rapidly recovers from wounds and injuries to which members of a dram-drinking nation rapidly succumb.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

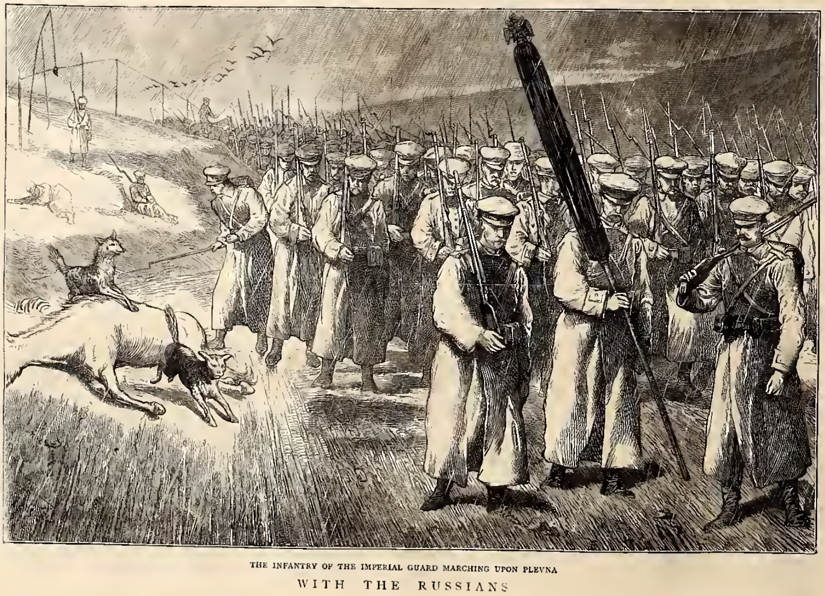
THESE engravings are especially appropriate just now, when there is some idea of removing this ancient foundation into the country. We have already expressed our opinion that schools which, like Charterhouse, are mainly boarding schools, are far better away from the smoke and turmoil of great cities, but that if all day schools of the higher class are also to be removed from London, many persons who are compelled to live in London will suffer serious loss.

A school for the education of the young was attached to most abbeys and monasteries from the earliest dates, and the germ from which the present Westminster School originated was in existence during, if not before, the reign of Edward the Confessor. The school, however, did not substantially assume its present form till the reigns of Henry VIII. and his daughter Elizabeth, and the latter monarch especially deserves to be regarded as the royal foundress of the College. The foundation, as she left it, consisted of a head master, a second master or "usher," and forty King's (or Queen's) Scholars, who are maintained and educated free of cost and charge, with the privilege of election annually to three Studentships at Christ Church, Oxford, and the same number of Scholarships at Trinity College, Cambridge. Since 1872 these exhibitions have been thrown open to competition among the whole school. The school has fluctuated considerably in its numbers. In 1729 it had 429 scholars; in 1771 they had declined to 248, in 1818 they had risen to 324, in 1841 they were only 67. There are now about 200.

The College Hall, which serves as a refectory for the King's Scholars, was originally the refectory of the abbot's house, and dates from the reign of Edward III. It is a very handsome Gothic building, adjoining the Jerusalem Chamber;

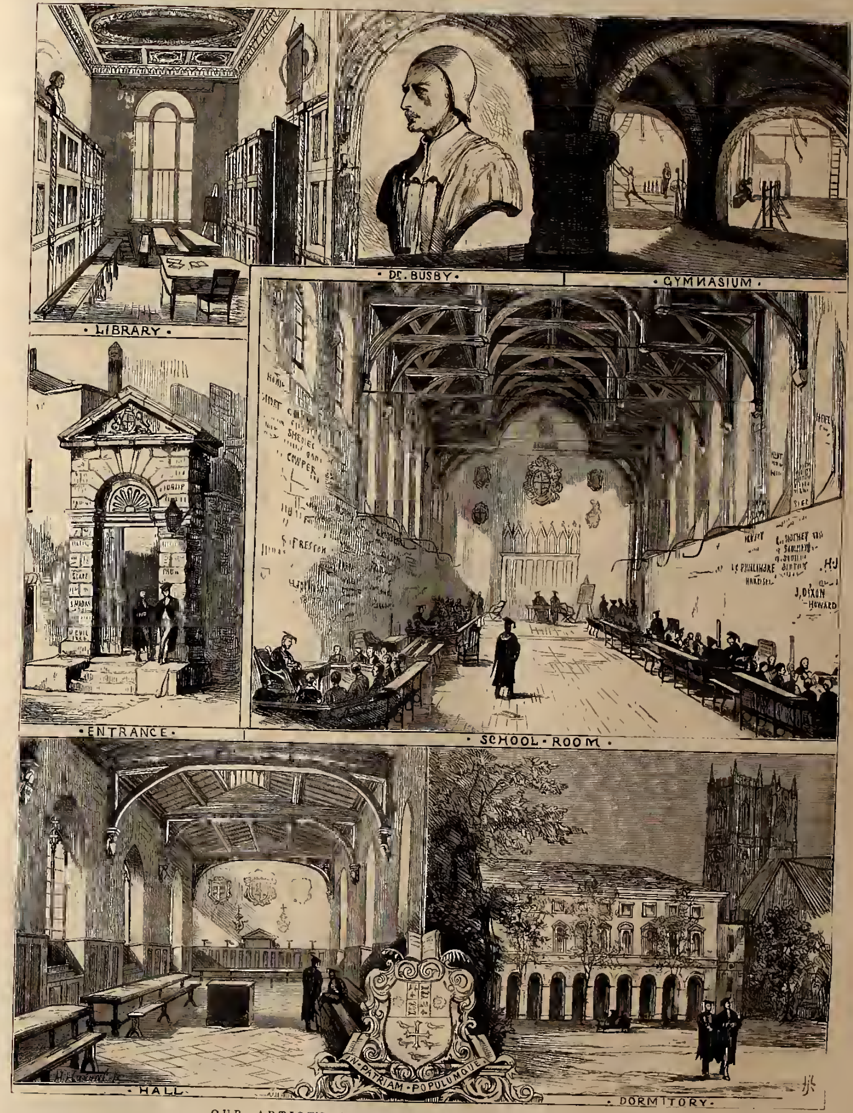


A STREET CORNER AT SIMNITZA AFTER A STORM



THE INFANTRY OF THE IMPERIAL GUARD MARCHING UPON PLEVNA

WITH THE RUSSIANS



LIBRARY
DR. BUSBY GYMNASIUM ENTRANCE SCHOOL ROOM
COWPER
S. PRESTON
J. DIXON
HOWARD
HALL
IN PATRIAM POPULUMQUE
DORMITORY

OUR ARTIST'S NOTES AT WESTMINSTER SCHOOL on each side are two long and massive tables of chestnut wood, taken from the wreck of one of the vessels belonging to the Spanish Armada. The schoolroom is a spacious but gloomy apartment, and was originally the dormitory of the monks. It has a handsome Gothic roof of wood, supported by iron bars. The walls bear on every side the names of "Old Westminsters," with the dates of their leaving. The dormitory, which was first erected for the King's Scholars by the Earl of Burlington, when Bishop Atterbury was Dean of Westminster, was, until some forty years ago, a dreary, comfortless chamber. It is now cut up in small, snug cubicula. It is in a portion of this building, fitted up for the occasion as a theatre, that the Latin plays are annually represented by the King's Scholars. Many anecdotes are related concerning Dr. Busby, who was head master of the school during the reigns of Charles II. and James II. It was he who kept on his hat when the King visited the school, on the ground that "it would never do for his boys to think that there was anybody superior to himself," and there must have been some magic in his frequent canings, since he used to boast that out of the then bishops sixteen had been educated by him.—We have taken the above details from Mr. Walford's "Old and New London" (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin).

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 417.

AN ANGLING EXCURSION IN NOVA SCOTIA

THE salmon streams of the Atlantic coast of North America are chiefly to be found in Canada East. Excellent sport is afforded by some of the rivers which run into the St. Lawrence below Quebec, and still more by those of the districts of Gaspé and Restigouche. Good fishing is also to be had in the northern part of New Brunswick, and on the south-east coast of Nova Scotia below Halifax. Our sketches, which are by Captain D. T. C. Belgrave, 97th Regiment, stationed at Halifax, apply to Nova Scotia. The Canadian Government, we may observe, exercises complete control of the principal salmon streams, both in their tidal and fluvial parts. Leases are commonly given for several years, and, in the case of the best rivers, in the likelihood of a vacancy, numerous applicants bring influences of all sorts to bear in hope of securing the chance. The citizens of the United States highly appreciate salmon fishing, and it is a frequent remark that it is more difficult to lease a good salmon stream than to secure an election to Congress. To the serious cost of stream and tackle must be added the uncertainty of getting fish. Salmo salar is one of the most capricious of mortals, and often discomfits the plans of the most experienced fishermen. In 1875, for example, with scores of salmon, by actual count, in the different pools of the Canadian rivers, often not more than one in a pool could be tempted to rise to the fly. All these combined causes make the number of salmon anglers small.—Our engravings explain themselves to every one who has the least knowledge of fishing. Flies and mosquitoes are far more numerous than in Europe, and anglers frequently carry a small vial of a preparation called "fly oil" to alleviate their stings. We have borrowed the above details from an interesting paper which appeared in Scribner's Magazine for October, 1876.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO's new work is continued on page 421.

"THE HUNTSMAN'S COURTSHIP"

MR. CHARLTON has already earned a high reputation for the skill which he possesses in delineating animals, especially dogs and horses. Here he has chosen a congenial theme, and contrived very cleverly to bring a little bit of love sentiment into an atmosphere redolent of dogs and horses. We must not suppose, however, that the worthy huntsman always goes a-courting attended by such a numerous retinue. If, for example, he desired a tête-à-tête indoors with the lady of his choice, he would find his four-footed followers rather de trop. Probably the scene depicted represents an early stage in his amatory progress. In military parlance, he is cautiously sapping up to the fair Plevna who confronts him.

MONUMENT TO THE VICTIMS OF THE "THUNDERER" EXPLOSION

THIS monument, which has recently been erected in Haslar Burial Ground in memory of the unfortunate sufferers by the terrible explosion on board H.M.S. Thunderer in July, 1876, is the result of a purely private subscription amongst the members of the Steam Reserves and the employés at Portsmouth Dockyard, supplemented by liberal donations from the Messrs. Humphries, the makers of the Thunderer's machinery, and other engineering firms. The subscription was originated by Captain Waddilove, late in command of the Portsmouth Steam Reserve, and who was on board the Thunderer at the time of the accident. Owing to a strike among the quarrymen of the Aberdeen Granite Works great delay occurred in finishing the monument, but when completed it gave great satisfaction to all who saw it. It is placed over the graves of the two Engineer officers who were killed, and is in the centre of the line of graves of the victims, the greater part of whom were buried at this spot. It is in the form of an obelisk, and stands on a magnificent Yorkshire stone base, 8 ft. square. The two lower bases, or plinths, are of red polished Aberdeen granite, the rest being composed of polished Sicilian marble, the whole standing about 16 ft. in height. Upon one side of the pedestal is an inscription detailing the purpose of the memorial.

THE ROSSMORE MEMORIAL FOUNTAIN

THIS monument, to the memory of the late Right Hon. Henry Cairns, fourth Baron Rossmore, who was killed in a steeplechase at Windsor in March, 1874, when only twenty-three years of age, was erected by public subscription amongst the friends and retainers of the Rossmore family. It stands in the centre of the Diamond in the town of Monaghan, and is about 50 ft. in height, its cost is about 1,000*l.*, the architects and contractors were Messrs. Robinson and Sons, of Belfast, and the inscription upon it is as follows:—"Erected by mourners of every class as a testimony of their esteem and affection for one who during his short life attached to him the love of all." The unveiling ceremony, which had at the desire of the Queen and the Prince of Wales been reserved for a member of the Royal Family, was performed on the 5th inst. by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, who was most enthusiastically welcomed by the townsfolk. After the members of the Memorial Committee had been introduced to his Royal Highness, and the fountain had been formally handed over to Colonel Lloyd as chairman of the Town Commissioners, some of the water was drawn from the fountain in a massive silver goblet, and handed by Lady Rossmore to the Duke of Connaught, who paid a brief tribute of respect to the memory of the late Lord Rossmore, and then drank of the water and declared the fountain open. After the ceremony Lord Rossmore, His Royal Highness, and a distinguished company of guests, including the members of the Memorial Committee and the Town Commissioners, were entertained at a déjeûner at the Court House by Colonel Lloyd, J.P., and in the evening a ball was given at Rossmore Castle.

FOREIGN MASONS AT THE NEW LAW COURTS

THERE appears to be little prospect of an early settlement of the unfortunate dispute between the master builders and the working masons of London. The men want more money and shorter hours, and as the masters refused to grant either the men struck, and for several weeks all the buildings in progress in London in which stone had to be employed have been at a standstill. The chief of these is the New Law Courts now being erected in the Strand, nearly opposite the office of this journal, and as the men remained obstinate the masters have combined together to bring workmen over from foreign countries. A few weeks ago some were brought from Belgium, but they were soon "got at" by the numerous "persuasion pickets" set to watch the works by the Strike Committee, and they have now returned home. Subsequently some Italian and German operatives were imported, and some of these with others who have been brought from America are still at work. The Italians were set upon in the streets a day or two after their arrival by some roughs, with whom, however, the men on strike repudiate all connection, and since then they have been fed and lodged within the building upon which they are at work. The statements issued by the opposing parties respecting the progress of the strife are of such a conflicting nature that it is almost impossible to get at the truth. To begin with, the men allege that the foreign workmen were not told of the existence of the strike, and their statement seems to be corroborated by the readiness with which many of them have yielded to the arguments of the pickets, although it is flatly denied by the agents who engaged them. It is also said that, since the new hands have been lodged and fed within the building, they have been treated more like dogs than men, and have been charged most exorbitant prices for their board and lodging. This statement is also denied, the masters alleging that they are charged only 2*s.* per day. The men on strike, however, allege that even if this be true it is a breach of the Truck Act, which prohibits payment in kind, and have memorialised the First Commissioner of Works against what they allege to be the illegal use of the new Law Courts, a Government building, as a "common lodging house." That the foreign workmen are not completely satisfied with their treatment by the employers is manifest by the application made on Tuesday by some of the Italians to the Strike Committee for assistance to carry them home, and their disappointment when the request was not granted, besides which complaint has been made respecting the alleged illegal detention of tools belonging to the foreign malcontents. Thus far the men seem to have had the best of the battle, which must be a costly one to both sides. During the last few days there has been some talk of submitting the dispute to arbitration, and although no definite proposition to that effect has yet been made, it is to be hoped that some amicable settlement will soon be brought about.

THE NEW NAVE OF BRISTOL CATHEDRAL

THE ceremony of reopening Bristol Cathedral, to which a new Nave has been added, which was attended by the Mayor, High Sheriff, and Corporation of the City, was performed by the Bishop of the diocese, assisted by a large number of clerical dignitaries, among whom were the Deans of Westminster and Canterbury, Archdeacon Randall, and Canons Reeve and Girdlestone. There was an imposing procession of clergy, choristers, and lay clerks, and after the service a sermon was preached by the Bishop. The new portion of the cathedral consists of a Nave, which has been erected on the site of the old Nave, which had so entirely disappeared that for some time it was held doubtful whether a Norman Nave had ever existed. The question was, however, set at rest in 1867, when in digging out the foundation for the present structure the remnants of the old walls were found. The new Nave, which has been built by Mr. Street, has been constructed to harmonise with the portion of the building which was restored in 1861 by local architects, and the effect produced is magnificent and most impressive.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——Parliament has been further prorogued until the 19th of December.—Lord Beaconsfield has written to the Principal of Glasgow University, saying that he regrets that his indifferent health and the great pressure of public affairs will prevent him bidding a personal farewell to the students on the occasion of his retirement from the post of Lord Rector of the University.—Rumour says that the Marquis of Lorne is about to be raised to the Peerage, and that the seat for Argyllshire in the House of Commons which he will then vacate will be contested by Mr. William Malcolm, junior, of Poltalloch, in the Conservative interest, and as strong a Liberal candidate as can be brought forward.—Mr. F. H. O'Donnell, M.P., has been lecturing at Liverpool on "Ireland, the Civiliser of Europe." According to the reports he appears to have forgotten the subject of his discourse, and devoted his time to an attack upon the Government for their treatment of "political prisoners." He defined the House of Commons as "the accumulated essence of multiplied and magnified meanness," and as "the shabbiest assembly of reactionary politicians in Europe," and urged his hearers to be "obstructive" until perfect educational liberty and freedom had been guaranteed to the Irish people.—Mr. W. E. Baxter, M.P., addressing his constituents at Arbroath the other day, said that the War had disposed of the alarm as to the dangers of Russian aggression, and proved that while England really attended to her own interests she had nothing to fear from any Power. He predicted that it would not end before Bulgaria, from the Danube to the Balkans, was as free as Servia and Roumania.—The new Radical Club and Association of Southwark was inaugurated last week, the chief speakers being Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., and Miss Helen Taylor, who dilated on the necessity of extending the franchise, and recommended the working classes to take their full share in all local matters. An address was voted to M. Gambetta.—Messrs. Cave and Waddy, the members for Barnstaple, addressed their constituents on Monday. The former spoke of the internal condition of Russia, and said that Englishmen had no sympathy with a nation which went to war in the name of Christianity and at the same time persecuted its own people. Mr. Waddy reviewed the action of the Government, and said that Mr. Gladstone was the means of committing this country to a policy of neutrality. A bronze statue of the late Mr. J. Laird, the first M.P. for Birkenhead, has been erected in that town, and was unveiled on Wednesday last.

MR. GLADSTONE IN IRELAND.——Mr. Gladstone left Kilruddery for Rathdrum and Glendalough on his way to Earl Fitzwilliam's seat at Coolattin. On the journey he separated himself from his friends and rode in a third class carriage, his object being to improve his acquaintanceship with the Irish people. We are not told that any notable incident occurred during the trip, but next day he was interviewed by the Rev. Mr. Guinness, Rector of Rathdrum, who being a teetotaller entered into a long argument in favour of Mr. Smyth's Sunday Closing Bill. Mr. Gladstone listened patiently for twenty minutes, but declined to commit himself to any expression of opinion until he had studied the other side of the question. After visiting some tenants of Mr. Parnell, M.P., who seemed prosperous and contented, he went on by train to Coolattin, where a crowd met him at the railway station. On Saturday he went over some of the farms on the Fitzwilliam estate in County Wicklow, and was caught in a drenching rain-shower. On Sunday he attended Divine Service at Shillelagh, and afterwards went by rail to Bray, stopping for a short time at Aughrim, where he was presented with a sprig of shillelagh cut from the famous Shillelagh Oak, and had an interview with the Roman Catholic priest, who complained of the policy of the late Government with regard to the Irish University Bill. The ex-Premier reiterated the statement which he had made a day or two previously to the students of Trinity College, that his desire was to see that University a thoroughly national one. The conversation was cut short by the starting of the train for Bray, where Mr. Gladstone was proceeding to visit Lord and Lady Powerscourt, and where he had a very warm welcome. On Tuesday he went over the Roman Catholic Reformatory at Glencree and made a short speech to the lads, recommending them to be grateful to their teachers, and to practice modesty and humility as the sure means of attaining excellence. On Wednesday Mr. Gladstone visited the National and Roman Catholic Schools at Enniskerry, and on Thursday left Powerscourt for Charleville, where he would be the guest of Lord Limerick.—By the way, an amazing discovery has been made by a Turkish newspaper, the Zemar and Bassiret, respecting Mr. Gladstone. He is, it appears, the son of a Bulgarian pig-dealer, and at the age of sixteen he stole some pigs and ran away to London, where he changed his name from Trozadin to Gladstone, which signifies "Lust for Gold." Fortune favoured him until he became Prime Minister, but he has no virtues, and gold is his god. The Ottoman Government offered him five thousand pounds to put their finances in order, but subsequently withdrew the offer, and his vexation at this, combined with his bad Bulgarian nature, caused his opposition to the Turks. These biographical details will probably be as novel and interesting to Mr. Gladstone himself as to the rest of the world.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.——Mr. Alderman Breffit has offered the position of deputy of the Ward of Cheap to Sir John Bennett, who, however, has declined to accept it, declaring that it would be inconsistent with his personal dignity and the rights of the electors if he stooped to recognise, much less to take office under, one who sits solely as the nominee of the Court of Aldermen, and in defiance of the will of the ward.—A strange story comes from Penzance. It is said that one of the keepers of the Longship Lighthouse off the Land's End was last week washed off the rocks and drowned, and that for several days communication by boat has been impracticable, and signals of distress have been flying at the lighthouse, but owing to a change in the code they cannot be understood by those on shore.—The strike amongst the Bolton cotton-spinners is now over, and work has been resumed. It lasted eight weeks, about 1,800 spinners and minders striking, and some 10,000 carders and other operatives being thrown out of work without having any voice in the matter. It is calculated to have cost the men about 100,000*l.*, and the employers have also suffered considerably. The distressed condition of the carders was very great, and would have been worse had it not been for the relief funds organised by two or three local associations.—At a meeting held at the Mansion House the other day it was resolved to establish an industrial home for the reclamation of women who have become habitual drunkards, and also to send a deputation to the Home Secretary to ask his co-operation in the attempt to diminish the vice of drunkenness.—Yet another colliery fatality is reported. On Tuesday, at the South Kirby Pit, near Barnsley, the lifting rope broke, and the contents of the truck attached to it fell upon some men working below, four of whom were killed and two others severely injured.—The new Thames Steam Ferry between Wapping and Rotherithe, which is expected to divert a great deal of heavy traffic from London Bridge, was opened on Wednesday by the Lord Mayor, who crossed the river in his State carriage.

THEATRES

THE reopening of the QUEEN'S Theatre in Long Acre—henceforth to be known under the new name of the National—has been the occasion for the production of a new romantic play by Messrs. Farnie and Reece which bears the title of Russia. Mr. Henderson, the new manager, has made known to the world that he has a policy—a course which is both commendable and novel. The great increase in the number of our theatres renders it more and more important that each should choose some special field, and endeavour to obtain a reputation for the particular class of pieces which it favours; but, with one or two exceptions only, our managers seem to be as yet unconvinced of this fact, and hence they often pursue a vacillating course which is as bewildering to the public as it is injurious to the efficiency of their representations. Mr. Henderson is not one of these managers. He believes that there is a large section of playgoers who like picturesque story plays—melodramas as they are occasionally contemptuously called; nor does the management of the Queen's shrink from adopting this description for their new piece. Simultaneously with this venture they have determined to lower prices to one half the usual rates for the popular parts of the house, and to very little more than one half for the stalls. All this betokens spirit and enterprise—more particularly as the management have assembled a strong company, and are liberal almost to excess in the matter of scenery and other accessories. Considering, therefore, how many people there are—and these not merely among the unlettered class—who find pleasure in a romantic play, even though it should display some of the characteristic exaggerations of melodrama, it is impossible not to sympathise with Mr. Henderson's venture. Unfortunately, however, he has not been able to start under circumstances altogether favourable. Russia fails to awaken much interest, not because it is a melodrama, but because it is not a good melodrama. No doubt melodrama is a dish which depends for its success in great measure upon the sauces with which it is served up; but it is not wise to make any dish depend entirely on sauces. This, however, is what Messrs. Reece and Farnie have done, with the additional objection that the foundation of their dish is of an oppressively indigestible character. Russia, it is true, is compounded after old and well-established recipes for the production of pieces of its class. Its fundamental idea is that of an unscrupulous rascal who loves a virtuous maiden, and pursues her with a determination to make her his bride by coaxing, or if that fails by fraud and force. Even the manifest loathing of the object of this passion has no effect in cooling this romantic ardour, and this also is strictly within the rules. Then there are other worthy people involved in a nefarious plot, and unjustly condemned to exile in Siberia, and among these is a blithe and facetious gentleman, with an Irish servant of most unexceptional brogue. "With sich a organ as that," the late Mr. Robson was wont to observe in his famous character of Jem Baggs, "why you ought to make a fortun." In like manner we can conceive a veteran East End drama expressing inability to conceive bow the authors of Russia, with such elements as these, could have failed to produce a respectable melodrama. But they have failed, and the reasons are obvious enough. There is no sincerity in their treatment of the terrible tale of exile to Siberia, terrific encounters, and hair-breadth escapes; no harmony in the general effect—no tone in the picture. Melodrama, let it work to ever such happy ends, should, at least occasionally, "thrill;" but Messrs. Reece and Farnie's play never thrills. The terrors of their tale are to them manifestly a joke, and the audience are made to feel that they are a joke. Perhaps the authors have not that faith in melodrama which Mr. Henderson exhibits; possibly old habits of making fun of stage conventionalities were too much for them; or it may be that too deep a sense of the paramount importance of the scenic artist and the limelight may have induced that recklessness which comes of a conviction that it matters little what one does. Mr. Hermann Vezin's fine performance of the scoundrel Schelm is a redeeming feature; but Miss Henrietta Hodson, delightful actress as she is, cannot inspire interest in a part which fulfils no function in any well-planned story. Russia is founded on a novel by Prince Lubomirsky, entitled "Tatiana," which also furnished the plot of Les Exilés, a drama by M. Nus, produced last summer at the Porte St. Martin Theatre.

Mr. Righton has revived at the GLOBE Theatre the burlesque entitled Isaac of York, which was very popular at the Court a few years ago. His performance of the Jew has lost none of its grotesque force and humour; but the piece is not free from the vulgarities which so often render modern extravaganzas offensive to persons of good taste and right feeling.

Mr. Wilkie Collins's drama, The Moonstone, at the OLYMPIC Theatre is to be withdrawn. In its place Mr. Tom Taylor's Henry Dunbar, a drama founded on Miss Braddon's novel of that name, will be revived for a limited number of nights, and pending the revival of Mr. Burnand's Turn of the Tide. New comedies by Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Burnand are also announced as in preparation at this theatre.

The new GRECIAN Theatre, which was opened on Monday last, is a magnificent building, capable of accommodating about 5,000 persons. The architect, Mr. J. T. Robinson, has succeeded in arranging the auditorium so that a clear view of the whole stage may be obtained from even the most remote corners of the house, and the acoustic properties of the building are admirable. The decorations are very tasteful, blue quilted satin being very effectively employed in conjunction with other colours and material. The house was well filled on Monday, when Mr. Conquest took his annual benefit, and a new melodrama, entitled Bound to Succeed, was produced. The scene is laid first in Tasmania and afterwards in England; and the plot, which is of a most exciting nature, turns upon the evil designs of an adventurer to obtain possession of the hard-earned money of a civil engineer. A variety of schemes are adopted in succession to get rid of the rightful owner in order that the villain may personate him and claim the property; but each is thwarted in turn, and, after many thrilling situations, all is made to come right at the end. The characters were very fairly sustained, Mr. G. Conquest making a decided hit as a "neglected genius" with a large family and a great capacity for invention, and his son doing all that could be done with the small part of "a nervous gentleman." The after-piece was the comedy-drama of False and True; or, Marriage by Lottery. The immense audience seemed to be perfectly satisfied with both the house and the performance, and their exclamations of delight and approval were vociferous and profuse.

MR. AND MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT, ST. GEORGE'S HALL.——A Happy Bungalow will be withdrawn on Saturday next, the 10th inst., and a new first part, entitled, Once in a Century, from the pen of Mr. Gilbert A'Beckett, the music by Vivian Bligh, will be produced on Monday evening, the 12th inst. A novelty by Mr. Burnand is to follow in a few days.

Mr. G. E. Fairchild's Readings at LANGHAM HALL last Saturday attracted a large and appreciative audience. The programme was judiciously arranged, grave and humorous selections alternating, and Mr. Fairchild's rendering was all but faultless.

◆

THE LATE CARLIST WAR.——His Majesty the King of Spain has nominated Mr. John Furley a Commander in the Order of Isabella the Catholic, in recognition of his services to the wounded during the Carlist war, and especially in the three days' battle of Estella in June, 1874. These services were acknowledged by letter at the time; but, owing to the change of Government which subsequently occurred, no decoration was then awarded to Mr. Furley. We may add that this gentleman was acting in Spain as an independent volunteer, and not as representative of the British National Aid Society or any other association.

SPORTING

THE TURF.——Though the curtain fell last week on the last scene of the great yearly Turf drama as enacted at Newmarket, and fell too, let it be truly said, with no slight amount of applause, the legitimate racing season is by no means dead; and nowadays the month of November, perhaps, more than any month of the year, evidences the innate vitality of the sport of racing. Years ago no respectable Turfite would be seen at a meeting after the Newmarket Houghton, and among other reasons was this excellent one, namely, that there was hardly a meeting to be seen at. But "we have altered all that now," and during the next three or four weeks larger fields on an average will be seen contesting events at Liverpool, Shrewsbury, and elsewhere than are usual at the most popular meetings earlier in the season. Reserved, patched-up, and hitherto unfortunate horses will be pulled out by the dozen to make an attempt to earn their hay and corn for the winter, while owners of successful animals will not spare their horseflesh, with trainers' bills and the dull season before them. Hence we may expect first-class racing, as far at least as the number of horses goes, next week at Liverpool, and after that at the Great Shropshire gathering; and if only the bright autumn, or, as we must now say, winter days last, the well accoutred Turfite can watch his favourite sport with greater comfort than under a hot sun. The meetings of this week have been numerous, and each has suffered in the way of attendance from clashing with one or more others. At Brighton there was a full complement of visitors to the course, for the town itself can always supply that, but the counter attractions of Lincoln took many of the chief supporters of racing northwards. But somehow or other these two autumn trysts are unlike those held earlier in the year; they appear to lack spirit, and, Newmarket being excepted, there seems to be some law of nature in operation which renders the success of two meetings at the same place during the season something more than doubtful. However, the racing at both the places just mentioned was good in itself. The Brighton Nursery Handicap saw the upset of a hot favourite in Ultimus, Preciosa, who was but little fancied, winning; and Fay took the Preston Plate, scoring again in the Juvenile Handicap on the Wednesday. Mr. C. Bush, on whom fortune seems to have been smiling more freely of late, had the Ovingdean Plate credited to him by aid of Berzelius. The Autumn Handicap was a failure as regards the number of runners, only three starting, but the race was a most exciting one, Rhidorroch beating Julius Cæsar, the favourite, by a short head. In the Sussex Welter on Wednesday Lord Rosebery had a turn, Strathavon easily beating eight others. The Stewards' Cup, like the Autumn Handicap, failed to produce a decent field, and Dalham, with any odds on him, had only to do an exercise canter to beat Miss Ethus. Lewes, as in the summer, followed Brighton with a meeting, and secured the usual support. At Lincoln Cincinnatus added another to his list of recent victories by taking the Chaplin Stakes, Millicent won the Gamby Nursery, and Grand Flaneur the Johnstone Plate. A fair field of a dozen faced the starter for the popular Great Tom Stakes, Lyceum being made a 2 to 1 favourite, with Ambergris and Umbria next in demand. A sad blow for followers of public form was in store, and Fontarabian, who "on paper" had no possible chance, came in an easy winner by three lengths, the favourite having to put up with second honours.—All lovers of a good horse will regret to hear that it has been found necessary to destroy Thorn, as the bones of the leg would not unite. He took part in no less than sixty races during his career, and up to the day of his accident was as sound as a bell. We have so few horses which train on like Thorn that his loss to the Turf as a stud horse is a very appreciable one.

FOOTBALL.——The Association Contest, which produces many of the most attractive games of the season, is making progress; the Clapham Rovers, High Wycombe, and Maidenhead, having beaten Grantham, Wood Grange, and Reading respectively.—Among the Rugby Union matches, two of the most important have been between Richmond and the Old Cheltonians, won by the former, and between Blackheath and the Engineer College, Cooper's Hill, won by the latter.

AQUATICS.——As we ventured to anticipate, Boyd has given way to Higgins in the matter of cutters, which will be allowed. The race is to take place over the Tyne Championship course on the 14th of January next.—The American Sculling Championship, rowed over a five-mile turning course on the Alleghany River, at Hulton, Philadelphia, has been won for the fifth time by Evan Morris. His antagonist was Patrick Luther, who can claim to have beaten our Higgins at the Centennial Regatta last year.

BICYCLING.——The Fifty Miles Amateur Bicycle Championship was decided on Saturday last at Lillie Bridge in favour of Mr. Harry Osborne, of the Surrey Bicycle Club. He did the distance in 3 hours 18 min. 55 sec., which is the best amateur time on record, and a marvellously good one considering the weather and heavy state of the ground. It is quite possible that with a little more riding Mr. Osborne will be as good a man as the professional champion, J. Keen.

BOXING.——"Fight for the Championship" has been the heading to many of the reports of the "gloved" proceedings at Sadler's Wells Theatre, reminding us of the days of the P.R. It is as well to call things by their right names. This "boxing," as carried out on these occasions, is practically prizefighting, and it ought to be put down at once. Many a blow from a glove is as bad as one from the bare fist. If we are to have this kind of thing why not revive the ancient cestus at once, with its lead and leather thongs?

◆

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME" is to be translated into Spanish, with a preface by Señor Castelar. The sale of the second edition of the work in Paris has already reached 125,000.

THE CAXTON CELEBRATION AND THE WICLIF QUINCENTENARY of the past summer are to be commemorated this month by the publication of a curious Biblia Pauperum by Messrs. Unwin Brothers, of the Gresham Press. The Biblia will contain thirty-eight wood blocks illustrating the Life, Parables, and Miracles of our Saviour, with typical subjects from the Old Testament, engraved in 1470, which appear never to have been used, and which were discovered at Nuremberg in 1832. These blocks will be accompanied by illustrative readings from Wiclif's New Testament, printed in Caxton type on paper made in imitation of that used in the fifteenth century. Dean Stanley will contribute a preface to the volume, which is to be dedicated to Mr. Gladstone, and the proceeds are intended for the "Caxton Commemoration Fund."

SCRAPS

BICYCLES IN LIVERPOOL are now obliged to carry bells after dark on account of the many recent accidents.

A SCHOOL OF ART is to be established in Hyderabad by Sir Salar Jung, who intends to place it under the direction of an Italian artist.

MR. H. M. STANLEY is to receive a special gold medal from the King of Italy. The medal will bear the inscription—"To the intrepid explorer of Equatorial Africa; given by Victor Emmanuel."

THE NEW BRIDGE ACROSS THE TAY having proved so successful, the Firth of Forth will probably be bridged in the same manner, according to Engineering, and the scheme is to be brought forward in the next Session of Parliament.

THE COLLECTION OF PORTRAITS OF THE PHOTO-MEZZOTINT EXHIBITION, which were sold by auction on the dissolution of the firm of Messrs. Fradelle and Marshal, has been purchased by Mr. Albert E. Fradelle. Although the Gallery will not be open as heretofore, Mr. Fradelle is still engaged in adding to the collection for the purpose of making the series of portraits historical in character.

THE ICE TRADE IN THE UNITED STATES is yearly increasing, and has already reached large proportions, the capital invested reaching something like 6,000,000*l.*, five million tons being annually cut for the United States consumption alone. At least, so the Ice Trade Journal, our latest Transatlantic contemporary, tells us. The same paper also prophesies a severe winter. Perhaps the wish is father to the thought.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE is to remain at Ferrol during the winter, while the question of salvage is being decided by the Admiralty Court. The sister needle, which has been offered to the Americans, will probably ornament the New Country before long, as an anonymous New Yorker has promised the 20,000*l.* required for transport expenses. The obelisk, however, is not regarded with particular reverence across the Atlantic, and the New York Christian Union grumbles at 20,000*l.* being expended on "a venerable old carved block of syenite."

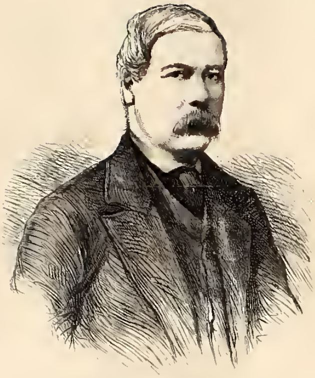
THE ANGLER FISH recently added to the Brighton Aquarium seems healthy and likely to thrive, and will be the first of its kind ever naturalised in a tank, as all other specimens have died in captivity. The fish has a curious method of attracting its prey. At the top of its head, near the nostrils, is a filament with a glittering piece of skin at the end, which the creature works like a rod and fly to serve as a lure to small fish. The prey are speedily attracted and swim round the bait, not noticing the angler, which buries itself in the sand and opens its mouth to engulf the victims.

A SUBMARINE TELEPHONE has been sunk at the entrance of the harbour of San Francisco, and connected with the Science Academy for the purpose of making experiments. It was found to transmit sound perfectly, as the experimentalists clearly distinguished the movement of a great body passing over the instrument, and the cry of sailors hauling in the ropes, proving the entry of a ship at the Golden Gate. As, however, the tide interfered with the telephone it was moved, and a net full of rock cod were suspended over it, when the noise of the fish struggling to escape was quite audible, while sounds were heard as if the fish uttered cries such as "Ga-a," "Ke-a," "Pi-a," "Ta."

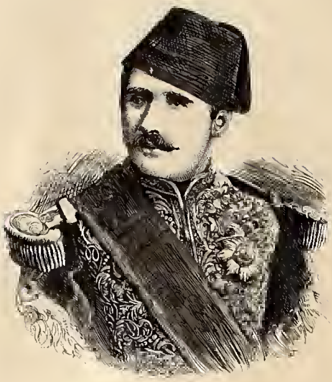
AN INTERESTING MARRIAGE, Mayfair tells us, was celebrated the other day at Moscow, the bride being a lady of considerable beauty, boundless wealth, and aged twenty-two. The bridegroom was four-score and six, and his profession was that of begging. The fact is that the young lady's fortune could come to her only upon marriage. Her relatives had fixed upon a parti who was particularly obnoxious to her. Still she wanted her fortune, and accordingly she cast her thoughts upon an old beggar man to whom she had been generous for some years, and she undertook to pay him 300 roubles if he would marry her and straightway depart, never to see her any more. These conditions he cheerfully accepted, and the marriage took place, all the beggars of the town assembling to see the ceremony.

LONDON MORTALITY still further increased last week, and 1,499 deaths were registered, against 1,403 during the previous seven days, showing an increase of 96, being 30 above the average, and at the rate of 22·1 per 1,000. There were 14 deaths from small-pox (an increase of 6), 67 from measles (an increase of 31), 6 from diphtheria (a decline of 3), 28 from whooping-cough (an increase of 7), 39 from different forms of fever (a decline of 8, being 5 below the average), 23 from diarrhœa, and 64 from scarlet fever (a decline of 4). The Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals and the London Fever Hospital contained 154 scarlet fever patients on Saturday last. Owing to the effect of the recent cold nights, deaths from diseases of the respiratory organs further rose to 371, an increase of 74, and exceeding the average by 84, including 212 from bronchitis and 113 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 56 deaths. There were 2,474 births registered, against 2,527 the previous week. The duration of registered sunshine was 10·8 hours, the sun being 70·7 hours above the horizon. The mean temperature was 49·7 deg., or 1·8 deg. above the average.

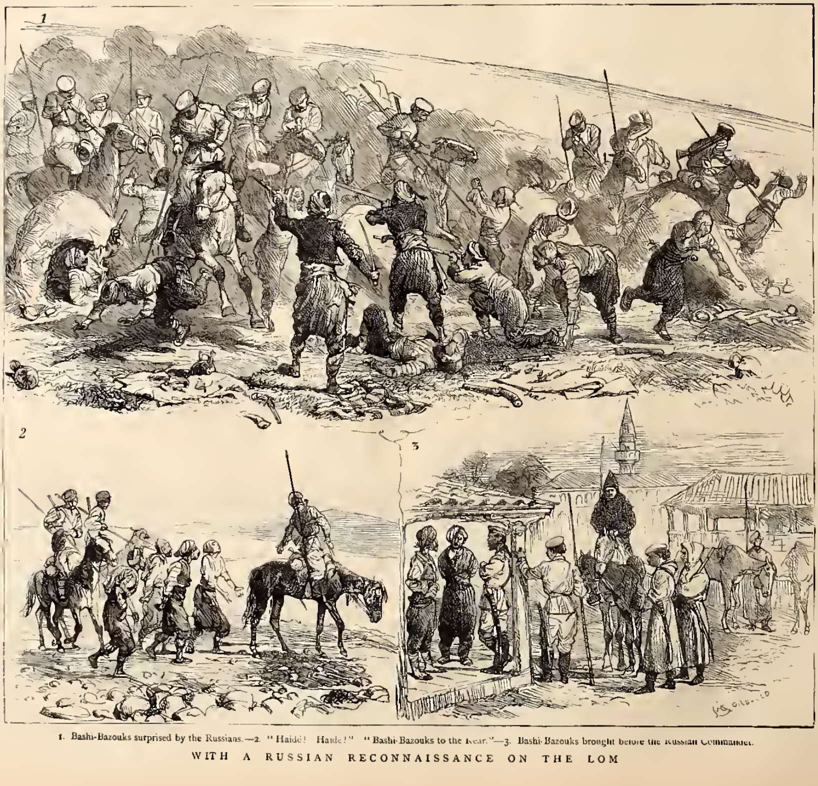
GENERAL GRANT has not been allowed to enjoy his visit to Paris in peace, as a zealous reporter of the Figaro took the first opportunity to interview him, hoping to break through the ex-President's proverbial taciturnity. The reporter did not gain very much information. Asking what was the general's impression of Paris, General Grant replied that he had not formed an opinion, as he had driven from the railway to the hotel in a closed carriage, and he had only seen the cushions of the vehicle. "But you have visited Marshal MacMahon," persisted the "special," "what do you think of our President?" "Oh, we did not understand each other very well," was the reply. "I cannot speak a word of French nor he a word of English, so he nodded to me and I to him, he offered me his hand, I gave him mine, and that was all." General Grant, however, was much pleased with Madame MacMahon, and was surprised that a Frenchwoman should speak English so beautifully. On French politics the General refused to offer an opinion, saying he had not studied the subject, and the reporter retired vanquished. General Grant, however, is an adept at disposing of troublesome people. During his Presidency he was much worried by some one asking for an appointment, and at last, out of patience, told the importunate person to learn Spanish, and come back to him in six months. The man hoped for a diplomatic appointment in Spain, and appeared in due time declaring triumphantly that he perfectly understood Spanish. "Well," said Grant, "go and read 'Don Quixote' in the original, I hear it's much more interesting than the translation."



WITH THE RUSSIANS—GENERAL TODLEBEN
The Defender of Sebastopol, now Directing the Operations before Plevna



WITH THE TURKS—PRINCE HASSAN
Son of the Khedive of Egypt, and Commander of the Egyptian Contingent



1. Bashi-Bazouks surprised by the Russians.—2. "Haidé! Haide!" "Bashi-Bazouks to the Rear."—3. Bashi-Bazouks brought before the Russian Commander.

WITH A RUSSIAN RECONNAISSANCE ON THE LOM

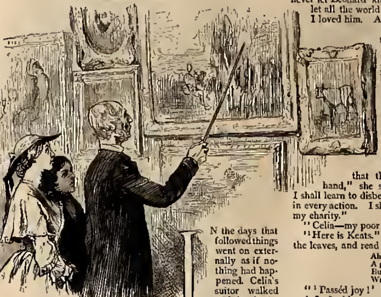
BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE PONTIFEX COLLECTION



IN the days that followed things went on externally as if nothing had happened. Celia's suitor walked with her in the town, was seen with her in public places, appeared in church morning and evening—the second function must have exercised his soul heavily—and said no word. Mr. Tyrrell, deceived by this appearance of peace, resumed his wonted aspect, and was self-reliant, and sometimes as blusterous as ever. Celia alone seemed to remember the subject. For some days she tried to read and talk as usual, but her cheek was paler, and her manner distraite. Yet I could say nothing. The wound was too fresh, the anxiety was still there, it was one of those blows which, though their worst effects may be averted, leave scars behind which cannot be eradicated. The scar in Celia's soul was that for the first time in her life a suspicion had been forced upon her that her father was not—had not been——Let us not put it into words.

To speak of such a suspicion would have been an agony too bitter for her, and even too bitter for me. Yet I knew, by the manner of the man, by the words of the German, that he was, in some way, for some conduct unknown, of which he was now ashamed, under this man's power. I could not tell Celia what I knew. How was she to tell me the dreadful suspicion that rose like a spectre in the night unbidden, awful? We were only more silent, we sat together without speaking; sometimes I caught her eye resting for a moment on her father with a pained wonder, sometimes she would break off the music, and say with a sigh that she could play no more.

One afternoon, three or four days after the first opening of the business, I found her in the library, a small room on the first floor dignified by that title, where Mr. Tyrrell kept the few books of general literature he owned, and Celia kept all hers. She had gathered on the table all the books which we were so fond of reading together—chiefly the poets—and was taking them up one after the other, turning over their pages with loving, regretful looks.

She greeted me with her sweet smile.

"I am thinking, Laddy, what to do with these books if—if—I have to say what Papa wants me to say."

"Do with them, Cis?"

"Yes," she replied, "it would be foolish to keep things which are not very ornamental and would no longer be useful."

"Our poor poets are a good deal knocked about," I said, taking up the volumes in hope of diverting her thoughts; "I always told you that Keats wasn't made for laying in the grass," and indeed that poor bard showed signs of many dews upon his scarlet cloth bound back.

"He is best for reading on the grass, Laddy. Think of the many hours of joy we have had with Hyperion under the elms. And now, I suppose, we shall never have any more. Life is very short, for some of us."

"But—Cis—why no more hours of pleasure and poetry?"

"I do not know when that man may desire an answer. And I know that if he claims it at once—to-morrow—next day—what answer I am to give. I watch my father, Laddy, and I read the answer in his face. Whatever happens, I must do what is best for him."

"Put off the answer, Cis, till Leonard comes home."

"If we can," she sighed—"if we can. Promise me one thing, Laddy—promise me faithfully. If I have—if I must consent—never let Leonard know the reason: never let any one know; let all the world think that I have accepted—him—because I loved him. As if any woman could ever love him!"

Then he had not deceived her with her smooth and plausible manner.

"I promise you so much at least," I said. "No one shall know, poor Cis, the reason. It shall be a secret between us. But you have not said 'Yes' to him yet."

"I may very soon have to say it, Laddy. I shall give you all this poetry. We have read it together so much that I should always think of you if I ever try and read it alone. And it would make me too wretched. I shall have nothing more to do with the noble thoughts and Divine longings of these great men: they will all be dead in my bosom; I shall try to forget that they ever existed. Herr Räumer—my husband," she shuddered—"would not understand them. I shall learn to disbelieve everything: I shall find a base motive in every action. I shall cease to hope: I shall lose my faith and my charity."

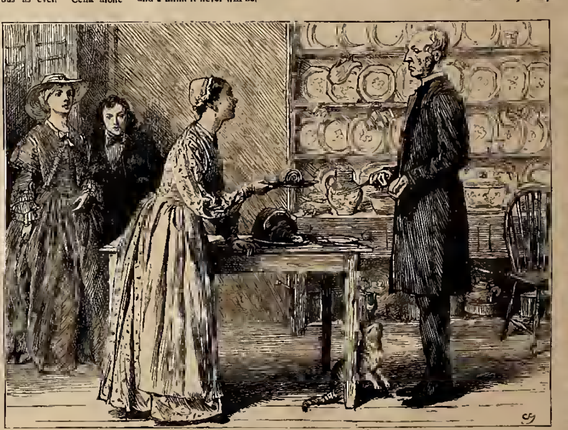
"Celia—my poor Celia—do not talk like that."

"Here is Keats." She opened him at random, turned over the leaves, and read aloud—

Ah! would 'twere so with many
A gentle girl and boy!
But were there ever any
Writhed not at passéd joy?

"'Passéd joy!' We shall not be able to go out together, you and I, Laddy, any more, nor to read under the elms, nor to look out over the ramparts up the Harbour at high tide, and you will leave off giving me music lessons—and when Leonard comes home he will not be my Leonard any more. Only let him never know, dear Laddy."

"He shall never know, Cis. But the word is not spoken yet, and I think it never will be."



"That is not for me, Anne"

She shook her head.

"There is our Wordsworth. Of course he must be given up too. When the whole life is of the earth, earthy, what room could there be there for Wordsworth! Why," she looked among the sonnets, "this must have been written especially for me. Listen—

O Friend! I know not which way I must look
For comfort, being, as I am, opprest
To think that now our life is only dressed
For show . . . .
. . . .
The homely beauty of the good old cause
Is gone: our peace, our fearful innocence,
And pure religion breathing household laws.

"Fancy the household laws of Herr Räumer," she added, bitterly.

She was in sad and despairing mood that morning.

I took the book from her hand—what great things there are in Wordsworth, and what rubbish!—and found another passage.

"Those first affections
Those shadowy recollections,
Which be they what they may
Are yet the fountain light of all our day
Are yet a masterlight of all our seeing,
Uphold us—cherish—and have power to make
Our noisy years seems moments in the being
Of the eternal silence: truths that wake
To perish never:
Which neither listlessness nor mad endeavour,
Nor man nor boy,
Nor all that is at enmity with joy,
Can utterly abolish or destroy."

"Do you think, you silly Celia, if things came to the very worst—if you were—let me say it out for once—if you were tied for life to this man, with whom you have no sympathy, that you would forget the beautiful things which you have read and dreamed? They can never be forgotten. Why, they lie all about your heart, the great thoughts of God and Heaven, what this beautiful earth might be and what you yourself would wish to be; they are your guardian angels, who stand like Ithuriel to ward off evil dreams and basenesses. They cannot be driven away because you have placed them there, sentinels of your life. If—if he—were ten times as cold, ten times as unworthy of you as he seems, he could not touch your inner life. He could only make your outer life unhappy. And then, Celia, I think—I think—I think that Leonard would kill him."

"If Leonard will care any more about me," she murmured through her tears. "But he will not. I shall be degraded in his eyes. He will come home with happier recollections of brighter scenes and women far better and more beautiful than I can be, even in his memory."

"Celia," I cried hotly, "that is unkind of you. You cannot mean it. Leonard can never forget you. There will be no scenes so happy in his recollection as the scenes of the boyhood; no one whom he will more long to see than little Celia—little no longer now, and—oh! Cis—Cis, how beautiful you are!"

"Laddy, you are the best brother in all the world. But do not flatter me. You know I like to think myself pretty. I am so vain."

"I am not flattering you, my dear. Of course, I think you are the most beautiful girl in all the world. Ah! if I could only draw you and put all your soul into your eyes as a great painter would. If I were Raphael I would make you St. Catharine—no, St. Cecilia—sitting at the organ, looking up as you do sometimes when we read together, as when I play Beethoven, and your soul opens like a flower."

"Laddy—Laddy."

"I would make your lips trembling, and your head a little bent back, so as to show the sweet outlines, and make all the world fall in love with you. . . . Don't cry, my own dear sister. See, Leonard will be home again soon triumphant, bringing joy to all of us. Our brave Leonard—and all will be well. I know all will go well. And this monstrous thing shall not be done."

She put her arms round my neck, and laid her cheek against mine. "Thank God," she said simply, "for my brother."

By this time I had mastered my vain and selfish passion. Celia was my sister, and could never be anything else. As if in the time when companionship is as necessary as light and air, it was not a great thing to have such a companion as Celia! In youth we cling to one another, and find encouragement in confession and confidence. David was young when he loved Jonathan. It is when we grow older that we shrink into ourselves and forget the sweet old friendships.

This little talk finished, Celia became more cheerful, and we presently stole out at the garden gate for fear of being intercepted by the suitor, who was as ubiquitous as a Prussian Uhlan, and went for a ramble along the beach, where a light breeze was crisping the water into tiny ruffles of wavelets, and driving about the white-sailed yachts like butterflies. The fresh sea air brightened her cheek, and gave elasticity to her limbs. She forgot her anxieties, laughed, sang little snatches, and was as merry as a child again.

"Let us go and call at Aunt Jane's," she cried, when we left the beach, and were striking across the furze-covered common.

To call upon Mrs. Pontifex was never an inspiriting thing to do. She had a way of picking out texts to suit your case and hurling them at your head, which sent you away far more despondent about the future than her husband's sermons. There is always this difference between a woman of Aunt Jane's persuasion and a man of the same school; that the woman really believes it all, and the man has by birth, by accident, by mental twist, for reasons of self interest, talked himself into a creed which he does not hold at heart, so far as he has power of self examination. Mr. Pontifex had lost that power, I believe.

They lived in a villa overlooking the common. Mrs. Pontifex liked the situation principally because it enabled her to watch the "Sabbath breakers," viz., the people who walked on Sunday afternoon, and the unthinking sinners, who strolled arm in arm upon the breezy common on summer evenings. The villa had formerly possessed a certain beauty of its own, being covered over with creepers, but Mrs. Pontifex removed them all, and it now stood in naked ugliness, square and flat-roofed. There was a garden in front, of rigid and austere appearance, planted with the less showy shrubs, and never allowed to put on the holiday garb of summer flowers. Within, the house was like a place of tombs, so cold, so full of monumental mahogany, so bristling with chairs of little ease.

To our great joy, Mrs. Pontifex was out. Her husband, the servant said, with a little hesitation, was at home.

"Then we will go in," said Celia. "Where is he, Anne?"

"Well, Miss," she said, in apology, "at present master's in the front kitchen."

In fact, there we found the unhappy Mr. Pontifex. He was standing at the table, with a most gloomy expression on his severe features. Before him stood a half-cut, cold boiled leg of mutton. He had a knife in one hand and a piece of bread in another.

"This is all," he said, sorrowfully, "that I shall get to-day. Mrs. Pontifex said that there was to be no dinner. She has gone to a Dorcas meeting——No, thank you, Anne, I cannot eat any more—ahem—any more boiled mutton. The human palate—alas! that we poor mortals should think of such things—does not accept boiled mutton with pleasure. But what is man that he should turn away from his food? A single glass of beer, if you please, Anne."

"Do have another slice of mutton, sir," said the servant, in sympathising tones.

"No, Anne,"—there was an infinite sadness in his voice. "No, I thank you."

"There's some cold roly-poly in the cupboard, sir. Try a bit of that."

She brought it out. It was a piece of the inner portion, that part which contains most jam.

Mr. Pontifex shook his head in deep despondency.

"That is not for ME, Anne," he said, "I always have to eat the ends."

"Then why do you stand it?" I said. "You are a man, and ought to be master in your own house."

"You think so, Johnny?" he replied. "You are young. You are not, again, like St. Peter—ahem—a married man. Let us go upstairs."

He led us into his study, which was a large room, decorated with an immense quantity of pictures. The house, indeed, was full of pictures, newly arrived, the collection of a brother, lately deceased, of the Rev. John Pontifex. I am not learned in paintings, but I am pretty sure that the collection on the walls were copies as flagrant as anything ever put up at Christie's.

But Mr. Pontifex thought differently.

"You have not yet seen my picture gallery, Johnny," he said. "The collection was once the property of my brother the Rev. Joseph Pontifex, now,—alas!—in the bosom of Abraham. He was formerly my coadjutor when I was in sole charge at Dillmington. It was commonly said by the Puseyites at the time that there was a Thief in the Pulpit and a Liar in the Reading Desk. So great—ahem!—was our pulpit power that it drew forth these Fearful denunciations. I rejoice to say that I was the—ahem! the—Liar."

It was hard to see where the rejoicing ought properly to come in. But no doubt he knew.

"They are beautiful pictures, some of them," said Celia, kindly.

Mr. Pontifex took a walking-stick, and began to go round like a long-necked, very solemn showman at a circus.

"These are 'Nymphs about—ahem—to Bathe.' A masterpiece by Caracci. The laughter of those young persons has probably long since been turned into mourning.

"'The Death of Saint Chrysostom,' supposed to be by Leonardo Da Vinci. The Puseyites go to Chrysostom as to a father. Well; they may go to the muddy streams, if they please. I go to the pure—the pure Fountain, Johnny.

"'Pope Leo the Tenth,' by one Dosso Dossi, of whom, I confess, I had never heard. I suppose that there are more Popes than any other class of persons now in misery."

He shook his head, as he said this, with a smile of peculiar satisfaction, and went on to the next picture.

"A soldier, by Wouvermans; on a white horse. Probably the original of this portrait was in his day an extremely profligate person. But he has long since gone to his long—no doubt his very long—account.

"That is the 'The Daughter of Herodias Dancing.' I have always considered dancing a most immoral pastime, and in the days of my youth found it so, I regret to say.

"'The Mission of Xavier.' He was, alas! a Papist, and is now, I believe, what they are pleased to call a saint. In other respects, he was, perhaps, a good man, as goodness shows to the world. That is, a poor gilded exterior, hiding corruption. How different from our good Bishop Heber, the author of that sweet miss—i—o—na—ry poem which we all know by heart, and can never forget.

From Greenland's icy mountains—
From Greenland's icy mountains—
From Greenland's—ahem!—icy—

—but my memory fails me. That is, perhaps, the result of an imperfect meal."

"Sit down, my dear uncle," said Celia. "You must be fatigued. What was Aunt Jane thinking of to have no dinner?"

"Your great-aunt, Celia," said Mr. Pontifex, with a very long sigh, "is a woman of—ve—ry—remarkable Christian graces and virtues. She excels in what I may call the—the—ahem—the very rare art of compelling others to go along with her. To-day we fast, and to-morrow we may be called upon to subdue the natural man in some other, perhaps—at least I hope—in a less trying method."

We both laughed, but Mr. Pontifex shook his head. "Let me point out one or two more pictures of my collection," he said. "There are nearly one thousand altogether, collected by my brother Joseph, who resided in Rome, the very heart of the Papacy—you never knew Joseph, Celia—during the last ten years of his life. That landscape, the trees of which, I confess, appear to me unlike any trees with which I am personally acquainted—is by Salvator Rosa; that Madonna and Child—whom the Papists ignorantly worship,—is by Sasso Ferrato; that group" (it was a sprawling mass of intertwisted limbs) "is by Michael Angelo, the celebrated master; the waterfall which you are admiring, Celia, is a Ruysdael, and supposed to be priceless; the pig—alas! that men should waste their talents in delineating such animals—is by Teniers; the cow by Berghem; that—ahem!—that infamous female" (it was a wood nymph, and a bad copy) "is a Rubens. The Latin rubeo or rubesco is—unless my memory again fails me—to blush. Rightly is that painter so named. No doubt he has long since—but I refrain."

"Do you think, Celia," I asked on the way home, "that Mr. Pontifex dwells with pleasure in the imagination of the things which are always on his lips?"

CHAPTER XX

THE RIGHT OF REVOLT

THE Polish Barrack in 1858 had ceased to exist. There were, in fact, very few Poles left in the town to occupy it. A good many were dead. Some went away in 1854 to join the Turks. Some, grown tired of the quasi-garrison life, left it, and entered into civil occupations in the town. Some, but very few, drifted back to Poland and made their peace with the authorities. Some emigrated. Of all the bearded men I knew as a boy scarcely twenty were left, and these were scattered about the town, still in the "enjoyment" of the tenpence a day granted them by the British Government. I seldom met any of them except Wassielewski, who never wearied of his paternal care. The old man still pursued his calling—that of a fiddler to the sailors. The times, however, were changed. Navy agents were things of the past—a subject of wailing among the Tribes. Sailors' Homes were established; the oiled curls had given way to another and a manlier fashion of short hair. The British sailor was in course of transformation. He no longer made it a rule to spend all his money as fast as he received it; he was sometimes a teetotaller; he was sometimes religious, with views of his own about Election; he sometimes read; and, though he generally drank when drink was in the way, he was not often picked up blind drunk in the gutter. The Captain said he supposed men could fight as well if they were always sober as if they were sometimes drunk; and that, always provided there were no sea-lawyers aboard, he saw no reason why a British crew should not be all good-character men, though in his day good character often went with malingering. The trade of fiddling, however, was still remunerative, and Wassielewski—Fiddler Ben, as the sailors called him—the steadiest and liveliest fiddler of all, had a large clientèle.

At this juncture the staunch old rebel, as I have explained, was in spirits, because he had wind of a new movement. The Poles were to make another effort—he was really five years too early, because the rebellion did not begin till 1863, but that was not his fault; it would be once more the duty of every patriot to rally round the insurrection and strike another blow for Fatherland. Not that he looked for success. No one knew better than this hero of a hundred village fights that the game was hopeless. His policy was one of simple devotion. In every generation an insurrection—perhaps half-a-dozen—was to be got up. Every Pole who was killed fertilised the soil with new memories of cruelty and blood. It was the duty, therefore, of every Pole to get killed if necessary. No Red Irreconcileable ever preached a policy so sanguinary and thorough. Out of the accumulated histories of rebellion was to arise, not in his time, indignation so universal that the whole world would with irrepressible impulse rush to rescue Poland from the triple grasp of the Eagles. To bring about this end but one thing was needed—absolute self-sacrifice.

I knew when he met me, the day after Celia's birthday, and told me that the time was coming, what he meant. I, like himself, was to be a victim to the Holy Cause. I was a hunchback, a man of peace, even a Protestant. That did not matter. I bore a historic name, and I was to give the cause the weight of my name as well as the slender support of my person. And, as I have no desire to pose as a hero, I may at once confess that I felt at first little enthusiasm for the work, and regarded my possible future with feelings of unworthy reluctance.

I suppose that Wassielewski saw this, because he tried to inflame my passion with stories of Russian wrong.

As yet I knew, as I have said, little or nothing about my parentage or the story of my birth. That I should be proud because I was a Pulaski; that I should be brave because I was a Pulaski; that I owed myself to Poland, because I was a Pulaski—was all I had learned.

I suppose, unless the old patriot lied—and I do not think he did—that no more revolting story of cruel repression exists than that of the Russian treatment of Poland between the years 1830 and 1835. Wassielewski, with calm face and eyes of fire, used to pour out these horrors to me till my brain reeled. He knew them all; it was his business to know them, and never to forget them or let others forget them. If he met a Pole he would fall to reviving the old memories of Polish atrocities—if he met a "friend of Poland" he would dilate upon them as if he loved to talk of them.

History is full of the crimes of nations, but there is no crime so great, no wickedness in all the long annals of the world, worse than the story of Russia after that revolution of hapless Poland. We are taught to believe that the wickedness of a single man, in some way, recoils upon his own head, that sooner or later he is punished—raro antecedentem scelestum—but what about the wickedness of a country? Will there fall no retribution upon Russia, upon Prussia, upon Austria? Have the wheels of justice stopped? Or, in some way which we cannot divine, will the sins of the fathers be visited upon the children for the third and fourth generation? We know not. We see the ungodly flourish like a green bay tree, his eyes swelling out with fatness, and there is no sign or any foreshadowing of the judgment that is to fall upon him. We do not want judgment and revenge. We want only such restitution as is possible; for nothing can give us back the men who have died, the women who have sorrowed, the children who have been carried away. But let us have back our country, our liberty, and our lands.

A dream—an idle dream. Poland is no more. The Poles are become Austrians, Prussians, and, above all, Muscovites.

Wassilewski, a very Accusing Spirit, set himself to fill my mind with stories of tyranny and oppression. The national schools suppressed, a foreign religion imposed, the constitution violated, rebels shot—all these things one expects in the history of conquest. What, however, makes the story of Russian barbarism in Poland unique in the History of Tyranny seems the personal part taken by the Czar and the members of his illustrious family. It was the Czar who ordered, in 1824, twenty-five thousand Poles to be carried to the territory of the Tchernemovski Cossacks. The order was issued, with the usual humanity of St. Petersburg, in the dead of winter, so that most of them perished on the way. It was the Czar who, in 1830, on the occasion of a local outbreak in Sebastopol, ordered with his own hand that the only six prisoners—who had been arrested almost at random—should be shot: that thirty-six more were to be apprehended and knouted: that all the inhabitants without distinction should be expelled the town and sent to the villages of the Crimea; and that the place should be razed to the ground. Every clause except the last was exactly carried into effect. It was the Czar who ordered the library of Warsaw to be transported to St. Petersburg. It was the Czar who formed the humane project of brutalising the Polish peasantry by encouraging the sale of spirits by the Jews. It was the Czar who transported thousands of Polish nobles and soldiers to Siberia. And it was the Czar's brother, the Grand Duke Constantine, whose brutality precipitated the rebellion of 1832.

There were two things which Wassielewski as yet hid from me, because they concerned myself too nearly, and because I think he feared the effect they might have upon me. That, so far, was kind of him. It would have been kinder still had he never told them at all. Even now, nearly twenty years since I learned them, I cannot think of them without a passionate beating of the heart: I cannot meet a Russian without instinctive and unconquerable hatred: I cannot name Czar Nicholas without mental execration: and not I only, but every Pole by blood, scattered as we are up and down the face of the world, hopeless of recovering our national liberty, content to become peaceful citizens of France, England, or the States, cannot but look on any disaster that befalls Russia as a welcome instalment of that righteous retribution which will some day, we believe, overtake the country for the sins of the Romanoffs.

In those days, however, I had not yet learned the whole. I knew enough, in a general way, to fill my soul with hatred against the Russian name and sympathy with my own people. I had, as yet, received no direct intimation from the old conspirator that he expected me, too, to throw in my lot with him. But I knew it was coming.

I was certainly more English than Polish. I could not speak my father's language. I belonged to the English Church, I was educated in the manners of thought common to Englishmen, insular, perhaps, and narrow; when the greatness of England was spoken of I took that greatness to myself, and was glad. England's victories were mine, England's cause my own, and it was like the loss of half my identity to be reminded that I was not a Briton at all, but a Pole, the son of a long line of Poles, with a duty owed to my country. Like most men, when the path of duty seems confused I was content to wait, to think as much as possible of other things, to put it off, always with the possible future unpleasantly visible, a crowd of peasants armed with scythes and rusty firelocks—I among them—a column of grey coats sweeping us down, old Wassielewski lying dead upon the ground, a solitary prisoner, myself, kneeling with bandaged eyes before an open grave with a dozen guns, at twenty paces, pointing straight at my heart. Nor did I yet feel such devotion to Poland as was sufficient to make the prospect attractive. Also I felt, with some shame, that I could not attain to the exasperation at which Wassielewski habitually kept his nerves.

"I hear," said Herr Räumer one evening, "I hear that your friends in Poland are contemplating another insurrection."

"How do you learn that?" I asked.

"I happened to hear something about it from a foreign correspondent," he replied carelessly. "The Russians, who are not fools, generally know what is going on. Up to a certain point things are allowed to go on. That amuses people. It is only by bad management that conspiracies ever get beyond that point. The Grand Duke Constantine in '31 made enormous mistakes. Well, I had a letter from Berlin to-day, and heard something about it. Here we are at the respectable Bramblers'. Come upstairs, and talk for half-an-hour."

"Besides"—after he had lit a cigar, got out his bottle of Hock, and was seated in his wooden armchair—"besides, one gets foreign papers, and reads between the lines if one is wise. There is a bundle of Cracow papers on the table. Would you like to read them?"

I was ashamed to confess that I could not read my native tongue.

"That is a pity. One multiplies oneself by learning languages."

"Music only has one language. But how many do you know?"

"A few. Only the European languages. German, Russian, French, English. I believe I speak them all equally well. Polish is almost Russian. He who speaks German easily learns Danish, Swedish, and Dutch. Turkish, I confess, I am only imperfectly acquainted with. It is a difficult language."

"But how did you learn all these languages?"

He smiled superior.

"To begin with," he said, "the Eastern Europeans—you are not yourself a stupid Englishman—have a genius for language. There we do not waste our time in playfields, as these English boys do. So we learn,—that is nothing—to talk languages. It is so common that it does not by itself advance a man. It is like reading, a part of education. Among other things you see it is useful in enabling me to read papers in Polish, and to get an inkling how things look in that land of patriots. But you do not want papers, you have your friends here. Of course they keep you informed?"

"I have one or two friends among the few Poles that are left. Wassielewski, my father's devoted servant, is one of them."

"Your father's devoted servant! Really! Devoted? That is touching. I like the devotion of that servant who leaves his master to die, and escapes to enjoy an English pension. One rates that kind of fidelity at a very high value."

The man was nothing unless he could sneer. In that respect he was the incarnation of the age, whose chief characteristic is Heine's "universal sneer." No virtue, no patriotism, no disinterested ambition, no self-denial, no toil for others, nothing but self. A creed which threatens to grow, because it is so simple that every one can understand it. And as the largest trees often grow out of the smallest seeds, one cannot guess what may be the end of it.

"You are right, however," he went on, nursing his crossed leg. "At your age, and with your imperfect education, it is natural that you should be generous. It is pleasant in youth to think that a man can ever be influenced by other than personal considerations. I never did think so. But then my school and yours are different."

"Then what was the patriotism of the Poles?"

"Vanity and self-interest, Ladislas Pulaski. Desire to show off—desire to get something better. Look at the Irish. Look at the Chartists. Who led them? Demagogues fighting for a Cause, because the Cause gives them money and notoriety."

"And no self-denial at all?"

"Plenty. For the satisfaction of vanity. Vanity is the chief motive power in life. All men are vain; all men are ambitious; but most men in time of danger—and this saves us—are cowards. I am sixty-two years of age. I have seen——" here he hesitated a moment—"I have seen many Revolutions and insurrections, especially in 1848. What is my experience? This. In every conspiracy, where there are three men, one of them is a traitor and a spy. Remember that, should your friends try to drag you into a hopeless business. You will have a spy in your midst. The Secret Service knows all that is done. The other two men are heroes, if you please. That is, they pose. Put them up to open trial and they speechify; turn them off to be shot and they fold their arms in an heroic attitude. I believe," he added, with a kind of bitterness, "that they actually enjoy being shot."

"You have really seen patriots shot?"

"Hundreds," he replied, with a careless wave of his hand. "The sight lost its interest to me, so much alike were the details of each."

"Where was it?"

"In——Paris," he replied. "Of course the papers said as little as could be said about the shootings. I am sure, in fact, now I come to remember, that they did enjoy being shot. The Emperor Nicholas, whose genius lay in suppressing insurrections, knew a much better plan. He had his rebels beaten to death; at least after a thousand strokes there was not much life left. Now, not even the most sturdy patriot likes to be beaten to death. You cannot pose or make fine speeches while you are walking down a double file of soldiers each with a stick in his hand."

The man's expression was perfectly callous: he talked lightly and without the slightest indication of a feeling that the punishment was diabolical.

"Except the theatrical heroes, therefore, the gentlemen who pose, and would almost as soon be shot or not, provided it is done publicly, every man has his price. You only have to find it out."

"I would as soon believe," I cried, "what you said last week—that every woman has her price, too."

"Of course she has," he replied. "Woman is only imperfect man. Bribe her with dress and jewels; give her what she most wants—Love—Jealousy—Revenge—most likely she is guided by one of those feelings, and to gratify that one she will be traitor, spy, informer, anything."

I suppose I looked what I felt, because he laughed, spoke in softer voice, and touched my arm gently.

"Why do I tell you these things, Ladislas Pulaski? It is to keep you out of conspiracies, and because you will never find them out for yourself. You have to do with the jeunes élèves, the ingenues, the naives, the innocent. You sit among them like a Cherub in a seraglio of uncorrupted houris. Happy boy!

"Keep that kind of happiness," he went on. "Do not be persuaded by any Polish exile—your father's servant or anybody else—to give up Arcadia for Civil War and Treachery. I spoke to you from my own experience. Believe me, it is wide. If I had any illusions left, the year of Forty-eight was enough to dispel them all. One remembers the crowd of crack-brained theatrical heroes, eager to pose; the students mad to make a new world: the stupid rustics who thought the Day of no work, double pay, and treble rations was actually come. One thinks of these creatures massacred like sheep, and one gets angry at being asked to admire the leaders who preached the crusade of rebellion."

"You speak only of spies, informers, and demagogues. How about those who fought from conviction?"

"I know nothing about them," he replied, looking me straight in the face. "My knowledge of rebels is chiefly derived from the informers."

It was a strange thing to say, but I came to understand it later on.

He threw his cigar ash into the fireplace, and poured out a glass of the pale yellow wine which he so much loved.

"Never mind my experience," he said, rising and standing over me, looking gigantic with his six feet two compared with my bent and shrunken form, crouched beneath him in a chair. "I am going to rest and be happy. I shall do no more work in the world. Henceforth I devote myself to Celia. Here is the health of my bride. Hoch!"

(To be continued)

FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER

THE discussion of bridal attire seems scarcely appropriate to the gloomy foggy month of November, yet so many fashionable weddings have recently come off and are about to take place, that we think it well to devote some space to this subject. From a host of charming wedding toilettes we have selected a few for description. Bridal dress of rich white satin, made with a long Court-train fastened at the shoulders; the front of the dress, from the throat to the hem, trimmed with chain wreaths of orange-blossom and myrtle at intervals; large plain tulle veil thrown over the coiffure, and falling in soft folds almost to the ground. The bridesmaids' dresses were a mixture of pale salmon-coloured cashmere and silk, bonnets to match, as did also the boots and gloves. The costumes of the guests were remarkably handsome, for the most part of velvet, in warm dark shades; one was of rich maroon velvet, made with a square train over a dress of cream-coloured satin, elaborately trimmed with Mechlin lace, bonnet to match. Another was of myrtle-green velvet over pale sea-green satin. At another wedding the youthful bride wore pearl-white satin, with long plain train, the front breadth embroidered in seed pearls; her plain tulle veil was fixed on with a coronet of pearls; sprays of orange-blossom were placed in her hair. The six bridesmaids wore delicate pink poplin train dresses, trimmed en tablier with puffings of pink satin, Valenciennes lace, and insertion, wide at the hem, graduated till the trimming was quite narrow at the throat, the sleeves of poplin were puffed with satin, the deep lace cuffs were nearly up to the elbow; the hats were of pink poplin lined with fluted satin; very long ostrich feathers encircled the crown, on the left side of each hat was a tiny humming bird, not one of the six like the other, a style of trimming cruel, but very effective. On all occasions, whether for wedding or other dress toilettes, the boots or shoes should match the dress in colour if not in material. At a third wedding, the bride wore a very rich white satin dress, with a long square train, on the front was a cascade of lace; white satin bonnet and feathers, over which was thrown a magnificent Brussels lace veil. The bridesmaids wore Princess dresses of pale fawn-coloured cashmere, with laveuse tunics of real Cardinal red silk, sashes to match, the bonnets were of stone-coloured felt, helmet shape, trimmed with stone-coloured and Cardinal feathers. The bride's travelling dress, of Navy blue—very fine serge—was simply made buttoned down the left side, as was also the jacket, the bonnet of dark brown felt was relieved with touches of blue.

Fortunately for bridesmaids, who are often called upon to officiate for their friends and relatives, the stereotyped "locket with the initials of the bride and bridegroom elect" is no longer considered the orthodox gift from the happy pair to the demoiselles d'honneur. Fans, hand-painted on silk or satin, and mounted in ivory or mother-of-pearl, rings, bracelets, or other useful ornaments of every description are now given.

In anticipation of a very severe winter, which is prognosticated by savants, materials which combine warmth with lightness are in great request, foremost amongst them is camel's hair, which is the leading woollen material of the season. A stone-coloured costume of camel's hair trimmed with fur, velvet, or passementerie, is both elegant and comfortable; two other materials, which are not quite so warm as the above, but almost equally in favour, are bourrette, a pliable mixture of silk and wool, and a French cord which is known by the plebeian name of corduroy. Velvet, and its useful substitute velveteen, are much used both for costumes and for trimming. As we stated last month green of every shade and variety is the favourite colour for this winter; anybody and everybody can wear one or other of its variations of hue; it is a colour that will blend with any other, pale blue, pink, cream, cardinal. Nature has taught us this long ago, for what is the most beautiful flower without foliage? A very pretty walking dress was recently shown to us, it was made thus: Materials, rifle green and a lighter shade of cloth; on the dark skirt was a pleated flounce about seven inches deep, corded top and bottom with the light shade; the upper skirt was made in three tiers, each one corded; a jacket corded to match, on which were three capes, the first, reaching to the shoulder, was seven inches, the second five and a half, the third three and a half deep. Down the front of the upper skirt were round gilt buttons put on very thickly; they were also on the pocket and sleeves. On the back of the skirt was a very long wide sash fastened in a loop and end. A costume which came from Paris, intended for a demi-toilette, consisted of a petticoat of salmon-pink corded silk, trimmed with alternate narrow flounces and puffings of the same, over which was a long polonaise of garnet velvet, buttoned from the throat half-way down the skirt, when the ends were turned back to show the underskirt, faced with velvet and trimmed with a wide rich fringe at the edge, and a gimp to correspond; this trimming was carried round the back, which was also arranged with revers to match the front: long tight sleeves with deep Honiton lace cuffs and collarette. This very becoming costume may be made in poplin and satin, silk and cashmere. In white corded silk and satin, with chenille and pearl fringe, it is most elegant.

As a trimming both for mantles and costumes fur is very much used, and when real is stylish and seasonable, but our readers who cannot afford to pay a good price for fur should avoid all the dyed and common imitations, which lose their lustre in a very few weeks, and look shabby and deplorable. A long paletot of sealskin, semi-tight, is very fashionable, but at the same time very costly. Mantles lined with fur are warm and pleasant to wear, but more often than not the hair comes off upon the dress, and is most difficult to brush off.

The materials used for bonnets are plush, velvet, satin, and silk; felt, made very soft and pliable, is a light and warm fabric whether for rough weather, when a simple band is all the trimming needful, or for dress occasions, when white or the most delicate shades, stone or brown, may be trimmed with a rich contrasting colour to match the costume with which the hat or bonnet is to be worn; feathers of every description, natural and unnatural, are much used for trimming; velvet and silk flowers are exquisitely copied from nature, for instance, chrysanthemums, roses, and various exotics, are real works of art. An important adjunct to the toilette at this season is a veil; we hear from Paris of the voile Sita, a double fichu of tulle embroidered in small flies and edged with fringe; the two ends are tied negligently at the back of the head. There is quite a rage for caps, which are worn by young married people as well as their seniors; they are to be had in an endless variety for all times and seasons, in fact they are quite a speciality. Collars and cuffs are worn very large, and more often than not fastened at the back; a lace Richelieu collar and deep gauntlet cuffs make an ordinary velveteen or cashmere walking costume look quite dressy for evening wear in the home circle, in fact there are so many stylish varieties of fichus, collars, &c., that a plain black silk dress may be varied for every evening in the month.

THE READER

"SIR ROBERT WALPOLE: A Political Biography," by A. C. Ewald (Chapman and Hall).—The careful labours of Archdeacon Coxe—for ever associated with Macaulay's brilliant essay—have left but little to be revealed of the history of the statesman who first taught the art of governing by Parliamentary majorities, and from the Lower rather than the Upper House. The utmost to which later biographers can aspire is to group the materials thus provided in more attractive form, to arrange the picture better for the fall of light and shadow, to advance their own interpretation of the work and character of the politician, or haply give fuller particulars of some detail lightly dwelt upon or slurred over—e.g., Sir Robert's second marriage. Within these modest limits Mr. Ewald has done good work. His book presents to us the story of the time in a continuous narrative, in which letters, reports, speeches are cleverly incorporated, not relegated, to the reader's secret discontent, to appendices and notes. It is not perhaps a pleasing time, that of England under Anne and the first Georges; but it is one of a still living interest—the true commencement, in fact, of Parliamentary Government in the modern sense. The personality of Walpole himself; the rough, seemingly careless, life of the young squire of Houghton—a life, amidst all its rustic jollity, rich in experience of men and business; the first appearance in debate—a failure as conspicuous as Disraeli's; the gradual rise to the command of the House; the genially selfish but desperate ambition, so happily hit off in the comedy of M. Scribe, which would risk a fall rather than share power with another; the "head for figures," which made him the first Finance Minister of the day—the anticipator, in some respects, of the enlightened commercial policy of after times—are all admirably described. Nor less able is Mr. Ewald's general estimate of the man whom vulgar historians hold up as the typical "patron of corruption." Dishonest, no doubt, in many things as Walpole was—take only his opposition to Stanhope in 1718—grossly immoral in his private conduct, neither hostile committees in his lifetime nor adverse critics after death could securely fix on him the charge of peculation. With much more reason did Sir R. Peel conclude that he was really, as Minister, a man careless to profusion, free from all taint of baser greed, and, in an age when most men had their price, no worse nor better in buying their services than those who went before or followed him. Though containing little perhaps that is really new to the accomplished student of the early Georgian epoch, Mr. Ewald's is none the less a most readable volume—a just and well-proportioned study of the great "peace Minister" of the eighteenth century.

Three of those prettily illustrated and instructive volumes for middle-class drawing-room or library tables, for which the Messrs. Cassell have quite a speciality, next present themselves on our list. Vol. III. of Dr. Wylie's "History of Protestantism" brings the serial to a close with the triumph of the Protestant Religion in England through the accession of Dutch William; the revival in France of the "Churches of the Desert," by Antoine Court and Paul Rabaut; the division of the freed Hollanders into Arminians and Calvinists; the desolation of the Protestant Churches of Poland, Hungary, and Bohemia. Of the intense interest of the narrative—a succession of glances into the dark places of history—we have spoken in our notice of the earlier volumes. The present, with its tales of the Revolt of the Netherlands, of Scottish Covenanters and French Camisards, though dealing with times more generally known, is almost equally attractive; most of all, perhaps, for its excellent account of the campaigns of William the Silent and its pictures (after Freytag) of the ravages of the Thirty Years' War in the once prosperous States of Central Germany. Nor, though decidedly Protestant in tone—a little too much so, possibly, in speaking of Titus Oates' Plot—is Dr. Wylie, in treating of facts, either partial or unfair. His volumes are well suited to a time when general tolerance in things religious is not unfrequently made by Romanists an occasion for aspersing the deeds and memory of the Protestant martyrs of an earlier and more earnest day.—"The National Portrait Gallery (Third Series)," a volume of some twenty well-executed prints from photographs, gives as usual an excellent and well-varied choice—Beaufort and Westminster among our dukes, Sims Reeves and Santley among artists, Archbishop Thomson and Canon Farrar among the clergy, &c. The biographies, too, as a rule, are accurately and pleasantly written, though we must make an exception of what seems to us the rather confused sketch of Sikh history affixed to the notice of Maharajah Dhuleep Singh.—Vol. II. of the "Library of English Literature," or "Illustrations of English Religion," arranged and edited by Professor Morley, is an able survey of religious literature in England from the time when all literature was religious and all writers Churchmen—the days of Ceadmon, Bede, Alcuin, and their successors—down to the modern names of Newman, Maurice, and Kingsley. Biography, quotation, and critical analyses are very happily blended in the volume, though prose perhaps suffers a little in comparison with poetry, so much more easily analysed and quoted, and the writers of the last century and a half in comparison with those penmen of Stuart, Elizabethan, or yet earlier times, among whom Professor Morley more especially delights to linger. Still, every period receives fair notice; while, as especially new to many readers, we would notice the charming specimens of the quaint old sermons of seventeenth and sixteenth century divines.

To the many good books which have appeared of late about the land of the Khedive, we must add yet another in the "Upper Egypt" of Dr. Klunziger, with Preface by Dr. Georg Schweinfürth (Blackie and Son). It is not, however, with the Egypt of politics or finance, but with the Egypt of the common people that we have now to deal. "Sanitary physician" for many years at Zoseir on the Red Sea—a favourite but decaying port of call for Mecca pilgrims—Dr. Klunziger made his home, far from European life, among the Arabs and the Fellaheen, the fishermen of the coast and the negro from the Soudan. His book is in a way a pendant to the classic "Modern Egyptians" of the late Mr. Lane, but with this difference, that while the accomplished Englishman wrote chiefly of the wealthy Egyptian of the cities, Dr. Klunziger delights to tell of the simpler and more natural life of the Fellah of the Upper Country. To ordinary books of Egyptian travel the volume offers from the first the widest contrast. We do not sail in lordly dahabeeahs, but mix in humble country boats with the rowers and the peasantry on the banks. We do not watch from the deck the Fellah at the waterwheel, but follow him to his little hut, and note the details of his everyday life. We stroll into the village courts of justice, where the Kadi and the Sherrif wrangle amicably over some police case, and the "just judge," who administered the law without fear or favour, would be regarded by all concerned as a "hard man," with no bowels of compassion for human weaknesses; we inspect the slily tolerated slave markets and the more questionable haunts of almeh and ghawasi; or, fired with scientific ardour, count up the scanty flora of the desert, and grope for shells and coral along the rock ledges of the Red Sea, or cram our notebooks with quaint Egyptian folk-lore and ancient Calendars of full time-honoured precepts for fisherman or farmer. Far short of the warm glow of works like Lane's, or the dainty humour of Lady Duff-Gordon, with chapters, indeed, here and there that smack of the common magazine article for the Ausland or for Westermann's, Dr. Klunziger's is yet a methodic picture of common Egyptian life in all its details, such as perhaps only German patience could produce—high praise, if not the highest, that could be given.

From the simple realism of the German doctor we turn to German fantasy in excelsis, in Louis Ehlert's "Letters on Music" (W. Reeves), translated by Fanny Raymond Ritter. A critic of the new romantic school, Herr Ehlert reviews the world of modern composers and their works with a somewhat elephantine play of fancy which strikes us as modelled, not too happily, on the light grace of Schumann's earlier critiques. Beyond doubt there is much in these letters of æsthetic value—a practical hint on the way to play Beethoven's choral symphony; a delicate comparison (from which, however, the translator differs) between Schumann, Franz, and Schubert; a refined but all too schwärmerisch note on Chopin. But on the whole we move too much among the clouds for ordinary mortals. Need even an art-critic always speak in metaphors and riddles?

Under the title of "Every-Day Meals" (H. S. King and Co.), the fair author of that popular volume, "Little Dinners," gives us a fresh collection of receipts, not for dinners only—though dinners there are here as well—but even more for breakfasts and luncheons, or dishes that might be served up at any meal, all admirably clear and practical in their instructions, and all, or almost all, within the means of the most economical of households. Ladies who groan under the plague of hired cooks should invest in Mrs. Hooper's volume, and solve the great kitchen question for themselves.

Lastly, from Dresden (G. Schönfield), comes a second edition of the "Guide de l'Amateur d'Objets d'Art et de Curiosité," or "List of Monograms of the Chief Armourers, Jewellers, Enamellers, Workers in Stone, Wood, Ivory, &c., of the Middle Ages, the Renaissance, and Rococo Periods," by Dr. Theodore Grasse, the well-known author of a famous manual of "Marks in Pottery and Porcelain." The present guide—the first, we believe, of its kind—will doubtless prove most valuable to the collector. The list of armourers and their marks seems especially complete.

BOOKS RECEIVED

My Rambles in the New World: Lucien Biart; The Child of the Cavern: Jules Verne; The Two Supercargoes: W. H. G. Kingston; Men of Mark. S. Low and Co.

The Red Night of Germany (3 vols.): Peter Boyle. Charing Cross Publishing Company.

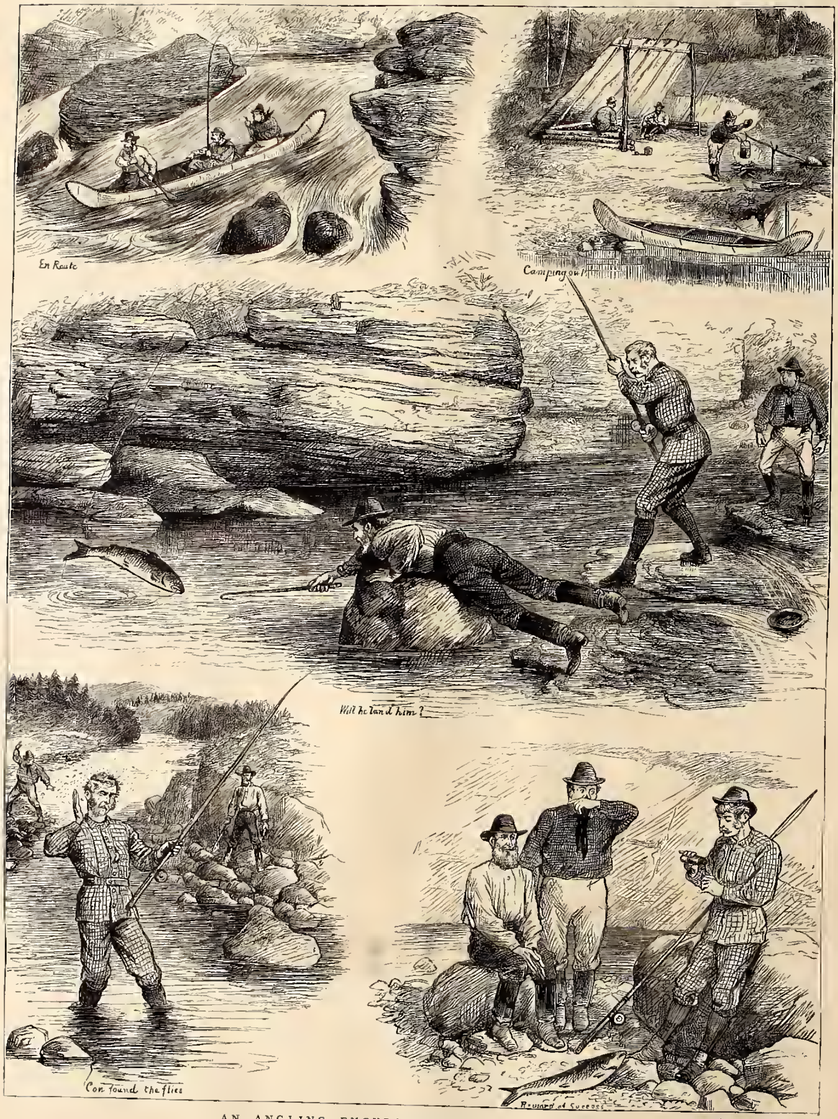
Multum in Parvo Gardening: Samuel Wood. Crosby, Lockwood, and Co.

Prometheus, the Fire-Giver; The Art of Beauty: Mrs. H. R. Haweis. Chatto and Windus.

Jungle, Peak, and Plain: Gordon Stables, M.D., R.N.; The Quiver, Vol. XII.; Library of English Literature: Henry Morley; The Great Painters of Christendom: J. Forbes-Robertson. Cassell.

Lettice Eden: Emily S. Holt; A Knight of Todan: L. T. Meade. J. F. Shaw and Co.

Cosmopolitan Masonic Calendar. George Kenning, Fleet Street.



En Route

Camping out

Will he land him?

Confound the flies

Reward of Success

AN ANGLING EXCURSION IN NOVA SCOTIA

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

XI.

THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE (continued)

We have related what the Commissary of Police was doing for his part in his department.

And, in reference to this design, when the accomplices of the Coup d'État considered that the people, in order to summon the High Court to do its duty, could invade the Palace of Justice, and that they would never look for it where it was assembled, they felt that this room had been excellently chosen. When, however, they considered that the police would also doubtless come to expel the High Court, and that perhaps they would not succeed in finding it, each one regretted to himself the choice of the room. They wished to hide the High Court, they had succeeded too well. It was grievous to think that perhaps, when the police and armed force should arrive, matters would have gone too far, and the High Court would be too deeply compromised.

They had appointed a Recorder, now they must organise a Court. A second step, more serious than the first.

The judges delayed, hoping that fortune would end by deciding on one side or the other, either for the Assembly or for the President, either against the Coup d'État or for it, and that there might thus be a vanquished party, so that the High Court could then, with all safety, lay its hands upon somebody.

They lengthily argued the question, whether they should immediately decree the accusation of the President, or whether they should draw up a simple order of inquiry. The latter course was adopted.

They drew up a judgment, not the honest and outspoken judgment which was placarded by the efforts of the Representatives of the Left and published, in which are found these words of bad taste, Crime and High Treason; this judgment, a weapon of war, has never existed otherwise than as a projectile. Wisdom in a judge sometimes consists in drawing up a judgment which is not one, one of those judgments which has no binding force, in which everything is conditional, in which no one is incriminated, and nothing is called by its right name. There are species of intermediate courses which allow of waiting and seeing; in delicate crises men who are in earnest must not inconsiderately mingle with possible events that bluntness which is called Justice. The High Court took advantage of this, it drew up a prudent judgment; this judgment is not known; it is published here for the first time. Here it is. It is a masterpiece of equivocal style:—

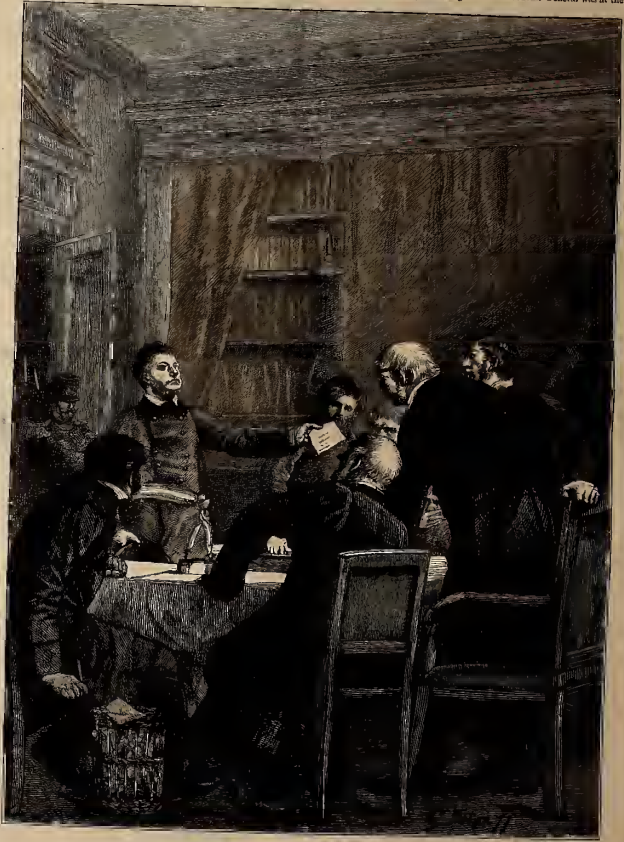
Extract
From the Registry of the High Court of Justice

"The High Court of Justice.

"According to Article 68 of the Constitution, considering that printed placards beginning with these words, 'The President of the Republic,' and ending with the signatures, 'Louis Napoléon Bonaparte' and 'De Morny, Minister of the Interior,' the said placards ordaining amongst other measures the dissolution of the National Assembly, have been posted to-day on the walls of Paris, that this fact of the dissolution of the National Assembly by the President of the Republic would be of the nature to constitute the case provided for by Article 68 of the Constitution, and renders, in the terms of the aforesaid article, the meeting of the High Court indispensable.

"It is declared that the High Court of Justice is organised, that it appoints *. . . . to fulfil with it the functions of the Public Ministry; that M. Bernard, the Recorder of the Court of Cassation, should fulfil the duties of Recorder, and in order to proceed further, according to the terms of the aforesaid Article 68 of the Constitution, the Court will adjourn until to-morrow, the 3rd of December, at noon.

"Drawn up and discussed in the Council Chamber, where were sitting MM. Hardouin, President, Pataille, Moreau, Delapalme, and Cauchy, judges, December 2, 1851."



THE DISSOLUTION OF THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE
The President asked this strange question, which implied the acceptance of an order. "Have you a warrant?" The Commissary answered, "Yes." And he handed a paper to the President.

The two Assistants, MM. Grandet and Quesnault, offered to sign the decree, but the President ruled that it would be more correct only to accept the signatures of the titular judges, the Assistants not being qualified when the Court was complete.

In the mean time it was one o'clock, the news began to spread through the Palace that a decree of deposition against Louis Bonaparte had been drawn up by a part of the Assembly; one of the judges, who had gone out during the debate, brought back this rumour to his colleagues. This coincided with an outburst of energy. The President observed that it would be to the purpose to appoint a Procureur-General.

Here was a difficulty. Whom should they appoint? In all preceding trials they had always chosen for a Procureur-General at the High Court the Procureur-General at the Court of Appeal of Paris. Why should they introduce an innovation? They determined upon this Procureur-General of the Court of Appeal. This Procureur-General was at the time M. de Royer, who had been Keeper of the Seals to M. Bonaparte. Thence a new difficulty and a long debate.

Would M. de Royer consent? M. Hardouin undertook to go and make the offer to him. He had only to cross the Mercière Gallery.

M. de Royer was in his study. The proposal greatly embarrassed him. He remained speechless from the shock. To accept was serious, to refuse was still more serious.

There was risk of treason. On the 2nd December, an hour after noon, the Coup d'État was still a crime. M. de Royer, not knowing whether the high treason would succeed, ventured to stigmatise the deed as such in private, and cast down his eyes with a noble shame before this violation of the laws which, three months later, numerous purple robes, including his own, endorsed with their oaths. But his indignation did not go to the extent of supporting the indictment. An indictment speaks aloud. M. De Royer as yet only murmured. He was perplexed.

M. Hardouin understood this state of conscience. Persistence would have been unreasonable. He withdrew.

He returned to the room where his colleagues were awaiting him.

In the meantime the Commissary of the Arsenal Police had come back.

He had ended by succeeding in "unearthing"—such was his expression—the High Court. He penetrated as far as the Council Chamber of the Civil Chamber; at that moment he had still no other escort than the few police agents of the morning. A boy was passing by. The Commissary asked him the whereabouts of the High Court. "The High Court?" answered the boy; "what is that?" Nevertheless the boy told the Librarian, who came up. A few words were exchanged between M. Denevers and the Commissary.

"What are you asking for?"

"The High Court."

"Who are you?"

"I want the High Court."

"It is in session."

"Where is it sitting?"

"Here."

And the Librarian pointed to the door.

"Very well," said the Commissary.

He did not add another word, and returned into the Mercière Gallery.

We have just said that he was only accompanied at that time by a few police agents.

The High Court was, in truth, in session. The President was relating to the judges his visit to the Procureur-General. Suddenly a tumultuous sound of footsteps is heard in the lobby which leads from the Council Chamber to the room where they were deliberating. The door opens abruptly. Bayonets appear, and in the midst of the bayonets a man in a buttoned-up overcoat, with a tri-coloured sash upon his coat.

---

* This line was left blank. It was filled in later on with the name of M. Renouard, Councillor of the Court of Cassation.

The magistrates stare, stupefied.

"Gentlemen," says the man, "dissolve your meeting immediately."

President Hardouin rises.

"What does this mean? Who are you? Are you aware to whom you are speaking?"

"I am aware. You are the High Court, and I am the Commissary of the Police."

"Well, then?"

"Be off."

There were there thirty-five municipal guards, commanded by a lieutenant, and with a drum at their head.

"But——" said the President.

The Commissary interrupted him with these words, which are literally given.

"Mr. President, I am not going to enter upon an oratorical combat with you. I have my orders, and I transmit them to you. Obey."

"Whom?"

"The Prefect of Police."

The President asked this strange question, which implied the acceptance of an order,

"Have you a warrant?"

The Commissary answered,

"Yes."

And he handed a paper to the President.

The Judges turned pale.

The President unfolded the paper; M. Cauchy put his head over M. Hardouin's shoulder. The President read out,

"You are ordered to dissolve the High Court, and, in case of refusal, to arrest MM. Béranger, Rocher, de Boissieux, Pataille, and Hello."

And, turning towards the Judges, the President added,

"Signed, 'Maupas.'"

Then, addressing himself to the Commissary, he resumed,

"There is some mistake, these are not our names. MM. Béranger, Rocher, and de Boissieux have served their time and are no longer Judges of the High Court; as for M. Hello, he is dead."

The High Court, in reality, was temporary and renewable; the Coup d'État overthrew the Constitution, but did not understand it. The warrant signed "Maupas" was applicable to the preceding High Court. The Coup d'État had been misled by an old list. Such is the heedlessness of assassins.

"Mr. Commissary of Police," continued the President, "you see that these names are not ours."

"That does not matter to me," replied the Commissary. "Whether this warrant does or does not apply to you, disperse, or I shall arrest all of you."

And, he added:

"At once."

The judges were silenced; one of them picked up from the table a loose sheet of paper, which was the judgment they had drawn up, and put the paper in his pocket, and they went away.

The Commissary pointed to the door where the bayonets were, and said:

"That way."

They went out by the lobby between two ranks of soldiers. The detachment of Republican Guards escorted them as far as the St. Louis Gallery.

There they set them free; their heads bowed down.

It was about three o'clock.

While these events were taking place in the Library, close by, in the former great Chamber of the Parliament, the Court of Cassation was sitting in judgment as usual, without noticing what was happening so near at hand. It would appear then that the police exhale no odour.

Let us at once have done with this High Court.

In the evening at half-past seven the seven Judges met together at the house of one of their number, he who had taken away the decree; they framed an official report, drew up a protest, and recognising the necessity of filling in the line left blank in their decree, on the proposition of M. Quesnault, appointed as Procureur-General M. Renouard, their colleague at the Court of Cassation. M. Renouard, who was immediately informed, consented.

They met together for the last time on the next day, the 3rd, at eleven o'clock in the morning, an hour before the time mentioned in the judgment which we have read above,—again in the Library of the Court of Cassation. M. Renouard was present. An official minute was given to him, recording his appointment, as well as certain details with which he asked to be supplied. The judgment which had been drawn up was taken by M. Quesnault to the Recorder's Office, and immediately entered upon the Register of the Secret Deliberations of the Court of Cassation, the High Court not having a Special Register, and having decided, from its creation, to use the Register of the Court of Cassation. After the decree they also transcribed the two documents described as follows on the Register:—I. An official report recording the interference of the Police during the discussion upon the preceding decree. II. A minute of the appointment of M. Renouard to the office of Procureur-General. In addition seven copies of these different documents drawn up by the hands of the judges themselves, and signed by them all, were put in a place of safety, as also, it is said, a note-book, in which were written five other secret decisions relating to the Coup d'État.

Does this page of the Register of the Court of Cassation exist at the present time? Is it true, as has been stated, that the Prefect Maupas sent for the Register and tore out the leaf containing the decree? We have not been able to clear up this point. The Register now is shown to no one, and those employed at the Recorder's Office are dumb.

Such are the facts, let us summarise them. If this Court, so-called "High," had been of a character to conceive such an idea as that of doing its duty—when it had once met together the mere organisation of itself was a matter of a few minutes—it would have proceeded resolutely and rapidly, it would have appointed as Procureur-General some energetic man belonging to the Court of Cassation, either from the body of magistrates, such as Freslon, or from the bar, like Martin (of Strasbourg). By virtue of Article 68, and without waiting the initiative of the Assembly, it would have drawn up a judgment stigmatising the crime, it would have launched an order of arrest against the President and his accomplices and have ordered the removal of the person of Louis Bonaparte to gaol. As for the Procureur-General, he would have issued a warrant of arrest. All this could have been done by half-past eleven, and at that time no attempt had been made to dissolve the High Court. These preliminary proceedings concluded, the High Court, by going out through a nailed-up door leading into the Salle des Pas Perdus, could have descended into the street, and there have proclaimed its judgment to the people. At this time it would have met with no hindrance. Finally, and this in any case, it should have sat robed on the Judges' Bench, with all magisterial state, and when the police agent and his soldiers appeared should have ordered the soldiers, who perhaps would have obeyed them, to arrest the agent; and if the soldiers had disobeyed should have allowed themselves to be formally dragged to prison, so that the people could see, under their own eyes, out in the open street, the filthy hoof of the Coup d'État trampling upon the robe of Justice.

Instead of this, what steps did the High Court take? We have just seen.

"Be off with you!"

"We are going."

We can imagine, after a very different fashion, the dialogue between Mathieu Molé and Vidocq.

XII.

THE MAIRIE OF THE TENTH ARRONDISSEMENT

THE Representatives, having come out from M. Daru, rejoined each other and assembled in the street. There they consulted briefly, from group to group. There was a large number of them. In less than an hour, by sending notices to the houses on the left bank of the Seine alone, on account of the extreme urgency, more than three hundred members could be called together. But when should they meet? At Lemardelay's? The Rue Richelieu was guarded. At the Salle Martel? It was a long way off. They relied upon the Tenth Legion, of which General Lauriston was colonel. They showed a preference for the Mairie of the Arrondissement. Besides, the distance was short, and there was no need to cross any bridges.

They formed themselves into column, and set forth.

M. Daru, as we have said, lived in the Rue de Lille, close by the Assembly. The section of the Rue de Lille lying between his house and the Palais Bourbon was occupied by infantry. The last detachment barred his door, but it only barred it on the right, not on the left. The Representatives, on quitting M. Daru, bent their steps on the side of the Rue des Saints-Pères, and left the soldiers behind them. At that moment the soldiers had only been instructed to prevent their meeting in the Palace of the Assembly; they could quietly form themselves into a column in the street, and set forth. If they had turned to the right instead of to the left they would have been opposed. But there were no orders for the other alternative; they passed through a gap in the instructions.

An hour afterwards this threw St. Arnaud into a fit of fury.

On their way fresh Representatives came up and swelled the column. As the members of the Right lived for the most part in the Faubourg St. Germain, the column was composed almost entirely of men belonging to the majority.

At the corner of the Quay d'Orsay they met a group of members of the Left, who had reunited after their exit from the Palace of the Assembly, and who were consulting together. There were the Representatives Esquiros, Marc Dufraisse, Victor Hennequin, Colfavru, and Chamiot.

Those who were marching at the head of the column left their places, went up to the group, and said, "Come with us."

"Where are you going?" asked Marc Dufraisse.

"To the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement."

"What do you intend to do there?"

"To decree the deposition of Louis Bonaparte."

"And afterwards?"

"Afterwards we shall go in a body to the Palace of the Assembly, we will force our way in spite of all resistance, and from the top of the steps we will read out the decree of deposition to the soldiers."

"Very good, we will join you," said Marc Dufraisse.

The five members of the Left marched at some distance from the column. Several of their friends who were mingled with the members of the Right rejoined them; and we may here mention a fact without giving it more importance than it possesses, namely, that the two fractions of the Assembly represented in this unpremeditated gathering marched towards the Mairie without being mingled together; one on each side of the street. It chanced that the men of the majority kept on the right side of the street, and the men of the minority on the left.

No one had a scarf of office. No outward token caused them to be recognised. The passers by stared at them with surprise, and did not understand what was the meaning of this procession of silent men through the solitary streets of the Faubourg St. Germain. One district of Paris was as yet unaware of the Coup d'État.

Strategically speaking, from a defensive point of view, the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement was badly chosen. Situated in a narrow street in that short section of the Rue de Grenelle St. Germain which lies between the Rue des Saints-Pères and the Rue du Sépulcre, close by the cross-roads of the Croix Rouge, where the troops could arrive from so many different points, the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement, confined, commanded, and blockaded on every side, was a pitiful citadel for the assailed National Representation. It is true that they no longer had the choice of a citadel, any more than later on they had the choice of a general.

Their arrival at the Mairie might have seemed a good omen. The great gate which leads into a square courtyard was shut; it opened. The post of the National Guards, composed of some twenty men, took up their arms and rendered military honours to the Assembly. The Representatives entered, a deputy mayor received them with respect on the threshold of the Mairie.

"The Palace of the Assembly is closed by the troops," said the Representatives, "we have come to deliberate here." The deputy mayor led them to the first storey, and admitted them to the Great Municipal Hall. The National Guard cried "Long live the National Assembly!"

The Representatives having entered, the door was shut. A crowd began to gather in the street and shouted "Long live the Assembly!" A certain number of strangers to the Assembly entered the Mairie at the same time as the Representatives. Overcrowding was feared, and two sentries were placed at a little side door which was left open with orders only to allow members of the Assembly who might come afterwards to enter. M. Howyn Tranchère stationed himself at this door, and undertook to identify them.

On their arrival at the Mairie, the Representatives numbered somewhat under three hundred. They exceeded this number later on. It was about eleven o'clock in the morning. All did not go up at once into the Hall where the meeting was to take place. Several, those of the Left in particular, remained in the courtyard, mingling with the National Guards and citizens.

They talked of what they were going to do.

This was the first difficulty.

The Father of the meeting was M. de Kératry.

Was he going to preside?

The Representatives who were assembled in the Great Hall were in his favour.

The Representatives remaining in the courtyard hesitated.

Marc Dufraisse went up to MM. Jules de Lasteyrie and Léon de Maleville, who had stayed behind with the Representatives of the Left, and said to them, "What are they thinking of upstairs? To make Kératry President! The name of Kératry would frighten the People as thoroughly as mine would frighten the middle classes."

A member of the Right, M. de Kéranflech, came up, and intending to support the objection, added, "And then, think of Kératry's age. It is madness to pit a man of eighty against this hour of danger."

But Esquiros exclaimed:

"That is a bad reason! Eighty years! They constitute a force."

"Yes; where they are well borne," said Colfavru. "Kératry bears them badly."

"Nothing is greater," resumed Esquiros, "than great octogenarians."

"It is glorious," added Chamiot, "to be presided over by Nestor."

"No, by Gerontes,"* said Victor Hennequin.

These words put an end to the debate. Kératry was thrown out. MM. Léon de Maleville and Jules de Lasteyrie, two men respected by all parties, undertook to make the members of the Right listen to reason. It was decided that the "bureau"† should preside. Five members of the "bureau" were present; two Vice-Presidents, MM. Benoist d'Azy and Vitet, and three Secretaries, MM. Grimault, Chapot, and Moulin. Of the two other Vice-Presidents, one, General Bedeau, was at Mazas; the other, M. Daru, was under guard in his own house. Of the three other Secretaries, two, MM. Peupin and Lacaze, men of the Elysée, were absentees; the other, M. Yvan, a member of the Left, was at the meeting of the Left, in the Rue Blanche, which was taking place almost at the same moment.

In the meantime an usher appeared on the steps of the Mairie, and cried out, as on the most peaceful days of the Assembly, "Representatives, to the sitting!"

This usher, who belonged to the Assembly, and who had followed it, shared its fortunes throughout this day, the sequestration on the Quay d'Orsay included.

At the summons of the usher all the Representatives in the courtyard, and amongst whom was one of the Vice-Presidents, M. Vitet, went upstairs to the Hall, and the sitting was opened.

This sitting was the last which the Assembly held under regular conditions. The Left, which, as we have seen, had on its side boldly recaptured the Legislative power, and had added to it that which circumstances required—as was the duty of Revolutionists; the Left without a "bureau," without an usher, and without secretaries, held sittings in which the accurate and passionless record of shorthand was wanting, but which live in our memories, and which History will gather up.

Two shorthand writers of the Assembly, MM. Grosselet and Lagache, were present at the sitting at the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement. They have been able to record it. The censorship of the victorious Coup d'État has mutilated their report, and has published through its historians this mangled version as the true version. One lie more. That does not matter. This shorthand recital belongs to the brief of the Second of December, it is one of the leading documents in the trial which the future will institute. In the notes of this book will be found this document complete. The passages in inverted commas are those which the censorship of M. Bonaparte has suppressed. This suppression is a proof of their significance and importance.

Shorthand reproduces everything except life. Stenography is an ear. It hears and sees not. It is therefore necessary to fill in here the inevitable blanks of the shorthand account.

In order to obtain a complete idea of this sitting of the Tenth Arrondissement, we must picture the great Hall of the Mairie, a sort of parallelogram, lighted on the right by four or five windows overlooking the courtyard, on the left, along the wall, furnished with several rows of benches which had been hastily brought thither, on which were piled up the three hundred Representatives, assembled together by chance. No one was sitting down, those in front were standing, those behind were mounted on the benches. Here and there were a few small tables. In the centre people walked to and fro. At the bottom, at the end opposite the door, was a long table furnished with benches, which occupied the whole width of the wall, and behind which sat the "bureau." "Sitting" is merely the conventional term. The "bureau" did not "sit;" like the rest of the Assembly it was on its feet. The secretaries, MM. Chapot, Moulin, and Grimault, wrote standing. At certain moments the two Vice-Presidents mounted on the benches so as to be better seen from all points of the room. The table was covered by an old green tablecloth, stained with ink, three or four inkstands had been brought in, and a quire of paper was scattered about. There the decrees were written as soon as they were drawn up. They multiplied the copies, some Representatives became secretaries on the spur of the moment, and helped the official secretaries.

This great hall was on a level with the landing. It was situated, as we have said, on the first floor; it was reached by a very narrow staircase.

We must recollect that nearly the whole of the members present were members of the Right.

The first moment was a serious one. Berryer came out to advantage. Berryer, like all those extemporisers without style, will only be remembered as a name, and a much disputed name, Berryer having been rather a special pleader than an orator who believed what he said. On that day Berryer was to the point, logical and earnest. They began by this cry, "What shall we do?" "Draw up a declaration," said M. de Falloux. "A protest," said M. de Flavigny. "A decree," said Berryer.

In truth a declaration was empty air, a protest was noise, a decree was action. They cried out, "What decree?" "Deposition," said Berryer. Deposition was the extreme limit of the energy of the Right. Beyond deposition, there was outlawry; deposition was practicable for the Right, outlawry was only possible for the Left. In fact, it was the Left who outlawed Louis Bonaparte. They did it at their first meeting in the Rue Blanche. We shall see this later on. At deposition, Legality came to an end; at outlawry, the Revolution began. The recurrences of Revolution are the logical consequences of Coups d'État. The deposition having been voted, a man who later on turned traitor, Quentin Bauchart, exclaimed, "Let us all sign it." All signed it. Odilon Barrot came in and signed it. Antony Thouret came in and signed it. Suddenly M. Piscatory announced that the Mayor was refusing to allow Representatives who had arrived to enter the Hall. "Order him to do so by decree," said Berryer. And the decree was voted. Thanks to this decree, MM. Favreau and Monet entered; they came from the Legislative Palace; they related the cowardice of Dupin. M. Dahirel, one of the leaders of the Right, was exasperated, and said, "We have received bayonet thrusts." Voices were raised, "Let us summon the Tenth Legion. Let the call to arms be beaten. Lauriston hesitates. Let us order him to protect the Assembly." "Let us order him by decree," said Berryer. This decree was drawn up, which, however, did not prevent Lauriston from refusing. Another decree, again proposed by Berryer, pronounced any one who had outraged the Parliamentary inviolability to be a traitor, and ordered the immediate release of those Representatives who had been wrongfully made prisoners. All this was voted at once without debate, in a sort of great unanimous confusion, and in the midst of a storm of fierce conversations. From time to time Berryer imposed silence. Then the angry outcries broke forth again. "The Coup d'État will not dare to come here." "We are masters here." "We are at home." "It would be impossible to attack us here." "These wretches will not dare to do so." If the uproar had been less violent, the Representatives might have heard, through the open windows close at hand, the sound of soldiers loading their guns.

---

* The Gerontes, or Geronoia, were the Elders of Sparta, who constituted the Senate.

† The "bureau" of the Assembly consists of the President, for the time being, of the Assembly, assisted by six Secretaries, whose duties mainly consist in deciding in what sense the Deputies have voted. The "bureau" of the Assembly should not be confounded with the fifteen "bureaux" of the Deputies, which answer to our Select Committees of the House of Commons, and are presided over by self-chosen Presidents.

A regiment of Chasseurs of Vincennes had just entered silently into the garden of the Mairie, and, while waiting for orders, were loading their guns.

Little by little the sitting, at first disorderly and tumultuous, had assumed an ordinary aspect. The uproar had relapsed into a murmur. The voice of the usher, crying "Silence, gentlemen," had succeeded in overcoming the hubbub. Every moment fresh Representatives came in, and hastened to sign the decree of deposition at the "bureau." As there was a great crowd round the "bureau" waiting to sign, a dozen loose sheets of paper to which the Representatives affixed their signatures were circulated in the great Hall and the two adjoining rooms.

The first to sign the decree of deposition was M. Dufaure, the last was M. Betting de Lancastel. Of the two Presidents, one, M. Benoist d'Azy, was addressing the Assembly; the other, M. Vitet, pale, but calm and resolute, distributed instructions and orders. M. Benoist d'Azy maintained a decorous countenance, but a certain hesitation in his speech revealed an inner agitation. Divisions, even in the Right, had not disappeared at this critical moment. A Legitimist member was overheard saying in a low voice, while speaking of one of the Vice-Presidents, "This great Vitet looks like a whited sepulchre." Vitet was an Orleanist.

Given this adventurer with whom they had to deal, this Louis Bonaparte, capable of everything, the hour and the man being wrapt in mystery, some Legitimist personages of a candid mind were seriously but comically frightened. The Marquis of ——, who acted the fly on the coach-wheel to the Right, went hither and thither, harangued, shouted, declaimed, remonstrated, proclaimed, and trembled. Another, M. A—— N——, perspiring, red-faced, out of breath, rushed about distractedly. "Where is the guard? How many men are there? Who commands them? The officer! send me the officer! Long live the Republic! National Guard, stand firm! Long live the Republic!" All the Right shouted this cry. "You wish then to kill it," said Esquiros. Some of them were dejected; Bourbousson maintained the silence of a vanquished placeman.

The Orleanists were quieter, and maintained a more becoming attitude. This arose from the fact that they ran greater danger.

Pascal Duprat replaced at the top of the decrees the words, "République Française," which had been forgotten.

From time to time men who were not speaking on the subject of the moment mentioned this strange word, "Dupin," upon which there ensued shouts of derision and bursts of laughter. "Utter the name of that coward no more," cried Antony Thouret.

There were motions and counter-motions; it was a continual uproar interrupted by deep and solemn silences. Alarmist phrases circulated from group to group. "We are in a blind alley." "We are caught here as in a rat trap;" and then on each motion voices were raised: "That is it!" "It is right!" "It is settled!" They agreed in a low voice upon a rendezvous at No. 19, Rue de la Chaussée-d'Antin, in case they should be expelled from the Mairie. M. Bixio carried off the decree of deposition to get it printed. Esquiros, Marc Dufraisse, Pascal Duprat, Rigal, Lherbette, Chamiot, Latrade, Colfavru, Antony Thouret, threw in here and there energetic words of advice. M. Dufaure, resolute and indignant, protested with authority. M. Odilon Barrot, motionless in a corner, maintained the silence of stupefied silliness.

MM. Passy and de Tocqueville, in the midst of the groups, described that when they were Ministers they had always entertained an uneasy suspicion of a Coup d'État, and that they clearly perceived this fixed idea in the brain of Louis Bonaparte. M. de Tocqueville added: "I said to myself every night, 'I lie down to sleep a Minister; what if I should awake a prisoner?'"

Some of those men who were termed "men of order," muttered while signing the decree of deposition, "Beware of the Red Republic!" and seemed to entertain an equal fear of failure and of success. M. de Vatimesnil pressed the hands of the men of the Left, and thanked them for their presence. "You make us popular," said he. And Antony Thouret answered him: "I know neither Right nor Left to-day; I only see the Assembly."

The younger of the two shorthand writers handed their written sheets to the Representatives who had spoken, and asked them to revise them at once, saying: "We shall not have the time to read them over." Some Representatives went down into the street, and showed the people copies of the decree of deposition, signed by the members of the "bureau." One of the populace took one of these copies, and cried out: "Citizens! the ink is still quite wet! Long live the Republic!"

The deputy-mayor stood at the door of the Hall; the staircase was crowded with National Guards and spectators. In the Assembly several had penetrated into the Hall, and amongst them the ex-Constituent Beslay, a man of uncommon courage. It was at first wished to turn them out, but they resisted, crying: "This is our business. You are the Assembly, but we are the People." "They are right," said M. Berryer.

M. de Falloux, accompanied by M. de Kéronflech, came up to the Constituent Beslay, and leaned by his side on the stove, saying to him, "Good day, colleague;" and reminded him that they both had formed part of the Committee of the National Workshops, and that they had together visited the workmen at the Parc Monceaux. The Right felt themselves falling; they became affectionate towards Republicans. The Republic is called To-morrow.

Each spoke from his place; this member upon a bench, that member on a chair, a few on the tables. All contradictory opinions burst forth at once. In a corner some ex-leaders of "order" were scared at the possible triumph of the "Reds." In another the men of the Right surrounded the men of the Left, and asked them: "Are not the faubourgs going to rise?"

The narrator has but one duty, to tell his story; he relates everything, the bad as well as the good. Whatever may have taken place, however, and notwithstanding all these details of which it was our duty to speak, apart from the exceptions which we have mentioned, the attitude of the men of the Right who composed the large majority of this meeting was in many respects honourable and worthy. Some of them, as we have just mentioned, even prided themselves upon their resolution and their energy, almost as though they had wished to rival the members of the Left.

We may here remark—for in the course of this narrative we shall more than once see the gaze of some members of the Right turned towards the people, and in this no mistake should be made—that these monarchical men who talked of popular insurrection and who invoked the faubourgs were a minority in the majority,—an imperceptible minority. Antony Thouret proposed to those who were leaders there to go in a body through the working-class neighbourhoods with the decree of deposition in their hands. Brought to bay, they refused. They declared that they would only protect themselves by organised powers, not by the people. It is a strange thing to say, but it must be noted, that with their habits of political shortsightedness, the popular armed resistance, even in the name of the Law, seemed sedition to them. The utmost appearance of revolution which they could endure was a regiment of the National Guard, with their drums at their head; they shrank from the barricade; Right in a blouse was no longer Right, Truth armed with a pike was no longer Truth, Law unpaving a street gave them the impression of a Fury. In the main, however, and taking them for what they were and considering their position as politicians, these members of the Right were well-advised. What would they have done with the people? And what would the people have done with them? How would they have proceeded to set fire to the masses? Imagine Falloux as a tribune, fanning the Faubourg Antoine into a flame!

Alas! in the midst of this dense gloom, in these fatal complications of circumstances by which the Coup d'État profited so odiously and so perfidiously, in that mighty misunderstanding which comprised the whole situation, for kindling the revolutionary spark in the heart of the people, Danton himself would not have sufficed.

The Coup d'État entered into this meeting impudently, with its convict's cap on its head. It possessed an infamous assurance there, as well as everywhere else. There were in this majority three hundred Representatives of the People. Louis Napoléon sent a sergeant to drive them away. The Assembly, having resisted the sergeant, he sent an officer, the temporary commander of the sixth battalion of the Chasseurs de Vincennes. This officer, young, fair-haired, a scoffer, half laughing, half threatening, pointed with his finger to the stairs filled with bayonets, and defied the Assembly. "Who is this young spark?" asked a member of the Right. A National Guard who was there said, "Throw him out of the window!" "Kick him downstairs!" cried one of the people.

This Assembly, grievous as were its offences against the principles of the Revolution—and with these wrongs Democracy alone had the right to reproach it—this Assembly, I repeat, was the National Assembly, that is to say, the Republic incarnate, the living Universal Suffrage, the Majesty of the Nation, upright and visible. Louis Bonaparte assassinated this Assembly, and moreover insulted it. A slap on the face is worse than a poniard thrust.

(To be continued)

NEW NOVELS

"UNDER A CHARM," from the German of E. Werner, by Christine Tyrrell (3 vols.: Bentley).—Power is unquestionably Herr Werner's most striking attribute as a novelist, and this power is, perhaps, even more markedly shown in the story before us than in its predecessor, "Success, and how he Won it," a translation of which first made him known to the English public. Here, as in the former work, he relies for his interest on the clash and conflict between strong and masterful natures, with fiery passions, which they keep under control with a grasp of steel, and large capacities for tenderness hidden beneath a mask of icy indifference. The leading actor in this story, Waldemar Nordeck, is a truly commanding figure, and he is developed with admirable skill and consistency. From his father, a German land-speculator, Waldemar has inherited the vast estate, or, rather, agglomeration of estates, of Wilicza, in Posen, close upon the Russian border; and his mother, a Polish lady of high birth, who has hated and despised the husband forced upon her, and immediately upon his death contracted a second marriage with Prince Baratowski, a man of her own race and rank, is bent upon making Wilicza serve the interests of her party by using it as a stronghold for fomenting and supporting insurrectionary movements across the frontier. But sagacious, daring, and resolute as the Princess is, she meets her match, and more than her match, in the son for whom she has not a particle of affection, and upon whom for a long time it pleases her to look down as a mere boor, of violent passions, but easily to be guided and baffled by a superior intelligence. The contest for mastery between these two energetic and tenacious characters, in which Waldemar, though always respectful and considerate towards his mother, forces her to accept his decision that his castle and domain shall not be made the seat of a conspiracy, is very finely portrayed, and affords room for many powerful and stirring episodes. The love that, almost in spite of their efforts, grows up between Waldemar and his mother's niece, Countess Wanda Morynska, who cannot resist the fascination of the utter fearlessness and force of will of this foe of her people, forms another element in the book, which could hardly have been dealt with in a more effective and attractive fashion. Nor are lighter scenes and characters wanting to give an occasional relief from the atmosphere of storm and struggle that we breathe through the greater portion of the book. It is a story of very high mark indeed, and we should add that the translation seems as perfect as the severest and most fastidious critic could desire.

"Lutchmee and Dilloo: A Study of West Indian Life," by Edward Jenkins, M.P. (3 vols.: W. Mullan and Son).—Mr. Jenkins has come to the conclusion that the history of an imaginary Coolie married couple may stir up that popular interest in the Coolie question which his graver work, "The Coolie: His Rights and Wrongs," failed, he thinks, to evoke. In literary merit the story seems to us decidedly superior to anything of the same kind we have yet had from him; but we are hardly prepared to admit that he makes out the case against Coolie emigration, even as at present conducted, to be as strong as he would have us think it. Unfortunate as Dilloo and his wife Lutchmee are in their experiences, there is manifestly so much in their lot that is exceptional that we cannot regard them as a typical pair. It must be borne in mind, too, in judging of the book, that for the sake of effect Mr. Jenkins, as he explains in the preface, credits the colony of Demerara, where his scene is laid, not only with its own sins of omission and commission against Coolies, but with those of other colonies, as Mauritius and Barbadoes, as well. Of course, viewing the book as a story, the device is one perfectly legitimate; but it impairs its value as a picture of facts. At the same time Mr. Jenkins, it must be granted, succeeds in putting his finger upon some grave wrongs to which Coolie labourers are exposed which the proper authorities would do well to see to and redress; and his story is, at any rate, in many parts a very amusing sketch of "that strange mixture which," he says, "constitutes West Indian society."

"The Queen of Bohemia," by Joseph Hatton (2 vols.: Chapman and Hall).—Mr. Hatton's new story certainly has no lack of incident, and is varied and lively enough to be thoroughly agreeable reading—to those, at all events, who ask no more of a novel than that it should amuse. It may be objected, indeed, that the dramatis personæ are a trifle thin and conventional, and that the conversion to better things in the closing pages of the tale of the "Queen of Bohemia"—a wealthy and handsome widow—who has figured in anything but a pleasant light throughout it, is somewhat forced and sudden; but there is no occasion to find fault with the author for being too good-natured to inflict strict poetical justice upon a favourite child of his imagination. In not a few places both the situations and the dialogue would almost incline us to believe that Mr. Hatton had originally designed his work for the stage, and converted it into a novel as an afterthought. We do not say this, however, as implying that his story need be considered to suffer on this score, though, of course, speeches and conversations that would be quite in place before the footlights are apt to have a slightly unreal flavour when assigned to ordinary social intercourse. Mr. Hatton always describes Durham and its neighbourhood as though he loved to dwell upon the recollection of them, and he has never described them better than here; whilst the glimpses he gives his readers of sundry phases of "Bohemian" life will, we are afraid, lead "outsiders" to think it more attractive than those behind the scenes know it to be. His story is one well calculated to retain the reader's attention to the end.

In "The Dowerless Damsel, an Autobiography," by A. Dorset (Remington and Co.), we have the story of a very highly-born young lady, who, reduced by family reverses to becoming a governess, goes out to Egypt to undertake the education of the daughter of a Pasha. Her adventures are told very pleasantly, and many of the character sketches in the book show spirit and observation.—"In the Spring Time," by Helen Gabrielle (Remington and Co.), is a rather pretty, but very sad tale, of which, perhaps, more might have been made. The author seems not without promise.

WINTER EXHIBITIONS

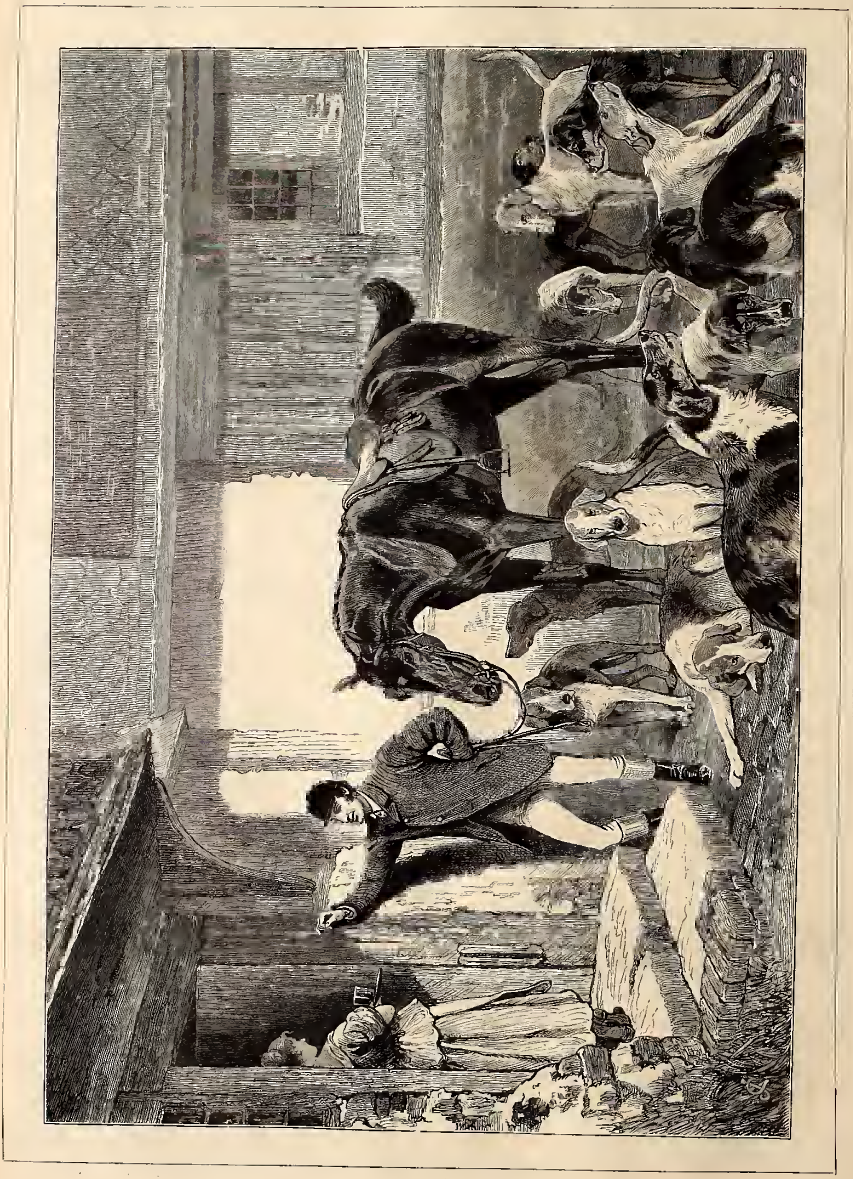
THE opening of Mr. Wallis's French Gallery and Messrs. M'Lean's and Tooth's Galleries in the Haymarket inaugurates the Winter Exhibitions. Now that London is to have her autumnal opera season, it is hard to say in what respect London in May can claim precedence in artistic amusement over London in November. Nay, just as there are people who prefer the social leisureliness of the metropolis in the winter to the rush and struggle of High Season, so there may be those who like the "small and early" picture shows of the "fall" to the monster gathering of the Academy. They may tell you, too, that the privilege of enjoying the select society of "Old Masters" at the Academy—which is this year to be supplemented by Sir Coutts Lindsay's selection at the Grosvenor Gallery—in itself turns the artistic scale in favour of the winter over the spring in London.

Mr. Wallis's Gallery brings together, as usual, a large proportion of foreign, and a small one of British pictures. The latter comprise French and Bavarian, with a few Spanish and Dutch pictures, but as a whole the collection is hardly up to the average. The English pictures include a large size half-length, "A Quadroon Mother and her Child in the Slave Market of New Orleans," by Mrs. Merritt, a picture of strong colour and powerful expression, and a hurried "Venetian Water-Carrier," by Hilda Montalba; a careful Alpine landscape (the Wetterhorn) by Leader, a pretty wood-shaded streamlet by Hulme, two solid and impressive Welsh mountain subjects by a new lady-contributor, Miss Charlton, and a taking "Village Girls' School," by John Morgan, who has painted many girls' schools, all pretty and pleasing, which would be of conspicuous excellence if the painting were only a little more solid. Of the Bavarian pictures, by far the most, both figures and landscapes, are small and slight, but dexterously painted, little wayside and camp and Wirthaus subjects, by Chelminski, Breling, M. Weber, Kauffman, E. A. Schmidt, and Mayer Graz, most of them more conspicuous for chique than solidity; with larger rustic subjects by Vollmar, A. Spring, and Schloesser. The landscapes by Windmaier, C. Heffner, Lindstrom, Lankow, Noerr, and C. Wimmer, are fair examples of the effective and pleasing, but rather slight, Bavarian school. L. Munthe has one of his effective and popular snow pieces, and, what is less common from his hand, an autumn subject. The French pictures include a pretty little Duverger and a Seignac (of the Écouen school), a rather unsubstantial "Vestal," by H. Léroux: a humourous little Chevilliard, "L'Education Obligatoire," an old priest reproving his dog; a grave head of a Breton "Dévote," by Hublin; while the school of Fortuny, which has no nationality, finds clever and dexterous representatives in Palmaroli and Villa, Jimenez, and Ferry, and the Dutch in Blommers and Sadée.

But the foreign weight of the Exhibition is concentrated in three large pictures, two of them by the Bavarian, Gabriel Max, of "Our Saviour Bringing Back to Life Jairus's Daughter," and "The Wandering Jew Contemplating with Envy a Dead Baby in Its Coffin." This painter affects subjects at once ghastly and sensational, and, as might be expected in one who works under this impulse, he has succeeded best in the more distinctly sensational of his two subjects, in which Ahasuerus, cursed with the doom of wandering for ever, gazes out of his gloom on the babe who has gone so soon to its rest, with the longing to be laid beside it. The sacred subject lies beyond the limits of the painter's power. With him it becomes a mere theme for an effective bit of light and shadow, and a pretty figure of a dead girl.

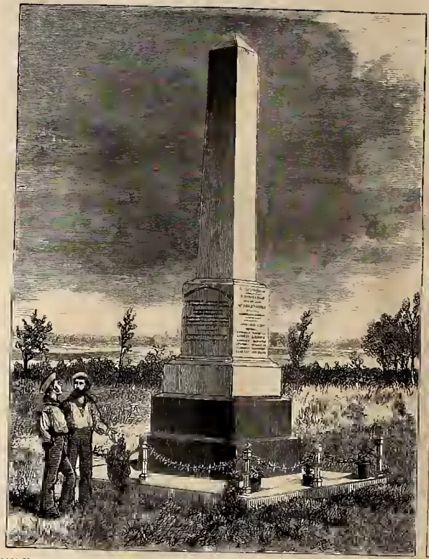
A picture of far more dignity and gravity is M. A. Maignan's "Attentat d'Anagni," representing the memorable scene in the cathedral nave of that ancient city when, on September 7th, 1303, the forces of Sciarro Colonna and Guillaume de Nogaret, the Captain of Philippe le Bel, dared to assail Boniface VIII. on

(Continued on page 430)

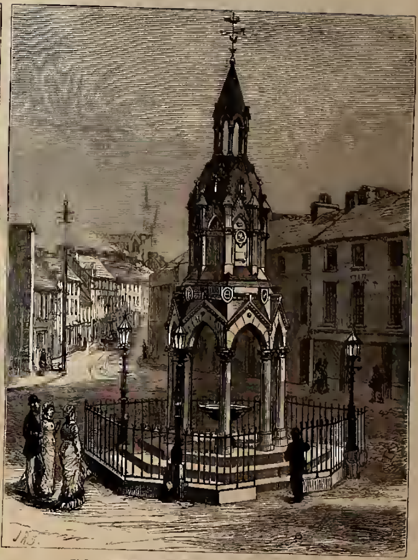


"THE HUNTSMAN'S COURTSHIP"

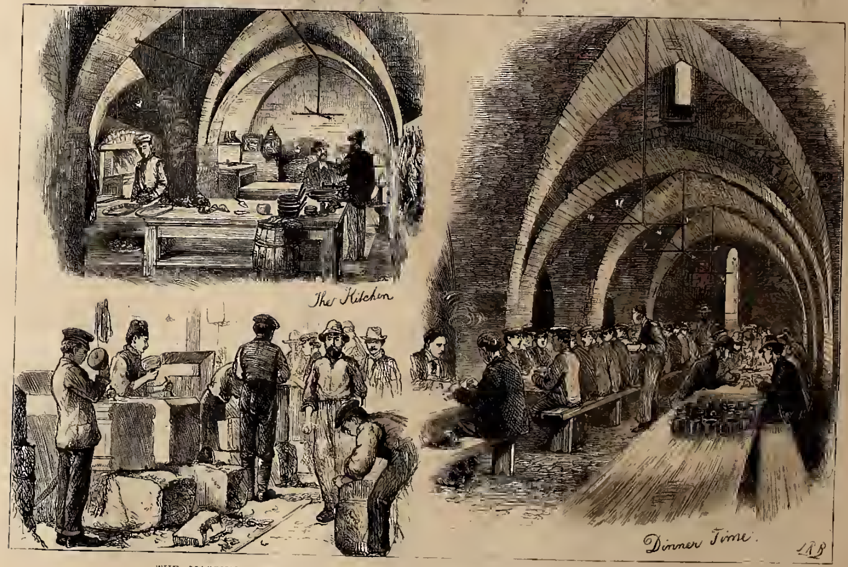
FROM THE PICTURE BY JOHN CHARLTON, EXHIBITED AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY



MONUMENT TO THE VICTIMS OF THE EXPLOSION ON BOARD THE "THUNDERER
Erected in the Burial Ground at Haslar, near Portsmouth



THE ROSSMORE MEMORIAL FOUNTAIN AT MONAGHAN
Unveiled by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught Oct. 5



THE MASONS' STRIKE AT THE NEW LAW COURTS—WITH THE FOREIGN WORKMEN

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——The Russian "circle of steel" has now been drawn round Plevna, two noteworthy successes on the Sophia road having enabled General Gourko to complete the investment. In these two engagements the newly-arrived Imperial Guard were first brought into action, and seem to have justified the hopes which had been entertained of them on their arrival. The first affair took place on the 23rd, when General Gourko, with some 12,000 or 14,000 men, attacked the Turkish position at Gorny Dubnik. The Turks made a desperate resistance, and inflicted a loss of some 2,500 killed and wounded upon the assailants, but were ultimately reduced to surrender, losing nearly 3,000 killed and 4,000 prisoners, including four standards and two guns. On the same day a detachment of General Gourko's division also attacked the Telis position, but were completely repulsed by the Turks. On the 28th, however, General Gourko renewed the assault with a powerful force, and carried it, making seven battalions of infantry prisoners, together with the Commandant, Ismail Chaki Pasha, and capturing several cannon and important supplies of food and medicines. So large were the number of prisoners that the Russians offered to set the officers free on parole, an offer, however, refused by Ismail and most of his officers. The captured positions are being strongly fortified by General Gourko, and it is now considered unlikely that Ghazi Osman will be able to break through the Russian lines, and that, as no reinforcements appear to be at hand, his only chance of escape lies in the chance of a wet season, which, from its unhealthiness, and the difficulties it creates in the conveyance of supplies to the investing forces, may make the Russian positions untenable. If, however, Turkish deserters to the Russian ranks are to be believed, the garrison is already reduced to semi-starvation, and will be unable to hold out much longer. On the east of Plevna a desultory bombardment is still kept up, but General Todleben allows no useless assaults to be made on outlying redoubts.

In the Shipka Pass there is no change; the Russian garrison of St. Nicholas has received supplies of boots and great coats, and Reouf Pasha has not succeeded in cutting off the communications by the Gabrova Road. On the Lom there has been some desultory skirmishing—an unimportant battle at Kadikoi, in which the Russians appear to have been worsted; and a reconnaissance, in which the Grand Duke Sergius of Leuchtenberg, nephew of the Czar, was killed. The army of the Czarevich is gradually advancing upon the Shumla-Rustchuk Railway, on the other side of which General Zimmermann, whose right wing is already before Silistria, is also pushing forward in order, if possible, to effect a junction with the Czarevich and begin the investment of Rustchuk. Suleiman Pasha remains in the positions indicated by us last week—his right wing at Shumla, his centre at Rasgrad, and his left at Basardjick. He himself has gone on a tour of inspection of the various positions, and has avowedly acknowledged the excellence of the plan for which Mehemet Ali Pasha was ostensibly dismissed, but which Suleiman Pasha is now himself carrying out.

In ASIA powerful reinforcements have been despatched to Mukhtar Pasha, who is at Deve Boyun energetically reorganising his army. He has been joined by Ismail Pasha and the remnant of his division who have escaped from the clutches of General Tergukasoff, but the Turks are now being hard pushed by the Russians who have driven them out of Koprikeui, and have advanced as far as Hassan Kaleh, their vedettes at one time being actually within sight of Erzeroum. There was a report that the garrison of Kars had begun negotiations for a surrender; but this has been contradicted; the Russians, however, have completely surrounded the fortress for the second time during the present campaign. The military situation is now very much the same as it was before Mukhtar Pasha's victory on the Aladja Dagh which procured him the now somewhat ironical surname of Ghazi.

To return to Europe, all is quiet at CONSTANTINOPLE, where the Sultan has been reasserting—this time to the Belgian Ambassador—his firm resolve to carry out his promised reforms as soon as the war is over. In the meantime the summary executions of unfortunate Bulgarians is being briskly continued in the provinces, and at Adrianople in particular, while fifty small boys at ages varying from thirteen to fifteen have been condemned to hard labour for life at the galleys for asserted participation in the insurrection. Much anxiety is felt respecting Osman Pasha and his Plevna army, his situation being regarded even by the Turks as extremely critical.

At Potsdam, Bucharest, and St. Petersburg the chief topic has been the death of Prince Leuchtenberg, who was only twenty-eight years of age. Various funeral masses have been said, the Court is ordered to go into mourning for six weeks, while the corpse is to be sent to St. Petersburg for interment. There have been the usual reports of mediation, England and Italy being stated to be the chief moving powers, but they have been contradicted both by the Russian and the Turkish authorities.

FRANCE.——At last there are apparently well-founded rumours of conciliation, and it is confidently reported that the Marshal is in some degree willing to bow to popular opinion, and to allow his Cabinet to resign either before or on the meeting of the Assembly. This, it is asserted, has been brought about by the revulsion of feeling among the Orleanists, who have been thoroughly disgusted at the highhanded proceedings and electoral malpractices of the present Ministry, and have been convinced that the country is really anxious for a true Republic. Thus the Soleil, the organ of the Orleanist Princes, has been boldly facing the situation, and in a remarkable article on Tuesday, while acknowledging the affection of the party for Monarchy, declared "that before being Royalists we are Frenchmen. We will never be among those who incite crises, catastrophes, and adventures in the hope of fishing in troubled waters. That is a terrible game which we cannot play. . . To-day the country is manifestly for the Republic. We should hold ourselves culpable towards it to take part in a policy of obstinate resistance to the legal expression of its present opinion." This is a very important declaration, and when coupled with an intimation in the semi-official Moniteur that the all-important 7th inst.—when the Chambers meet—may witness the formation of a new Cabinet, is almost sufficient to raise hopes that the crisis may be settled constitutionally after all. The Duc de Broglie's journal, however, the Français, still affirms that the Marshal has no intention of changing his policy; but, this denial notwithstanding, it is manifest that conciliation is in the wind. As regards the Republicans, the Débats has suddenly dropped the semi-Radical tone which it has adopted of late for an advocacy of conciliation, in which it is joined by the Temps, both of which journals think it necessary that the Marshal himself should remain at the head of affairs; but the more advanced journals are beginning to clamour for the resignation of the Marshal with his Cabinet. In the mean time all eyes are anxiously fixed on the Marshal and his advisers in daily expectation of some trustworthy token of what they actually will do.

The fifteen supplementary elections took place on Sunday, the result being—as had been a foregone conclusion—the election of eleven Conservatives to four Republicans, the only noteworthy incident being the success of the Conservative candidate at Château Chinon, notwithstanding a speech from M. Gambetta, who purposely went down to speak in favour of the Republican candidate, one of the 363. Out of the 526 elections it is now calculated that the Republicans have carried 318, the Bonapartists 112, and the Monarchists 96, the Republicans thus having a majority of 110. The elections for the General Councils take place to-morrow throughout the Departments, and those for the municipalities on December 2nd, those for Paris, however, will be held on November 28th.

Paris has been considerably excited during the past week, owing to the abundant rumours of the intentions of the Marshal and his Ministers, but nevertheless has found time to lionise General Grant, who has greatly snubbed the various newspaper interviewers. There has been a grand dinner in his honour at the Legation, at which Marshal MacMahon was present. Other social topics have been the reappearance of truffles—an important sign of the season; the arrival of the Esquimaux and their huts—the last zoological addition to the Jardin d'Acclimatation, and various first representations—a new eminently Parisian comedy, Les Petites Marmites, by MM. Arthur Delavigne and Jacques Normand at the Gymnase; Les Auberges de France, a four-act drama by M. Eugène Granger, at the Taitbout—a sort of provincial "Wedding March," and a dead failure; a highly successful opera bouffe by Strauss, La Tzigane, at the Renaissance; and a revival at the Châtelet of that well-known féerie, Rothomago—of course with "additions and improvements."

GERMANY.——After a sharp debate the Prussian Government have carried the day in the Diet, and Herr Eulenberg and Prince Bismarck can take their holidays in peace. In return for the compliance the Ministry gave the National Liberals an assurance that the promised municipal reforms should be attended to, but as Prince Bismarck is said to have insisted upon Herr Eulenberg's retirement because he promised too much last Session, the assurance is felt to be worth very little. The most noteworthy incident of the debate was the energy with which Herr Camphausen repudiated the Ultramontane sneer that the Ministers were only the "clerks" of the Premier Prince Bismarck. On Tuesday the Finance Minister brought in a Bill sanctioning the threatened loan for 6,300,000*l.* for "public works."—Field Marshal Wrangel is very ill.

INDIA.——A bountiful and general rain has fallen in Madras, harvest prospects are everywhere good, and the number of persons receiving relief has considerably diminished in Madras and Mysore, although the mortality in the latter district is still stated to be large.

The appointment of a very young barrister to the post of Legal Secretary to the Government, which had aroused considerable indignation, has been cancelled by the Viceroy,—a civilian of considerable standing being substituted.

The North-Western frontier is again becoming a subject of anxiety, as the Jawakis have been making fresh incursions, and the Bombay Gazette declares that the existing relations of the Government of India with the border tribes "are becoming simply intolerable." This state of affairs is in some degree attributed to the Ameer of Affghanistan, with whom we are far from being on friendly terms, and who has long been anxious for an excuse for hostilities.

UNITED STATES.——President Hayes, who had asked the Republican Senators to select a proper Pennsylvania man for Minister at London, has refused to accept their nominee, Senator Cameron, who is a thorough "wire-puller" of the old school, and has appointed Mr. John Welsh, who was Chairman of the Finance Board at the Centennial Exhibition.—We published his portrait in No. 341, (June 10, 1876).—President Hayes is taking a southern tour, and has been warmly received at Richmond (Virginia) by both the authorities and the populace.—Congress has plenty to do this Session, as 850 Bills and Resolutions were introduced on Monday. Several of these propose the remonetisation of silver, modifications in the tariff, the consolidation of the for the Public Debt, the appointment of an American Commission Paris Exhibition, and an appropriation of 30,000*l.* for that purpose.—Senator Morton is seriously ill.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.——A dangerous little Kaffir war is going on in the Transkei, the Galekas, a tribe which in 1853 we subdued, but allowed to resettle in a portion of their old territory, having attacked a neighbouring tribe, the Fingoes, formerly subject to them, but now under British protection. The starting point was a drunken broil, which was succeeded by various raids. Sir Bartle Frere, who happened to be in the district, wished for an interview with the chief, Kreli, but the latter refused to meet the British Governor, who thereupon wrote him a letter, warning him to be careful. On the 26th ult., however, the Galekas in force attacked the Fingoes, who, supported by the border police, repulsed them, several of the police, however, being killed. Another action was also fought on the 28th ult., with the same result. War being thus declared, police and volunteers have been despatched to the scene of action, and by advices from Cape Town dated 19th ult., Kreli and his tribe had been completely surrounded, and all the neighbouring tribes had declared against the Chief.

MISCELLANEOUS.——AUSTRIA has been seriously inconvenienced by the rupture of the negotiations for a commercial treaty with Germany, but the customs difficulty with Hungary which threatened to ensue has been temporarily arranged by the efforts of the Emperor and Count Andrassy. Negotiations are to be commenced with Germany for a treaty on the basis of the "best-favoured nation."—From ITALY we hear that the Pope is again indisposed, that Father Curci has not been expelled from the Society of Jesus, but has been summoned before Father Beckx, the General of the Order; and that Parliament meets on Nov. 15, when the Railway Purchase question is expected to be the great topic.—PORTUGAL has been startled by another earthquake at Lisbon, no material damage, however, being done.—In CHINA the authorities have officially taken possession of the Woosung Railway, and have stopped the traffic.

◆

THE COURT

THE Queen will return to Windsor about the 23rd of this month. Meanwhile, Her Majesty, with the Princess Beatrice, continues at Balmoral, where a ball was given last week to the servants, tenants, and gillies of the Balmoral and Abergeldie estates, the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and the three young Princesses of Wales being present during part of the time. On Saturday the Duke of Richmond and Gordon dined with Her Majesty, and next morning the Queen and the Princess Beatrice attended Divine Service at Crathie Church, the Rev. P. M'Adam Muir officiating. After the service the Princess of Wales and her three little girls came over from Abergeldie to lunch with Her Majesty. Hallowe'en was kept on Monday night with more than usual ceremony, the Princess of Wales being very anxious to see the festivities. A torchlight procession of 200 servants and tenants preceded by pipers and headed by the Princess of Wales, her children, and Princess Beatrice, each bearing a lighted torch marched up to the castle, where they walked three times round a bonfire, which was lighted by the Princesses, and reels were danced, while the Queen watched the proceedings. After the dance a figure representing "The Witch" was carried round in procession and flung into the flames.

The Princess of Wales and her daughters was to have left Abergeldie on Tuesday, but their departure was postponed in consequence of Miss Knollys having a relapse. The Princess will remain with the invalid until all danger is passed. There has been another death in the household from typhoid fever since the arrival of the Prince and Princess in Scotland.—On concluding his visit to Newmarket, the Prince of Wales spent two days with the Duke of Grafton at Barnham, and returned to Marlborough House on Saturday. On Monday he went to Windsor, and had a day's pheasant shooting with Prince Christian in the coverts near Cranbourne, lunching afterwards with Princess Christian.—Princes Albert Victor and George take their place on the Navy List between the two half yearly batches of cadets of January and July, and their seniority dates from June 5th. They receive pay at the rate of one shilling per diem.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and their children arrived at Malta on Saturday morning from Marseilles. They landed at La Valetta, being greeted with salutes, and are residing in the Palace of San Antonio.

The King of Spain's marriage with his cousin, the Princess Mercedes, is said to be fixed for the 23rd of January, His Majesty's fête day. According to a new Metropolitan journal, the West London Express, the Princess's wedding-dress is already being made. It will be of cream-coloured satin, covered with Alençon lace, into the pattern of which the arms of the twelve kingdoms of Old Spain are to be worked.—The Queen of Wurtemburg is going to San Remo for the winter. Her Majesty has had a severe chest attack, and has been much distressed by the loss of her nephew, Prince Sergius of Leuchtenburg, killed in the Russo-Turkish War.—The Crown Prince of Hanover will shortly come to England. He will spend a few days in town, and will then go to Sandringham to stay with the Prince and Princess of Wales.

CHURCH NEWS

SIR F. KELLY AND THE RIDSDALE JUDGMENT.——Lord Chief Baron Kelly has published a correspondence which he has had with the Lord Chancellor respecting the statement made by the Rev. P. C. Ellis that he had described the Ridsdale judgment as an iniquitous one, based upon policy rather than law. His lordship denies that he ever used such words, though he admits that "in an unguarded moment" he may have hazarded an opinion that "there was much of policy rather than of law, though perhaps unconsciously to themselves, in the judgment of the majority of the judges." The Lord Chancellor objects to the Lord Chief Baron making public his dissent from the judgment as "a serious departure from what has hitherto been considered to be the obligation of a Privy Councillor;" but Sir Fitzroy Kelly does not think this obligation is binding when a case is over and before the public. He trusts, however, that, the question having arisen, some action may be taken to obtain a deliberate judicial determination of it; and that the law as now laid down by the Court of the Privy Council may in the mean time be honestly and conscientiously conformed to and obeyed.

BISHOP ELLICOTT'S CHARGE.——The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol commenced his Triennial Visitation at Bristol on Thursday last week. He congratulated his hearers on the good work that had been done among them during the past three years, but said that the dangers which menaced the Establishment were especially grave. They might be summed up in three forms of evil—lawlessness, caballing, and party spirit, and that undue exaltation of office and its privileges known as Sacerdotalism. The evil was sensibly increasing, and if left unchecked would speedily ring the knell of the Established Church. At Cirencester on the following day the Bishop dealt almost exclusively with Sacramental Confession, which he condemned as an alien practice, which was being stealthily but steadily introduced. The ghastly revelations of the last few months proved the absolute necessity of safeguards against the frightful abuses which centuries of experience had shown were inseparable from the system; but, all other dangers, great as they were, sank into nothingness when compared with the danger of the confessor taking the place of Christ, which was practically irremovable. On Monday Dr. Ellicott, continuing his visitation at Malmesbury, dwelt on the Royal Supremacy, denying that the legal enactment involved a compact that spiritual and ecclesiastical questions should, in the last resort, be restrained to spiritual or ecclesiastical arbitrament, and contending that the tacit compact it did involve of recognising Convocation as the Church of England by representation had been kept, though Convocation had not been duly consulted. On Tuesday his lordship spoke at Chippenham, and dealt with the Final Court of Appeal, which he said was a part of our ancient Constitution. Its last shape was not perhaps the best which could be conceived, but it was probably the best of any which had as yet been proposed. He believed the recent judgment in the Ridsdale case, which party spirit and disloyalty were now seeking to denounce and vilify, was characterised by lucidity, force, and transparent impartiality.

VARIOUS.——The Truro Diocesan Conference has appointed a committee to consider the various proposals for the formation of the new cathedral body. The Bishop's suggestion is that it shall at present consist of twenty-four honorary canons, an honorary chancellor, and an experimental officer to be called a "canon missionary," who shall devote himself exclusively to mission work within the diocese.—The Executive of the newly-established Anti-Liberation Society have issued a challenge to the Rev. G. J. Rogers, the well-known lecturer, to discuss publicly the subject, "Are the Principles, Objects, and Professions of the Liberation Society worthy of Acceptance by Englishmen?" The Scottish Council of the Liberation Society have just issued an address, describing their proposed plan of operations, and asking for the support of the friends of religious equality throughout Scotland. They say that, without predicting which of the two remaining establishments will be the first to fall, "if the position of the Scottish Establishment be alone considered, its abolition should be looked for at a comparatively early period."—"Brother Ignatius" has this week been conducting a "mission" in the public halls at Dover.—The Chapel Royal Whitehall will be reopened for Divine Service to-morrow, when the Bishop of London will preach. The organ has been rebuilt and the choir reorganised.—The Rev. Professor M'Carthy, of Maynooth College, has been elected to succeed the late Dr. Moriarty in the Roman Catholic see of Kerry.—The Right Rev. Walter J. Trower (Bishop of Gibraltar) died last week at Ashington, in Sussex, of which place he became rector after resigning his bishopric in 1868. He was in his seventy-fourth year, and had exercised his ministry in every capital of Europe except Lisbon.

MUSIC

Her Majesty's Theatre.——The "winter season" commences on Monday night, with Il Trovatore, to be followed successively on Tuesday by Il Barbiere, on Wednesday by Un Ballo in Maschera, on Thursday by Rigoletto, on Friday by Le Nozze di Figaro, and on Saturday by Robert le Diable—six operas in one week, and three of them by Verdi! Thus the intended plan of the director becomes at once apparent, and doubtless he has gathered from experience how, with the most likelihood of success, to cater for the mixed public he may rely upon as supporters of his undertaking. Happily, all these six operas, and twice as many more, are ready to hand, and for the most part the leading artists upon whom he must depend are all more or less conversant with the parts they have to act and the music they have to sing. Mdlle. Caroline Salla will play thrice, and each time in a more or less fatiguing part, the most responsible being that of Alice in Meyerbeer's great work. If she proves fully equal to this exceptional trial, after her provincial operatic tour in the country, the director may be congratulated on the possession of a dramatic cantatrice of more than ordinary value; for it must be remembered by opera-goers, that the young Frenchwoman is endowed with genuine histrionic ability, a voice well cultivated and of agreeable quality, added to personal attractions that speak for themselves. Mdlle. Anna di Belocca is to be the heroine of Rossini's comic masterpiece, placed in the estimation of Robert Schumann side by side with Mozart's Figaro, as an unsurpassable example of "comic opera;" and Mdlle. Mila Rodani, who, with but slight encouragement, has nevertheless legitimately won her way, and is now unanimously accepted as a public favourite, reappears in Un Ballo as Oscar, the page, the character selected for her début in the "fashionable season" of the present year, when the newly erected Her Majesty's Theatre had to be substituted for the Grand National Opera on the Thames Embankment. Not to enter into further particulars, for which there will be time enough when achievement usurps the seat of promise, it may be suggested that, with six performances every week, the chorus and orchestra have enough to do—though with opportunities to spare, let us hope, for the adequate preparation of Signor Marchetti's Ruy Blas, and the amended version of Verdi's profoundly melodramatic Forza del Destino. Wonderful things, under similar circumstances, have been accomplished at the Royal Italian Opera; and there is no absolute cause for doubt that Her Majesty's Theatre may be found equal to the occasion.

"Les Deux Journées."——Cherubini's admirable opera, Les Deux Journées, has been revived at Vienna, upon which fact the Paris Ménestrel remarks:—"It is curious to note that a masterpiece originally composed for the French stage by the great Florentine, Cherubini, exists no longer either in the French or Italian repertory, and that for a French amateur to hear this celebrated Franco-Italian work he must cross the Rhine or the 'Manche' on a visit to our German or English neighbours." The Ménestrel might have added the Atlantic, seeing that the late regretted Parepa and her husband, Carl Rosa, had made The Water Carrier familiar throughout the United States before producing it with such signal success in England, some years after an Italian version of the opera had been given at Her Majesty's Opera, when located at Drury Lane Theatre.

A Word for Ourselves, &c.——We are informed by the Parisian journals that active rehearsals are going on at the New Grand Opera for the reprise of M. Massenet's Roi de Lahore—as if there had not been rehearsals enough from the beginning. M. Massenet, however, superintends them himself, which warrants a belief that he was not satisfied with the first series of performances, however successful. To expect that the London public will ever enjoy a chance of judging the Roi de Lahore would be preposterous. Let amateurs be consoled, however. There are composers in England who could write operas quite as good as any that are likely to proceed from the pen of M. Massenet, clever as he unquestionably is; and we must confess that we would rather hear Mr. Arthur Sullivan's projected Marie Stuart, with Christine Nilsson as the romantic and ill-fated Scottish Queen, than the Roi de Lahore, Cinq Mars, Francesca de Rimini, and Polyeucte (not Donizetti's Poliuto—which has been listened to here with an apathy commensurate to its deserts) put together. When will our English musicians be allowed to show that they know as much of music as some of the most distinguished of their foreign contemporaries? When will that cynically affected indifference to English music, for which so many even of our non-fashionable amateurs are noted, receive a check? The rage for novelty has recently extended to the domain of high-class orchestral music, and even Mozart and Beethoven (to say nothing of poor Mendelssohn) are occasionally made to bow their heads before Liszt, Thaikoffski, Saint-Saens, and brotherhood! Why not, then, extend this in another direction, and try something by way of novelty in opera? Forty years of Bellini and Donizetti (always, be it observed, the self-same works), and thirty years of Verdi are surely enough. There must be a great deal more in existence that calls for due recognition; and for our own parts we should gladly welcome new settings of Norma, the Sonnambula, Lucia, Lucrezia, and, above all, Linda di Chamouni, just as, after a brief period of indignant surprise, Rossini's resetting of the once popular Barbiere di Siviglia of Paesiello was welcomed, first by all Italy, next by all Europe. At all events let us have something new—if not from abroad, which seems difficult, at least from among ourselves, which would be easy enough. One successful opera by an English composer, produced either at the Royal Italian or at Her Majesty's, would fairly open the way.

Waifs.——M. Gounod's Cinq Mars, as revised by the composer, is shortly to be reproduced at the Opéra Comique. That revision is necessary is generally admitted, and M. Gounod is too conscientious a man to disregard the opinions of those competent to judge. Are we never to hear Cinq Mars in London? A new opera, La Surprise d'Amour, by that very promising composer, M. Ferdinand Poise, is to be brought out, immediately, at the same theatre, where M. Carvalho (husband of the well-known vocalist, Madame Miolan) is displaying a laudable activity which proves him to be, as was generally acknowledged when manager of the old Théâtre Lyrique, the right man in the right place.—At the Grand Opera a Mdlle. Richard, pupil of the Conservatoire, was so favourably received on the occasion of her début as Leonore, in the Favorite of Donizetti, that M. Halanzier, director of that vast but lazily-conducted establishment, forthwith doubled her "appointments."—Tamberlik is engaged for the Opéra Italian, and will shortly appear in Donizetti's Poliuto and Rossini's Otello.—A festival performance exclusively devoted to the works of Mendelssohn was to be held this week at Vienna in honour of the illustrious musician, who died November 4th, 1847.—Music seems flourishing in St. Petersburg. The Imperial Classical Concerts have already begun, the national theatres are crowded, and the Italian Opera goes on prosperously. Madame Etelka Gerster has made a successful début in the Sonnambula. Madame Christine Nilsson has been enthusiastically received at Moscow, where she is engaged for a month, after which she returns for two months to the capital of the Czar.—We are informed that Madame Adelina Patti is to be paid 2,500*l.* for five concerts at Venice (another "canard"—Povera Venezia!); and that she also insists upon half the gross receipts nightly for her performance at the Imperial Opera in Vienna (another). Why cannot they leave the poor little lady alone?—Miss Minnie Hauck, whose reception in Brussels was at first doubtful, has finished her engagement with a triumphal success, unanimously admitted.

LEGAL

A New Detective Force.——It is said that Colonel Henderson, acting under Mr. Cross's orders, has established an entirely new department at Scotland Yard, which, however, is only provisional. It is to be known as the Department of Crime, and Mr. J. E. Davis, legal adviser to the Commissioner, is to be its chief. The term "detective" is to be abolished, and that of "Officer of the Department of Crime" substituted. Why not, as in Scotland, "Criminal officer?" Enquiries in any difficult cases are to be intrusted to Superintendents and Inspectors of divisions and Sub-divisions; and all undetected cases are to be reported to Mr. Davis.

The Artisans' Dwellings Frauds.——Messrs. Baxter Langley, Swindlehurst, and Saffery have been convicted and sentenced, the first two to eighteen months', and the last to twelve months' hard labour, the Judge remarking that the sentence was in respect of the first count in the indictment only, and that at the expiration of the term, if the Attorney General should claim judgment on the other counts, his decision would depend on whether the civil proceedings had resulted in the restitution of the money to the Company or its transference to the hands of the lawyers. Messrs. Langley and Swindlehurst pleaded for mercy, the one on account of a disease with which he is afflicted, and the other urging his long public services in the cause of temperance; but neither plea was entertained. The sentence would, however, seem to be excessively lenient, were it not for the fact that the actual imprisonment is the least part of their punishment, as their loss of position and character will probably be irretrievable.

The Trial of the Detectives at the Central Criminal Court is progressing slowly, the only witnesses yet examined being the convicts Kurr, Benson, and Bale. The proceedings are expected to last two or three weeks longer; but the Court sits only five days a week, Saturday being passed over in deference to the wishes of some of the jury, who are of the Jewish religion.

The Penge Case.——Alice Rhodes has received a "free pardon," and the three Stauntons are to be kept in penal servitude for life. Before leaving the gaol Alice Rhodes was allowed to see her sister, and on her arrival in London she paid a visit to her solicitor, to whom she stated that Patrick Staunton is losing his reason. The decision of the Home Secretary will probably give satisfaction to the general public, but there must be a large minority who will continue to hold the opinion that the accused were either entirely innocent of criminal intent, or guilty of the most cruel murder that can possibly be conceived. The case has been practically re-tried in camera, a proceeding which can never recommend itself to the minds of the majority of Englishmen.

Miscellaneous.——It is rumoured that Mr. Alfred Thesiger, Q.C., who is a son of Lord Chelmsford, and only thirty-nine years of age, is to be appointed Lord Justice of Appeal in the room of Lord Justice Amphlett. The appointment seems to have given great offence in some quarters, while in others it is regarded as a hopeful sign of the times that a man should be entrusted with great judicial functions while yet in the fullest vigour of life, and before he has had time to contract inveterate habits of advocacy. On the other hand, it seems somewhat anomalous that a comparatively inexperienced man should be thus suddenly lifted over the heads of judges, some of whom had began their professional career before he was born.—The police of Manchester have arrested two brothers on a charge of forging Irish bank notes. Their plan was ingenious, the different parts of the notes being engraved on separate plates and combined with other matter, so that each plate made up a complete design apparently of the harmless nature of a label or show-card. Suspicions were however excited by the special instructions which were given to the engravers as to extreme care in the execution.—A curious dispute respecting the property left by the late Alderman Carty, of Drogheda, has just been settled in the Dublin Law Courts. The Alderman, who died three years ago, left 90,000*l.*, which has since been distributed amongst his numerous relatives, all of whom were in poor circumstances. About nine months ago, however, an old woman arrived from Australia, where she had led a sort of gipsy life, and been acquainted with Arthur Orton, the butcher, of Wagga Wagga. She claimed to be Mr. Carty's aunt, stated her age as eighty-four, and her name as Catherine Murphy, née Kitty Caffery. Her identity was disputed, the defendants saying that the real Kitty Caffery died in Dublin in 1820, and that if living she would now be 120 years old. One of the plaintiff's statements, that when she left Ireland more than fifty years ago she took with her fifty sovereigns, was rebutted by evidence showing that those coins were not issued until some years later. The verdict was for the defendant.—The Commercial Gas Company have been mulcted in penalties amounting to 400*l.* for supplying impure gas. We wonder whether this left them any margin of profit, and whether similar actions against Water Companies would have any good effect.—The man who decoyed away a little girl has been committed for trial on the double charge of abduction, and robbing his employer. He was assistant to a hosier at Brompton, and a number of stolen articles were found concealed about his body.—A very harsh sentence appears to have been passed on Thomas Henry Grills, lately a boatswain on board H.M.S. Narcissus, who has been tried by court-martial and found guilty of drunkenness on board ship. He pleaded that he had drank very little, and that he believed he must have been drugged, and Commander Cameron spoke of him as a hard-working and industrious officer; but the Court decided that he should be dismissed from the service. The poor man has a wife and nine children, and surely something less than taking away his means of livelihood would have sufficed as punishment for an offence for which a police magistrate would have inflicted a fine of five shillings.

◆

A Library for Ladies only has been opened in St. James' Square by the London Library.

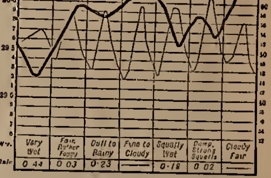
The Everlasting Sea Serpent has turned up again, and has been seen by the P. and O. steamer Mirzapore about 250 miles from Singapore. The creature is not reported to have done any damage, however, and therefore cannot compare with a terrible monster which has lately appeared in the Mississippi. A towboat with six coal barges steaming down the river was attacked by an enormous creature described as having a head like a bulldog, with a pelican's beak 10 ft. long, somewhat resembling that of the sword fish, from which two streams of water were thrown up to over 40 ft., a serpentine scaly neck 10 or 12 ft. long adorned by a greenish mane, enormous fins and a powerful tail. The monster speedily demolished one of the barges and then made off, leaving a portion of its beak imbedded in the barge. The splinter resembled ivory, though as hard as steel, while it was dark green and brown in colour, and weighed 18lbs. Later on the creature destroyed a ferry-boat, and devoured one of the passenger's horses, and overturned three other boats, while cattle and horses have disappeared in the most mysterious manner. Truly "very like a" Transatlantic "whale."

Sketching Club Competition.——On the 31st October the fourth annual competition between the sketching clubs of the Schools of Art in the metropolis took place at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly. Five sketching clubs engaged this year in the competition—viz., the South Kensington (male and female), Lambeth, West London, and the Gilbert (St. Martin's); and a total of 202 sketches in oil, water colour, chalk, clay, and plaster were contributed. Sir John Gilbert, R.A., Mr. W. F. Woodington, A.R.A., and Mr. A. Legros, who were the judges, made the following awards:—The Lambeth Club received the award of honour for producing the best aggregate of work. The prizes of 3*l.* (the money for which is provided by the different clubs) were awarded as follows, for the best sketch in each of the subjects named:—For Figure, "A Critical Moment," Mr. H. G. Glindoni, Gilbert Club. Landscape, "A Grey Day," Mr. J. W. Wilson, Gilbert Club. Sculpture, "A Critical Moment," Miss H. Montalba, South Kensington Club. Animals, "On the Look Out," Mr. Montefiore, South Kensington Club. Design, "A Decorative Panel," three prizes of 1*l.* each to Mr. C. Reich and Mr. W. Swain, West London Club, and Mr. Pearce, Lambeth Club.

◆

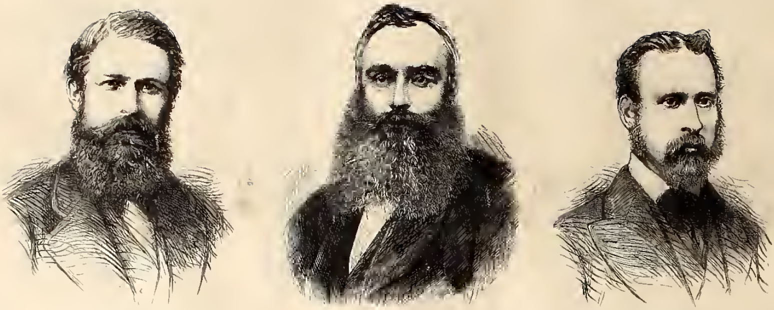
WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

October 25th to October 31st (inclusive)



Explanation.—The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

Remarks.——The weather of the past week has been of an unsettled character—dull, wet, foggy, and, in the western and northern parts of the kingdom, stormy. Each of the "dips" or concavities shown in the barometer curve given above correspond with the passage over or near us of a depression, bringing with it a renewal of rain and increase of wind. On Friday night, the 26th instant, a stiff southerly gale was felt along our west and northern coasts, but soon lulled, and did not affect the south-east of England much. On Monday, the 29th instant, a second gale was felt in the same region, but extended rather more over us, and on Tuesday, the 30th instant, a third one approached, and the wind veering more to the westward, blew a strong gale from that quarter in the west during the afternoon, and a moderate gale in the neighbourhood of London. At the close of the period the barometer was rising, and the weather had improved in a marked degree, but apparently not for long. The barometer was highest (30·48 inches) at midnight on Wednesday, the 31st instant; lowest (29·22 inches) on Thursday, the 25th instant; range, 1·26 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (61°) on Tuesday, the 30th instant; lowest (44°) on Sunday, the 28th instant; range, 17°. Rainfall: Total fall, 0·90 inches, on five days; greatest fall in one day, 0·44 inches, on Thursday, the 25th instant. In several of our western counties very heavy falls have occurred.

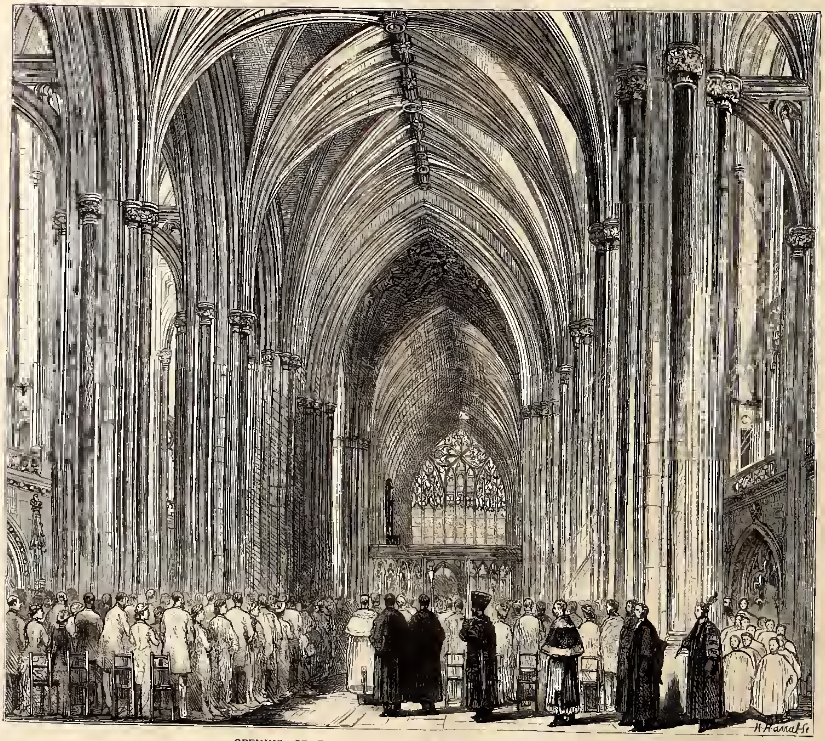


J. W. L. WATKIN
(Manager of the Pit)

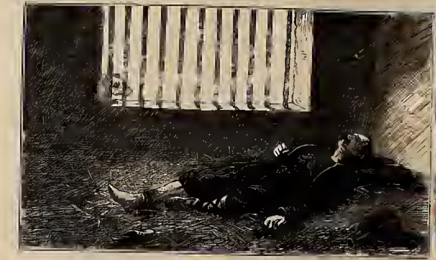
R. F. COOK
(Certificated Manager)

R. LAVERICK
(Underlooker)

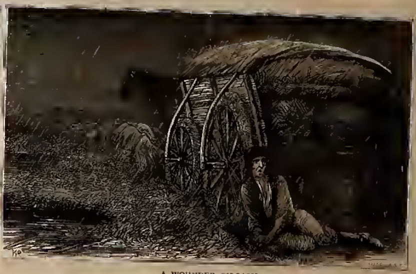
THE COLLIERY ACCIDENT AT PEMBERTON—THE FIRST RESCUING PARTY, ALL OF WHOM WERE KILLED



OPENING OF THE NEW NAVE, BRISTOL CATHEDRAL

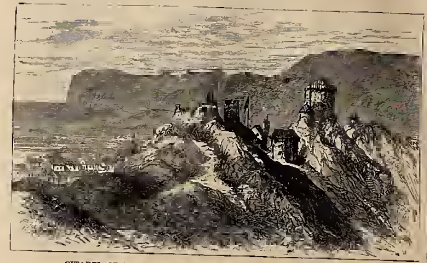


"FORGOTTEN"

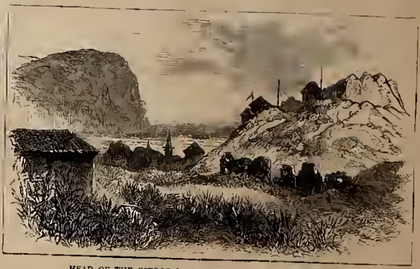


A WOUNDED CIRCASSIAN

WITH THE TURKS

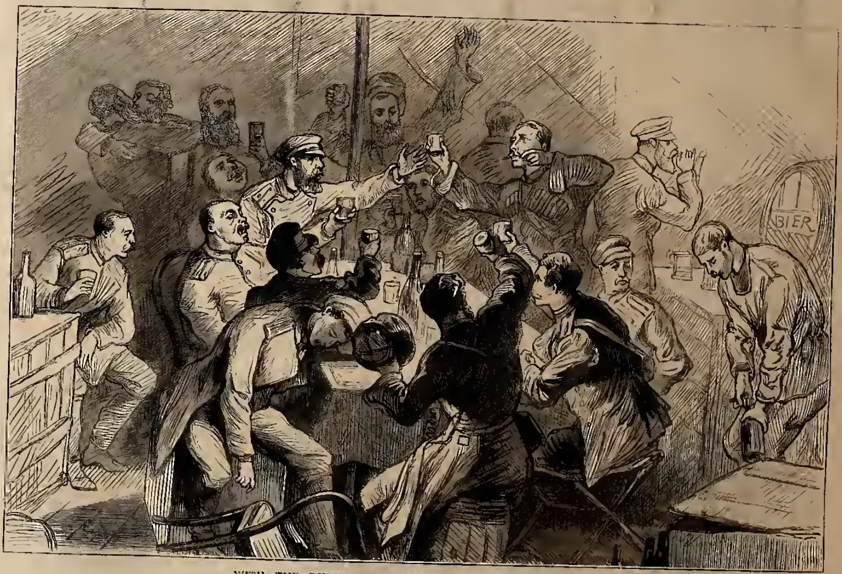


CITADEL OF NICSICS, RECENTLY SURRENDERD BY THE TURKS



HEAD OF THE OSTROG PASS, AND THE CITADEL OF NICSICS

THE MONTENEGRIN CAMPAIGN



WITH THE RUSSIANS—A REJOICING AFTER A BATTLE

(Continued from page 423)

his Papal seat after his arraignment on charges of heresy and simony. M. Maignan shows us the Pope in his white robes and tiara coming down from his throne on the cathedral dais to brave the Colonna and his rabble of soldiery, who are crowded in the right hand corner of the foreground. The canvas is too large for the room, so that the group of soldiers seems to take an undue precedence of the Pope. This would not be the case were the Exhibition-room better proportioned to the picture, which is a grave, thorough, and powerful piece of work, creditable to the training of the school from which it comes, no less than to the scholarship and skill of its painter. When shall we turn out historical work as solid and thorough in the English school? But for most of the visitors to Mr. Wallis's Gallery the chief interest will be concentrated in the Duke of Wellington's companion pictures, Wilkie's "Waterloo Gazette," and its companion, Burnet's "Chelsea Pensioners," so familiar to us all from the engravings, but which, as pictures, will be new to most who see them here. Wilkie's masterpiece is in perfect condition, and the care and thoroughness of its execution, the amount of thoughtful and well-directed labour embodied in it, no less than the national significance of the subject, combine to make it an example for English painters of the day, as well in the choice as in the treatment of their subjects. Burnet's companion picture, though avowedly an imitation, holds its place wonderfully well by the side of the Wilkie. Another very interesting picture here is a fine early example of John Linnell, a mountain landscape, which shows us the veteran painter at his best.

We must defer our notice of Messrs. Tooth and McLean's Galleries till next week.

TOM TAYLOR

THE ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF DRAWINGS by the students of the Female School of Art, Queen Square, which was held at the school last week, showed a marked improvement on previous years. Formerly the pupils seemed to concentrate all their energies on flower painting—by no means the highest branch of their art—but now figure-subjects occupy a large place, and the studies from life are boldly and carefully executed, while the "time-sketches"—charcoal heads completed in four hours—are particularly well done. The most interesting pictures, however, are the productions of six ladies who accompanied Miss Gann to Italy last spring, although these sketches might have been worked up a little more, and not left in so unfinished a condition. Modelling is also well represented, and there are the ordinary outline drawings, botanical studies, &c. The students have carried off their usual share of medals, and altogether the institution gives every sign of steady progress.

MARRIAGE.

On the 26th Sept., at All Saints, Oystermouth, by the Rev. Secretan Jones, Vicar, WILLIAM BARNET, Esq., of Clifton, to MARY REBECCA, eldest daughter of the late D. NICOL, M.D., of Swansea.

DEATHS.

On the 27th ult., after a short illness, at 5, St. Edmund's Terrace, Regent's Park, WILLIAM RAY SMEE, Esq., F.S.A., eldest son of the late WILLIAM SMEE, Esq., aged 61. Friends will please accept this intimation.

On the 23rd ult., Mr. BENJAMIN LINDSEY, of King Street, Twickenham, aged 41.

THE NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.
Now ready at all the Libraries.

A JEWEL OF A GIRL. By the Author of "Queenie," &c. 3 vols.
THE SQUIRE'S COURTSHIP. By Mrs. MACKENZIE DANIEL. 3 vols.
MAUD LESLIE. By Lady CHARLES THYNNE. 1 vols.
TWO TALES OF MARRIED LIFE: HARD TO BEAR, by GEORGIANA M. CRAIK; and A TRUE MAN, by M. C. STIRLING. 3 vols.
GLORY. By Mrs. G. LINNÆUS BANKS. 3 vols.
CHEAP EDITION of PHŒBE, JUNIOR. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 1 vol. 5s. bound and Illustrated.
THE VILLAGE COMEDY. By MORTIMER and FRANCES COLLINS. 3 vols. [Next week.
HURST and BLACKETT, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

A MAN OF OTHER DAYS: Recollections of the Marquis de Beauregard. Edited from the French, by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," &c. 2 vols., 21s.
HURST and BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

CHAPMAN and HALL'S NEW NOVELS.

New Novel by Lady Wood.
SHEEN'S FOREMAN. By Lady WOOD, Author of "Wild Weather," "Below the Salt," &c. 3 vols.

New Novel by Annie Thomas.
A LAGGARD IN LOVE. By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Author of "Henry Donne" and "Called to Account." 3 vols.

THE QUEEN OF BOHEMIA: a Novel. By JOSEPH HATTON. 2 vols.

GREY ABBEY. By OLD CALABAR, Author of "Jack Blake," "Over Turf and Stubble." 2 vols.

ROTHERY SELFERT, Q.C. By JOHN OLLIVE, Author of "A Wooing of Ate." 3 vols.

193, PICCADILLY.

HISTORY of FRENCH LITERATURE. By HENRY VAN LAUN.
Vol. I. From its Origin to the Renaissance. Demy 8vo. 16s.
Vol. II. From the Classical Renaissance to the end of the Reign of Louis XIV. Demy 8vo. 16s.
Vol. III. From the end of the Reign of Louis XIV. till the end of the Reign of Louis Philippe. Demy 8vo. 16s.
London: SMITH, ELDER, and CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

NEW VOLUME BY ROBERT BROWNING.
Now ready, fcp. 8vo. 5s.
THE AGAMEMNON of ÆSCHYLUS. Transcribed by ROBERT BROWNING.
London: SMITH, ELDER, and CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. R. D. BLACKMORE.
Second Edition now ready, at all the Libraries.
EREMA; or, MY FATHER'S SIN. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Alice Lorraine," &c., &c. 3 vols.
London: SMITH, ELDER, and CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

NEW NOVEL BY SARAH TYTLER.
A DOUCE LASS. By the Author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline," "A Garden of Women," &c. Two Vols. Post 8vo.
London: SMITH, ELDER, and CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

On Oct. 29 (One Shilling), No. 215.
THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE for NOVEMBER. With Illustrations by GEO. DU MAURIER and FRANK DICKSEE.
CONTENTS:—
Erema; or, My Father's Sin. (With an Illustration.) Chap. LIV.—Hardness Hearted. LV.—A Dead Letter. LVI.—With his own Sword. LVII.—Female Suffrage. LVIII.—Beyond Desert and Deserts.
Some Sonnets of Campanella.
The Czar's Clemency; a Polish Priest's Story.
Æsthetic Analysis of an Obelisk.
A Mighty Sea-ware.
The Last Redoubt. By Alfred Austin.
"For Percival." (With an Illustration.) Chap. IX.—Sissy looks into the Mirror. X.—In Langley Wood. XI.—Meanwhile. XII.—"Well, what's gone from me? What have I lost in you?"
London: SMITH, ELDER, and CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE. No. 217. For NOVEMBER. Price 1s.
Contents of the Number:—
1. M. Thiers: a Sketch from Life, by an English Pencil. By Emily Crawford.
2. Young Musgrave. By Mrs. Oliphant. Chaps. XXXII.—XXXV.
3. The Discoveries at Olympia. By Gustav Hirschfield, late Director of the Excavations for the German Government.
4. Me and My Mate. A Whitby Story.
5. Panslavists and the Slav Committee.
6. My Pet Corn.
7. Mohl's "Livre des Rois." By Professor E. H. Palmer.
8. Style. By T. H. Wright.
9. African Exploration and its Results. By Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., &c.
MACMILLAN and CO., London.

THE ART JOURNAL For NOVEMBER (price 2s. 6d.) contains the following LINE ENGRAVINGS:—
I. THE BOUQUET. After A. TOULMOUCHE.
II. THE DOG AND THE SHADOW. After Sir E. LANDSEER, R.A.
III. THE STUDENT. After J. L. MEISSONIER.
LITERARY CONTENTS:
The Works of Andrew MacCallum. By James Dafforne. Illustrated.
The Art of Dressing and of being Dressed. By Percy Fitzgerald, M.A. (continued).
Norway. Chap. XI. By R. T. Pritchett, F.S.A. Illust.
Old Nankin Blue. Part II. By E. B. Shuldham, M.D., M.A.
Art-Exhibition at Lucca.
The Use of Animal Forms in Ornamental Art. Chap. VI. By F. E. Hulme, F.L.S. Illustrated.
Decorative Furniture. Illust.
Ancient Irish Art. By L. Jewitt, F.S.A. Illustrated (continued).
Art at Home and Abroad, Obituary, Reviews, &c.
London: VIRTUE and CO. (Limited), Ivy Lane, and all Booksellers.

"FINIS." The New Annual, by the Authors of the COMING K——, will be issued on 1st December. Published for the Benefit of the Children of the Late S. O. BEETON, by GOUBAUD and SON, 39 and 40, Bedford Street, Covent Garden. Price One Shilling. Postage 2d.

LE FOLLET for NOVEMBER presents the Fashion of the Day for Ladies' Cloaks, Mantles, Morning and Visiting Dress, Bonnets, Hats, &c.
One Shilling and Sixpence. [illegible]
MINISTER and SON, 2, Argyll Place, W.

THE MUSICAL TIMES. Price 3d.
 The largest and best Musical Journal.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for NOVEMBER contains:—The Great Composers, sketched by themselves; Mozart, by J. Bennett—A Sketch of the History of Music-Printing, by Dr. Chrysander (continued)—Festival Committees and New Works—Mdlle. Titiens—Crystal Palace Concerts—Liverpool Philharmonic Society—Advent Anthem: "Hearken unto Me, My People," by Arthur Sullivan—Reviews—Foreign and Country News, &c. Postage free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for NOVEMBER contains a New Anthem for Advent, by Arthur Sullivan, "Hearken Unto Me, My People." Price separately, 1½d.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. Price 2s.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAUTIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s. (Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.)

LIEDER OHNE WORTE. Eight Books. The only complete edition. Cloth, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S CHRISTMAS PRESENTS:
CHRISTMAS CAROLS, NEW AND OLD. Edited by the Rev. H. R. BRAMLEY and Dr. STAINER. With 42 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Elegantly bound, 7s. 6d.
THE SUNLIGHT OF SONG. Sacred and Moral Songs, with Original Music by the most eminent English Composers. With 46 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Handsomely bound, 7s. 6d.
NATIONAL NURSERY RHYMES. Set to Music by J. W. ELLIOTT. With 65 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 21s.; octavo, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.; octavo, paper covers, 5s.
MOZART'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 18s.
MENDELSSOHN'S LIEDER OHNE WORTE. The best and only Complete Edition, containing the Seventh and Eighth Books. Folio, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 12s.; octavo, handsomely bound, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.
 Order Novello's Edition.
RUBINSTEIN'S EIGHTEEN TWO-PART SONGS. German and English Words. Octavo, handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM. English and German Words. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM FOR YOUNG PIANISTS (Op. 68 and Op. 15). Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM. Original German Words, and an English Version by JOHN OXENFORD. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
A DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. Edited by Dr. STAINER and W. A. BARRETT. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 16s.
MUSICAL MYTHS AND FACTS. By CARL ENGEL. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s.
LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO., 1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

STRANGERS YET: a New Story. By SARAH DOUDNEY, Author of "Nothing but Leaves," will be commenced in the PICTORIAL WORLD, Illustrated Newspaper, of Nov. 3. Engravings of Current Events, Fine Art Presentation Plates, Coloured Maps gratis. The cheapest and most attractive Illustrated Newspaper for the Family ever issued for Threepence. Every Saturday. Of all newsagents. Offices: 63, Fleet Street, London.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.
ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

STANDARD MUSICAL WORKS for COLLEGES and SCHOOLS. By J. T. STONE.
FOR THE PIANOFORTE: THE FIRST SIX MONTHS AT THE PIANO. 5s.—ELEMENTARY INSTRUCTIONS. Twentieth Edition. 5s.—FACILE INSTRUCTIONS. Sixteenth Edition. 4s.—CONCISE INSTRUCTIONS. 3s.
FOR THE ORGAN: COMPLETE INSTRUCTIONS. Ninth Edition. 5s.—THE CLASSICAL ORGANIST. In Three Vols., £1 1s. each, or in Fifty-four Numbers, 2s. each.—THE ORGAN STUDENT'S COMPANION. In six vols., 7s. 6d. each; or in Twenty-four Books, 2s. each.
FOR THE HARMONIUM: COMPLETE INSTRUCTIONS. 5s.—THE HARMONIUM MISCELLANY. In Twelve Numbers. 3s. each.
FOR SINGING:—THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL INSTRUCTIONS. 6s.—The Publishers confidently direct the attention of Professors and Teachers of Music to the above Works. The whole series have a large and increasing circulation.—London: BREWER and CO., 14 and 15, Poultry, Cheapside, and No. 23, Bishopsgate Street Within.

ACCIDENTS by FLOOD and FIELD.—Accidents of all kinds may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.
Hon. A. KINNAIRD, M.P., Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000
£1,120,000 has been paid as compensation.
No. 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Sec.

MALVERN COLLEGE. The ANNUAL EXAMINATION for ENTRANCE EXHIBITIONS and SCHOLARSHIPS will be held on December 20th and 21st.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

THE MOST LAUGHABLE THING on EARTH.—A new Parlour Pastime, 50,000 Transformations of Wit and Humour. Post free for 14 stamps.
H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

THE LOVE CHASE.—The Merriest Game out for any number of Players. 24 Engravings. Post free for 14 stamps.
H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"I recommend them as a safe and effectual remedy for coughs and chest complaints."—G. Wood, 60, City Road, Hulme, Manchester. Price 1s. 1½d. per box.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS, 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

	£	s.	d.
The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	5	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

DEANE and CO.'S London Kitcheners.—DEANE and CO. manufacture, supply, and fix complete Cooking Apparatus, Kitcheners, Ranges, Hot Water Circulation, Bath Fittings, &c. Estimates free.

London Patent Close Fire.		London Patent Open Fire.		Patent Kitcheners.		Cheap Kitcheners.
4 ft.	£13 10	4 ft. 6	£16 10	3 ft. 6	£10 0	3 ft.	£3 0
4 ft. 6	16 10	5 ft.	£20 0	4 ft.	£12 0	3 ft. 6	£6 0
5 ft.	19 10	5 ft. 6	£24 0	4 ft. 6	£13 10	4 ft.	£10 5

GAS CHANDELIERS and FITTINGS. The mansion, the villa, or cottage fitted throughout.

	Two Light	Three Lights	Five Lights
	£ s. d. £ s. d.	£ s. £ s.	£ s. £ s.
Ormolu	0 18 6 to 2 0 0	2 10 to 6 6	4 10 to 10 10
Bronze	0 17 0 to 1 18 0	1 14 to 7 15	4 4 to 12 12
Crystal		2 15 to 9 9	6 6 to 15 0

Manufactory and Workshops, No. 1, Jacob Street, Dockhead.
Deane and Co.'s complete Illustrated Catalogue post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, King William Street, London Bridge.

MORTLOCK'S CHINA, GLASS, and EARTHENWARE WAREHOUSE, originally established by John Mortlock in 1746, is carried on by his Descendant and Successor, JOHN MORTLOCK,
at THE POTTERY GALLERIES, 202, 203, and 204, Oxford Street; and 30, 31, and 32, Orchard Street, London, W.
The Rooms are by far the most extensive in Europe, and patterns at all prices are submitted.

MAPPIN and WEBB, MANUFACTURERS, MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY, LONDON.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S SPOONS AND FORKS. Equal in Finish and Appearance to Sterling Silver.

	Plain		Ornamental
Table Spoons or Forks, pr. doz.	30s. 0d.	40s. 0d.	60s. 0d.
Dessert do. do. do.	24s. 0d.	32s. 0d.	44s. 0d.
Tea do. do. do.	12s. 0d.	16s. 0d.	28s. 0d.
Salt, Mustard, or Egg, each	1s. 3d.	2s. 0d.	3s. 6d.
Sugar Tongs do.	2s. 6d.	3s. 6d.	6s. 0d.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S ELECTRO-SILVER PLATE. New Registered Designs, plain or richly ornamental.

THE HIGHEST QUALITY, at Lowest Prices.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES Post Free.

MAPPIN and WEBB, MANUFACTURERS, 76, 77, and 78, OXFORD STREET, WEST END, LONDON.

CHUBB'S FIRE AND THIEF-RESISTING SAFES, steel-plated, and with their patent diagonal bolts, are the most secure. Chubb's Patent Latches and Locks for all purposes. Cash and Deed Boxes. Price List sent free.—CHUBB and SON, 128, Queen Victoria St., St. Paul's, E.C., and 68, St. James's Street, S.W.
Atlas folio, half-morocco, gilt, price £5 5s.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS.
Sold by all Stationers throughout the World.

WOOD-CUTTING for AMATEURS.—No previous knowledge required. Thousands of pretty things in Cut Wood, Baskets, Stands for Flowers, &c. Candelabras, Pipe Cases, &c., &c., can be cut by Lorin's Wood-cutting Machines, everything complete. Drawings, saws, &c., from 8s.—Wholesale and Retail, to be had at the Manufacturers, JACQUES LORIN FILS, 3, Rue de la Fidélité, Paris. Catalogues free on application.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 30s., 40s., 45s. half-dozen.

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER-SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk. It will entirely dispense with the ever-shrinking coloured flannel, 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-measure free by post.—FORD and CO., 41 and 44, Poultry, London.

WILLS' "BRISTOL MIXTURE."
MILD AND FRAGRANT.
WILLS' "SMOKING MIXTURE,"
A CHOICE COMBINATION OF "FIRST GROWTHS."
Sold everywhere in One, Two, and Four Ounce Packets, protected by our Name and Trade Mark, W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.,
A LARGE PURCHASE OF
NEW COLOURED SILKS, at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., and 4s. 4½d. per yard, also a richer quality at 5s. 3d., usually sold at 7s. 6d. per yard. 250 shades to select from. Patterns free.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES OF
BLACK GROS GRAINS. This extensive purchase comprises Silks of the best and most reliable makes, and are specially recommended. Prices 2s. 6½d., 3s. 3½d., and 3s. 9d. per yard. Also richer goods from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

COLOURED GENOA VELVETS to match every Silk, short pile, well covered, suitable for Gowns, 6s. 11d. per yard, any length cut. Patterns free.

BLACK GENOA VELVETS, suited for trimming purposes, 2s. 11d. to 7s. 6d. per yd. A special purchase of Black Lyons Velvet, all silk, at 9s. 11d. per yard. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

COLOURED SILK COSTUMES of the latest designs and most fashionable description, in all the new colour Silks, commencing at 6½ guineas. Patterns of the Silks and Engravings post free.

BLACK SILK COSTUMES, made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, price with bodice complete, 5½ guineas. Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN WINTER COSTUMES.
Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas.
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling, Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas.
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL AND WEDDING DRESSES.
Now ready several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas. Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.
THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black), profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train, 1 guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 28s. 9d., with material for bodice.
Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR
WINTER DRESSES, in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour, From 12s. 6d. to 4gs. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

IN 62 NEW SHADES OF COLOUR.
CACHEMIRE DE PARIS. This elegant material is all wool, beautifully soft, and richer in its colourings than any article previously introduced. 48 inches wide, 2s. 11d. and 3s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool. This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

A NEW FABRIC FOR PALETOTS, &c.
POIL DE CHAMEAU (Registered). This elegant fabric, though very warm, is remarkably light and soft, and can be had in choice shades of Fawn, Drab, Grey, Light Brown, &c. 54 inches wide, from 5s. 6d. per yd. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford St., W.

A NEW FABRIC IN BLACK.
CRÈPE CASHMERE (Registered). A most useful material in seven different designs, full width, 1s. 9d. per yard. Specially adapted for this season's Costumes. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

NOW ON SALE AT HALF-PRICE
1,000 UNMADE PALETOTS (Black), Richly embroidered on very fine Cashmere or Diagonal Cloth, full size and newest shapes, from 29s. 6d. to 42s. each, formerly 3 to 4 guineas.

IN WHITE, BLACK, AND ALL NEW COLOURS
VELVET-FINISHED VELVETEENS, beautifully soft, rich, and very wide. This charming Fabric can be had in Black, from 1s. 9d. to 5s. 6d. per yard, and in 35 choice shades of colour, at 3s. 9d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W., having concluded the purchase of large quantities of SEAL FUR SKINS and Squirrel Furs, they are now on sale as quoted below.
Russian Seal Fur Jackets, loose shapes, 24 to 28 inches deep, 6 to 10 guineas.
Ditto fitting shapes, 30 to 36 inches deep, 9 to 20 guineas.
South Sea Seals, loose shapes, 2 to 4 guineas.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN
MANTLES AND PALETOTS,
Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 2 to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL
CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.
The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 25s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s.
Patterns and Engravings free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

WOOLLEN CLOTHS. Waterproof Tweeds, Matelasse Cloths, Sealskins, Fur Beavers, and other materials for Ladies' Jackets; also every kind of Woollen Goods for Gentlemen's and Boys' wear.
C. MEEKING and CO., Woollen Warehouse, 111 and 112, Hatton Garden, Holborn Circus, London.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)
BOYS' SUITS.
SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House, 65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW AUTUMN DRESS GOODS.

1,000 New Patterns of the choicest Shades and designs, the productions of various European nations.
7,000 yards of Autumn Serge, 10¾d. the yard.
Yachting Serges, 6¾d. and 10¾d. the yard.
Autumn Beiges, 8¾d. the yard.
Matelasse Serge, 1s. 3½d. (Sage, Olive Green, &c.)
Estamene Serges, 1s. 3½d. and 1s. 6½d.
Homespun Estamene, 1s. 6½d., 27 in. wide.
New Snowflakes, Camel's Hair, and Vicuna Cloths.
Shetland Estamene, 27 in. wide, 1s. 4½d. the yard.
Poil de Chameau, French production, all wool, 30 in. wide, 1s. 9½d. the yard.
The Royal Blue Naval Serge, 1s. 0½d. (all wool).
The "Inflexible" Serge, 1s. 0½d. and 1s. 4½d.
The "Princess" Serge, 1s. 6½d. and 1s. 11½d. yard.
The New Circassian Cord, 11½d. yd., superb colours.
Scarboro' Twill, 1s. 0½d.; Derby Matelasse, 1s. 0½d.; New Autumn Rink Skirting, 1s. 11½d. the yard, 40 in. wide; Indian Cashmere, Autumn Shades, 48 in. wide, 2s. 11½d. yard.
These and other Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW SILK PATTERNS are now ready.

The Princess Black Silk, 3s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 4s. 9d. } A New Make of
The Princess Black Silk, 5s. 9d. } Extreme Richness
The Princess Black Silk, 6s. 9d.
BLACK SILKS, 1s. 6½d. to 10s. the yard.
The Queen's Black Silk, 7s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 8s. 11d. } Superb Goods &
The Queen's Black Silk, 9s. 11d. } Splendid Wear.
The Queen's Black Silk, 10s. 11d.
A special parcel of Coloured Silks, 2s. 11½d. yard.
Coloured Gros Grain Silks, 3s. 11½d., 4s. 11d., 5s. 11d., and 6s. 11d. the yard. Floral Silks for Trimmings, 3s. 9½d. Japanese Figures, 1s. 3½d.
A Special Lot Black Velveteens, 1s. 11½d., and Colours, at 2s. 10½d. yard. Patterns free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.

Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 1s. 3½d. Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s. 11½d. Double-width Melton Cloths, 1s. 6½d., 1s. 11½d., and 2s. 11½d.
Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s. 11d. to 6s. 11d.
Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d. Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard. All Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S COSTUMES,
as lately shown at the Grand Autumn Exhibition and Costumes Contest at the Alexandra Palace.

"Harrogate"—Bronze Green Cachmere and Velveteen Costume, £4 4s.
"Ventnor"—Fawn Homespun, and Brown Braid, Jacket and Hat, £3 18s. 6d.
"Silsciton"—Brown Cachmere and Velveteen, £3 18s. 6d.
"Glenthorne"—Prune Snowflake and Pink Silk, £2 10s. 6d.
"Bromley"—Bronze Cachmere and Blue Silk, with Cape, £4 4s.
"Clairmont"—Fawn Serge and Brown Velveteen, £2 10s. 6d.
"Christine"—Black Velveteen and Silk Jacket and Hat, £5 5s.
"Lymington"—Fawn Matelasse and Velvet Galloon, Jacket and Hat, £4 10s. 6d.
"Zatel"—Brown Velveteen and Cream Brocaded Silk, £3 4s.
"Moscow"—Fawn Camel's Hair Cloth, with Lynx Fur Jacket, Hat and Muff, £6 6s.
"Clyde"—Fawn, Chameau, Cloth and Raccoon Fur, Jacket, Hat and Muff, £5 10s. 6d.
"St. Malo"—Prune Velveteen and Grey Fur, Jacket, Hat, and Muff, £5 18s. 6d.
"Bonnie Fishwife"—Blue Serge and Red Twill, with Cap, £2 18s. 6d.
"Normandy"—Green Serge and White Braid Jacket and Hat, £2 18s. 6d.
"Chiswick"—Deep Mourning Costume. Black Cachmere and Crape, with Bonnet, £4 10s. 6d.
"Chislehurst"—Complimentary Mourning Richly Trimmed Black Silk, £6 6s.
Patterns of Materials, Photographs, and every particular, post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
UNDERCLOTHING and OUTFITTING.

A new Illustrated Price List is now ready, and can be sent free to any address; also Photographs of the New Exhibition Price Setts, Collars, and Collaretts.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP of
GASK and GASK.
SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK of
Silk Mercery, General Drapery, &c.
ALL NEW THIS SEASON.
Mr. HENRY GASK being compelled by ill health
to retire from the business.
Great reductions in price will be made
throughout all the departments, and all goods marked in plain figures at the lowest prices,
for ready money only.
Silks, Costumes, Mantles, Dress Fabrics, Linens,
Blankets, Gloves, Hosiery, Lace Goods, Mourning, &c., &c.
Doors will be opened at 10 o'clock.
GASK and GASK,
58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street, and Wells Street.

LADIES' IRISH ULSTER COATS,
made in the best manner by experienced tailors. Immense variety of Irish Friezes and other fashionable materials. Patterns and forms for self-measurement post free.
RICHARD ALLEN, Sackville Street, Dublin.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.,
IMPORTERS.

TURKEY CARPETS.

PERSIAN CARPETS.

INDIAN CARPETS.
35 and 36, OLD BOND STREET.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.—
The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—
Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY
"THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY."
UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."
Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS.
1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE
and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE & LUBIN SWEET SCENTS.
—Opoponax, Jockey Club, Patchouly, Frangipanni, Kiss-me-Quick, White Rose, and 1,000 others from every flower that breathes a fragrance, 2s. 6d. each, 3 bottles in a case, 7s. The above sweet scents in sachet powder, 1s. 6d. each, can be forwarded by post. Sold by fashionable Druggists and Perfumers in all parts of the world.

PIESSE and LUBIN'S PESTACHIO
NUT SKIN AND COMPLEXION POWDER imparts a natural whiteness and youthful delicacy to the skin attainable by no other means; also represses the unpleasantness of too copious perspiration.—2, New Bond Street, London, W. May be had of all the fashionable perfumers and druggists throughout the earth. In boxes, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well
as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S of Regent St.
IMPORTANT PURCHASE OF 900 PIECES
OF LYONS BLACK SILKS
OF THE BEST MAKES.

Bonnets and Cie	from 5s. 0d. to 10s. 0d.
Jauberts	from 4s. 0d. to 9s. 6d.
Ponson's	from 5s. 0d. to 7s. 6d.
Degoves	from 4s. 9d. to 9s. 6d.

The Empress Cachemire, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value,
at 2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 6s. 11d.
Patterns Free
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,
Nos. 256 to 262.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.
Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 13s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk Trimming Velvets,
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
AT PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.
A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK,
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One
Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,
Costumes in New Black Materials,
in various fashionable Styles,
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 52s. 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crapes.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Speciality,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9½ guineas.
36 inches long for 11 guineas.
39 inches long for 13 guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
it is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

LEA and PERRINS' SAUCE.—
In consequence of Spurious Imitations, which are calculated to deceive the Public, LEA and PERRINS have adopted a New Label, bearing their Signature, "LEA AND PERRINS," which signature is placed on every bottle of WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE, and without which none is genuine.—Sold wholesale by the proprietors, Worcester; Crosse and Blackwell, London, and Export Oilmen generally; Retail, by dealers in sauces throughout the world.

COCK'S READING SAUCE
Is the best and most economical Sauce ever manufactured
FOR FISH, ENRICHING SOUPS, GRAVIES, &c.
It only requires a trial to convince the purchaser of its excellence.
CAUTION.—The genuine is protected by Trade Mark, viz., CHARLES COCKS' Signature on a white ground across the Reading Arms.

Established 1837.
CUSTARDS WITHOUT EGGS.
ALFRED BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER makes the finest Custards without Eggs, and at one-half the cost and trouble.
Sold by all Chemists, Italian Warehousemen, and Grocers.—Wholesale at BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon Street, London.
In packets, price 6d. and 1s. each.
Manufactory—60, Worcester Street, Birmingham.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.
JAMES EPPS AND CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN
COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. 8d. per bushel; households for bread, 10s.; wheat meal for brown bread, 9s. 4d.; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s. 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d.; ground pollard, 2s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG.

TOOTH-ACHE.
INSTANT CURE.
FORMS A STOPPING.
SAVES THE TOOTH.

J. Hounsell, Esq., Surgeon, Bridport, writes:—"I consider Bunter's Nervine a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief."
Of all chemists, at 1s. 1½d. per packet.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL
(SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S
EMACERATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing. 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, S.W.; or through any Chemist.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD
LIVER OIL (Registered).
The purest Oil, and by Almond flavouring rendered palatable and easy of digestion.
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.
British Medical Journal says—Whilst securing the beneficial results traceable to Cod Liver Oil as a valuable tonic and dietetic, we have found no difficulty in inducing our little patients to take it.
Sanitary Record says—We have tried its effect on the most delicate constitutions with marked effect. So well are the odour and taste of the Oil disguised that children will take the preparation with avidity.
Medical Times says—The taste is decidedly masked by the almond flavouring.
Medical Press—Has an agreeable smell and flavour, and we can testify that the result is satisfactory.
Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists,
And Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited),
1 .. Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

CONSUMPTION! CONSUMPTION!
SILPHIUM CYRENAICUM (the celebrated plant of the Ancients) has now been acknowledged by the principal celebrities of the French faculty to be the only cure for Consumption, and all affections of the Pulmonary Organs, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c., &c. Its effect is magical, and the cure certain. To be obtained from all Chemists, with pamphlets, full instructions, &c. Wholesale from London Patent Medicine houses.

THOMPSON AND CAPPER'S
DENTIFRICE WATER
Arrests Decay in the Teeth and Sweetens the Breath. 55, Bold Street, Liverpool. Sold in 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Bottles, by all Chemists.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT
BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE
OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO.
Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS
POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 82, Southwark St., London.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-
STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: "It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

GOUT and RHEUMATISM.—The excruciating pain of gout or rheumatism is quickly relieved and cured in a few days by that celebrated medicine, BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.
They require no restraint of diet during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part.
Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

NUDA VERITAS.—Grey Hair restored
by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

GOLDEN HAIR.—Robare's Aureoline produces, by two or three applications, the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. of all perfumers and chymists. Wholesale, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough Street, W., and 93 and 95, City Road, E.C., London; Pinaud 44, Meyer, Boul. de Strasbourg, 37, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; and Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

HAIR DESTROYER.—248, High Holborn, London.—ALEX. ROSS'S DEPILATORY removes superfluous hair from face and arms without injury. 3s. 6d. Sent post free, carefully packed, for 54 stamps by Alex. Ross.

THE NOSE MACHINE applied to the nose for an hour daily so directs the soft cartilage of the nose that an ill-formed one is quickly shaped, 10s. 6d. Sent for stamps.—ALEX. ROSS, 248, High Holborn, London.

THE NEAREST RESEMBLANCE
TO NATURE.—WALLER'S Invisible fabric for covering BALD HEADS, or where the HAIR has become thin. PARTINGS of LADIES' FRONTS, BANDS, &c., thus made, are not only perfection in appearance, but most durable in wear. TRESSES of HAIR (best quality only), either PLAIN or as PLAITS or TWISTS, 16 inches, 10s. 6d.; 18 inches, 17s. 6d. Forwarded per return of post to any part of the Kingdom.—W. WALLER, Court Hairdresser, 86, Camden Road, London, N.W.

WALLER'S SCURF SPECIFIC, an infallible remedy for DANDRIFF, in whatever form it may assume on the head. 2s. 6d. per pot, or forwarded by post in wood boxes on receipt of 2s. 6d. in stamps.
W. WALLER, 86, Camden Road, London, N.W.

LADIES who SAVE the COMBINGS of their HAIR can have them properly prepared, the roots turned, and made up by a process perfected by W. Waller, and returned post free at 3s. 6d. per oz.—W. WALLER, Court Hairdresser, 86, Camden Road, N.W.

DIGESTIVE LOZENGES
OF
VICHY.
Manufactured from the Salts extracted from the Mineral Waters.

The Vichy Lozenges should be taken by those persons whose digestion is difficult, painful, or laborious.
In cases of slow and difficult digestion, a few of the Lozenges should be taken before each repast.
The Lozenges are flavoured with peppermint, lemon, vanilla, rose, orange flowers, or anisette.
In Boxes, at 1s. and 2s. each.
VICHY SALTS FOR BATHS.
In Packets for one bath, 1s. 6d. each.
VICHY BARLEY SUGAR
An excellent digestive bonbon. In Boxes, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 3s. 6d.

All these preparations are guaranteed by the French Government. Sold by all respectable Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA.
The best Remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION, and safest aperient for delicate constitutions, ladies, and children. Of all Chemists.

ESTABLISHED
1832.
NONE
GENUINE
EXCEPT IN PINK PAPER
WRAPPERS.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
AMONG THE CULTIVATED AND REFINED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, THIS RENOWNED PREPARATION IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED FAVOURITE WITH BOTH SEXES. OVER FORTY YEARS' TRIAL AND EXPERIENCE HAVE ESTABLISHED ITS SUPERIORITY AND EXCELLENCE.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

IT CANNOT FAIL TO RESTORE
GREY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. WHEN THE HAIR TURNS GREY, LOSES ITS LUSTRE, AND FALLS OUT, IT SIMPLY REQUIRES NOURISHMENT. MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER, BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION, STRENGTHENS AND INVIGORATES THE HAIR, AND, BY THE OPERATION OF NATURAL CAUSES, GREY OR WHITE HAIR IS QUICKLY RESTORED TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. IT WILL STOP ITS FALLING, AND INDUCE A HEALTHY AND MOST LUXURIANT GROWTH. USE NO OTHER PREPARATION WITH IT, NOT EVEN OIL OR POMADE, OR ZYLO-BALSAMUM.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER
IS THE BEST
TO RESTORE GREY HAIR.

BECAUSE IT IS MADE FROM THE CHOICEST MATERIALS, AND PREPARED WITH THE UTMOST CARE AND SKILL. OVER FORTY YEARS THE FAVOURITE PREPARATION. ENJOYING BY FAR THE LARGEST SALE, IT MUST BE THE BEST. IT DOES NOT DYE THE HAIR, BUT STRENGTHENS IT. GREY HAIRS SOON DISAPPEAR. BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION THE ROOTS ARE STRENGTHENED, THE SOFT AND SILKY TEXTURE OF HEALTHY HAIR FOLLOWS ITS USE.

Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Articles.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN
manufactures two entirely
distinct Preparations for the Hair.
One or the other is suited to every condition
of the Human Hair. Both are never required at one time. For details as to each Preparation, kindly read above and below this paragraph. Readers can easily determine which of the two they require. These Preparations have a world-wide reputation. Enormous and increasing sale through Forty Years.
Every Chemist and Dealer in
Toilet Articles has both
Preparations.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
ZYLO-BALSAMUM.
For the Growth and Preservation
of the Hair.
It is a cooling, vegetable, and transparent liquid,
without sediment.

A SIMPLE TONIC AND DRESSING
OF INESTIMABLE VALUE TO BOTH SEXES. THE FAVOURITE WITH THE YOUNG AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE NO GREY HAIR. IT WILL NOT CHANGE THE COLOUR OF THE HAIR, BUT, BY EARLY USE, IT WILL PREVENT IT TURNING GREY. PREMATURE LOSS OF THE HAIR, SO COMMON IN THESE DAYS, MAY BE ENTIRELY PREVENTED BY THE USE OF ZYLO-BALSAMUM. PROMPT RELIEF IN THOUSANDS OF CASES HAS BEEN AFFORDED WHERE THE HAIR HAS BEEN COMING OUT IN HANDFULS. IT PROMOTES A HEALTHY AND VIGOROUS GROWTH. HAIR DRESSED WITH ZYLO-BALSAMUM IS ALWAYS CLEAN, FREE FROM DANDRUFF, AND WITH THAT BEAUTIFUL GLOSS ONLY SEEN IN HEALTHY HAIR. IT IS DELIGHTFULLY FRAGRANT. NO OIL OR POMADE SHOULD BE USED WITH IT.

CAUTION!—The Genuine only in Bluish Grey Wrappers.
Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Articles.

THE FAVOURITE TOILET WATER OF THE AGE.
GOLDEN STAR
BAY LEAF WATER,
TRIPLE DISTILLED FROM THE FRESH LEAVES
of the BAY TREE (Myrcia Acris),
FOR THE TOILET, NURSERY, AND BATH.

A
Toilet Water
of peculiar and delightful fragrance,
delicate and lasting,
refreshing and soothing
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,
triple distilled from the fresh leaves of
the Bay Tree (Myrcia Acris). Indispensable
and a luxury for the TOILET, NURSERY, and BATH.
A few drops on a Sponge or Towel moistened with water, and the FACE and HANDS bathed with it, is very beneficial to the skin, removing all roughness. Most highly recommended to apply after SHAVING. A small quantity in the BATH gives a delightful aroma, and it has most remarkable CLEANSING PROPERTIES. Particularly adapted to the BATHING OF INFANTS and young children; a few drops are sufficient for a basin of water. Most grateful to INVALIDS and all who suffer from HEADACHE, from mental labour or fatigue. Buy only the genuine
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,
sold in three sizes Toilet Bottles,
2s. 6d., 5s., 8s., by Chemists
and Perfumers, or on receipt of stamps from the wholesale depot, 114 & 116,
Southampton Row,
London.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER of CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE

Containing the following Popular Dance Music:—

TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS	Chas. D'Albert.
CONSTANTINOPLE QUADRILLE	Chas. D'Albert.
DIE FLEDERMAUS WALTZ	Johann Strauss.
LES LOINTAINS WALTZ	Emile Waldteufel.
MAIDEN'S DREAM WALTZ	Edward Hoffman.
THE SCHOMBERG GALOP	Chas. D'Albert.
FLORETTA POLKA	Chas. D'Albert.
PIZZICATO POLKA	J. & J. Strauss.
FORGET-ME-NOT GALOP	A. Hecker.

And a New Quadrille,
MOLLIE DARLING. By Chas. D'Albert.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 2d.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE BALKANS. Descriptive Piece for the Pianoforte, by Jules de Sivrai, introducing Turkish and Russian airs; illustrated, 3s. net.
SCHIPKA PASS. Grand March for the Pianoforte, by Wm. Smallwood; illustrated, 1s. 6d. net.
MARCH OF THE PASHAS. For the Pianoforte, by J. Pridham; illustrated, 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG.

THE DISTANT SHORE. New Song by Arthur Sullivan. Sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd during his Promenade Tour in October. Price (in E flat, F, and G) 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE ROWAN TREE. New Song by M. W. Balfe. Will be sung by Madame Antoinette Sterling during her Tour in the Provinces. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

MAIDEN MINE. By W. Sterndale Bennett. Mr. W. Shakespeare will sing the above favourite song at all Concerts during his provincial tour. Price 2s. net.—CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THOU'RT PASSING HENCE. Mr. Santley will sing Arthur Sullivan's new song at the first Saturday Popular Concert, on November 17th, at St. James's Hall. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE FANFARE POLKA. By Charles D'Albert. Illustrated. Price 1s. 6d. net. Orchestra, 3s.; Septett, 2s.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	NET
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite composer"	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Work	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	1 6
RINK GALOP	2 0

All the above for Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s. each.
N.B. A complete list of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

L'ORGANISTE PRATIQUE. 240 Easy Pieces for Organ or Harmonium. By J. Lenbach. In 2 vols., price 6s. each net, or in eight parts, each 2s. net. The above will supply a want long felt by amateur performers on the organ or harmonium, as all the pieces are very pretty without being difficult.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRE.

PIANOFORTES of every description by all the most celebrated makers from Two Guineas a Quarter.

HARMONIUMS, by Alexandre, from One Pound Five Shillings per quarter.

SECOND-HAND PIANOFORTES at immense reductions for Cash, or on the Three Years' System.—50, New Bond Street.

CONCERT SONGS. Always successful. Ever Thine (soprano) (Abt), 4s.; Kathleen Aroon (contralto) (Abt), 4s.; Still is the night (bass) (Abt), 3s.; The Cuckoo's Song (soprano) (Abt), 3s.; Thee only I love (soprano) (Abt), 3s.; The Blacksmith (bass) (Cherry), 3s.; Ay or No (tenor) (F. H. Cowen), 4s.; Dear England (baritone) (L. Diehl), 3s.; Love never dies (baritone) (A. S. Gatty), 4s.; O fair dove (contralto) (A. S. Gatty), 4s.; Sing me that song again (tenor) (Guglielmo), 3s.; My boyhood's dream (baritone) (Hatton), 4s.; Droop not, young lover (bass) (Handel), 3s.; Open thy lattice (tenor) (J. Hullah) 3s.; Weep not, fond heart (tenor) (F. Kücken), 3s.; Home they brought (contralto) (Lindsay), 4s.; The Knight's Shield (contralto) (Pinsuti), 4s.; Don't forget me (soprano) (Pinsuti), 3s. Half price in stamps, post free.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY H. F. LIMPUS. The Skylark, 3s.; Slumber Song, 3s.; Evermore, 3s.; The Lifeboat, 3s.; half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY B. TOURS. My Little Picture, 3s.; A Little Bird's Story, 4s.; The Dog and the Shadow (Illus.), 3s.; The Message to Heaven, 3s. Half price in postage stamps. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY FRANZ ABT. Ever Thine, in C and E flat, 3s.; Still is the night, 3s.; Spring Morning, 3s.; Golden Sunshine, 3s.; O ye tears, 4s.; Kathleen Aroon, 4s. Half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY CIRO PINSUTI. Waiting for the Swallows, 3s.; Sunset on the River, 4s.; Summer Friends, 3s.; Ocean Voices, 3s.; Don't forget me, 3s.; The Knight's Shield, 4s.; What shall I sing to thee, 3s. Half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY J. ROECKEL.—So Far Away, 3s.; Unforgotten Days, 3s. Half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

NEW WALTZ, DER LETZTE KUSS (The Last Kiss). By Otto Muller. Performed at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden Theatre. This charming waltz, by the composer of the celebrated "Geliebt und Verloren" (Loved and Lost) Waltz, may be had of all Musicsellers. Solo or duet, price 2s. net.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

LOVED AND LOST (Geliebt und Verloren) WALTZES, by Otto Muller (performed at the Promenade Concerts, Theatre Royal, Covent Garden). These Celebrated WALTZES may be had of all Musicsellers. Solo or Duet, 2s. net.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

THE Popular Song, LOVED AND LOST. The Words by Percy Fitzgerald, adapted to Muller's Beautiful Waltz, "Geliebt und Verloren." Sold by every Musicseller in the United Kingdom. Post free, 2s.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

STOLEN KISSES WALTZ. By Hans Waldenfelt. Free, 2s. The Graphic describes this charming waltz as one of the most popular of the season; its popularity promises to be as great as that of the "Blue Danube" Waltz.
WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street.

ESTY AMERICAN ORGANS, cheapest and best for quality, &c. LOW PRICES FOR CASH, or by monthly payments (in London and Suburbs only). Lists on application.—J. A. MILLS, 60, Moorgate Street, E.C.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATALOGUES of MUSIC.
Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3. HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4. VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.
Sent post free to any part of the World.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

POPULAR CLASSICS.—A series of sterling compositions for the Pianoforte Solo. Selected, edited, and fingered by Walter Macfarren. Sixty Numbers, price from 2s. to 5s. each. The series contains some of the most celebrated and beautiful works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Steibelt, Dussek, Hummel, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, &c. Detailed Lists forwarded gratis post free to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

Figaro. Fantasia on Mozart's Opera	4 0
Cynthia. Serenade	4 0
Souvenir de Bal	4 0
Air Danois	4 0

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FLYING DUTCHMAN. A most successful and effective piece on the melodies in Wagner's grand opera. Price 4s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S "EN ROUTE."—A grand brilliant Military March. Played by the composer at his recitals with enormous success. Price 4s., duet, 5s.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER'S PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS.—A COMPLETE CATALOGUE is NOW READY, and will be sent, on application, gratis and post free, to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

KING CHRISTMAS. J. L. HATTON'S celebrated Song. The popularity of this capital baritone Song is ever on the increase. Price 3s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

STANDARD VOCAL PART MUSIC.

THE SINGER'S LIBRARY.
An Unequalled Collection of
VOCAL CONCERTED MUSIC, TRIOS, QUARTETS, QUINTETS, &c.
Sacred and Secular, by the most renowned Composers, English and Foreign.
Edited by John Hullah.
Upwards of 150 Numbers. Price Twopence each.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

THE GLEE and CHORAL LIBRARY.
A COLLECTION OF STANDARD and Well-known VOCAL COMPOSITIONS,
As well as recent works by Macfarren, Hutton, Leslie, Balfe, &c.
Eighty Numbers. Price Twopence each.
Catalogues gratis and post free to any part of the world.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO.
Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps.
Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.
Six Waltzes by Joseph Gung'l.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Grafenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schonster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancee Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

THE FOUR MARIES.
As sung in Mr. Kennedy's Entertainment of the "Songs of Scotland" in St. James's Hall.
Post free for 18 stamps from
METHVEN, SIMPSON, and CO., Dundee; or
C. JEFFERYS, Berners Street, London.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.
All for Her. No. 1 sop., No. 2 contralto. A. S. Gatty.
Maiden May. Two keys. A. S. Gatty. Sung by Madame Cave-Ashton.
Before the Storm. Baritone. A. S. Gatty.
Melia. No. 1 tenor, No. 2 baritone. V. Capoul. Sung by M. Capoul.
Be My Love. Baritone. G. Fox.
My Star. No. 1, contralto, No. 2 mezzo-sop. Julia Wolff.
Little Nannie. Soprano. Julia Wolff. Sung by Mrs. Osgood.
The Trooper's Dream. Baritone. Julia Wolff.
Post free 24 stamps each.
ENOCH and SONS, 19, Holles Street, W.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.
BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20—GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

MUSICAL BOX Depot, 56, Cheapside, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.
OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.
The undermentioned arrangements are in the press:
QUADRILLES by Arban. Price 4s.
SUITE DE VALSES by O. Metra. Solo and duet 4s. each.
QUADRILLES by O. Metra. Solo or duet 4s.
BRILLIANT FANTASIA by E. Moniot. Price 3s.
COMPLETE OPERA PIANO SOLO. Price 2s. 6d. net.
SELECTIONS OF AIRS IN TWO BOOKS by Cramer. 3s. each.
POLKA, by Arban. 3s.
POLKA MAZURKA. 3s.
N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

SIR MICHAEL COSTA'S NAAMAN.
Vocal Score, complete, Octavo Edition. 4s. net.
Do. do. bound in cloth. 6s. net.
All the numbers of "Naaman" can also be had separately, including the celebrated Aria, "I Dreamt I was in Heaven," 3s.; and the Triumphal March, "Naaman," as Piano Solo, 3s. Piano Duet, 3s.; and also as Organ Solo, with Pedal, 3s.

SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT'S WORKS for the PIANOFORTE, (in two vols. Cheap Edition now ready, including the celebrated Toccata Scherzo, Op. 13; Capriccio, Op. 27; Three Sketches, &c. Price 6s. net each vol.; or, bound, cloth, 8s. net.

PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS. By SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT.
NEW EDITION CAREFULLY FINGERED, &c.

Capriccio. Op. 2.
The Lake. Op. 10, No. 1.
The Millstream. Op. 10. No. 2.
The Fountain. Op. 10. No. 3.
Three Musical Sketches. Complete.
Allegro con Precisione. Op. 11. No. 1.
Moderato Grazioso. Op. 11. No. 2.
Allegro Brillante. Op. 11. No. 3.
Vivace Giocoso. Op. 11. No. 4.
Andante Capriccioso. Op. 11. No. 5.
Allegro Agitato. Op. 11. No. 6.
Six Studies. Complete.
Andante Expressivo. Op. 12. No. 1.
Grazioso. Op. 12. No. 2.
Presto. Op. 12. No. 3.
Three Impromptus. Complete.
Serenata. From Op. 13.
Scherzo. From Op. 13.
Sonata.
Allegro Grazioso. Op. 18.
Caprice. Op. 22.
Presto Leggiero. Op. 24. No. 1.
Capricciosa. Op. 24. No. 2.
Agitato Assai. Op. 24. No. 3.
Alla Fantasia. Op. 24. No. 4.
Presto Agitato. Op. 24. No. 5.
Lento-Allegro con Bravura. Op. 24. No. 6.
Suite de Pieces. Op. 24. Complete.
Rondo Piacevole. Op. 25.
Scherzo. Op. 27.
Introduzione e Pastorale. Op. 28. No. 1.
Rondino. Op. 28. No. 2.
Capriccio. Op. 28. No. 3.
L'Amabile. Op. 29. No. 1.
L'Appassionata. Op. 29. No. 2.
Two Characteristic Studies. Op. 29.
Tema e Variazioni. Op. 31.
Pastriste Pas Gai. Op. 34.
Rondeau à la Polonaise. Op. 37.
Toccata. Op. 38.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S NEW PIECES.
PRES DU LAC (Meditation), artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
UN BIJOU PERDU, artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
BERCEUSE. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LES VIEUX TEMPS. Gavotte. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LA PRINCESSE. Gavotte moderne. 1s. 6d. net.
TRANSCRIPTIO BRILLANTE (Braham). As played by Madame Arabella Goddard). 2s. 6d. net.

A BOON TO YOUNG PIANISTS.
A. GRENVILLE'S LA PRINCESSE. Price 1s. 3d. net.
A. GRENVILLE'S AIR DE BALLET. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S BELLONA POLKA MAZURKA. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S GHASSE GALOP. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S LUCY VALSE. Price 1s. 3d. net.
PETITE COQUETTE POLKA. Price 1s. 3d. net.

CATALOGUES GRATIS and POST FREE.
Shipping Orders on most favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

BOOSEY and CO.'S LIST.

Price 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth, gilt edges.
RUBINSTEIN'S 50 BEST SONGS. With German and English Words. Also RUBINSTEIN'S 18 VOCAL DUETS. With German and English Words. Price 2s. 6d. paper; 4s., cloth, gilt edges.

Price 1s. each.
BRAHM'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM contains his best pieces, including 16 waltzes. 1s.
RAFF'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. 1s.
RUBINSTEIN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. 1s.

Price 1s. each.
BEETHOVEN'S WALTZ ALBUM (45 waltzes), 1s. Field's Nocturne Album (10 Nocturnes), 1s. Heller's Pianoforte Album (12 pieces), 1s. Heller's Petit Album, 1s.

MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS.
LAMOTHE'S WALTZ ALBUM (6 new sets). 1s.
WALDTEUFEL'S WALTZ ALBUM (8 sets). 1s.
STRAUSS' WALTZ ALBUM (16 sets). 2s. 6d.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING PIANOFORTE TUTOR. By George Mount. 40 pages, music size (100th thousand).
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

HENNING'S FIRST BOOK FOR THE VIOLIN. A Celebrated German Method. Now for the first time published in English. It includes 162 Progressive Exercises. 40 pages, music size. Price 1s.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

HANDY-BOOK FOR CHORAL SO-CIETIES. By Dr. Spark. Price 1s. A complete guide for the study and practice of Part Music, including 258 Exercises, Part Songs, Rounds, &c. (56 pages.)
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

THE OLD SAILOR WIFE. By Molloy. The Words by Jean Ingelow. Madame Antoinette Sterling will sing "The Old Sailor Wife" at every concert during her provincial tournee. Price 2s. net.

THE KING'S HIGHWAY. By Molloy. Sung by Mr. Maybrick, Signor Federici, and Mr. Fox. "A charming and graceful ballad which has made its mark and will become one of the popular songs of the day."—News of the World. Price 2s. net.

NANCY LEE WALTZ. On the Celebrated Song. The Waltz of the Season.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Pianoforte SCHOOL.
Section 1. No. 1. Pianoforte Tutor.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.
For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

New Song for Mezzo-Soprano by Amelia Lucy Cotton.
LITTLE MAY.
Words by Mrs. William Kemp.
HOPWOOD and CREW, 42, New Bond Street, W.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.
PULVERMACHER'S "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."
In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to
J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—CURTAINS.—OETZMANN and CO. beg to announce that they have now received all their new designs in CURTAINS and CURTAIN MATERIALS, British and Foreign, of every description; some of the designs are very artistic. An early inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77, and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PREMISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

READY MONEY versus CREDIT or BOOKING.—Messrs. OETZMANN and CO.'s business is conducted on the co-operative system of small profits and cash payments, with the extra advantages of centralised management and personal proprietary supervision, the public receiving all the benefit of the co-operative system without its inherent trouble and annoyances, and the prices will be found lower than those charged at Co-operative Stores. This system offers great advantages to those in a position to pay ready money.—OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DEPARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, handsomely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in rich Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk and Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites, from 12 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas; solid Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best Marone Leather, 14 guineas; Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 15s.; handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'S BEDROOM SUITES.—One of the largest and best assortments in the kingdom to select from, displayed in Showrooms 228 feet long, with Bedsteads and Bedding fitted up for inspection. Bedroom Suite, consisting of Wardrobe, Chest of Drawers, Washstand, Toilet Table and Glass, Towel Airer, 3 Chairs, and Pedestal Cupboard, from 6½ guineas complete. Some new and elegant designs, at 15, 18, and 21 guineas. Large and handsomely decorated Bedroom Suites, in Ash, Pitch Pine, and other Woods, at 28, 36, 50, and 75 guineas. Also in Black and Gold, 50 guineas upwards.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'S PATENT MATTRESS, the COMPENDIUM, requires no other mattress, palliasse, or bed to be used with it, and is at once the healthiest, softest, most economical, and complete bed extant. Descriptive catalogue post free.

ARTISTIC CANE WINDOW BLINDS and SCREENS.—These fashionable Blinds can now be had from stock or made to order in any size or design; also Cane and Wicker Chairs, Ladies' Needlework Mounts, Flower Stands, &c., in colours or black and gold. Prices considerably below those usually charged for these goods. Illustrated price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

PAPER-HANGINGS. — OETZMANN and CO.—PAPER HANGINGS at WHOLESALE PRICES.—A great reduction in price. All the new patterns are now on view at the Show Rooms.—OETZMANN and CO.

LINOLEUM.—OETZMANN and CO.—LINOLEUM.—Warm, soft, carpet-like in appearance, and very durable. ALL the NEW PRIZE DESIGNS are NOW in STOCK. A visit of inspection solicited. Prices below those usually charged for this favourite floor covering. The trade supplied.—OETZMANN and CO.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

LINEN DEPARTMENT.—Fine white Linen Damask Table Cloths, 2 yards long, 3s. 11d.; 2¼ yards long by 2 yards wide, 5s. 11d.; 3 yards by 2½ yards, 8s. 11d.; 3½ yards by 2½ yards, 12s. 6d.; 4 yards by 2½ yards, 15s.; Breakfast Cloths, from 1s. 11d.; strong Linen Kitchen Table Cloths, 1s. 11d. each; stout Huckaback, from 4½d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 4½d. per yard; stout White Calico Sheeting, 76 inches wide, 1s. per yard; 88 inches ditto, 1s. 6d. per yard; white Linen Sheeting, 76 inches wide, 1s. 11d.; 86 inches ditto, 2s. 6d. per yard; superfine quality ditto, 88 inches wide, 2s. 11d. per yard. Horrocks's Long Cloths and Sheetings at the Manufacturer's wholesale prices. Ladies should write for patterns, and compare price and quality.—OETZMANN and CO.

THE PORTLAND COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the Season, new shape, much admired, handsomely japanned and gold relieved, has bowl castors, opal handle, handscoop, and strong loose lining—a great convenience and saving in the wear. Price complete only 10s. 6d.

CHINA and GLASS DEPARTMENT.—Ironstone China Dinner Services—various neat and elegant designs, from 15s. 9d. the set; handsome ditto at 25s. and 35s. per set; a large assortment of superb patterns for selection; dessert services complete, 17 pieces, 13s. 9d.; best French China ditto, 18 pieces, very chaste, with burnished gold edges, 18s. 9d.; China Tea Services, complete, 28 pieces, 5s. 9d.; elegant ditto, burnished gold and enamelled, 15s. 9d.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by Edward Joseph Mansfield, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—November 3, 1877.

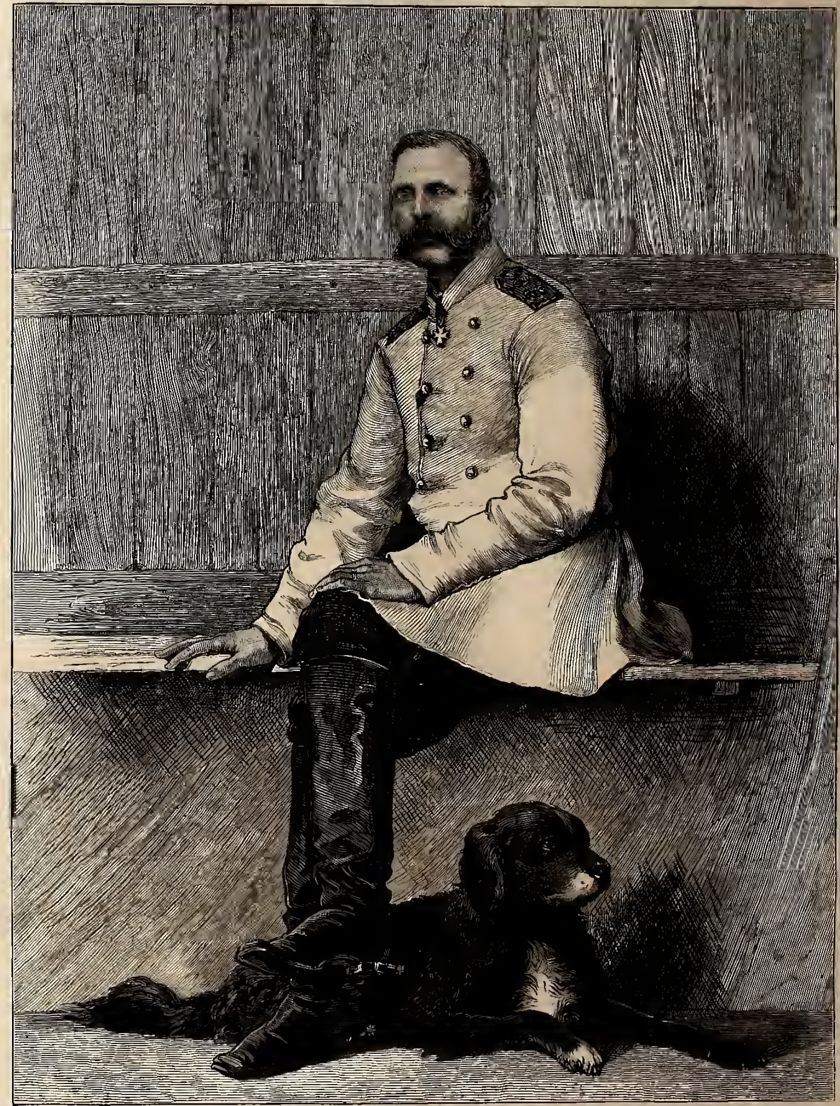
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 415
Regd. at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



ALEXANDER II., CZAR OF ALL THE RUSSIAS

PHOTOGRAPHED IN THE CAMP AT GORNY STUDEN

Topics of the Week

Marshal MacMahon and the Republicans.——Marshal MacMahon is at last face to face with his enemies, and it is hardly too much to say that there is intense curiosity all over the civilised world as to the issue of his conflict with them. It seems quite certain that the Republicans will not give way. They have, indeed, no right to do so. An appeal was made to the nation; and the nation responded by sending them to Versailles for a definite purpose. They are bound to see that that purpose is fulfilled. We may, therefore, confidently expect that unless the Marshal accepts the situation, and appoints a Liberal Ministry, the supplies will not be voted. There are observers who still maintain that in that case he will have recourse to violence, but during the present week the impression has been gaining ground that he will not venture upon a coup d'état. The conditions are altogether unfavourable for so audacious an act, and probably he is personally too honest to play utterly false with the nation. As he cannot, or thinks he cannot, appoint a Republican Government, we believe he will be ultimately forced to resign. There appears to be absolutely no other alternative; and, on the whole, the solution would unquestionably be the best one for France. She has shown in the clearest manner, both in the general election and in the departmental elections, that she wants a Republic, and it is monstrous that one man should stand between her and her wishes. The Bonapartists affect to think that the Republic would inevitably lead to the Empire, but if that is their real opinion, why are they so very anxious to thwart M. Gambetta? The Republicans have learned much within the last few years, and will take good care, if they attain to power, not to throw away their opportunity.

Our Responsibilities in India.——The Madras Famine may now be regarded as practically at an end. Many weakened frames, doubtless, will still succumb, and much distress will be felt for months to come. Still, it may be confidently asserted that the worst is over. Plentiful rains have fallen, and the Governor of Madras has telegraphed that the charitable contributions of this country may now cease. Our people have not behaved illiberally in this matter. Nearly half a million sterling has been raised by voluntary subscriptions, which is no contemptible sum for a community heavily burdened by Imperial and local taxation, and with a multitude of other charitable claims on its purse. Many of these contributors probably had hitherto taken only a very vague interest in India, but their hearts were touched by the heartrending accounts of the misery that prevailed. Let us hope that for the future they and many others will pay a more sustained attention to the affairs of that vast Dependency which hangs so helplessly round the neck, as it were, of this little United Kingdom of ours. There is plenty to make us anxious. More famines may supervene in a comparatively near future. The very excellence of our raj aggravates these calamities, because the population, which was kept down by war and misgovernment, increases prodigiously under a régime which ensures peace and security. Then the advance of education among the higher class of natives has not tended to lessen our difficulties. The superficial amount of knowledge acquired by the bulk of the so-called "educated" Hindoos too often breeds disloyalty by opening their eyes to the fact that they are the servants of a handful of white men; it teaches them to adopt European vices far more readily than European virtues; and it tends to substitute Atheism rather than Christianity for the ancient national creed. As for the Mohammedans, they can scarcely be expected to be loyal, for they were the conquerors till we came; now they are the conquered. Lastly, the European and native, who never mingled together too freely, are now more apart than ever. The old Qui-hy, who looked on India as his home, and adopted Indian ways, has been utterly extinguished by the P. and O. and the Suez Canal, while his successor, the modern Anglo-Indian, runs to Europe if he only gets a few months' leave, and deserts India altogether as soon as he gets a modest competency.

The War.——The friends of the Turks have had no reason to follow with satisfaction the progress of the war this week. It has been simply disastrous, and has given rise to the gloomiest anticipations. So far as can be made out, the army of Ghazi Mukhtar is completely broken and dispirited. At Trebizonde, if he goes there, he may find important reinforcements; but they can hardly be strong enough to make up for the losses he has sustained. And it is tolerably certain that the Russians will spare no pains to capture that town, since its possession would mean the total subjection of Armenia: a result of the campaign which would be of tremendous significance. In Europe events have been no more cheerful than in Asia. Plevna is now thoroughly invested; and although Ghazi Osman may attempt to break through the lines, the chances of success are slight, while even if he did cut his way towards the north-west he would soon be in no better position than that in which he now finds himself. That he will be able to operate with Mehemet Ali is highly improbable; and Suleiman Pasha has more than enough to do in watching the Czarevich. It is to be feared that Plevna is doomed; and if it falls, the Porte cannot too quickly accept any terms of peace that may be offered to it. While it seems to be near exhaustion, Russia is only now beginning to make full and intelligent use of her resources. The danger of the immediate future is that the three Empires may unite to impose upon Turkey conditions of intolerable severity. We do not believe that Austria wishes to join in any common scheme; but she is obliged to consider the will of Germany, and nobody knows what Prince Bismarck thinks of the situation. England will, of course, do her utmost to secure justice; but she could effect little against the three Empires.

Guy Fawkes' Day.——The Fifth of November is gradually losing its ancient significance,—partly, perhaps, from mere lapse of time, but partly also from the erasure of the Special Services for the day from the Common Prayer Book. We have never felt quite sure, by the way, that these omissions were altogether advisable. They seem to have been dictated by the same sort of mealy-mouthed sentimentality which once proposed to alter the names of Waterloo Bridge and Waterloo 'buses, lest sensitive Frenchmen should feel hurt. Anyhow, Guido Fawkes has been relegated to obscurity, and now his place is usurped on the Fifth by some celebrity or notoriety of the day. A collection of some of the more artistic "Guys" paraded about the streets of London during the last twenty years would recal many of the leading topics of the day, and might be added as a "Chamber of Oddities" to Madame Tussaud's Collection. The worst of it is that Guys, which are harmless enough when taking their morning airings, are, after dark, almost invariably accompanied by fireworks. In the country, where there is plenty of room on the village green for a bonfire, and for its pyrotechnic accessories, all goes merrily enough; but the celebration is less pleasant in cities. It is not every one who possesses a back-garden, yet boys and hobbledehoys, being impelled by an irresistible impulse on the Fifth, must let off fireworks somewhere, and so, in defiance of the police, they select the public streets. The poor students of Charing Cross Hospital, it seems, were so hard put to it for a convenient playground, that they made a pyrotechnic display in the corridors of that institution, so that Mr. Bedford, the coroner, coming to hold an inquest, was saluted with a coruscation of squibs and crackers. We say nothing of the accidents which happen year after year, because we see no reasonable probability of preventing them; our chief consolation is that the firework furore does not last long, and that it is not nearly so bad in London as the similar celebration on the Fourth of July is in New York.

Lord Hartington in Scotland.——We do not think that any one will grudge Lord Hartington the honours he has been receiving in Scotland. Although not a brilliant leader, he has won golden opinions by the calmness and good sense with which he has discharged the duties of his difficult position. He does not hesitate to express opinions opposed to those of the majority of his followers, yet he is so conciliatory in manner, and there is such perfect confidence in the purity of his motives, that he never gives offence to those who happen to differ from him. At the same time, it may be questioned whether he was the proper man to select for the task he has been fulfilling in Scotland. He lacks nearly all the qualities necessary for a great popular leader. He has not the personal fascination of Lord Beaconsfield, nor has he the burning enthusiasm which enables Mr. Gladstone to sway so completely vast masses of men. Hence his visit to the North has been, on the whole, a failure. If anything, the Scotch Liberals are probably rather less than more ardent in their political convictions in consequence of his quiet and cool addresses. On no single subject was he able to utter a word that could stir his hearers. He indicated in the clearest terms that the question of disestablishment is not ripe for solution in England; and even the subject of disestablishment in Scotland he treated in a hesitating, uncertain, manner. As a matter of fact there are a great many Liberals in Scotland who do not wish to see the Church disestablished, and the serious raising of the question would probably lead to a split in the party. So far as other matters are concerned, even including the extension of the franchise to agricultural labourers, Lord Hartington made no promises which might not as well be made by his political opponents. Altogether, the impression produced by his speeches is that the day of the Liberals has not yet come. They lack a strong programme, and while that is wanting they will have to content themselves with the useful but comparatively humble duty of criticising the existing Ministry.

Rural Cottages and the Franchise.——Those who are interested in obtaining the privileges of a vote for the farm-labourer should read a practical paper in Tuesday's Pall Mall Gazette. The writer divides cottages under four heads, viz., those which are inhabited by the élite of the peasantry, who often own their own dwellings; those which are occupied for the sake of cheapness and fresh air by clerks and artisans, who go every day to work in adjacent towns; those whose tenants pay a quit-rent, often nominal, to the lord of the manor; and, lastly, cottages attached to farms. These last are the most numerous of all; they are only let to persons who work on the farm where they are built, and the rent is deducted from the occupiers' wages. In order to include all these classes—and it would be invidious to confer the privilege of the franchise on one and refuse it to the rest—the suffrage, says our informant, must be based on a rental not exceeding eighty shillings. But if we put the qualification as low as this we might as well have the courage to try manhood suffrage at once.

A New Hierarchy.——It is positively stated in Rome that the Pope intends to re-establish the hierarchy in Scotland, and the Unità Cattolica has already expressed intense exultation at the prospect, drawing a pathetic picture of "the hundreds of thousands of Scotchmen who await with impatience the glorious event for which Divine Providence has miraculously preserved the life of Pio Nono." It is probably true that the number of Roman Catholics in Scotland has considerably increased during the present generation. In all the large towns the Irish element in the population is very much larger than it was; and that of course means an extension of priestly influence. Possibly, also, a few may have been driven to the Catholic Church by a reaction either from the destructive tendencies of modern science, or from the baldness of the Presbyterian service. The mass of the Scottish people, however, are as far removed as possible from the Romish system. They are not of the stuff of which good Catholics are, as a rule, made. A splendid ritual does not powerfully appeal to them; and although they are willing enough to admit the historical importance of the Papacy, they have too much good sense, and too strong a feeling of self-respect, to be in danger of admitting its vast pretensions. We have no doubt the proposed measure will excite in the clerical mind a great deal of wild alarm. The Scotch parson of the old type has an almost comical horror of the Pope, and he will let the Lady of Babylon hear some very plain truths respecting her wiles. But he may spare himself the trouble. The real enemy he has to dread, Rationalism, is of a very different complexion, and seems to be advancing with more rapid strides in Scotland than in any other part of the United Kingdom.

Note.——In a portion of our issue this week the names under the portraits of the Sheriffs have been accidentally transposed. Mr. Nottage's portrait is on the left side of page 436, Mr. Staples' portrait is on the right.

AMUSEMENTS

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8, THE DEAD SECRET. Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe), Messrs. Clifford, Cooper, Odell, Edmund Lyons, Pinero, Jenner, &c.; Misses Virginia Francis, Ewell, &c. Preceded by at 7, MARCH HARE HUNT. Mr. C. Cooper and Miss K. Pattison. Concluding with SHOULD THIS MEET THE EYE. Mr. E. Lyons.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD RIGHTON.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, £200 A-YEAR. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. At 9.45, ISAAC OF YORK. Messrs. Ryder, F. H. Macklin, Garner, A. H. Warren, C. Collette, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames C. Loseby, C. Lewis, Lucette, E. Ritta, Compton, I. Clifton, R. Sanger. Acting Manager, Mr. E. Clifton.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—LAST SIX NIGHTS of THE MOONSTONE, by Wilkie Collins. HENRY DUNBAR on MONDAY, Nov. 19. Box Office Hours, 11 to 5. No Booking Fees. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s.

LAST MORNING PERFORMANCE of THE MOONSTONE, SATURDAY, Nov. 10, at 2.30. Carriages at 5. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. No Fees for Booking.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

SURREY THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, at Seven, THE DRESS COAT. At 7.45, FATES AND FURIES. Mr. G. M. Ciprico. Messrs. J. A. Arnold. H. Taylor, H. C. Sidney, A. Williams, A. C. Lilly, W. D. Gresham, W. Brunton, F. Hinde, &c.; Mesdames Lamartine, A. Stuart, Nellie Russell, L. Lilly, Mrs. Brunton.

NEW GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, BOUND TO SUCCEED. Messrs. George Conquest, W. James, Sennett, Syms, Birchenough, George Conquest, jun., &c. To conclude with (Wednesday excepted), GUY FAUX. The Guy, Mr. George Conquest. On Wednesday, THE SECRET SOURCE and Incidentals. Fireworks on Monday and Saturday. Dancing on the New Platform The grounds brilliantly illuminated.—Acting Manager, Mr. Alphonse Roques.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. Lane.—EVERY EVENING, at 6.45, TWO SONS, a New Drama by E. Manuel, Esq. MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. The Phoites, Kate Garstone, W. W. Whitlock, Miss Ellen Werner. Concluding with DEOCH AN' DUR'ASS. Reddy Ryland, Mrs. S. Lane.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening ditto.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—ONCE A WEEK, by Gilbert A'Beckett; AT THE SEASIDE, by Mr. Corney Grain; and "NO. 204." Every Evening, except Thursday and Saturday, at 8; every Thursday and Saturday, at 3.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, Oxford Circus.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, and Hobart Pasha. Also Portrait Models of the Penge Convicts and the Perpetrators of the Great Turf Frauds, Benson and Kurr. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

"GONE," by FRANK HOLL.—This Fine Picture is now ON VIEW at the ANNUAL WINTER EXHIBITION, 5, Haymarket (opposite Her Majesty's Theatre.

BRIGHTON. — PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.
EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12 0 noon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.
The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.
J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE. — Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Engagement of the Celebrated Artiste, Miss ADA CAVENDISH (last Six Nights, commencing MONDAY, November 12.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom. £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia
Ceylon
China
} Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition. {
India
Japan
New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD, 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher

Our Illustrations

THE WAR IN THE EAST

THE CZAR IN THE FIELD

OUR portrait of the Czar, which is from a photograph taken by M. Duschek, of Bucharest, depicts the Emperor of All the Russias in his campaigning costume at Gorny Studen. There is no pomp or monarchical display about either the Emperor or his headquarters. His residence is a simple clay-built Bulgarian house, with only two Circassians for a bodyguard, while the Czar's daily life is as simple as his abode. He invariably rises early, no matter how late he may have retired to rest, and devotes the morning to current affairs. At noon he lunches in a tent in the midst of his suite, after which he returns to business, and drives out. At six he dines, and after tea at nine, usually goes to bed about half-past ten. On high days and holidays this programme is somewhat modified, and the Czar rides out in full uniform surrounded with his suite, and inspects the troops or visits the hospitals, where his advent is hailed with the most intense delight by the patients, to whom he always manifests the greatest kindness and sympathy, chatting with some, and on grand occasions bringing a heap of presents with him. His Majesty works very hard, and if possible examines even matters of detail.

WITH THE RUSSIANS

"'The Fire Signal Station' in my sketch," writes our artist, "was on the Roumanian side of the Danube, near Petrosuni. This one was constructed in the form of a cross, but others are generally simply formed of straight poles bound round with pitch and hemp to make quick fire if occasion arises.

"My second sketch was taken in the Valley of Kara or Black Lom (where there was some sharp fighting between the forces of the Czarevich and the Turkish opposing army), near Rustchuk, with the village of Tabaska on the summit of the hill to the right. It is bordered by precipices, the rocky walls being studded with grottoes, some of which have been artificially enlarged to serve as storehouses. The valley for miles presents a panorama of picturesque views, and appears as quiet and peaceful as though the cannon were not pointed across at one another a few miles below. The Lom is about eighty feet wide at this point, and flows with a sluggish current."

WITH THE TURKS—FUNERAL OF LIEUTENANT LAYARD AT KEZANLIK

LIEUTENANT JULIAN LAYARD, of the 37th Regiment, who died at Shipka on October 1st of typhoid fever, was acting, conjointly with Captain Fife, as military attaché at the British Embassy at Constantinople at the head-quarters of the Ottoman Army of the Balkans, then commanded by Suleiman Pasha. "Lieutenant Layard," the Levant Herald tells us, "was a nephew of Her Majesty's Ambassador, and son of Colonel Layard, of the Indian service, and was a most promising young officer, esteemed by all who knew him, and his premature death has caused wide-spread regret. Mr. Layard, who had been suffering from the attack of fever for about three weeks, received all the attention possible under the circumstances from the ambulance surgeons, but finally succumbed on October 1 at the camp in the Shipka Pass, and was buried in the Bulgarian Monastery at Kezanlik, the Commander-in-Chief sending a battalion of infantry to accompany his last remains to the grave with military honours." Lieut. Layard was twenty-five years of age, and had only lately returned from India.

WITH THE TURKS IN ASIA

OUR illustrations are from sketches kindly supplied by Capt H. M'Calmont, one of the British military attachés with Mukhtar Pasha, who writes as follows:—"'War-dance of the Kurds in Front of the Head-quarter Tent of Ismail Pasha.' The evenings in camp are often enlivened by this grotesque performance, which may be described as a combination of dancing and swordsmanship, accompanied by a monotonous chant sung by the spectators, the majority of whom are Arab-Kurds. The performers, two or four as the case may be, dance wildly round, parrying the sabre-cuts with their shields, and alternately dropping on their knees, pointing and thrusting in most fantastic style. The dance is very fatiguing; but there are many candidates for the honour of performing, who replace the combatants when tired.

"The 'View of Musin' was taken looking south from the mountain pass leading into Russian territory. It was by this route that the Turkish irregular cavalry crossed the frontier in August in advance of the Southern Army, and along which they successfully encountered the Russian outposts.

"The third sketch shows the 'Interior of a House at Musin' a village near the frontier, between Turkey and Russia. The women are busy at the manufacture of woollen felt and carpets, one of the chief industries of the country. The felt is of a light grey colour, and is used in Armenia for clothing, carpeting, saddlery, &c. A piece of it makes a capital bed for campaigning purposes, and the Turkish officer considers it as an indispensable part of his kit. The people of Musin fled during the summer, the village having been occupied in turns by Russians, Cossacks, Bashi-Bazouks, and Turkish soldiers; but latterly their confidence has been restored, and most of the inhabitants have returned to reap the harvest, which is abundant, and to their ordinary avocations. The house, of which the sketch represents the largest apartment, is an ordinary specimen of the Armenian dwelling. It is almost under ground, being lighted from a square hole in the centre of the roof, constructed of timber beams overlaid with earth. In the winter horses and cattle live with the people under the same roof, an almost necessary precaution against the severity of the climate."

MR. J. H. FAWCETT

THE reports to the Foreign Office from Mr. Fawcett, British Consul-General and Judge of the Supreme Court, have lately been published. These reports give a terrible picture of the suffering of the miserable refugees, Turks and Bulgarians, who have been driven from their villages by the Russian invasion of Southern Bulgaria. Mr. Fawcett, as commissioner for Her Majesty's Ambassador, Mr. Layard, and Baroness Burdett Coutts, has within the last six weeks personally visited and relieved upwards of seven thousand starving people. Mr. John Henry Fawcett is the eldest son of Mr. Fawcett, of Petterills, Carlisle, and was a scholar of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, degree 1st Class Law, 1853. He was called to the bar in 1857, and was appointed Puisne Judge in 1875. He succeeded Sir Philip Francis as Chief Judge of the Supreme Court of the Levant and as Her Majesty's Consul-General for the Ottoman Dominion on the death of that gentleman in 1876.—Our portrait is from a photograph by Abdullah Frères, Pera, Constantinople.

THE LATE MAJOR LEADER

MAJOR WILLIAM N. LEADER, who on the 16th of last month succumbed in Bulgaria to typhoid fever, was one of the special correspondents of the Daily Telegraph with the Turks in Europe. An obituary notice in that journal states that "Major Leader formerly held a commission in Her Majesty's Army, but, having quitted the service, he volunteered into the French army, was present at more than one important action in the Franco-German War, was wounded, and shared the retreat of General Bourbaki into Switzerland. Subsequently he took part in the campaign of Don Carlos in Spain, and was appointed aide-de-camp to the Pretender. On the outbreak of the war in the East he was engaged as one of the special correspondents of the Daily Telegraph, and his last station was in the Shipka Pass. Gallant, energetic, and faithful to the mission with which he was entrusted, the unavoidable exposures encountered by him produced an attack of typhoid which great fatigue had ill prepared him to meet, and neither the care of kind friends nor the most attentive nursing could save him. Major Leader, who was but little more than thirty years of age, died at Philippopolis, and was buried there with military honours. It is gratifying to add, states the Daily Telegraph, that, as we learn from our Pera correspondent, 'His Majesty the Sultan has sent by his aide-de-camp, Colonel Ahmed Ali Bey, his gracious condolences with the friends and relatives of Major Leader, who died doing his duty with the Turkish forces at Shipka.'"—Our portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Maull and Co., of Cheapside and Piccadilly.

THE NEW LORD MAYOR AND SHERIFFS

THE RIGHT HON. THOMAS SCAMBLER OWDEN, the new Lord Mayor of London, who is a member of the Innholders' and the Loriners' Companies, was born in 1808, at Cuckfield, Sussex, being the youngest and only surviving child of the late Mr. J. Owden. He was for a long period a member of the Board of Guardians of the East London Union, and successively deputy-chairman and chairman, until its amalgamation with the City Union. In 1845 he was chosen one of the representatives of the Ward of Bishopsgate in the Common Council, and in 1862 he became one of the deputies of the ward, in which position he remained until the death of Mr. Alderman Copeland in 1868, when he was elected to succeed him. He served the office of Sheriff with Mr. R. Jones during the mayoralty of Alderman Sir T. Dakin in 1870-1. Mr. Alderman Owden married, in 1837, Frances Mary, the eldest daughter of Mr. John Rigby, and has three sons and three daughters. His lordship is well known at Tottenham, where he has resided for upwards of 30 years, as a liberal promoter of all good works. Having for some years past had no business occupation, his time has been entirely devoted to public duties.

MR. ALDERMAN AND SHERIFF GEORGE SWAN NOTTAGE belongs to the Nottage family of Nottage in Glamorganshire, and is a nephew of the late Mr. Alderman Challis, who was for some time M.P. for Finsbury. He was for many years connected with the large iron business of Mr. R. W. Kennard, the late member for Newport; but having from youth had a great taste for the fine arts, he took advantage of the invention of the stereoscope to found the London Stereoscopic Company, which is now perhaps the largest concern of the kind in the world, and one which, in 1862, undertook and executed the most extensive contract ever known in connection with photography, purchasing from the Royal Commissioners the exclusive right of producing and selling photographs in the Great Exhibition of that year. Mr. Nottage is also known in the literary world, having published some time ago a series of amusing and trenchant papers under the nom de plume of "Persius Junior," and having also compiled the "Shakespearian Diary."

MR. ALDERMAN AND SHERIFF JOHN STAPLES is the eldest son of Mr. John Staples, of Belmont, Salisbury, and was formerly proprietor of the "Albion" in Aldersgate Street, an hostelry celebrated in the annals of Civic festivity. He was first elected to the Court of Common Council for the Ward of Aldersgate in 1865, and was immediately placed on the Library Committee, of which he became Chairman in 1870. In this position he distinguished himself by elaborating a plan for the custody and protection of the Corporation Records, and also by the share he had in the general arrangements of the new building, and the conception and preparation of the window which was presented by the inhabitants of the Ward of Aldersgate. Having been Chairman of the Streets Committee and also of the Finance and Improvement Committee of the Commissioners of Sewers, he was elected in 1875 to the position of Chairman of the Commission itself. Mr. Staples, who is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, has also served as Master of the Pewterers' Company and Warden of the Leathersellers' Company, and while holding the last-named office he conceived the idea of bringing together all the available information respecting the History of the Company. The work was written by Mr. W. H. Black, and was produced under the supervision of Mr. Staples. He married the only daughter of Mr. H. Gillett, late partner in the firm of Howell, James, and Co., and has two sons and two daughters.

Our portraits are all from photographs by the London Stereoscopic Company, 54, Cheapside.

The construction of the State coach and four-in-hand harness for the new Lord Mayor has been entrusted to Mr. Offord, Wells Street, Oxford Street. The painting and gilding is very beautiful and delicate, and a distinctive feature of the carriage is the liberal introduction of the now much neglected art of the wood-carver. The panels have been emblazoned with the City arms, and those of the Loriners' and Innholders' Companies, of which the Lord Mayor is a member, by Mr. Campbell; and the liveries furnished by Messrs. Freeman are in marked harmony with the coach-builders' work.

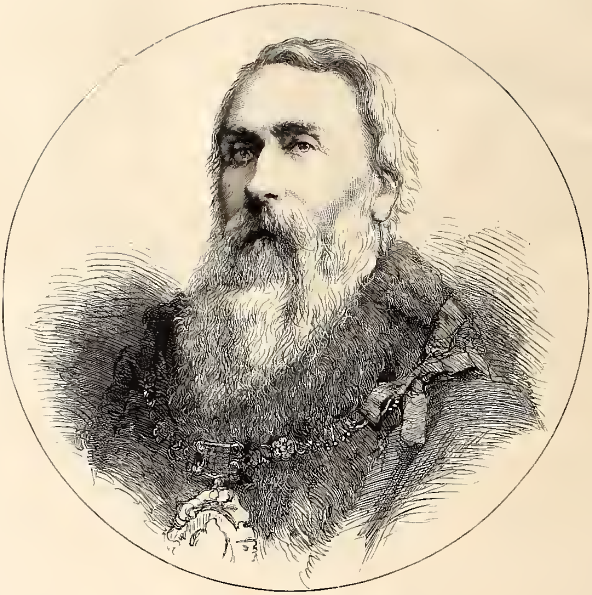
CARDINAL SISTO RIARIO-SFORZA

CARDINAL RIARIO-SFORZA, Archbishop of Naples, who died on Sept. 29, was one of the best beloved dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church, being universally popular both for his well-known liberal views, his untiring charity, and his great courage in dangerous epidemics. He was descended from a noble and historic family, whose name is inscribed in the Venetian Golden Book, and was born in 1810. At thirty-five years of age he was introduced by his uncle, then Camerlengo to the Vatican, to Gregory XVI. and made Archbishop of Naples, and in the following year received the cardinal's hat, almost the last bestowed by that Pontiff. Although warmly attached to the Bourbon dynasty, he in 1849 refused to sign the petition asking the King to abolish the Constitution, and since the advent of Victor Emmanuel II. has always refused to mix himself up with any of the intrigues of the Bourbon party. In 1860 his house was wrecked by the "Liberals," and he thought it more prudent to retire to Rome, but, as soon as the agitation had calmed down, returned to Naples after communicating with the civil authorities, and complying with all the requisites of the law, while at the same time preserving a strict obedience to the orders of the Vatican. On these he placed a conciliatory and liberal interpretation, as may be gathered from the fact that he was the first Bishop who insisted upon the rites of the civil law being performed in marriages before bestowing the ecclesiastical benediction. This created considerable excitement amongst the clergy at the time, as also his conduct in being the first not only to permit, but to urge his party to take an active share in the elections. Thus, it may be imagined, he was not regarded with much favour at the Vatican, although The Times correspondent states that, had he lived, French influence might eventually have secured him the tiara. Privately, as we have said, he was most beloved, being affable and courteous to all, and during two cholera epidemics he visited personally the most loathsome quarters of Naples with the consolations of religion, and only those who know Naples can conceive how loathsome those quarters are. For some time past Cardinal Riario-Sforza had been in ailing health, suffering from "pneumonite" with "miasmatic" fever, and on Saturday, Sept. 29, he died. For two days he lay in State in the archiepiscopal palace, when thousands of people paid a last visit to their beloved Cardinal; and on the 2nd ult. his funeral took place, being celebrated with great pomp, and attended by an enormous crowd of all ranks and political opinions.—Our illustrations are from photographs from Signor Giorgio Sommer, Largo Vittoria, Naples.

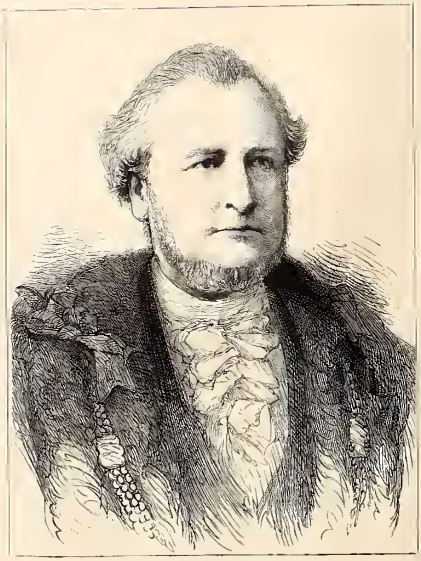
THE NEW THAMES STEAM FERRY

THE steam ferry which was last week opened by the late Lord Mayor of London is situated immediately over the Thames Tunnel, and it is hoped and expected that it will greatly relieve the traffic over London Bridge. The works were commenced in October, 1875, when the first pile of the wharf on the Wapping side of the river was screwed by the then Lord Mayor, Mr. Alderman Stone. The landing-stages on each side are raised and lowered to suit the state of the tide by hydraulic machinery, invented by Mr. F. E. Duckham, and the means of communication are two ferry boats, the Pearl and the Jessie May, each of which is 82 feet in length by 42 in breadth, with a carrying capacity of fifty tons, accommodation being afforded for twelve two-horse vans besides foot passengers. The tariff is 1*d*. for a pedestrian, cattle 6*d*. per head, cab, with fare, 8*d*., returning empty free, and other vehicles from 8*d*. to 2*s*. 6*d*., according to the number of horses by which they are drawn, and whether empty or laden. These are moderate charges considering the immense circuit which will be avoided by the use of the ferry.

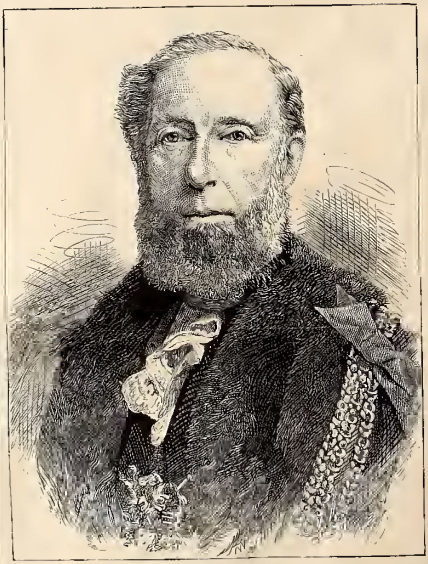
The Lord Mayor and his retinue arrived at Rotherhithe about one o'clock on the Wednesday, and after an address of welcome



THOMAS SCAMBLER OWDEN, F.R.G.S., LORD MAYOR

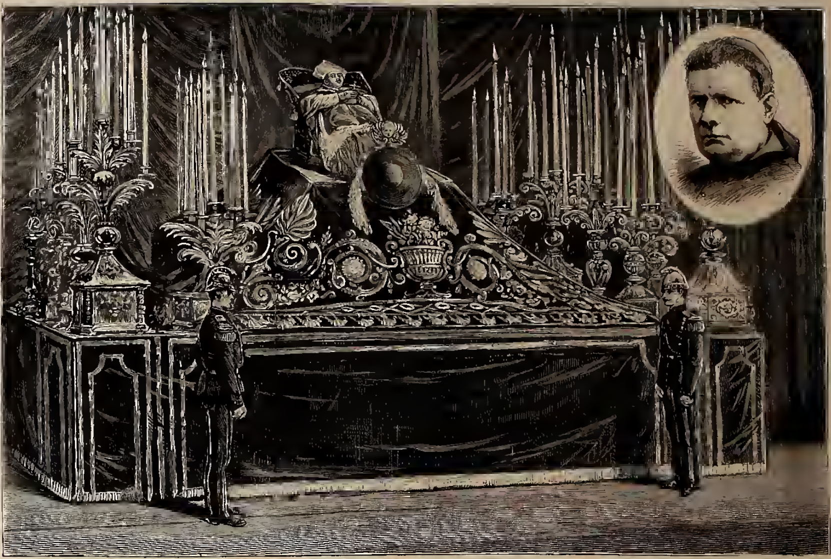


ALDERMAN AND SHERIFF GEORGE SWAN NOTTAGE



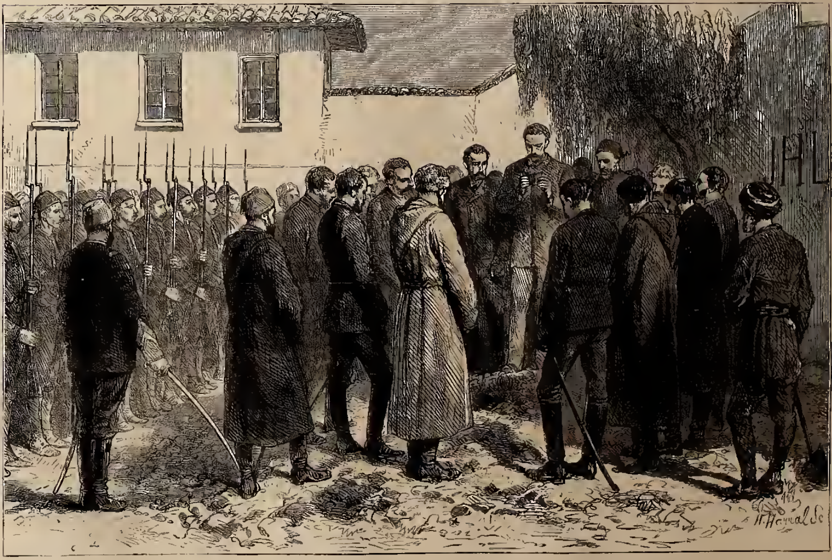
ALDERMAN AND SHERIFF JOHN STAPLES

THE NEW LORD MAYOR AND SHERIFFS



1. Sisto Riario-Sforza, Cardinal Archbishop of Naples.—2. The Lying in State at the Archiepiscopal Palace.

THE LATE CARDINAL RIARIO-SFORZA



WITH THE TURKS—THE FUNERAL OF THE LATE LIEUT. LAYARD, AT KEZANLIK had been presented by the parish authorities, the carriages, three in number, were driven on to the moveable pontoon, and thence on board the Pearl, which immediately cast off, and crossed the river in about six minutes. On arriving at the Wapping side another address was presented, and after prayer had been up offered by the Rev. S. Buss, Rector of Wapping, the Lord Mayor moved the lever governing the hydraulic lift, and declared the Ferry duly opened. The company afterwards sat down to a déjeûner in a marquee erected opposite the Wapping Station, and some speeches were made in which hopes were expressed that the undertaking would be supported by the public, and that the Board of Works would soon increase its usefulness by widening some of the old and narrow streets which lead to the landing stages. Captain Bedford Pim, who was one of the speakers, said that the ferry-boats would make admirable platforms for 38-ton guns in the event of war breaking out, and were he in power he would certainly "grab" them for that purpose.

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 441.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL TREAT IN SWITZERLAND

A FESTIVAL of this kind in a Continental village, especially in one which as yet knows nothing of London or Paris fashions, contrasts very favourably in picturesqueness with those which take place from time to time in our own country. The one represented in our sketch took place a few weeks ago, the children assembling outside a primitive inn high up in the Oberland. The big girls as usual took charge of the little ones, and they were all singing as they waited for their host, Professor Ralston, whose Russian fables are so popular amongst them.

They were not kept waiting long, however, but were soon within doors at the feast, little thinking that the giver of the entertainment was at that moment lying bruised and wounded, having met with an accident on one of the glaciers of the Eiger, whose snow-clad summit is seen in the background of our engraving.

Next to the picturesqueness of the magpie-like Bernese costume, relieved in some instances by a bright yellow kerchief worn round the neck, the most striking thing to a stranger was the extreme quietness of the children, who seemed overawed by the solemn grandeur of the mountains around and above them. They had none of the boisterous mirth which is so often characteristic of juvenile holiday-makers in England, and even their singing was of a plaintive subdued description. Oddly enough too, though born mountaineers, they were by no means light-footed, a fact, which as well as their "squat" manner of sitting, may perhaps be attributable to the heavy burdens which they are accustomed to carry on their backs.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO's new work is continued on page 445.

"A NEW SIGN FOR AN OLD SCORE"

NOW that the art of reading has become a common accomplishment, the old pictorial tavern-signs are rarely to be met with, except in remote country places, and even these are sadly in want of renovation, having become so defaced by swinging in the storms and scorching in the sunshine of many successive seasons, that it is difficult to distinguish the Red Lion rampant from the Green Dragon couchant. The incident depicted by Mr. Glindoni shows how the renovating process was sometimes accomplished. Some bibulous brother of the brush, his exchequer being in a bankrupt condition, was fain to discharge a long and accumulated reckoning by painting a new sign for the landlord. Considerable interest was excited on such an occasion as the undertaking advanced, for the impecunious artist was generally a man of talent, and, at all events, was possessed of skill far beyond that of the humble village artisan to whom such jobs were generally entrusted. A good many tavern signs have thus been painted at different times by men of celebrity, and some of these works have since been removed from their exposed situation, and carefully preserved indoors.

THE ROADSTEAD OF EAST LONDON, BRITISH KAFFRARIA

BRITISH KAFFRARIA, the scene of the recent outbreak, lies between the Great Kei, the White Kei, the Keiskamma, and the Indian Ocean, and was wrested from the Kaffirs by the Cape Colonists during the war of 1846-7. It is bounded on the north by a high and picturesque range of mountains called the Amatola, among the spurs of which are found many fertile well-watered valleys. The colony now contains a population of upwards of 10,000 persons of British and German descent (many of the latter being members of the German Legion, sent here after the Crimean War), and probably 100,000 of the native races. The principal town is King William's Town, the headquarters of the military and the seat of Government, while the port is East London, at the mouth of the Buffalo River, where there is good anchorage, and where the troops for the operations in the Transkei were landed. The revenues of the colony are derived from quit-rents of the farms granted, and from the revenue duties collected at the port represented in our engraving, which is from a photograph by Mr. T. Broderick, of 98, South Street, Walworth Common, S.E.

THE VIENNA PUBLIC BATHS

THESE baths, which are perhaps the largest at present opened in Europe, are situated on the right bank of the "regulated" Danube, about a mile and a quarter from the centre of Vienna; and about 400 yards west of the new "Reichs Brücke," they extend along the river for a length of 252 mètres, with a width of 70·2 mètres, thus covering an area of 17,704 mètres.

The baths proper consist of a basin 175 mètres by 48 mètres, with an area of 8,542 mètres, with a depth varying from 3·2 to 3·8 mètres, containing the enormous quantity of 29,897 cubic mètres of water; the bottom of this basin was left untouched after the excavation, the sides are, however, walled-in with dressed stone. The water is led into and out of this basin by means of two short canals. By thus making the bottom of the canal considerably above the river bed, sand and pebbles, which, owing to the rapid current of the Danube, would otherwise be washed in, are prevented from entering. By means of this current the water is changed about thirty times in the day and night, though the current in the baths is hardly perceptible. The large basin is by means of piles divided into five principal baths, the largest of which has for a bottom the natural soil of the river bank, while the other four have a moveable planked bottom, borne by pontoons, and in these four baths the depth does not exceed 4 feet 6 inches, while in the first and largest there is a depth of about eleven feet; it is reserved exclusively for swimmers.

The whole of the work was completed at a cost of 64,000*l.*, and occupied eighteen months in the excavating and building. There is at present accommodation for 1,200 people at one time, but by increasing the number of dressing-rooms the baths will accommodate 1,500, as there is ample water area. The baths are opened from 1st May to the end of October, from 5 A.M. till dusk, and are largely patronised. The large basin, which is shown in the plan and interior view of the baths, is reserved for ladies from 9 A.M. till 1 P.M. daily, many of the Vienna ladies being good swimmers. There is a large staff of officials connected with the establishment, including swimming masters and a surgeon. One of our engravings is taken from the river, and shows the terrace, on which are tables, where one can sip one's coffee and look out upon the beautiful Danube. The other view is from the road, and shows the entrance and restaurant, &c. The whole of the baths and buildings were designed by Herr Franz Berger, Chief Engineer to the Vienna Public Works Department, who has published a technical description of the whole work.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——The chief political event of the week has been the reception of Lord Hartington in Scotland. On Monday he was presented with the Freedom of the City of Glasgow, and in returning thanks he modestly disclaimed all personal merit, attributing the honours paid to him to the position which he holds as leader of the Liberal party. Reverting to the depressed condition of trade, which he deplored, he yet drew comfort from the reflection that things would have been much worse had the country been involved in the war, and hoped that we might still be able to remain neutral whatever might be the state of Continental affairs. On Tuesday his lordship went to Edinburgh, where, after receiving a deputation from the North of Scotland Liberal Association, he addressed a crowded meeting in the Music Hall, replying in the course of his speeches to various addresses which had been presented, he said that the Liberal party would not shrink from applying to Scotland what they would wish to see applied to the kingdom generally, although they could not consent to hamper themselves with distinct pledges on a great variety of subjects. The question of disestablishment he thought was hardly yet ripe for solution. He would be no party to stimulate agitation in this country upon it; nor, on the other hand, would he be a party to any attempt to repress discussion; but if ever Scotch opinion, or even Scotch Liberal opinion, is fully formed upon the subject, the party would be prepared to deal with it on its merits. The latter part of his speech was devoted to a criticism of the policy of modern Conservatism, which he contended was as different from old Toryism as one of Lord Beaconsfield's novels was from a high-and-dry sermon of a high-and-dry Churchman. It appeared to him to be a system invented by Lord Beaconsfield, its main object being the acquisition and retention of power on behalf of the Conservative party. On Wednesday his lordship was again at Glasgow, where he received several deputations, and spoke to a large meeting in the City Hall.—Mr. Gladstone is expected to return from Ireland on Monday next. Meanwhile he is making the most of his time, visiting most of the places of interest in and around Dublin, including the Castle, the harbour-works, and several educational establishments, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, notably the Maynooth College, where he was shown more than a than hundred ancient and modern editions of the Old Testament. Whilst in the grounds he remarked the awkward position of some old trees, and recommended their removal, but nobody offered to lend him an axe to fell them. On Monday he dined with the Archbishop of Dublin, and on Wednesday was entertained in the City Hall and presented with the Freedom of the City. Speeches followed as a matter of course, in spite of his expressed intention to keep his mouth closed during his stay in the country. He spoke of the Irish Church Act as having conferred great benefit on the country, referred to the Land Act in terms of gratulation and satisfaction, and sailed rather near the wind of Home Rule by declaring that "local government was especially desirable in Ireland."—On Tuesday, Admiral Egerton, M.P., speaking at a Science and Art Conversazione at the Chesterfield Working Men's Club, said that he believed the House of Commons would gladly welcome working men members, who by their ability and industry, or other qualities, were able to raise themselves sufficiently high to induce constituencies to return them.—Mr. Bright and Mr. Chamberlain addressed a meeting of Liberals on Wednesday at Rochdale, the former dilating on the influences which were constantly working against "the party of progress," and the latter expounding his favourite system of party organisation.

GUY FAWKES' DAY.——The anniversary of the Gunpowder Plot was kept in the usual way in London and the provinces. During the day a number of Guys were carried about the metropolitan suburbs, but there were very few novelties. In Walworth a well-got-up figure of a Bashi-Bazouk was carried about in company with the effigy of a Russian cavalry officer, and the two were jostled together in mimic combat. Other figures represented Pio Nono, the Czar of Russia, and the original Guido Fawkes, whilst one was made in the semblance of a Detective Policeman. There was a special fête at the Alexandra Palace, where a monster firework guy was destroyed, and a number of maskers paraded the grounds by torchlight, leading the way to a huge bonfire. Amongst the places where the celebration was observed with most spirit were Brighton, Lewes, Tunbridge Wells, Hitchin, Exeter, and Dorchester, at all of which there were grotesque processions, monster bonfires, and great displays of fireworks. At Cambridge and Oxford few collisions took place between "Town" and "Gown," the proctors and the police acting in unison to prevent a breach of the peace, the former by "gating" the students, and the latter by making numerous arrests.—The reported casualties, which were not numerous, were mostly of a trivial nature; but at Barnsley a shocking fatality occurred. Four young men were loading a roughly-made cannon with blasting powder, when the charge exploded as they were in the act of ramming it home. One man was killed on the spot, another fatally injured, and two others were badly hurt, being almost blinded.—The charges at the London Police Courts were chiefly for letting off fireworks in the streets, and were disposed of by the imposition of light fines; but in one instance a lad who assisted in making a bonfire of some timber in a builder's yard at Kilburn was ordered to pay the damage or go to prison for a week. Some of his companions had thrown stones and bricks at the policeman who arrested him, and one of them being caught was sentenced to a week's hard labour. On the previous Saturday some officers of the Board of Works visited the premises occupied by a number of firework makers, and those who had not complied with the Explosive Act had their goods condemned and seized. In one case 45lbs. of fireworks were found stowed in a tram-car.

MISCELLANEOUS.——On Friday last the Lord Mayor Elect, with the Sheriffs, Aldermen, and other members of the Corporation, went as usual to the residence of the Lord Chancellor, who signified Her Majesty's gracious approval of the newly-chosen Chief Magistrate, and congratulated him on his accession to office.—The Civic festivities of yesterday had not taken place when we went to press; but the Lord Mayor's Show was to be on an unusual scale of magnificence, Messrs. Sanger having engaged to supply a large number of allegorical representations.—The Czar of Russia has conferred the insignia of a Knight of the Order of St. Stanislas upon Mr. Archibald Forbes, the special war correspondent of the Daily News, for his courage and intrepidity at the battle of Plevna on the 30th of July. Mr. Forbes has written a letter repudiating the insinuations which have been made to the effect that the Daily News has for political reasons suppressed certain passages in his letters from the seat of war. He declares his belief that every line which he sent has been printed verbatim et literatim, and says that it is manifest that he would have inexpressibly degraded himself if the editor had suppressed or distorted any of the facts of which he had informed him, and he had continued to endure such treatment.—The London cabmen are organising to endeavour to obtain some change in the law regulating their business. They consider that free trade should be permitted in their trade as in all others; that the cab-laws should be consolidated into one Act, and that all disputes should be settled by civil procedure.—An extraordinary collision took place on the railway between Tayport and Glasgow the other day. It is said that the driver, fireman, and guard of a train left it untended and went to a public-house. While they were absent some one set the train in motion, but reversed the engine, so that it ran back along the line and ran into a train from Perth, the fireman of which was badly injured. Seventeen carriages were smashed and one of the engines pitched over the embankment, the damage being about 8,000*l.* The men who deserted the train have been arrested.—The inquest on the bodies of the two persons who lost their lives in the recent fire at Mile End has resulted in a verdict of accidental death, to which was attached a rider severely censuring the Fire Brigade for not showing more alacrity in going to the fire.—There are as yet no signs of an amicable termination to the dispute in the London Building Trade. The masons still hold out, confident that the masters will be obliged to concede their demands, while the masters, apparently determined not to do so, continue to import foreign workmen. The proposal for arbitration has not yet taken definite shape. The summons against Mr. Booth for illegal detention of tools has been dismissed by Mr. Flowers because the place where the tools are deposited is not within his jurisdiction.

THEATRES

THE production of a new drama by Messrs. Reece and Farnie at Manchester last week has given rise to a charge of plagiarism of a curious kind. The title of the play is Hester Gray, and it is alleged that the plot, the leading situations, and the motive are identical with those of a melodrama produced only a year and a half ago at a suburban theatre. The primâ facie improbability that two writers of reputation would conspire to plunder a suburban dramatist in this fashion, in the face of the speedy exposure which would appear to be inevitable, must strike every reader; yet the resemblance between the two works seems undeniable. The explanation, however, is probably very simple. It appears to be forgotten that the authors of the suburban piece referred to were at the time of its production themselves charged with having appropriated under changed names an older piece called Ruth Oakley, and that it was thereupon discovered that both pieces were due to a common source, and were in fact adaptations of a French drama produced about twenty years before. The explanation of this second charge may confidently be expected to be of a simple kind. Messrs. Reece and Farnie have most likely lighted on the French play and made it the basis of a new drama—possibly in ignorance of the fact that at least two versions already existed. Nothing is indeed more common than accidents of this kind.

If it be true, as is stated, that Hester Gray was publicly advertised as having been "written expressly for Miss Wallis by Messrs. H. B. Farnie and R. Reece" the announcement unquestionably required some qualification. But the adaptors may at least plead ancient custom for their reticence on the subject of their debt to the foreign playwright. It is a curious fact that the notion that it is just either towards the foreign author or the English playgoer to make honest confession in such cases is altogether of modern origin. We believe it was Lord Lytton, in his preface to the original edition of The Lady of Lyons, published in 1838, who first set the example of indicating the source of his plot. In like manner Mr. Tom Taylor has stated that his famous play The Ticket-of-Leave Man was founded upon "a dramatic tale entitled 'Le Retour de Melun,'" afterwards, as he observes, converted by the French authors into "the drama of Léonard." But it would hardly be inferred from this that the "dramatic tale" is not a narrative story, but is itself a drama of which Léonard (a play in existence before The Ticket of Leave Man was produced) is but a slightly modified copy. The germs of all the characters and also of the best situations of The Ticket-of-Leave Man are certainly to be found in the French original, Bob Brierley corresponding to Léonard, Melter Moss to Larigole, Dalton to Tête-Noire, Hawkshaw to Marcol, Green Jones to Madame St. Phar, Mrs. Willoughby to Mère Morel, Sam Willoughby to Benoit, and Maltby to Rusquin. When all this is acknowledged there is still great merit and even much originality to be claimed for Mr. Taylor's work. The original is thoroughly French; the adaptation on the contrary is thoroughly English; and the humours of the dialogue are to a considerable extent entirely due to the English author. The conversion of Mère Morel into Mrs. Willoughby furnishes indeed in itself an evidence of rare dramatic skill. Indeed, if it were not so, what is to prevent another adaptation of Léonard being prepared for our stage by any hack playwright in the service of a manager anxious to perform so popular a piece as The Ticket-of-Leave Man without the obligation to pay author's fees?

It is a noteworthy fact that no less than six theatres in the suburbs of London have signalised the arrival of the Fifth of November by performing during the past week dramas founded upon the history of Guy Fawkes. From this it would seem that suburban managers, like suburban little boys, perceive no reason why the abortive enterprise of that celebrated historical criminal "should ever be forgot." The passion for novelty which is supposed to be deeply implanted in the average human breast might perhaps suggest that Guy Fawkes on the stage every year at six theatres is a little too much. Possibly, however, there may be more novelty in these works than the theme would at first sight seem to promise. Mr. Wills has pleaded eloquently for the right of a dramatist to make his own history, at least at the West End of the town, and the same privilege may be justly claimed to dramatists in the eastern suburbs.

A new one-act piece from the pen of Mr. Maltby, produced last week at the LYCEUM Theatre, is an amusing trifle in its way. Its title is Just My Luck, and the fun with which it is liberally provided arises from the tendency to get into scrapes exhibited by a retired pastry-cook, who being painfully cognisant of his own infirmity, or evil fate, is in the habit of indulging in the ejaculation which furnishes the title of the piece. The troubles in which he is involved are of a farcical kind, and must not be subjected to too close a comparison with the standard of probability; but the incidents are droll, and the little piece is fairly acted by Mr. Lyons, Mr. Pinero, Miss Morley, Mrs. St. John, and Miss Hall.

In announcing the approaching reopening of the ROYALTY Theatre under his management, Mr. D'Oyley Carte calls attention to the circumstance that he relies for his programme entirely upon English dramatists and composers. The Sorcerer, which is among the first pieces to be produced, is described as an entirely new and original modern comic opera in two acts, by Messrs. W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, to whose joint talents as author and composer the public are indebted for Trial by Jury.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S.——Great activity has lately been shown by the management of the Baker Street Walhalla in placing before its numerous patrons some admirably executed and life-like portrait-models of celebrities and notorieties of the day. A war group representing the Czar of Russia, General Ignatieff, the Sultan of Turkey, and Hobart Pasha, in correct and appropriate national uniforms, is very striking; and in another portion of the spacious galleries are to be seen portrait-models of the Penge convicts and the perpetrators of the great Turf frauds, Kurr and Benson. The two last mentioned attract great attention; for, attired in convict uniform, they look particularly characteristic. Many other additions have lately been made, and we may safely affirm that this institution was never more worthy of a visit than at the present time.

Magazines

WE made some remarks in our last week's issue on Mr. Lowe's essay on the County Suffrage Question, and on Mr. Gladstone's reply thereto. Mr. Gladstone's article appears in the Nineteenth Century, and is, in our opinion, the most interesting of the many papers recently furnished by the ex-Premier's ready pen. It ought to be carefully studied by all those who desire to form a sound judgment on the important question of the franchise. Mr. Gladstone very happily disposes of Mr. Lowe's argument that universal suffrage would place the rich at the mercy of the poor by showing that under any suffrage system, however restricted, the rich form the minority. They stand at the apex of a pyramid which constantly increases in size as a lower social scale is reached. He also shows that equality is a very feeble passion in this country, and that so long as the upper classes do their duty, we prefer inequality, we like a lord to take the lead among us. But though quite willing to confer on the farm-labourers the privilege now possessed by town artisans, Mr. Gladstone frankly admits the advantages derived from the variegated franchises of the old unreformed Parliaments before 1832. Young men of talent, the most valuable raw material of future statesmanship, had then a chance of getting a seat even if they were not wealthy. Now the House is year after year becoming more filled with rich men, most of whom are elderly. And, observes Mr. Gladstone, "it would be as rational to begin training for the ballet at forty-five or fifty, as for the real work of the Cabinet."—Mr. Archibald Forbes, the late correspondent of the Daily News, having lately returned home for health's sake, gives an interesting estimate of the Russians, Turks, and Bulgarians, respectively. He praises the Russians for their good humour, their patience, and their bravery, but he denounces their organisation as abominably corrupt. Everybody is bribable, and the Czar appears to be about the only honest man in the country. Of the Turks Mr. Forbes evidently knows but little, and he occupies most of the section under that heading in arguing that as Sheridan desolated the Shenandoah Valley, so they ought to have desolated Bulgaria before leaving it to the invaders. Of the Bulgarians he speaks so unfavourably that we feel inclined to take the opposite side, and to believe that a people who in spite of Turkish misrule contrived to live in such material prosperity, must possess some excellent qualities. No wonder the Russian invader envies the well-to-do Bulgarian peasant, and says to himself, like the cabman in Punch contemplating a drunken man who is supposed to be ill: "I only wish I'd 'arf his complaint."

In the Contemporary, Mr. F. W. Newman writes on "The War Power," by which he means the power a Government has of involving in war the nation which they represent. This power, he holds, is, owing to our traditional belief in the advantages of secret diplomacy, left far too much in the hands of the Cabinet. Parliament is kept in the dark till too late, and hence war after war takes place (that in the Crimea among others), which under a more open system might have been avoided. Mr. Newman shows that a far more effectual check existed in former days, when the Privy Council, comprising men of all opinions, declared war. The Privy Council is now reduced to a nullity, and the momentous decision is exercised by the Cabinet.—Mr. Donaldson furnishes an amusing article on the "Characters of Plautus," and then follows a paper also on a theatrical subject, namely, Mr. Robert Buchanan's attack on some of the popular plays of the day, such as the Pink Dominos, the Great Divorce Case, &c. We have seen most of these pieces, and are unable to discover the immoralities which this modern Histriomastix discovers in them. To us they seem to belong to an unreal world, the characters of which are about as devoid of moral responsibility as the clown and pantaloon in a pantomime.

Mr. Lowe's paper in the Fortnightly, on the "Foreign Dominions of the Crown," is distinguished by his usual hard unromantic common sense. He points out, as other people have done, the inequality of the bargain between ourselves and our colonies, namely, that they expect us to protect them in time of war, and meantime levy heavy duties on our manufactures. But the most important part of Mr. Lowe's statement refers to India. Of what real use is it to us? We don't squeeze a revenue out of it as the ancient Romans or the modern Dutch would; we waste the lives and health of thousands of our countrymen in holding the peninsula; and the fact of our holding it and fearing to lose it makes us nervously afraid of and unfair to the Muscovites. In fact, England is Frankenstein and India is the Monster.—The second series of M. Thiers' conversations with Mr. Senior are very interesting. Whether right or wrong, there is a most fascinating vivacity in all he says; and there is much force in his remark that we British depend now for our food upon our commerce, and for our commerce, at least in time of war, on our maritime supremacy.—Mr. Mark Pattison writes an admirable article on "Books and Critics," full of good sense and lively illustration. He shows how small a quantity of the vast stock of literature existing the most earnest student can master; on the contrary, how few well-to-do people in this country possess a library worthy of the name; and with what poor mental provender most readers are contented. If, as he observes, every village had its green, and every town its recreation ground, there would be less of this incessant and unproductive novel-devouring.

The new story in Blackwood, "Mine is Thine," continues very lively, and much amusement is caused by the pompous old peer, Lord Germistoune, who is rendered furious by the sight of his courier refreshing himself from a flask. The scene, too, at the Engadine inn, where his lordship vainly threatens the imperturbable landlord with all sorts of pains and penalties for refusing to take him and his retinue in, is also very funny.—A pleasant account of Montenegro; some more graceful renderings of Heine's ballads by Mr. Theodore Martin; and reviews of Colonel Meadows Taylor's life, and of Captain Burnaby's "Rides," make up a good average number of Maga.

"The Czar's Clemency" in the Cornhill is an interesting little story of Polish life. Told by a priest, it narrates how a certain Casimir Barinski was exiled to Siberia, ostensibly from complicity in the revolt of 1863, but in reality at the instigation of a fascinating Countess Marienha, who acted as a Government spy, and who wished to get rid of an inconvenient admirer. How her feelings change after the lapse of thirteen years, and how she is baulked, after regaining her former lover's liberty, of obtaining him as a husband, is very forcibly described.

A very bright and lively memoir of M. Thiers is contributed to Macmillan by a lady who had the advantage of obtaining the details from the ex-President's lips during a series of interviews specially granted for the purpose in 1874.—Sir Rutherford Alcock furnishes an interesting conspectus of "African Exploration and its Results." He maintains that the only true antidote to the slave trade is the colonisation of the continent, and strongly recommends it to English enterprise at a time when protective tariffs are gradually shutting us out of so many foreign and colonial markets which were formerly profitable.

Temple Bar, as usual, is rich in historical and anecdotal studies, as, for example, the Court of Louis XIV., the Austrian Revolution under Joseph the Second, and the sketches of Alfred de Musset and the younger Dumas.

In the Gentleman's we have an attempt to whitewash Marat, which does not strike us as very successful. The writer's endeavours to excuse the massacres of September by a comparison with the slaughter of the Communists after the retaking of Paris in 1871 appear to us singularly malapropos. The September massacres were perpetrated in cold blood by a clique of scoundrels; the '71 slaughters, lamentable, we fully admit, were committed by men thirsting for revenge, and were the finale of a desperate civil struggle.—"Red-Spinner" (Mr. Senior) gives a pleasant account of trout fishing in Tasmania. Trout are abundant, although they have lost their European delicacy; but it seems very doubtful whether, after all the pains taken by Mr. Youl and others, the salmon has really been acclimatised in the waters of the Derwent.

The engravings in Scribner's possess the uncommon merit of being really designed to explain the letterpress. Take, for example, "Canvas Back and Terrapin," in which we have an excellent description, profusely illustrated with well-executed wood engravings, of the Bahama Islands. In most of our English illustrated magazines, the pictures, however artistically drawn, simply serve to depict some commonplace situation in a story, which might safely be left to the reader's imagination; or else are merely fancy sketches, utterly devoid of any originality, some pretty face repeated over and over again ad nauseam, and accompanied by a conventional copy of verses, written to order. Editors of illustrated magazines should take a lesson from Scribner.

The most attractive paper in Fraser is an account of hop-picking experiences in Kent by a gentleman who went down disguised after the fashion of the "Amateur Casual." The story is melancholy enough; foul language, immorality, and cheating on the part of the pickers, who, on the other hand, so asserts our informant, are on every side fleeced and defrauded by the "Men of Kent." Most of the pickers, he says, uphold the wildest revolutionary doctrines, and long for the extermination of the prosperous classes.—"Patricius Walker" is, as usual, very pleasant in his description of a tour in Devon and Cornwall, and Professor Newman shows commendable moderation in his suggestions for reform in Spelling.

There is an interesting paper in the Atlantic Monthly on the American Iron Trade. When we complain of the heavy protective duties of our Transatlantic cousins, we should bear in mind that they are only paying us out for the jealous restrictions of our ancestors. In 1750 a law was passed prohibiting all rolling or plating mills in America, and such industries had to be carried on as stealthily as is the distillation of illicit whiskey nowadays.

Mirth, a humorous magazine, edited by Mr. H. J. Byron, is a new candidate for popular favour. Considering that the accomplished editor is aided by such professors of comic writing as Messrs. Reece, H. S. Leigh, Sala, W. S. Gilbert, and Hollingshead, the effect of this first number is a little disappointing. The refrain of Mr. Byron's poem, "The Lunatic Ship," has a delightfully ear-catching chorus, "very pecu—very peculiar," but the introductory poem by the octogenarian, J. R. Planché, is, to our thinking, the best thing in the budget.

Here we must close, simply acknowledging the receipt of a number of other periodicals.

◆

MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.——Mr. Raphael Tuck, of 177, City Road, has lately published an admirable oleograph from Sichel's painting of the last moments of this unfortunate lady. The work is well worthy of examination, as showing the high degree of perfection now attained in this particular branch of art, which, though often maligned, affords, for those who are fond of colour, and who cannot pay for costly oil-paintings, a very effective substitute.

Scraps

"HELEN'S BABIES" has been dramatised for the American stage.

A NEW ROOM IN THE PARIS LOUVRE has been opened, containing ancient American curiosities.

CAPT. BURNABY is going to spend his autumn leave at Plevna, according to Mayfair, and started for Bulgaria on Tuesday.

WOODCOCKS have appeared in England this autumn much earlier than usual, and several couples have already been shot in the woodbanks near Godstone.

HIPPOPHAGY continues to increase steadily in Paris, and during the third quarter of 1877 443,310 kilogrammes of horse-flesh were sold, while during the same period last year the corresponding quantity was 373,410 kilogrammes.

GREAT SALT LAKE IN UTAH has set up as a watering-place. Maladies of the eyes and skin, as well as catarrh, are said to be cured by bathing in the lake, and numbers of sick persons have been testing the asserted curative powers. The lake, however, is gradually becoming shallower, and the waters now are reported to be lower than at any time during 1876.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUMS IN THE TEMPLE GARDENS are now in full bloom, and owing to the mild weather make a very good show this year. There are the usual three varieties—the Japanese, the anemone, and the quilled chrysanthemums, besides the pompones, and the white and yellow blooms predominate, some of the white quilled being especially beautiful. Several Japanese of a pinkish-lilac tint are also very fine.

THE BABYLONIAN MARRIAGE MARKET is being imitated on a small scale in Austria. An agency has been opened at Vienna, where young ladies desirous of entering the holy state of matrimony may be seen for two hours every day, the blondes being collected together in one room and the brunettes in another. The gentleman in search of a wife is introduced by the superintendent to a lady, the fair damsel plays the piano, shows off her various accomplishments, enters into conversation, and the bargain is struck.

THE ESQUIMAUX FAMILY at the Paris Jardin d'Acclimatation have proved as great a success as the Nubians, and a special interest is felt in the youngest baby, who, according to the Figaro, though only eleven months old, has all his teeth, can drag a miniature sledge made by his father, and is as precocious as a three-year old Parisian. These Esquimaux are by no means avaricious, and for some time refused to take the money offered them by visitors, who wished thus to get a nearer view of the strangers. This week the Esquimaux are to come to London.

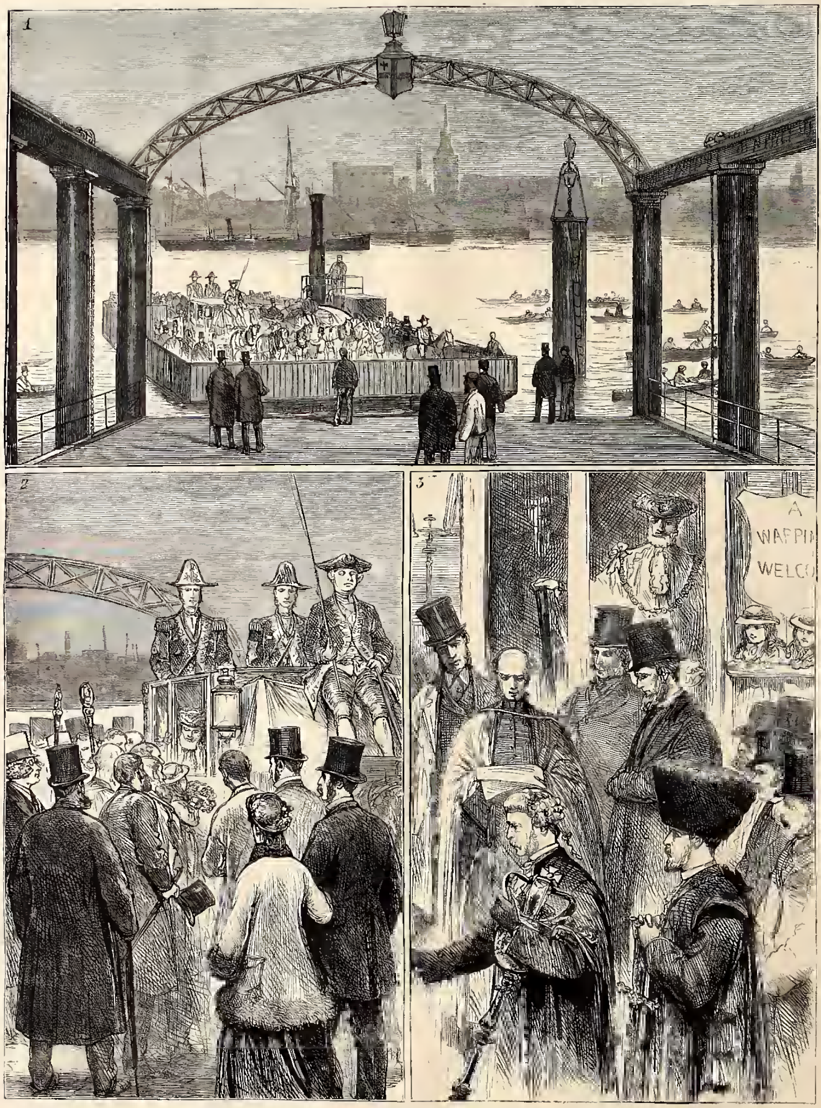
PARTY FEELING IN POLITICS appears to run higher amongst the members of the Prussian Diet than with their hot-headed Gallic contemporaries, as Teutonic Conservatives and Liberals cannot even leave their coats and umbrellas in the same place without quarrelling. Such disputes have arisen amongst the deputies over the claiming of their respective garments that the coats and umbrellas are now kept apart and studiously divided into different categories, each parcel being ticketed with its owner's opinions, such as "Clerical's hat," "Conservative's coat," "National-Liberal's umbrella," and "Progressist's stick."

THE LATE M. GUSTAVE BRION.——This talented painter, who was executing the illustrations in this journal to "The History of a Crime," died suddenly at Paris on Sunday in a fit of apoplexy. We will reserve any detailed biography of M. Brion, as we hope to publish his portrait, but we may mention that he was only fifty-three years of age, and was well-known in England by his pictures of "A Wedding in Alsace," "Woodcutters of the Black Forest," "Bretons at a Church Door," "A Funeral in the Vosges," and many other works. The illustration of "The Arrested Representatives Marching Through the Streets" on another page, was probably the last work which emanated from his pencil.

THE VOLUNTEERS' SICK BEARERS' ASSOCIATION—which has been formed with a view to instructing members of the Reserve Forces in the principal duties of attending to the sick and wounded in the field—will hold the first of a series of lectures and drills on the 23rd inst. at the Society of Arts, John St. Adelphi. The instruction will be given by Surgeon-Major Staples and a sergeant of the Army Hospital Corps, appointed by the Secretary of State for War, and the necessary appliances are to be lent by the order of St. John of Jerusalem. The medical officers and two or more men per company of the London Volunteers are first to be trained, and the instruction of provincial corps will be considered subsequently.

LONDON MORTALITY decreased by 52 deaths last week, numbering 1,447 against 1,499 during the previous seven days, being 118 below the average, and at the rate of 21·4 per 1,000. There were 39 deaths from different forms of fever (2 below the average), 9 from small-pox (a decline of 5), 47 from measles (a decrease of 20), 9 from diphtheria, 24 from whooping-cough, 19 from diarrhœa (a decrease of 4), and 82 from scarlet fever (an increase of 18, being the highest number registered in any week since the commencement of 1876). Deaths referring to diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 335 (a decline of 36), of which 195 resulted from bronchitis and 99 from pneumonia. There were 2,667 births registered, exceeding the average by 163. The mean temperature was 49·1°, or 2·8° above the average. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 19·2 hours, the sun being 67·6 hours above the horizon.

ART IN HOSPITALS.——A correspondent writes as follows:—"You may like to know how the pictures you sent me some months ago (in answer to my request for a parcel for hospitals and orphanages in India) were distributed, and how they were received. They were divided among eleven hospitals in the three Presidencies, three orphanages, St. John's College, Agra, a good school, and a few mission houses. The portraits of the Queen were mostly coloured before being sent out, and they have given great satisfaction. Dr. Coates, of the Medical College Hospital, Calcutta, writes: 'Our bare walls have often been a source of regret to me; these pictures have much relieved them, and I hope will gladden some of the sick for many years.' Dr. Elliot, of the Presidency General Hospital, Calcutta, says: 'I beg to thank you very much in the name of the General Hospital for the pictures kindly sent for beautifying the walls of the institution; they are most acceptable, and I hope you will express the warmest thanks of all connected with the Presidency General Hospital.' I might multiply extracts from the fifteen acknowledgments I have already had, but I trust these will show how gratefully your gifts were received." Perhaps some of our readers who possess spare prints and illustrations might feel encouraged by these statements to forward them to the numerous hospitals and charitable institutions with which our country and its colonies abound.



1. The Departure from Rotherhithe.—2. Landing at Wapping.—3. Reading the Parochial Address.

OPENING OF THE NEW THAMES STEAM FERRY BY THE LATE LORD MAYOR

BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE WORLD AND THE WORD

"COME to us, Cis, for a day or two," I said. "It will be a little change if it only keeps you out of the way of your persecutor."

It was a custom of old standing for Celia to spend a day or two with the Captain—it did us good in brightening up the dingy old house. When Celia was coming we put flowers on the mantelshelf, the Captain went round rigging up the curtains with brighter ribbons, and he called it hoisting the bunting. The usual severity of our daily fare was departed from, and the Captain brought out, with his oldest flask, his oldest stories.

"He follows me about," she replied. "I can go nowhere without meeting him. If I go into a shop he is at the door when I come out—it is as if I was already his property."

"But he says nothing—he shows no impatience."

"On Sunday evening I spoke to him. I asked him to give up his pursuit. I appealed to his honour—to his pity."

"He has no pity, Cis."

"To his very love for me, if he really loves me. I told him that it was impossible for me to give my consent. I burst into tears—what a shame to cry before him!—and he only laughed and called me his little April girl. 'Laugh, my little April girl, it rejoices me to see the cloud followed by the sunshine.' Then he asked me to tell him what I wanted him to do and he would do it. 'To tell my father that you have given up your project—to go away and leave me.' He said that he would do anything but give up the project: that his hope was more firmly grounded than ever, and that time would overcome my last objections to making him happy. What kind of love can that be which looks only to a way of making oneself happy?"

That had been my kind of love not very long before.

"I cannot speak to my father, but I see that he is changed. Not in his kindness to me, not that—but he is irritable: he drinks more wine than he should, and he is all the evening in his office now—and sometimes I see his eyes following me—poor Papa!

"What is the meaning of it Laddy? People do not usually promise their daughters to old men when they are eight years of age. Yet this is what he says Papa did. Why did he do it? Do you think he lent Papa money? You know we were not always so well off as we are now."

"I dare say money has something to do with it," I replied. "It seems to me that money has to do with everything that is disagreeable."

"It has," she said. "Why cannot people do without money altogether? But, if that is all, Aunt Jane and my Uncle Pontifex have plenty of money, and they would help me, I am sure."

"We cannot go to them for help yet. Patience, Cis—patience for a fortnight; we will tell Leonard when he comes home, and perhaps the Captain too."

"Patience!" she echoed. "One tries to be patient, but it is hard. It is not only that I could never love Herr Räumer, Laddy, but the very thought of passing my life with him makes me shake and tremble. I am afraid of him, his manner is smooth, but his voice is not, and his eyes are too bright and keen. I have seen him when he did not think it necessary to keep up that appearance of gentleness. I know that he despises women, because I once heard him make a cruel little sneer about us. And he pretends—he pretends to be religious, to please Mamma. What sort of life should I have with him? What an end, then, would there be to our talks and hopes?"

I murmured something weak about the higher life being possible under all conditions, but I did not believe it. Life with Herr Räumer—the man who believed religion to be the invention of the priests—that this life was the beginning and the end; that there was nothing to be looked for from man and womankind but from love of self—no honour, no virtue. What could the future of a girl exposed to daily and hourly influences of such a man be like?

Love of self? Would it be, then, for love of self that Celia would accept him?

I suppose for strong natures life might be made to yield the fruits of the most sublime Christianity anywhere, even in a convict hulk; but most of us require more fitting conditions. It is happy to think that no man is tried beyond his strength to bear, although in these latter days we have gone back to the old plan of making new hindrances to the maintenance of the higher spiritual levels, and calling them helps. There are plenty of daily crosses in our way, which call for all our strength, without adding the new and barbaric inconveniences of hunger and small privations. Fasting, as a Ritualist the other day confessed to me, only makes people cross. I should have pitied any girl, even the most commonplace of good English girls, whom Fate might single out to marry this cynical pessimist; how much more when the girl was one whose standard was so high and heart so pure? Should the clear current of a mountain stream be mingled with the turbid water of a river in which no fish can live, foul from contact with many a factory by which it has wound its way, and from which it has brought nothing but the refuse and the scum? Are there not some men—I am sure Herr Räumer was one—who as they journey through the world gather up all its wickedness out of which they construct their own philosophy of existence? And this philosophy it was which he proposed to teach Celia.

"I shall instruct that sweet and unformed mind," he said to me one evening in his lordly way, as if all was quite certain to come off that he proposed, "in the realities of the world. She is at present like a garden full of pretty, delicate flowers—your planting, my young friend; they shall be all pulled up, and we shall have instead—well—those flowers which go to make a woman of the world."

"I do not want to see Celia made into a woman of the world."

"You will not be her husband, Ladislas Pulaski. You only love her like a brother, you know. Ha! ha! And that is very lucky for me. And you do not know what a woman of the world is."

"Tell me what she is."

"I shall not go on living here. I shall live in London, Paris, Vienna, somewhere. My wife shall be a woman who will know from my teaching how to deal with men and how to find out women. As for the men, she shall play with them like a cat with a mouse. She shall coax their little secrets out of them, especially if they are diplomats; she shall make them tell her what she pleases."

"Why should they not tell her what she pleases? What secrets would Celia wish to hear?"

"Jeune premier—Cherubin—you know nothing. They will be political secrets, and my wife will learn them for me. It is only France and Russia which really understand the noble game of feminine intrigue. I shall take my bride away, train her carefully, and with her take my proper place."

Always in the Grand Style: always this talk about diplomacy, secret service, and intrigue, and sometimes betraying, or perhaps ostentatiously showing, a curiously intimate acquaintance with Courts and Sovereigns. What, I wondered, was the previous history of this strange man?

"Celia has everything to learn, and a good deal to unlearn," he went on thoughtfully. "I do not blame you in any particular, Ladislas. You have done your best. But she has to forget the old-fashioned provincial—or insular—axioms."

"God forbid."

He laughed. "You forget that you are not an Englishman, but a Slav. They are very pretty—these insular notions—that people marry for love—that people must always answer truthfully whatever comes of it—that if you want to get a thing you only have to march straightforward—that you must let your friends know all you intend to do—that men care for anything but themselves—that——" He stopped for want of breath.

"Pray go on," I said; "let us have the whole string of virtues dismissed as insular."

"Marriage for love! Was there ever greater nonsense? The best union that the history of the world speaks of was that of the Sabine maidens carried off by the Romans—carried off by perfect strangers. Picture to yourself the feelings of a proper English young lady under such circumstances. Celia certainly will never love me, but in time—in a short time—you shall see. When a girl sees that a man is in earnest, that if she appeals to his pity he laughs; if to his mercy he laughs; if to such trifles as disparity of religion or of age, he laughs—why, you see that woman ends by giving in. Besides, it is a compliment to her. I know that I have not your influence or good wishes. I did not expect them, and can do without them. You are as romanesque as your pupil—ça va sans dire. But I have her father's. She looks very pretty—very sweet indeed—when she gives me one of those upward looks of hers which mean entreaty. What will she be when I have trained her to use those eyes for political purposes?"

It reminded me of a boy with a mouse in a trap. You know how pretty the creature is, its eyes bright with terror and despair, looking at you through the bars which she has been frantically gnawing all the night. Shame and pity to kill the pretty thing. One might tame her. So Herr Räumer, like the school boy, admired his prisoner. She was caught in his cage: at least he thought so: she amused him: she pleased his fancy: he would keep her for himself, caged and tamed.

So Celia came to us.

"I am in trouble," she said to the Captain, "and I came here. Laddy knows what sort of trouble it is, but we ought not to speak of it just yet. Say something, dear Captain, to help us."

The Captain in his simple way took her in his arms and kissed her.

"What trouble can you have that your friends cannot get you out of? I won't ask. There are troubles enough of all sorts. All of them come from somebody disobeying orders. Have you followed instructions, my dear?"

"I have tried to, Captain."

"Then there will be no great harm done, be sure. 'Like a tree planted by the rivers of water, his leaf shall not wither.' Now I tell you what we will do. We will blow some of the trouble away by a sail up the harbour. First let us have tea."

"Look, Celia! Look, children. There's the old 'Asia.' God bless her"

"I remember," the Captain said, when he had finished his tea; "I remember in the action of Navarino, which you may have heard of, my pretty—Laddy, what are you sniggering at? Of course Celia has heard of Navarino. Very well, then, you shall not hear that story, though it might be brought to bear upon the present trouble. The best of sea actions is the use they can be put to in all sorts of private affairs. That is not generally known, Celia, my dear: and it makes an action the more interesting to read. Nelson's example always applies. Lay your guns low—nail your colours to the mast—pipe all hands for action: and then—alongside the enemy, however big she is. As to the rest, that's not your concern—and it's in good hands."

"I wish I knew what my duty was," said Celia.

"I wish you did, my dear. And you will know, turning it over in your own mind. I thank God that my life has been a simple one. I never saw any doubt about the line of duty. My orders have always been plain. My children," he added, solemnly, "we all start in life with sealed orders. Some men, when they open them, find them difficult to understand. Now the way to understand them—they are all here"—he laid his hand upon a certain book on the small table beside him—"is to remember, first of all, that duty has got to be done, and that we are not always out on a holiday cruise in pleasant waters."

"I know," said Celia, "I know, Captain"—the tears standing in her eyes.

"They talk about church-going and sermons," the Captain went on, "Well—its part of the discipline. Must have order; church belongs to it—and I'm a plain man, not asked for an opinion. But, Cis my dear, and Laddy, there's one thing borne in upon me every day stronger. It is that we've got a model always before us. As Christ lived, we must live; those who live most like Him, talk the least, because they think the more. I read once, in a book, of a statue of Christ. Now whoever went to see that statue, however tall he was, found it just a little taller than himself. It was a parable, Celia, I suppose. And it means that the nearer you get to Christ, the more you find that you cannot reach Him. Be good, my children. And now, Celia, if you will put on your hat, we will start. It's a fine evening, with a fair breeze, and we need not be back before nine. No more talk about troubles till to morrow."

CHAPTER XXII.

A NIGHT UP THE HARBOUR

THE sun was still high, but fast sloping westwards; there was a strong breeze blowing up the harbour from the south-west, the tide was full, the water was bright, its wavelets touched by the sunshine, each one sparkling like a diamond with fifty facets, the old ships, bathed in the soft evening light, looked as if they were resting from a long day's work, the hammers in the Dockyard were quiet, and though the beach was crowded it was with an idle throng who congregated together to talk of ships, and they naturally tended in the direction of the beach because the ships were in sight as illustrations. We kept our oars and mast with the running gear in safety in one of the houses on the Hard behind a shop. It was a strange and picturesque shop, where everything was sold that was useless and interesting—a museum of a shop; in the window were Malay creeses taken in some deadly encounter with pirates in the narrow seas; clubs richly carved and ornamented for some South Sea Island chief; beads worked in every kind of fashion; feathers, bits of costume, everything that a sailor picks up abroad, brings home in his chest, and sells for nothing to such an omnivorous dealer as the owner of this shop. He, indeed, was as strange as his shop. He had been a purser's clerk, and in that capacity had once as strange an experience as I ever heard. He told it me one evening when, by the light of a single candle, I was looking at some things in his back parlour. Some day, perhaps, I will tell that story. Not now. Some day, too, perhaps, I will write down what I can recollect of the stories he told me connected with his collection. There is no reason now for suppressing them any longer; he is dead, and all those whose mouthpiece he was are dead too. I think that in every man over forty there lies, mostly only known to himself, a strange and wondrous tale. Could he tell it as it really happened, it would be the story of how events perfectly commonplace in the eyes of other people acted upon him like strokes of Fate, crushing the higher hope that was in him, and condemning him to penal servitude for life, to remain upon the lower levels. Because it is mostly true that many run, but to one only is given the prize. Am I—are you—the only one whom fortune has mocked? Nos numerus sumus, the name of the Unfortunate is Legion; no one has the exclusive right to complain. To fifty Fate holds out the golden apples of success, and one only gets them.

We took our sculls and sails from the shop, and rigged our craft. She was built something on the lines of a wherry, for seaworthiness, a strong, serviceable boat, not too heavy for a pair of sculls, and not too light to sail under good press of canvas. Everybody knew us on the beach—the boatmen, the old sailors, and the sailors' wives who were out with the children because the weather was so fine. All had a word to say to the Captain, touching their forelocks by way of preface. One carried our oars, another launched the boat, another sent a boy for a couple of rough sea rugs, because the wind was high, and the young lady might get wet, and in the midst of the general excitement we jumped in and pushed off.

Celia sat in the stern, one of the rugs serving as a cushion, and held the rudder strings. The Captain sat opposite her, I took the sculls to row her clear of the beach, until we could hoist our sail.

"This is what I like," said the Captain, dragging a little more of the waterproof over Celia's feet in his careful way. "A bright day, a breeze aft, but not dead aft—Laddy, we shall have some trouble getting back—a tight little boat, and a pretty girl like little Cis in command. Aha! Catch an old salt insensible to lovely woman.

Blow high, blow low, let tempests tear
The mainmast by the board:
My heart with thoughts of thee, my dear,
And love well stored."

Celia laughed. Her spirits rose as each dip of the sculls lengthened our distance from the shore, and made her certain of escaping, at least for one evening, from her persecutor. She wore some pretty sort of brown holland stuff made into a jacket, and braided with a zig-zag Vandyke pattern in red. I do not know how I remember that pattern of the braid, but it seems as if I remember every detail of that evening—her bright and animated face flushed with the pleasure and excitement of the little voyage, rosy in the evening sunshine, the merry eyes with which she turned to greet the Captain's little compliment, the halo of youth and grace which lay about her, the very contour of her figure as she leaned aside, holding both the rudder-strings on one side. I remember the little picture just as if it was yesterday.

Outside the ruck of boats which came and went between the opposite shores of the port we were in free and open water, and could ship the sculls and hoist our sail for a run up harbour.

The sail up, I came aft, and sat down in the bottom of the ship, while the Captain held the rope and Celia the strings. And for a space none of us talked.

Our course carried us past the Docks and the shore-line buildings of the Dockyard. There were the white wharves, the cranes, the derricks, and all sorts of capstans, chains, and other gear for lifting and hoisting; the steam-tugs were lying alongside; all as deserted and as quiet as if the Yard belonged to some old civilisation. Bright as the evening was, the effect was rather ghostly, as we glided, silent save for the rippling at the bows, along the silent bank. Presently, we came to the building sheds. Some of them were open and empty; some were closed; within each of the closed sheds lay, we knew, the skeleton, the half-finished frame, of a mighty man-o'-war—some of them but just begun; some ready to be launched; some, the deserted and neglected offspring of some bygone First Lord's experimental ignorance, lying as they had lain for thirty years, waiting for the order to be finished off and launched.

"Think of the twilight solitude in those great empty sheds, Cis," I whispered. "Think of the ghosts of wrecked ships haunting the places where they were built when the moonlight streams in at the windows. Fancy seeing the transparent outline of some old three-decker, say the great Victory, as she went down with a thousand men aboard, lying upon the timber-shores——"

"With the ghosts of the old shipbuilders," said Celia, "walking about with their hands behind them, criticising the new-fashioned models."

"More likely to be swearing at steam," said the Captain. "The new-fashioned models! Where are they now, the ships which were on the slips twenty years ago? The Duke of Marlborough, the Prince of Wales, the Royal Frederick, the Royal Sovereign—Where is last year's snow? They are harbour ships, ships cut down and altered into ironclads, and of a date gone out of fashion."

There were many more ships in harbour then than now; we had not yet learned to put all our trust in iron, and where we have one serviceable fighting vessel now we had twenty then. No hulk in the good old days that could float and could steer but could fight; there were no torpedoes, no rams, no iron vessels, no venomous little monitors. To lay yourself alongside an enemy and give broadside for broadside till one tired of it, was the good old fashion of a naval battle. What is it now?

Again, twenty years ago, they did not break up and destroy every vessel that seemed to be past service. She was towed up harbour and left there moored in her place, to furnish at least house accommodation for a warrant officer, if she could be of no other use. There were hundreds of ships there lying idle, their work over; some of them were coal hulks, some convict hulks, some receiving hulks; most were old pensioners who did no work any more, floating at high tide, and at low lying in the soft cushion of the harbour mud. Presently we ran among them all, passing in and out, and through their lines. Then I took the rudder-strings, so that Celia might look while the Captain talked.

He pushed his hat well back, sat upright, and began to look up and down the familiar craft with the eye of an old friend anxious to see them looking their best. It was not much they could show in the way of decoration, but the figure-heads were there still, and the balconies and carvings of the stern were mostly uninjured. As for the hull, it had generally been painted either black, white, or yellow. There were no masts, but they had jurymasts to serve as derricks on occasion. "That is the Queen Charlotte, my dear. She was flagship at Algiers when Lord Exmouth showed the Moors we would stand no more nonsense. We've fought a good many naval actions, but I think that business was about the best day's work we ever did. I was chasing Arab dhows and slavers off Zanzibar, and hadn't the chance of doing my share of the work. In 1816, that was——

"Look—look—Celia! Look, children! There's the old Asia. God bless her! Flagship, Celia, at Navarino. My old ship—my one battle. Ah! Navarino. They say now it was a mistake, and that we only played the Russians' game. No chance of doing that again. But anyhow it was a glorious victory." The recollection of that day was always too much for the Captain, and he might have gone on the whole evening with personal reminiscences of the battle, but for the breeze which freshened up and carried us past the Asia.

"No confounded steam," he growled, "no wheels and smoke spoiling the decks; quiet easy sailing, and no noise allowed aboard until the guns began to speak. Port, Laddy. That is the Princess Charlotte, Celia. Forty people were drowned when she was launched; and a good many more went below when she made herself heard at Acre. I was not there either, more's the pity. I was cruising about the narrow seas picking up pirates off Borneo.

"There is the Egmont. She fought the French fleet in 1795, and the Spaniards in 1797. Good old craft. Stout old man-o'war.

"That is the Illustrious, moored in line with the Egmont. She was with her in '95, and I think she helped to take Java in 1811. We used, in those days, you see, Celia, if we wanted a place that belonged to the enemy, just to go and take it. Not that we were so unmannerly as not to give them a civil choice. We used to say, 'Gentlemen, Señors, Caballeros, Mynheer Double Dutchman,' as the case might be, 'we've come here to haul down your bunting and run up the Union Jack over your snug quarters. So, as perhaps you would not like to give in without a bit of a fight, you had better ram in your charge, and we'll give you a lead.' Then the action began, and after a respectable quantity of powder was burned they struck their colours, we went ashore, the men had a spree, and the officers made themselves agreeable to the young ladies."

"Did not the young ladies object to making friends with the enemy?"

"Not at all, my dear. Why should they? We did them no wrong, and we generally represented the popular side; they wanted to be taken by the British Fleet, which meant safety as well as flirtation. And we enjoyed our bit of fighting first. Did you ever hear of Captain Willoughby in Mahébourg Bay, Island of Mauritius? Well, that's an unlucky story, because it ended badly, and instead of Willoughby taking the island the island took him. Ran his ship ashore. She turned on her side, so that her guns couldn't be brought to bear. They found the Captain with one eye out and a leg shot off. The French Captain had a leg shot off too, and so they put them both in the same bed, where they got better, and drank each other's health. The worst of it was that what we sailors got for England the politicians gave away again when they signed a peace. We let the Dutch have Java, we let the French have Bourbon and Guadaloupe. I wonder we didn't give New Zealand to the Americans, and I dare say we should if they had thought of asking for it.

"That is the Colossus, my dear. Good old ship, too; she was at Trafalgar. There is the Alfred, who helped to take Guadaloupe in 1810, and the Æolus frigate. She fired a shot or two at Martinique the year before. Look at them, the row of beauties; forty-two pounders, the handiest and most murderous craft that ever went to sea; and look at the sloops and the little three gun brigantines. I had one under my command once. And there is the Columbine."

The Captain began to sing—

The Trinculo may do her best,
And the Alert so fleet, Sir,
Alert she is, but then she's not
Alert enough to beat, Sir.

. . . .

The Acorn and the Satellite,
Their efforts, too, may try, Sir,
But if they beat the Columbine,
Why, dash it!—they must fly, Sir.

"They will build no more such ships; seamanship means poking the fire. Look at those things now."

He pointed with great contempt to the war steamers. Those of 1858 would be thought harmless things enough now. Two or three had screws, but most had the old paddles. The Duke of Wellington of 130 guns carried a screw; so did the Blenheim, the Archer, and the Encounter, all of which were lying in the harbour. But the Odin, the Basilisk, and the Sidon were splendid paddle steamers. Among them lay the Megæra, a troop ship afterwards wrecked on St. Paul's Island; the Queen's steam yacht, the Fairy, as pretty a craft as ever floated, in which Her Majesty used to run to and fro between Osborne and the port; the Victoria and Albert, the larger Royal yacht; and the pretty little Bee, smallest steamer afloat, before they invented the noisy little steam launches to kill the fish, to tear down the banks of the rivers, and to take the bread out of the mouths of the old wherrymen in our harbour.

We were drawing near the last of the big ships.

"There, Celia, look at that craft," cried the Captain. "Do you see anything remarkable about her?"

"No; only she is yellow."

"That is because she is a receiving hulk," he informed her, with the calmness that comes of a whole reservoir of knowledge behind. "It is in her cut that I mean. Don't you remark the cut of her stern, the lines of her bows?"

She shook her head, and laughed.

"Oh! the ignorance of womankind!" said the Captain. "My dear, she's French. Now you see."

Again Celia shook her head.

"Well," he sighed, "I suppose it's no use trying to make a young lady understand such a simple thing. If it had been a bit of lace now, or any other fal-lal and flap-doodle—never mind, my pretty, you're wise enough upon your own lines. That is the Blonde, my dear, and she is one of the very last of the old prizes left. When she is broken up I don't know where I could go to look for another of the old French prizes. My father, who was a master in the Navy, navigated her into this very port. She struck her flag off Brest.

"It is a page of history, children," he went on, "this old harbour. They ought to keep all the ships just as they are, and never break up one till she drops to pieces. The brave old ships! It seems a shame, too, to turn them into coal hulks and convict hulks. I would paint them every year, and keep them for the boys and girls to see. 'These are the craft of the old fighting bulldogs,' I would tell them. 'You've got to fight your own battles in a different sort of way. But be bulldogs, however you go into action, and you'll pull through just as your fathers did.'

"I saw a sight when I was a boy," the Captain went on, "that you'll never see again unless the Lords of the Admiralty take my advice and give over breaking-up ships. I saw the last of the oldest ship in the service. She was the Royal William, eighty guns. That ship was built for Charles the Second, sailed for James the Second, and fought off and on for a hundred and forty years. Then they broke her up—in 1812—because, I suppose, they were tired of looking at her. She ought to be afloat now, for sounder timber you never saw."

"Shall we down sail and out sculls?" I asked.

The Captain answered by a gesture, and we kept on our course. The tide was running out rapidly.

"Five minutes more, Laddy," he said. "We've time to go as far as Jack the Painter's Point, and then we'll come down easy and comfortable with the last of the ebb."

We had left the lines of ships and hulks behind us now, and were sailing over the broad surface of the upper harbour, where it is wise even at high tide to keep to the creeks, the lines of which are indicated by posts. In these there lay, so old that they had long since been forgotten, some half-a-dozen black hulls, each tenanted by a single ex-warrant officer with his family. Even the Captain, who knew most ships, could not tell the history of these mysterious vessels. What life, I used to think as a boy, could compare with that of being the only man on board one of these old ships? Fancy being left in charge of such a vessel, yourself all alone, or perhaps with Leonard moored alongside also in charge of one. Robinson Crusoe in his most solitary moments could not have felt happier. Then to wander and explore the great empty ship; to open the cabin and look in the old lockers; to roam about in the dim silences of the lower deck, the twilight of the orlop; the mysterious shades of the cockpit, and to gaze down the impenetrable Erebus of the hold. To this day I can never go on board a great ship without a feeling of mysterious treasures and strange secrets lurking in the depths below me. And what a place for ghosts! think, if you could constrain the ghosts on those old ships to speak, what tales they could tell of privateering, of pirating, of perils on the Spanish Main, of adventure, of pillage, and of glory. There may be a ghost or two in old inns, deserted houses, ruined castles, and country churchyards. But they are nothing, they can be nothing, compared with the ghosts on an old ship lying forgotten up the harbour. Cis shudders, and thinks she can get on very well without ghosts, and that when she wants their society she would rather meet them ashore.

"That ships may be haunted," said the Captain, gravely, "is true beyond a doubt. Every sailor will tell you that. Did you never hear how we were haunted aboard the Fearnought by the ghost of the purser's clerk?"

I have always regretted, for Celia's sake, that we did not hear that story. The Captain stopped because we were close on Jack the Painter's Point, and we had to attend to the boat.

The Point was a low-lying narrow tongue of land, with one solitary tree upon it, running out into the harbour. It had an edging or beach of dingy sand, behind which the turf began, in knots of long coarse grass, between which, at high tide, the ground was soft and marshy; when the water was out it was difficult to tell where the mud ended and the land began. Now, when the tide was at its highest, the little point, lapped by the waves, and backed by its single tree, made a pretty picture. It was a lonely and deserted spot, far away from any house or inhabited place; there was not even a road near it; behind was a barren field of poor grass where geese picked up a living with anxiety and continual effort; and it was haunted by the gloomiest associations, because here the ghost of Jack the Painter walked.

It was not a fact open to doubt, like some stories of haunted places; Jack had been seen by a crowd of witnesses, respectable mariners, whose testimony was free from any tinge of doubt. It walked after nightfall: It walked backwards and forwards, up and down the narrow tongue of land: It walked with Its hands clasped behind Its neck, and Its head bent forward as if in pain. Any body might be in pain after hanging for years in chains. Imitate that action, and conjure up, if you can, the horror of such an attitude when assumed by a ghost.

The story of Painter Jack was an episode in the last century. He belonged to the fraternity of ropemakers, a special Guild in this port, the members of which enjoyed the privilege, whenever the Sovereign paid the place a visit, of marching in procession, clad in white jackets, nankeen trousers, and blue sashes, in front of the Royal carriage. The possession of his share in this privilege ought to have made Jack, as it doubtless made the rest of his brethren, virtuous and happy. It did not: Jack became moody, and nursed thoughts of greatness. Unfortunately, his ambitions led him in the same direction as those of the illustrious Eratostratus. He achieved greatness by setting fire to the rope-walk. They found out who had done it, after the fire was over and a vast amount of damage had been perpetrated, and they tried the unlucky Jack for the offence. He confessed, made an edifying end, and was hanged in chains on that very point which now bears his name. It was in 1776, and twenty years ago there were still people who remembered the horrid gibbet and the black body, tarred, shapeless, hanging in chains, and swinging stridently to and fro in the breeze. Other gentlemen who were gibbeted in the course of the same century had friends to come secretly and take them down. Mr. Bryan, for instance, was one. He for a brief space kept company with Painter Jack, hanging beside him, clad handsomely in black velvet, new shoes, and a laced shirt. He was secretly removed by his relations. Williams the Marine was another; he was popular in the force, and his comrades took him down. So that poor Jack was left quite alone in that dreary place, and partly out of habit, partly because it had no more pleasant places of resort, the ghost continued to roam about the spot where the body had hung so long.

"Down sail, out sculls," said the Captain. "Hard a port, Celia. We'll drop down easy and comfortable with the tide. How fast it runs out!" It was too late to think of tacking home with the wind dead against us, and the tide was strong in our favour. I took the sculls and began mechanically to row, looking at Celia. She was more silent now. Perhaps she was thinking of her persistent lover, for the lines of her mouth were set hard. I do not know what the Captain was thinking of; perhaps of Leonard. However that may be, we were a boat's crew without a coxswain for a few minutes.

"Laddy!" cried the Captain, starting up, "where have we got to?"

I held up and looked round. The tide was running out faster than I had ever known it. We were in the middle of one of the great banks of mud, and there was, I felt at once, but a single inch between the keel and the mud. I grasped the sculls again, and pulled as hard as I knew; but it was of no use. The next moment we touched; then a desperate struggle to pull her through the mud; then we stuck fast, and, like the water flowing out of a cup, the tide ran away from the mud-bank, leaving us high and dry, fast prisoners for six hours.

We looked at each other in dismay.

Then the Captain laughed.

"Not the first boat's crew that has had to pass the night on the mud," he said cheerfully. "Lucky we've got the wraps. Celia, my dear, do you think you shall mind it very much? We will put you to sleep in the stern while Laddy and I keep watch and watch. No supper, though. Poor little maid! Poor Celia!"

She only laughed. She liked the adventure.

There was no help for it, not the slightest. Like it or not, we had to pass the night where we were unless we could wade, waist deep, for a mile through black mud to Jack the Painter's Point.

The tide which had left us on the bank had retreated from the whole upper part of the harbour. But the surface of the mud was still wet, and the splendour of the setting sun made it look like a vast expanse of molten gold. One might have been on the broad ocean, with nothing to break the boundless view but a single solitary islet with a tree on it, for so seemed the Point of Painter Jack. The sky was cloudless, save in the west, where the light mists of evening were gathered together, like the courtiers at the coucher du roi, to take farewell of the sun, clad in their gorgeous dresses of pearl-grey, yellow, crimson, and emerald. Athwart the face of the setting sun, a purple cleft in light and cloud, stood up the solitary poplar on the Point. Bathed and surrounded by the western glory, it seemed to have lost all restraints of distance, and to form, in the far-off splendour, part and parcel of the sapphire-tinted west.

As we looked, the sun sank with a plunge, the evening gun from the Duke of York's bastion over the mouth of the harbour saluted the departure of day. The courtier clouds did not immediately disperse, but slowly began putting off their bright apparel.

In a quarter of an hour the outside clouds were grey; in half an hour all were grey; and presently we began to see the stars clear and bright in the cloudless sky.

"The day is gone," murmured Celia, "morn is breaking somewhere beyond the Atlantic. We ought not to let the thoughts of our own selfish cares spoil the evening, but when the sun sank, my heart sank too."

"Faith and Hope, my pretty," said the Captain. "Come, it is nearly nine o'clock. Let us have evening prayers and turn in."

This was our godly custom before supper. The Captain read a chapter—he was not particular what—regarding all chapters as so many Articles or Rules of the ship, containing well-defined duties, on the proper performance of which rested the hope of future promotion. On this occasion we had no chapter, naturally. But we all stood up while the Captain took off his hat and recited one or two prayers. Then Celia and I sang the Evening Hymn. Our voices sounded strange in the immensity of the heavens above us,—strange and small.

And then we sat down, and the Captain began to wrap Celia round in the waterproofs. She refused to have more than one, and we finally persuaded him to take one for himself—they were good-sized serviceable things, fortunately—and to leave us the other. We all three sat down in the stern of the boat, the Captain on the boards with his elbow on the seat, and Celia and I, side by side, the rug wrapped round us, close together.

Ashore the bells of the old church were playing their hymn tune, followed by the curfew.

"The bells sound sweetly across the water," murmured Celia. "Listen, Laddy, what do they say?"

"I know what the big bell says," I reply. "It has written upon it what it says:—

We good people all
To prayers do call.
We honour to king,
And brides joy do bring.
Good tidings we tell,
And ring the dead's knell."

"'Good tidings we tell,'" she whispers. "What good tidings for us, Laddy?"

"I will tell you presently," I say, "when I have made them out."

The bells cease, and silence falls upon us. It has grown darker, but there is no real darkness during this summer night, only a twilight which makes the shadows black. As we look down the harbour, where the ships lie, it is a scene of enchantment. For the man-o'-war's lights, not regular, but scattered here and there over the dark waters, light up the harbour, and produce an effect stronger than any theatrical scene.

Said the captain, thinking still of the ships,

"A ship's life is like a man's life. She is put in commission after years of work to fit her up—that's our education. She sails away on the business of the country, she has storms and calms, so have the landlubbers ashore; she has good captains and bad captains; she has times of good behaviour and times of bad; sometimes she's wrecked;—well, there's many a good fellow thrown away so; sometimes she goes down in action, nothing finer than that—and sometimes she spends the rest of her life up in harbour. Well for her if she isn't made a convict hulk. Celia, my dear, you are comfortable, and not too cold?"

"Not a bit cold, Captain, thank you, only rather hungry."

There was no help for that, and the Captain, announcing his intention to turn in, enjoined me to wake him at twelve, so that we two could keep watch and watch about, covered his head with the rug, and in five minutes was fast asleep.

Then Celia and I had the night all to ourselves.

We were sitting close together, with the waterproof round our shoulders. Presently, getting a little cramped, Celia slipped down from the seat, and curled herself up close to the sleeping Captain, resting her head upon my knees, while I laid my arm round her neck.

Was it treachery when I had striven to beat down and conquer a passion which was not by any means fraternal for me to feel as if there had never been a perfect night since the world for me began till this one? I wished it would last for ever. When before had I had my queen all to myself in the long, sweet silences of a summer night? And none to hear what we said.

There was no word of love, because that was all one side, but there was talk. We did not sleep that night. The air was soft and warm, though sometimes came a cold touch of wind which made us pull the wraps tighter, and nestle close to each other. But we talked in low whispers, partly because the night is a sacred time, and partly because we were careful not to wake the Captain.

"Tell me now," she whispered, "tell me the good tidings of the bells."

I thought of Leonard's last secret which he told me when he left me on the platform of the station. "Tell Cis?" he said, "That would spoil all." Yet I did tell Cis. I told her that night.

"The bells said, Cis, that there only wanted a fortnight to Leonard's return. He will come back brave and strong."

"And he will make all right," she cried, eagerly, clasping my hand in hers. "Go on, Laddy dear."

"He will make all right. The German shall be sent about his business, and—and——"

"And we all shall go on just as we used to, Laddy."

"N—not quite, Cis. When Leonard went away, he told me a great secret. I was not to tell anybody. And I should not tell you now, only that I think it will do good to both of us, that you should know it. Tell me, my sister, you have not forgotten Leonard?"

"Forgotten Leonard? Laddy, how could I?"

"You think of him still. You remember how brave and true he was; how he loved—us both——"

"I remember all, Laddy."

"When he left me, Cis—he told me—Hush! let me whisper—low—low—in your ear—that his greatest hope was to come back in five years' time, a gentleman—to find you free—and to ask you—to ask you, Cis—to marry him."

She did not answer, but as she lay in the boat, her hands holding mine, her face bent down, I felt a tear fall on my finger; I do not think it was a tear of sorrow.

"You are not offended, Cis dear," I whispered, "I have not done wrong in telling you?"

"Let it be a secret between you and me, Laddy," she said, presently. "Do not let us ever speak of it again."

"Cis, you told me once that you would hide nothing from me. Tell me—if Leonard asked you——"

She threw her arms round my neck, and hid her face upon my shoulder. "Laddy," she whispered, "there is no day, in all these five years, that I have not prayed, night and morning, for Leonard."

Then we were silent.

The hours sped too swiftly, marked by the bells of the ships in commission. About two in the morning, the tide began to turn, and the day began to break. First, the dull black surface of flats became wet and glittered in the light. Then the water slowly crept up and covered all; it took time to reach us, because we were on a bank. And all the time we watched, the grey in the East grew tinged with all colours; and the wild fowl rose out of their sleeping-places by the shore, and flew screaming heavenwards in long lines or arrow-headed angles. And presently the sun arose, splendid.

"Laddy," whispered Celia, for the Captain still slept, "this is more glorious than the evening."

At six bells, which is three in the morning, we floated. I noiselessly stepped over the sleeping form of the Captain and took the sculls, dipping them in the water as softly as I could. He did not awake until half an hour later, when our bows struck the beach, and at the noise the Captain started up. It was nearly four o'clock; no boats were on the harbour; the stillness contrasted strangely with the light of the summer morning.

"Laddy," grumbled the Captain, "you've kept double watch. You call that sailor-like?—Celia, my dear, you have not caught cold?"

When we reached home, the Captain insisted on our going to bed.

"We have passed a night I shall never forget, Laddy," said Celia at her door.

"A sacred night, Cis."

She stooped down, my tall and gracious lady, and kissed my forehead.

"What should I do without you, Laddy? To have some one in the world to whom you can tell everything and not be ashamed, not be afraid. To-night has brought us very close together."

I think it had. After it we were more as we had been when children. My Celia, the maiden of sweet reserve, came back to me a child again, and told me all.

No need now to speak again of Leonard. It remained only to look forward and hope and long for the weary days to pass away.

(To be continued)

"EREMA; OR, MY FATHER'S SIN," by R. D. Blackmore (3 vols.: Smith and Elder).—We may say, with a very distinct meaning, that Mr. Blackmore would be little or nothing as a novelist if it were not for his genius. "Erema," take it altogether, is a very fine work, but its author continues to lay himself open to hostile criticism at least as much as ever. He has little turn for construction, little skill in the mere technicalities of story-telling. His plot here, or rather the bygone situation and incidents on which the plot, such as there is, is built, may frankly be pronounced far-fetched and improbable; indeed, it seems to us only just conceivable that men could be found to act like the heroine's father, who goes through his dreary life proudly silent as to the truth or falsehood of the terrible imputation that hangs over him, and the few friends who know or guess his secret. But then, we take it, Mr. Blackmore cares very little about incident, except as it may be made to fall into effective "grouping" in a picture, or be used as a vehicle for the development and display of character or emotion—its mere likelihood is a point as to which he scarcely troubles himself to think. Not a few readers may say that the action assigned to the heroine is as extravagant as anything else in the book, but in this matter we hold that Mr. Blackmore's artistic instincts have kept him wholly straight. Erema Castlewood, as we are carefully made to note, is an exceptional character, and most exceptionally circumstanced. As she herself suggests, the very grandeur and beauty of the Californian landscape on which her eyes so long dwell at a critical period in life, may have exalted her nature, and fitted it for noble ends. Hardly one girl in a thousand, we know, would have taken upon herself such a mission as hers, but, given that the mission was to be undertaken, we see no breaches of probability in the manner in which Erema bears herself under it. This mission was, as she says, "to right the wrong of my own house, and bring home justice to my own heart," by clearing her father's memory from the stain that rests upon it, but how she fares with it would take too long to tell here, even if it were well to spoil the pleasure the reader may look for in learning for himself. But, of course, it is not in the incidents of the tale, but in Mr. Blackmore's method of handling them—in the touches of thought, fancy, humour, and pathos with which he embellishes them—that the attraction and charm of the book really lie. The scenes of Californian life are so vivid that we must suppose that the author has the right to speak of this Paradise of the New World from personal experience; and his English rustics, Stixon, the butler, Jacob Rigg, the sexton, and Betsy Bowen, Erema's old nurse, with their garrulity and slow moving intellects, are as lifelike and real as they have always been. In the matter of descriptions Mr. Blackmore has never given us any more beautiful than that of the sunset over California and the far-away Pacific, as seen from a gap in the Sierra Nevada, of the on-coming of spring in California—a picture drawn in the merest outline, but somehow alive with stir and colour—and the exquisite fragment of prose-poetry which brings before us the peaceful Hampshire village of Shoxford. There are, indeed, faults in the book which show, as we said, that the author is still unversed in the minutiæ of story-telling, but these we have not the space to dwell upon, and, after all, conscious as we are of them, we admit that they have but little affected our own enjoyment—Mr. Blackmore's style, with its polished and quaint archaism, is of itself an intellectual treat—and it is possible that they may have as little effect on the reader.

"Maud Leslie," by Lady Charles Thynne, author of "Off the Line," &c. (2 vols.: Hurst and Blackett).—This is another of the stories, of which we are having so many, of how the happiness of a wedded pair comes to be wrecked through misunderstandings and incongruities of temper and disposition. It is told, at all events from the wedding-day onward, with skill and ability, and shows often no small insight into character. At the same time we cannot help thinking that Lady Charles Thynne has made her hero, the "reserved, self-contained" Stuart Leslie, Cumberland squire and man-of-letters, almost unnaturally disagreeable. It is not easy to believe that a man could treat a charming young wife, whom he all the time loves devotedly, with such persistent injustice and coldness, and such an utter want of confidence and sympathy. Nor is it in keeping with our ordinary experience of human nature that a clever man of more than thirty, and in every way his own master, should stand in such slavish awe of incurring his mother's displeasure. But, setting aside these objections, the tale runs smoothly enough—smoothly, that is, so far as vraisemblance is concerned, though anything but smoothly as regards the fortunes of the leading characters, which continue vexed and troubled to the end. There are indications which would lead us to believe that the author at one time meant this end to be other than it is; as it stands, it certainly seems hurried and slurred over. Nor is this the only point in which we think we note a change of purpose. Still, the novel is distinctly a good one, and worth reading.

"May Fairfax," by Helen Mar, author of "Loyal and True" (3 vols.: Tinsley).—There is not much in the way of distinctiveness or originality about this story, and there are signs of over-haste in composition; but parts of it are good enough to make us feel that, taken as a whole, it may be considered up to the average in point of merit, though we are afraid that we cannot give it warmer praise. There is an unpleasantness about certain of the incidents not in any degree atoned for by force of treatment. The penitence of the unhappy Brenna—though we should have much preferred that she had not had such grave cause for it—is, however, portrayed well, and not without some power; and altogether the third volume strikes us as above the mark of its predecessors. Miss Mar is a fluent writer—perhaps too fluent for her own higher interests—and we see no reason why, if she chooses to take pains, she should not some day produce a work of more substance and flavour than this, which yet, as novels go, need not be judged harshly.

We have also received a new edition, in one volume, of "Phœbe Junior," Mrs. Oliphant's charming "Last Chronicle of Carlingford" (Hurst and Blackett), concerning which we said what it seemed needful to say on its appearance in the spring of last year.

◆

BOOKS RECEIVED

Colonial Experiences in New Zealand, by an Old Colonist; Sheen's Foreman (3 vols.): Lady Wood; A Laggard in Love (3 vols.): Annie Thomas. Chapman and Hall.

The Three Admirals: W. H. G. Kingston; Wilton of Cuthbert's: Rev. H. C. Adams, M.A.; Talent in Tatters: Hope Wraythe; Masterpieces of Antique Art: Stephen Thompson. Griffith and Farren.

Stephen Heller, His Life and Works: Rev. Robert Brown-Borthwick, Translated from the French of M. Barbedette. Ashdown and Parry.

Memoirs of Madame de Staël; Selina Bathurst; Pastorals of France: F. Wedmore; Five Years' Penal Servitude, by One Who Has Endured It. R. Bentley and Son.

Won, Not Wooed: a Drama in Five Acts. Wyman and Son.

The Squire's Courtship (3 vols.): Mrs. Mackenzie Daniel; A Young Squire of the Seventeenth Century (2 vols.): Jeaffreson. Hurst and Blackett.

Orpheus and Eurydice, &c.: Hugh Donald Barclay. Hardwicke and Bogue.

Biographical Notes on the Count de Godde-Liancourt: Edited by Augusta Liancourt. Whitaker and Co.

The Twentieth Century, No. 3. Simpson and Co., Red Lion Court.

The Children's Forget-Me-Not; Golden Childhood; Children's Picture Annual: Mercie Sunshine; The Years That Are Told: Rose Porter. Ward, Lock, and Co.

Sheep: Joseph Darby. Dean and Son.

Columbia and Canada: W. Fraser Rae. Daldy, Isbister, and Co.

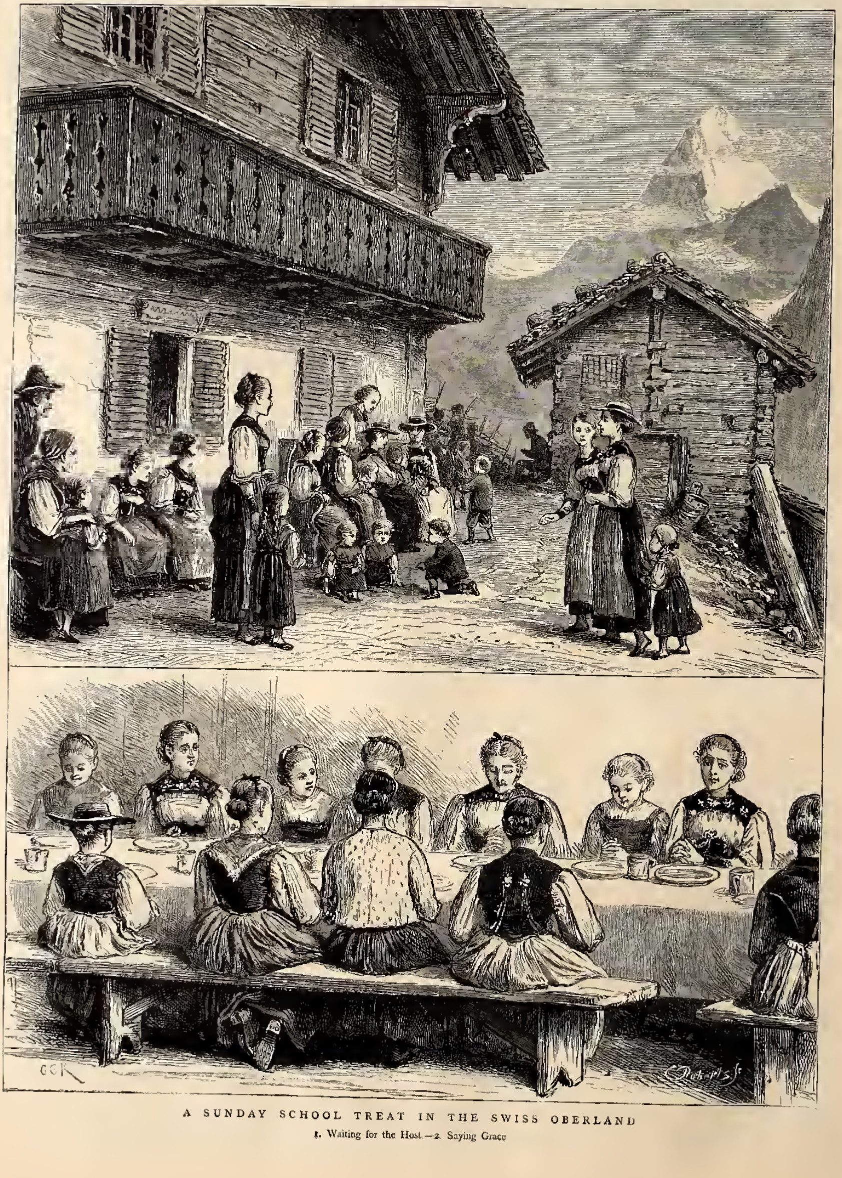
Quarterly Reports of the Mining Surveyors and Registrars of Victoria. John Ferres, Melbourne.

Lashed to the Mizen: Frank Johnson. Arthur H. Moxon.

The Indian Famine: H. M. Hyndman. E. Stanford.

Story of a Mine: Bret Harte. G. Routledge and Sons.

The Cheveley Novels—A Modern Minister, Part I.: Blackwood and Son.



A SUNDAY SCHOOL TREAT IN THE SWISS OBERLAND

1. Waiting for the Host.—2. Saying Grace

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

XII.

THE MAIRIE OF THE TENTH ARRONDISSEMENT

(continued)

THE gardens of the neighbourhood occupied by the troops were full of broken bottles. They had plied the soldiers with drink. They obeyed the "epaulettes" unconditionally, and according to the expression of eye-witnesses, appeared "dazed-drunk." The Representatives appealed to them, and said to them, "It is a crime!" They answered, "We are not aware of it."

One soldier was heard to say to another: "What have you done with your ten francs of this morning?"

The sergeants bustled the officers. With the exception of the commander, who probably earned his cross of honour, the officers were respectful, the sergeants brutal.

A lieutenant showing signs of flinching, a sergeant cried out to him, "You are not the only one who commands here! Come, therefore, march!"

M. de Vatimesnil asked a soldier, "Will you dare to arrest us—us, the Representatives of the People?"

"Assuredly!" said the soldier.

Several soldiers hearing some Representatives say that they had eaten nothing since the morning, offered them their ration bread. Some Representatives accepted. M. de Tocqueville, who was unwell, and who was noticed to be pale and leaning on the sill of a window, received from a soldier a piece of this bread, which he shared with M. Chambolle.

Two Commissaries of Police appeared in "full dress," in black coats girded with their sash-girdles and their black corded hats. One was an old man, the other a young man. The first was named Lemoine-Tacherat, and not Bacherel, as has been wrongly printed; the second was named Barlet. These names should be noted. The unprecedented assurance of this Barlet was remarked. Nothing was wanting in him,—cynical speech, provoking gesture, sardonic intonation. It was with an inexpressible air of insolence that Barlet, when summoning the meeting to dissolve itself, added, "Rightly or Wrongly." They murmured on the benches of the Assembly, "Who is this scoundrel?" The other, compared to him, seemed moderate and inoffensive. Émile Péan exclaimed,

"The old man is simply working in his profession, but the young man is working out his promotion."

Before this Tacherat and this Barlet entered, before the butts of the muskets had been heard ringing on the stones of the staircase, this Assembly had talked of resistance. Of what kind of resistance? We have just stated. The majority would only listen to a regular organised resistance, a military resistance in uniform and in epaulettes. Such a resistance was easy to decree, but it was difficult to organise. The Generals on whom the Assembly were accustomed to rely having been arrested, there only remained two possible Generals, Oudinot and Lauriston. General Marquis de Lauriston, ex-peer of France, and at the same time Colonel of the Tenth Legion and Representative of the People, drew a distinction between his duty as Representative and his duty as Colonel. Summoned by some of his friends of the Right to beat to arms and call together the Tenth Legion, he answered, "As Representative of the People I ought to indict the Executive Power, but as Colonel I ought to obey it. It appears that he obstinately shut himself up in this singular reasoning, and that it was impossible to draw him out of it.

"How stupid he is!" said Piscatory.

"How sharp he is!" said Falloux.

The first officer of the National Guard who appeared in uniform seemed to be recognised by two members of the Right, who said:—"It is M. de Périgord!" They made a mistake, it was M. Guilbot, major of the third battalion of the Tenth Legion. He declared that he was ready to march on the first order from his colonel, General Lauriston. General Lauriston went down into the courtyard, and came up a moment afterwards, saying, "They do not recognise my authority. I have just resigned." Moreover, the name of Lauriston was not familiar to the soldiers. Oudinot was better known in the army. But how?

At the moment when the name of Oudinot was pronounced, a shudder ran through this meeting, almost exclusively composed of members of the Right. In fact, at this critical time, at this fatal name of Oudinot, reflections crowded upon each other in every mind.

What was the Coup d'État?

It was the "Roman expedition at home." Which was undertaken against whom? Against those who had undertaken the "Roman expedition abroad." The National Assembly of France, dissolved by violence, could only find one single General to defend it in its dying hour. And whom? Precisely he, who in the name of the National Assembly of France had dissolved by violence the National Assembly of Rome. What power could Oudinot, the strangler of a Republic, possess to save a Republic? Was it not evident that his own soldiers would answer him: "What do you want with us? That which we have done at Rome we now do at Paris." What a story is this story of treason! The French Legislature had written the first chapter with the blood of the Roman Constituent Assembly; Providence wrote the second chapter with the blood of the French Legislature, Louis Bonaparte holding the pen.

In 1849, Louis Bonaparte had assassinated the sovereignty of the People in the person of its Roman Representatives; in 1851 he assassinated it in the person of its French Representatives. It was logical, and although it was infamous, it was just. The Legislative Assembly bore at the same time the weight of two crimes; it was the accomplice of the first, the victim of the second. All these men of the majority felt this, and were humbled. Or rather it was the same crime, the crime of the Second of July, 1849, ever erect, ever alive, which had only changed its name, which now called itself the Second of December, and which, the offspring of this Assembly, stabbed it to the heart. Nearly all crimes are parricidal. On a certain day they recoil upon those who have committed them, and slay them.

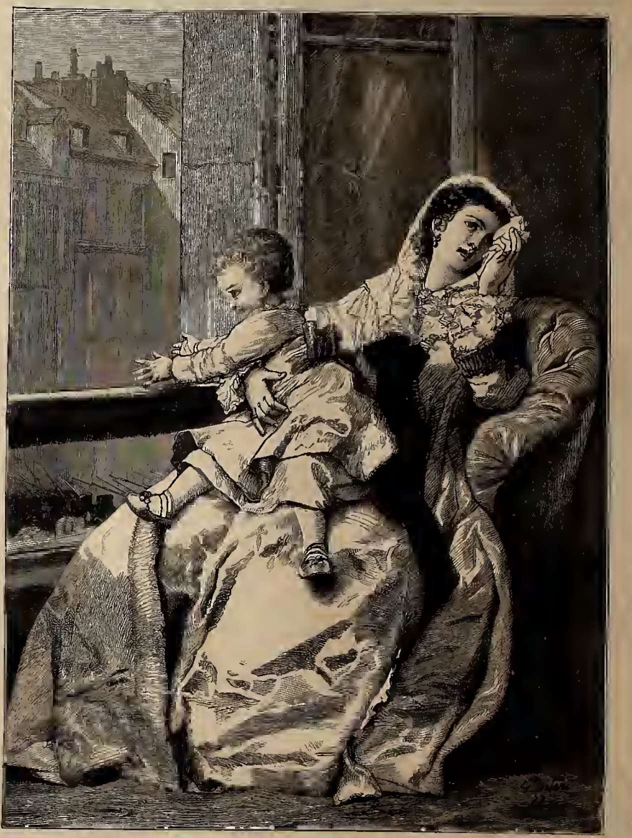
At this moment, so full of anxiety, M. de Falloux must have glanced round for M. de Montalembert. M. de Montalembert was at the Elysée.

When Tamisier rose and pronounced this terrifying word, "The Roman Question!"—distracted M. de Dampierre shouted to him, "Silence! You kill us!"

It was not Tamisier who was killing them—it was Oudinot.

M. de Dampierre did not perceive that he cried "Silence!" to History.

And then, without even reckoning the fatal remembrance which at such a moment would have crushed a man endowed in the highest degree with great military qualities, General Oudinot, in other respects an excellent officer, and a worthy son of his brave father, possessed none of those striking qualities which in the critical hour of revolution stir the soldier and carries with it the people. At that instant, to win back an army of a hundred thousand men, to withdraw the balls from the cannons' mouths, to find beneath the wine poured out to the Prætorians the true soul of the French soldier half drowned and nearly dead, to tear the flag from the Coup d'État and restore it to the Law, to surround the Assembly with thunders and lightnings, it would



THE ARRESTED REPRESENTATIVES MARCHING THROUGH THE STREETS

In one of the streets through which they went a window was opened. Suddenly a woman appeared with a child; the child, recognising its father amongst the prisoners, held out its arms and called to him, the mother wept in the background have needed one of those men who exist no longer; it would have needed the firm hand, the calm oratory, the cold and searching glance of Desaix, that French Phocion; it would have needed the huge shoulders, the commanding stature, the thundering voice, the abusive, insolent, cynical, gay, and sublime eloquence of Kléber, that military Mirabeau. Desaix, the countenance of a just man, or Kléber, the face of a lion! General Oudinot, little, awkward, embarrassed, with an indecisive and dull gaze, red cheeks, low forehead, with grizzled and lank hair, polite tone of voice, a humble smile, without oratory, without gesture, without power, brave before the enemy, timid before the first comer, having assuredly the bearing of a soldier, but having also the bearing of a priest; he caused the mind to hesitate between the sword and the taper; he had in his eyes a sort of "Amen!"

He had the best intentions in the world, but what could he do? Alone, without prestige, without true glory, without personal authority, and dragging Rome after him! He felt all this himself, and he was as it were paralysed by it. As soon as they had appointed him he got upon a chair and thanked the Assembly, doubtless with a firm heart, but with hesitating speech. When the little fair-haired officer dared to look him in the face and insult him, he, holding the sword of the people, he, General of the Sovereign Assembly, he only knew how to stammer out such wretched phrases as these, "I have just declared to you that we are unable, 'unless compelled and constrained,' to obey the order which prohibits us from remaining assembled together." He spoke of obeying, he who ought to command. They had girded him with his scarf, and it seemed to make him uncomfortable. He inclined his head alternately first to one shoulder and then to the other; he held his hat and cane in his hand, he had a benevolent aspect. A Legitimist member muttered in a low voice to his neighbour, "One might imagine he was a bailiff speechifying at a wedding." And his neighbour, a Legitimist also, replied, "He reminds me of the Duc d'Angoulême."

What a contrast to Tamisier! Tamisier, frank, earnest, confident, although a mere Captain of Artillery, had the bearing of a General. Had Tamisier, with his grave and gentle countenance, high intelligence, and dauntless heart, a species of soldier-philosopher, been better known, he could have rendered decisive services. No one can tell what would have happened if Providence had given the soul of Tamisier to Oudinot, or the epaulettes of Oudinot to Tamisier.

In this bloody enterprise of December we failed to find a General's uniform becomingly worn. A book might be written on the part which gold lace plays in the destiny of nations.

Tamisier, appointed Chief of the Staff some instants before the invasion of the Hall, placed himself at the disposal of the Assembly. He was standing on a table. He spoke with a resonant and hearty voice. The most downcast became reassured by this modest, honest, devoted attitude. Suddenly he drew himself up, and looking all that Royalist majority in the face, exclaimed, "Yes, I accept the charge you offer me. I accept the charge of defending the Republic! Nothing but the Republic! Do you perfectly understand?"

A unanimous shout answered him, "Vive la République!"

"Ah!" said Beslay, "the voice comes back to you as on the Fourth of May." "Long live the Republic! Nothing but the Republic!" repeated the men of the Right, Oudinot louder than the others. All arms were stretched towards Tamisier, every hand pressed his. Oh Danger! irresistible converter! In his last hour the Atheist invokes God, and the Royalist the Republic. They cling to that which they have repudiated.

The official historians of the Coup d'État have stated that at the beginning of the sitting two Representatives had been sent by the Assembly to the Ministry of the Interior to "negotiate." What is certain is that these two Representatives had no authority. They presented themselves, not on behalf of the Assembly, but in their own name. They offered themselves as intermediaries to procure a peaceable termination of the catastrophe which had begun. With an honesty which bordered on simplicity they summoned Morny to yield himself a prisoner, and to return within the law, declaring that in case of refusal the Assembly would do its duty, and call the people to the defence of the Constitution and of the Republic. Morny answered them with a smile, accompanied by these plain words, "If you appeal to arms, and if I find any Representatives on the barricades, I will have them all shot to the last man."

The meeting in the Tenth Arrondissement yielded to force. President Vitet insisted that they should forcibly arrest him. A police agent who seized him turned pale and trembled. In certain circumstances, to lay violent hands upon a man is to lay them upon Right, and those who dare to do so are made to tremble by outraged Law.

The exodus from the Mairie was long and beset with obstructions. Half-an-hour elapsed while the soldiers were forming a line, and while the Commissaries of Police, all the time appearing solely occupied with the care of driving back the crowd in the street, sent for orders to the Ministry of the Interior. During that time some of the Representatives, seated round a table in the great Hall, wrote to their families, to their wives, to their friends. They snatched up the last leaves of paper; the pens failed; M. de Luynes wrote to his wife a letter in pencil. There were no wafers; they were forced to send the letters unsealed; some soldiers offered to post them. M. Chambolle's son, who had accompanied his father thus far, undertook to take the letters addressed to Mesdames de Luynes, de Lasteyrie, and Duvergier de Hauranne.

General Forey—the same who had refused a battalion to the President of the Constituent Assembly, Marrast, who had promoted him from a colonel to a general—General Forey, in the centre of the courtyard of the Mairie, his face inflamed, half drunk, coming out, they said, from breakfast at the Elysée, superintended the outrage. A member, whose name we regret we do not know, dipped his boot into the gutter and wiped it along the gold stripe of the regimental trousers of General Forey. Representative Lherbette came up to General Forey, and said to him, "General, you are a coward." Then turning to his colleagues, he exclaimed, "Do you hear? I tell this general that he is a coward." General Forey did not stir. He kept the mud on his uniform and the epithet on his cheek.

The meeting did not call the people to arms. We have just explained that it was not strong enough to do so; nevertheless, at the last moment, a member of the Left, Latrade, made a fresh effort. He took M. Berryer aside, and said to him, "Our official measures of resistance have come to an end; let us not allow ourselves now to be arrested. Let us disperse throughout the streets crying, 'To arms!'" M. Berryer consulted a few seconds on the matter with the Vice-President, M. Benoist d'Azy, who refused.

The Deputy Mayor, hat in hand, reconducted the members of the Assembly as far as the gate of the Mairie. As soon as they appeared in the courtyard ready to go out between two lines of soldiers, the post of National Guards presented arms, and shouted, "Long live the Assembly! Long live the Representatives of the People!" The National Guards were at once disarmed, almost forcibly, by the Chasseurs de Vincennes.

There was a wine-shop opposite the Mairie. As soon as the great folding gates of the Mairie opened, and the Assembly appeared in the street, led by General Forey on horseback, and having at its head the Vice-President Vitet, grasped by the necktie by a police agent, a few men in white blouses, gathered at the windows of this wine-shop, clapped their hands and shouted, "Well done! down with the 'Twenty-five francs!'" *

They set forth.

The Chasseurs de Vincennes, who marched in a double line on each side of the prisoners, cast at them looks of hatred. General Oudinot said in a whisper, "These little infantry soldiers are terrible fellows. At the siege of Rome they flung themselves at the assault like madmen. These lads are very devils." The officers avoided the gaze of the Representatives. On leaving the Mairie, M. de Coislin passed by an officer and exclaimed, "What a disgrace for the uniform!" The officer retaliated with angry words and incensed M. de Coislin. Shortly afterwards, during the march, he came up to M. de Coislin and said to him, "Sir, I have reflected; it is I who am wrong."

They proceeded on the way slowly. At a few steps from the Mairie the procession met M. Chegaray. The Representatives called out to him, "Come!" He answered, while making an expressive gesture with his hands and his shoulders, "Oh! I dare say! As they have not arrested me" . . . and he feigned as though he would pass on. He was ashamed, however, and went with them. His name is found in the list of the roll-call at the barracks.

A little further on M. de Lespérut passed them. They cried out to him, "Lespérut! Lespérut!" "I am with you," answered he. The soldiers pushed him back. He seized the butt ends of the muskets, and forced his way into the column.

In one of the streets through which they went a window was opened. Suddenly a woman appeared with a child; the child, recognising its father amongst the prisoners, held out its arms and called to him, the mother wept in the background.

It was at first intended to take the Assembly in a body straight to Mazas, but this was counter-ordered by the Ministry of the Interior. It was feared that this long walk, in broad daylight, through populous and easily aroused streets might prove dangerous; the d'Orsay barracks were close at hand. They selected these as a temporary prison.

One of the commanders insolently pointed out with his sword the arrested Representatives to the passers-by, and said in a loud voice:—"These are the Whites, we have orders to spare them. Now it is the turn of the Red Representatives, let them look out for themselves!"

Wherever the procession passed, the populace shouted from the pavements, at the doors, at the windows, "Long live the National Assembly!" When they perceived a few Representatives of the Left sprinkled in the column they cried "Vive la République!" "Vive la Constitution!" and "Vive la Loi!" The shops were not shut, and passers-by went to and fro. Some people said, "Wait until the evening; this is not the end of it."

A staff-officer on horseback, in full uniform, met the procession, recognised M. de Vatimesnil, and came up to greet him. In the Rue de Beaune, as they passed the house of the Démocratie Pacifique a group shouted, "Down with the Traitor of the Elysée!"

On the Quay d'Orsay, the shouting was redoubled. There was a great crowd there. On either side of the quay a file of soldiers of the Line, elbow to elbow, kept back the spectators. In the middle of the space left vacant, the members of the Assembly slowly advanced between a double file of soldiers, the one stationary, which threatened the people, the other on the march, which threatened the Representatives.

Serious reflections arise in the presence of all the details of the great crime which this book is designed to relate. Every honest man who sets himself face to face with the Coup d'État of Louis Bonaparte hears nothing but a tumult of indignant thoughts in his conscience. Whoever reads our work to the end will assuredly not credit us with the intention of extenuating this monstrous deed. Nevertheless, as the deep logic of actions ought always to be italicised by the historian, it is necessary here to call to mind and to repeat, even to satiety, that apart from the members of the Left, of whom a very small number were present, and whom we have mentioned by name, the three hundred Representatives who thus defiled before the eyes of the crowd, constituted the old Royalist and reactionary majority of the Assembly. If it were possible to forget, that—whatever were their errors, whatever were their faults, and, we venture to add, whatever were their illusions—these persons thus treated were the Representatives of the leading civilised nation, were sovereign Legislators, senators of the people, inviolable Deputies, and sacred by the great law of Democracy, and that in the same manner as each man bears in himself something of the mind of God, so each of these nominees of universal suffrage bore something of the soul of France; if it were possible to forget this for a moment, it assuredly would be a spectacle, perhaps more laughable than sad, and certainly more philosophical than lamentable to see, on this December morning, after so many laws of repression, after so many exceptional measures, after so many votes of censure and of the state of siege, after so many refusals of amnesty, after so many affronts to equity, to justice, to the human conscience, to the public good faith, to right, after so many favours to the police, after so many smiles bestowed on absolutism, the entire Party of Order arrested in a body and taken to prison by the sergents de ville!

One day, or rather, one night, the moment having come to save society, the Coup d'État abruptly seizes the Demagogues, and finds that it holds by the collar, Whom? The Royalists.

They arrived at the barracks, formerly the barracks of the Royal Guard, and on the pediment of which is a carved escutcheon whereon are still visible the traces of the three fleurs de lys effaced in 1830. They halted. The door was opened. "Why!" said M. de Broglie, "Here we are."

At that moment a great placard posted on the barrack wall by the side of the door bore in big letters:—

"REVISION OF THE CONSTITUTION."

It was the advertisement of a pamphlet, published two or three days previous to the Coup d'État, without any author's name, demanding the Empire, and was attributed to the President of the Republic.

The Representatives entered and the doors were closed upon them. The shouts ceased; the crowd, which occasionally has its meditative moments, remained for some time on the quay, dumb, motionless, gazing alternately at the closed gate of the Barracks, and at the silent front of the Palace of the Assembly, dimly visible in the misty December twilight, two hundred paces distant.

The two Commissaries of Police went to report their "success" to M. de Morny. M. de Morny said, "Now the struggle has begun. Excellent! These are the last Representatives who will be made prisoners."

XIII.

LOUIS BONAPARTE'S SIDE-FACE

THE minds of all these men, we repeat, were very differently affected.

The extreme Legitimist party, which represents the White of the flag, was not, it must be said, highly exasperated at the Coup d'État. Upon many faces might be read the saying of M. de Falloux:—"I am so satisfied that I have considerable difficulty in affecting to be only resigned." The ingenuous spirits cast down their eyes—that is becoming to purity; more daring spirits raised their heads. They felt an impartial indignation which permitted a little admiration. How cleverly these generals have been ensnared! The Country assassinated,—it is a horrible crime; but they were enraptured at the jugglery blended with the parricide. One of the leaders said, with a sigh of envy and regret:—"We do not possess a man of such talent." Another muttered, "It is Order." And he added, "Alas!" Another exclaimed, "It is a frightful crime, but well carried out." Some wavered, attracted on one side by the lawful power which rested in the Assembly, and on the other by the abomination which was in Bonaparte; honest souls poised between duty and infamy. There was a M. Thomines Desmazures who went as far as the door of the Great Hall of the Mairie, halted, looked inside, looked outside, and did not enter. It would be unjust not to record that others amongst the pure Royalists, and above all M. de Vatimesnil, had the sincere intonation and the upright wrath of justice.

Be it as it may, the Legitimist party, taken as a whole, entertained no horror of the Coup d'État. It feared nothing. In truth, should the Royalists fear Louis Bonaparte? Why?

Indifference does not inspire fear. Louis Bonaparte was indifferent. He only recognised one thing, his object. To break through the road in order to reach it, that was quite plain; the rest might be left alone. There lay the whole of his policy, to crush the Republicans, to disdain the Royalists.

Louis Bonaparte had no passion. He who writes these lines, talking one day about Louis Bonaparte with the ex-king of Westphalia, remarked, "In him the Dutchman tones down the Corsican."—"If there be any Corsican," answered Jérôme."

Louis Bonaparte has never been other than a man who has lay wait for fortune, a spy trying to dupe God. He had that livid dreaminess of the gambler who cheats. Cheating admits audacity, but excludes anger. In his prison at Ham he only read one book, "The Prince." He belonged to no family, as he could hesitate between Bonaparte and Verhuell; he had no country, as he could hesitate between France and Holland.

This Napoléon had taken St. Helena in good part. He admired England. Resentment! To what purpose? For him on earth there only existed his interests. He pardoned, because he speculated; he forgot everything, because he calculated upon everything. What did his uncle matter to him? He did not serve him; he made use of him. He rested his shabby enterprise upon Austerlitz. He stuffed the eagle.

Malice is an unproductive outlay. Louis Bonaparte only possessed as much memory as is useful. Hudson Lowe did not prevent him from smiling upon Englishmen; the Marquis of Montchenu did not prevent him from smiling upon the Royalists.

He was a man of earnest politics, of good company, wrapt in his own scheming, not impulsive, doing nothing beyond that which he intended, without abruptness, without hard words, discreet, accurate, learned, talking smoothly of a necessary massacre, a slaughterer, because it served his purpose.

All this, we repeat, without passion, and without anger.

Louis Bonaparte was one of those men who had been influenced by the profound iciness of Machiavelli.

It was through being a man of that nature that he succeeded in submerging the name of Napoleon by super-adding December upon Brumaire.

XIV.

THE D'ORSAY BARRACKS

IT was half-past three.

The arrested Representatives entered into the courtyard of the barracks, a huge parallelogram closed in and commanded by high walls. These walls are pierced by three tiers of windows, and possess that dismal appearance which distinguishes barracks, schools and prisons.

This courtyard is entered by an arched portal which extends through all the breadth of the front of the main building. This archway, under which the guard-house had been made, is closed on the side of the quay by large solid folding doors, and on one side of the courtyard by an iron grated gateway. They closed the door and the grated gateway upon the Representatives. They "set them at liberty" in the bolted and guarded courtyard.

"Let them stroll about," said an officer.

The air was cold, the sky was grey. Some soldiers, in their shirtsleeves and wearing police caps, busy with fatigue duty, went hither and thither amongst the prisoners.

First M. Grimault and then M. Antony Thouret instituted a roll call. The Representatives made a ring around them. Lherbette said laughingly:—"This just suits the barracks. We look like sergeant-majors who have come to report." They called over the seven hundred and fifty names of the Representatives. To each name they answered; "Absent" or "Present," and the secretary jotted down with a pencil those who were present. When the name of Morny was reached, some one cried out, "At Clichy!" At the name of Persigny, the same voice exclaimed, "At Poissy!" The inventor of these two jokes, which by the way are very poor, has since allied himself to the Second of December, to Morny and Persigny; he has covered his cowardice with the embroidery of a senator.

The roll call verified the presence of two hundred and twenty Representatives, after giving which, the short-hand report continues thus:—

"The roll call having been completed, General Oudinot asked the Representatives who were scattered about in the courtyard to come round him, and made the following announcement to them—

"'The Captain-Adjutant-Major, who has remained here to command the barracks, has just received an order to have rooms prepared for us, where we are to withdraw, as we are considered to be in custody. (Hear! hear!) Do you wish me to bring the Adjutant-Major here! (No, no; it is useless.) I will tell him that he had better execute his orders. (Yes, yes, that is right).'"

The Representatives remained "penned" and "strolling" about in this yard for two long hours. They walked about arm in arm. They walked quickly so as to warm themselves. The men of the Right said to the men of the Left: "Ah! if you had only voted the proposals of the Questors!" They also exclaimed: "Well! how about the invisible sentry!"[*] And they laughed. Then Marc Dufraisse answered, "Deputies of the People! Deliberate in peace!" It was then the turn of the Left to laugh. Nevertheless, there was no bitterness. The cordiality of a common misfortune reigned amongst them.

---

* An allusion to the twenty-five francs a day officially payable to the members of the Assembly.

They questioned his ex-ministers about Louis Bonaparte. They asked Admiral Cécille: "Now, really, what does this mean?" The Admiral answered by this definition: "It is a small matter." M. Vézin added: "He wishes History to call him 'Sire.'" "Poor Sire, then," said M. de Camus de la Guihourgère. M. Odilon Barrot exclaimed: "What a fatality, that we should have been condemned to employ this man!"

This said, these heights attained, political philosophy was exhausted, and they ceased talking.

On the right, by the side of the door, there was a canteen elevated a few steps above the courtyard. "Let us promote this canteen to the dignity of a refreshment room," said the ex-ambassador to China, M. de Lagrénée. They entered; some went up to the stove, others asked for a basin of soup. MM. Favreau, Piscatory, Larabit, and Vatimesnil took refuge in a corner. In the opposite corner drunken soldiers chatted with the maids of the barracks. M. de Kératry, bent with his eighty years, was seated near the stove on an old worm-eaten chair; the chair tottered; the old man shivered.

Towards four o'clock a regiment of Chasseurs de Vincennes arrived in the courtyard with their platters, and began to eat, singing, and with loud bursts of merriment. M. de Broglie looked at them and said to M. Piscatory: "It is a strange spectacle to see the porringers of the Janissaries vanished from Constantinople re-appearing at Paris!"

Almost at the same moment a staff officer informed the Representatives on behalf of General Forey that the "apartments assigned to them" were ready, and requested them to follow him. They were taken into the eastern building, which is the wing of the barracks farthest from the Palace of the Council of State; they were conducted to the third floor. They expected chambers and beds. They found long rooms, vast garrets with filthy walls and low ceilings, furnished with wooden tables and benches. These were the "apartments." These garrets, which adjoin each other, all open on the same corridor, a narrow passage, which runs the length of the main building. In one of these rooms they saw, thrown into a corner, side drums, a big drum, and various instruments of military music. The Representatives scattered themselves about in these rooms. M. de Tocqueville, who was ill, threw his overcoat on the floor in the recess of a window, and lay down. He remained thus stretched upon the ground for several hours.

These rooms were warmed very badly by cast-iron stoves, shaped like hives. A Representative wishing to poke the fire, upset one, and nearly set fire to the wooden flooring.

The last of these rooms looked out on the quay. Anthony Thouret opened a window and leaned out. Several Representatives joined him. The soldiers, who were bivouacking below on the pavement, caught sight of them, and began to shout: "Ah! there they are, those rascals at 'twenty-five francs a day,' who wish to cut down our pay!" In fact, on the preceding evening, the police had spread this calumny through the barracks that a proposition had been placed on the Tribune to lessen the pay of the troops. They had even gone so far as to name the author of this proposition. Antony Thouret attempted to undeceive the soldiers. An officer cried out to him: "It is one of your party who made the proposal. It is Lamennais!"

In about an hour and a half there were ushered into these rooms MM. Vallette, Bixio, and Victor Lefranc, who had come to join their colleagues and constitute themselves prisoners.

Night came. They were hungry. Several had not eaten since the morning. M. Howyn de Tranchère, a man of considerable kindness and devotion, who had acted as porter at the Mairie, acted as forager at the barracks. He collected five francs from each Representative, and they sent and ordered a dinner for two hundred and twenty from the Café d'Orsay, at the corner of the Quay and the Rue du Bac. They dined badly but merrily. Cookshop mutton, bad wine, and cheese. There was no bread. They ate as they best could, one standing, another on a chair, one at a table, another astride on his bench, with his plate before him, "as at a ball-room supper," a dandy of the Right said laughingly, Thuriot de la Rosière, son of the regicide Thuriot. M. de Rémusat buried his head in his hands. Émile Péan said to him, "We shall get over it." And Gustave de Beaumont cried out, addressing himself to the Republicans, "And your friends of the Left! Will they preserve their honour? Will there be an insurrection at least?" They passed each other the dishes and plates, the Right showing marked attention to the Left. "Here is the opportunity to bring about a fusion," said a young Legitimist. Troopers and canteen men waited upon them. Two or three tallow candles, burnt and smoked on each table. There were few glasses. Right and Left drank from the same. "Equality, fraternity," exclaimed the Marquis Sauvaire-Barthélemy, of the Right. And Victor Hennequin answered him, "But not Liberty."

(To be continued)

◆

WINTER EXHIBITIONS

Mr. M'Lean anticipates the Water-Colour Winter Exhibitions with a collection including good work by such eminent members of both bodies as Sir J. Gilbert, Alma Tadema, G. Fripp, S. Palmer, G. Dodgson, J. D. Watson, Albert Goodwin, F. Tayler, Carl Haag, Birket Foster, Henry Moore, B. Bradley, E. K. Johnson, Clara Montalba, and Whittaker, of the Society; Mrs. Coleman Angell, E. M. Wimperis, E. J. Gregory, J. D. Linton, W. Small, F. J. Skill, Hugh Carter, W. L. Leitch, E. A. Penley, Guido Bach, A. Bouvier, J. Orrock, and A. Hayes, of the Institute; with foreign painters of the quality of Josef Israels, Henriette Brown, Dyckmans, and E. Frère, and such outsiders as Luke Fildes, G. Hall, T. B. Hardy, Syer, W. S. Coleman, and others. This is a collection carefully selected by a competent judge, which escapes the monotony of exhibitions confined to members of a single corporation, and enables us to bring to comparison masters whose drawings are seldom seen in juxtaposition, at least in an exhibition room, and to compare these again with the work of outsiders and foreigners. Those who take an interest in water-colour work will find plenty to occupy them in Mr. M'Lean's Gallery. For the public no drawing here will have more interest than Luke Fildes's admirable water-colour of the interior of Charles Dickens's study at Gadshill, the original of the large engraving published in this journal. After this, and two unpretending groups by Josef Israels, one of two workmen, tools in hand, in company with a woman, the other, of a poor mother and son wending their way home in twilight, both impressed by the painter's subtle yet simple pathos; a charming sun-lit head of a child, who pauses in her lesson to sing to her goldfinch, by Henriette Brown; some of those simply-conceived groups, in water-colours, of peasant children at their sports, or in the interchange of home tendernesses and cares, to which Edouard Frère imparts such inimitable tenderness while faithful to the exactest truth; and a replica in water-colour, by Dyckmans, of his "Blind Beggar," which, for its finish, is one of the stock wonders of our National Collection, there is nothing in Mr. M'Lean's room likely to make more impression than the drawings of two ladies, Miss Claro Montalba's two Venetian studies, "The Salt-Wharf," and an interior of St. Mark's, the one all alive with the quiver of warm sunshine on the lagune, the other dimly splendid with the low-toned glory of ancient gold and mellowed marble, and the noble flower-pieces of Mrs. Coleman Angell, who has never more strikingly vindicated Mr. W. Hunt's reported choice of her as the inheritor of his mantle. Her sheaf of azaleas in a Chinese pot, rich with blue-green glaze over its foundation of red clay, her clustering chrysanthemums in a jar of a quite different texture and tone of blue, and her sprays of apple blossom and peonies near the fire-place, are examples of this potent hand at its very strongest. But besides these more conspicuous drawings, Mr. M'Lean's collection includes a proportion of excellent and interesting work, which places it far above the usual run of dealers', or indeed artists' exhibitions. After all, the distinction between the two has long been untenable, and had better be ignored. All that entitles an exhibition to public notice nowadays is the quality of the works shown, and whether these are got together by a committee or a dealer really matters nothing to the critic or the public. Merit will make its way and hold its own in any case, and the fear is, nowadays, not that the clever artist may fail to obtain public attention, but that he will be tempted to appeal to it through too many channels, and under the dangerous temptation of too eager a rivalry.

Mr. Tooth's Exhibition is chiefly made up of cabinet oil-pictures of the English school, with plenty of attractive work by popular painters, and a considerable dash of that vulgarity which, unhappily, is hardly separable from popularity in English art, but little that calls for critical notice. An effective study of a cardinal—which Mr. Whistler might christen "Symphony in Red"—by Mr. Pettie, "An October Day at Clieveden," by J. J. Tissot, in which graceful figures suffer from a framework of oddly-coloured grass—or so it seemed in the dimmish light of Saturday afternoon, two careful studies of Algerine or Tangerian figures by J. E. Hodgson, A.R.A.; two extremely pretty half-lengths of Spanish señoras, in red dresses, gracefully draped in thin black-lace mantillas, by S. B. Burgess, A.R.A.; some English and Scotch landscapes by B. W. Leader and P. Grahame, A.R.A.; and a smaller replica, by L. J. Pott, of his clever and effective, but over-stagy, Academy picture of treachery and ambuscade, "Waiting for the King's Favourite;" and a girls' school, with a pretty teacher bombarded with copybooks, by John Morgan, are among the contents of Mr. Tooth's Gallery which stand out clearest from the "ruck" of the room in the critic's memory. But there is one work which for gravity of intention and thoroughness of working-out deserves a place apart from its companions, Mr. F. Holl's "Gone," a night piece, of three poor women, one with a baby, and a little girl, who in the gloom and moist of a winter morning watch from a railway platform the starting of the train which carries away the father, son, and brother, on his quest of better fortune, to the port whence he is to embark for some colonial or New World El Domdo. The mother shows her face, blurred and swollen with tears, as she turns to look at the baby in her arms. The sister, in black, is only seen in extreme profile as her eye follows the moving train; the old mother's back is towards us as, with uplifted hands, she waves her last farewell to her boy. The little child is under the cloud of the sorrow of her elders, without quite understanding it. There is true and well-conceived expression in all the figures of this pathetic group; the painting might be firmer and finer, but the touch is large and the handling manly; and while the lighting has been evidently studied with great care and is highly effective, there is less of that blackness of shadow which is Mr. Holl's besetting vice as a painter. No one can fairly say that the sentiment of this impressive picture is either overstrained or unwholesome, while the subject is one that will come home to the feelings of many far above the station of the actors in the sad little domestic drama.

THE READER

Tourists in Italy who can afford to do their sight-seeing thoroughly, and linger long among the art-treasures and historic memories of "the City of Flowers," will prize a new and revised edition (H. S. King and Co.) of the pleasant "Walks in Florence," by Susan and Joanna Horner, in two handy volumes—the first of rambles through the chief streets and quarters of the city; the second of strolls through the galleries of the Pitti, the Uffizi, the Academy, and the more recently formed collections of the San Marco, the Bargello, and the Museum of Natural History. Many changes, even within the last year or two, have been made in Florence; San Marco and the Bargello been definitely converted into museums; the Museum of Natural History enriched by a collection of Italian fauna, not yet thrown open to the general public. Thus, the new edition of the Misses Horner's volume is thoroughly brought up to the latest date, while its excellent art-criticisms, apt quotations from chronicle and legend, and useful tables after each chapter of dates connected with the buildings therein described, are all that can be desired by the most conscientious student of Florentine antiquities. Not the least, perhaps, among its minor merits—in pleasing contrast to more than one recent volume about Italy—is the good taste which confines itself to the simple work of description, and neither wearies nor offends the reader with comments on affairs of politics.

Walks nearer home yet scarcely less interesting for old associations if not for æsthetic charms are agreeably continued in Vol. V. of the Messrs. Cassell's "Old and New London," edited by Edward Walford, M.A. We move now from West to East around the edge of inner London, starting from new Belgravia and old Chelsea and passing round "the Northern heights" of Hampstead and of Highgate to the once verdant meads of "Stratford-atte-Bowe," leaving for yet another volume the southern half-circle from Bermondsey to Wandsworth. Though a round of more recent memories than those which encounter us in central London—of comparatively few, indeed, that date beyond the last two centuries—it is one almost equally rich in curious gossip, taking us past a thousand spots commemorated by playwright, novelist, and memoir-writer; past Cheyne Walk and Chelsea Gardens, and the one avenue which Mr. Jesse tells us still recalls the vanished glories of old Ranelagh; past Holland House and the "old Court suburb;" past the square where once stood Tyburn Tree; past walks and drives of middle-class respectability, but gay and riotous enough long ago when the "town" made excursions to the Hampstead Spa, and "bucks" did not disdain to be "sworn upon the horns" at Highgate; past Puritanic Hackney and Stoke Newington to the site of Norman palaces and abbeys on the Lea. The engravings from curious prints of former London, which always form a feature of this serial, are as numerous and interesting as usual.

"Illustrious Irishwomen" (Hurst and Blackett), by E. Owens Blackburne, fill two amusing, if somewhat gossipy and slipshod volumes with portraits of a galaxy of fair Celts—some beautiful, many witty, and not a few frail—from Macha of the Red Tresses, and Méava (the Queen Mab of Shakespeare), two ladies whose respective dates are 3603 and 3937 A.M., but whose existence as historic personages is "established beyond any doubt," down to the Countess of Blessington and the Lady Stirling-Maxwell of our own day. The work, as the author ingenuously confesses, is very much, though by by no means wholly, of the nature of a compilation. The most generally interesting of its sketches are those devoted to the heroines of the stage—an arena for which the lively imitative Celt has ever had a decided penchant, no less than five out of seven of the fair stars of Old Drury in its palmiest days having been, we are proudly told, of direct Hibernian descent. The most complete is the curious tale of the well-matched pair whom the Welsh tourist will know to the end of time as the "Ladies of Llangollen." Altogether, in spite of some errors both of fact and style, this is a work to which the reading generation may not unprofitably refer for notices of lives not always to be found in extenso in the nearest encyclopædia.

"Annals of "North America, or a Concise Account of the Important Events in the United States, the British Provinces, and Mexico, from their Discovery to the Present Time," by Edward Howland (S. Low and Co.), is an epitome of American progress year by year, from 1492 to 1877. Such works, while far from superseding regular histories—one must not look to them for a clever conception of a period or of a character, of the Kansas troubles, for instance, or of John Brown—are admirable as companion volumes, giving as they do under the year and month each leading event of foreign or domestic policy, with much besides, which regular histories rarely give—founding of colleges, newspapers, manufactories; dates of patents and inventions; settlement of new towns and territories, &c. Mr. Howland has done his work with care, and produced a book of reference of unquestionable utility.

"What will this Babbler say?" the defiant motto of Sir Tollemache Sinclair's "Defence of Russia and the Christians of Turkey" (2 Parts: Chapman and Hall), would take a page to answer in briefest summary. He will sketch for you, more or less accurately, the past and present phases of the Eastern Question; will unmask Mahomedanism and the "unspeakable Turk; will prove (after M. Juste) the will of Peter the Great to be a forgery, and quote Truth on the Antonelli scandal apropos of the alleged outrage on the United Greeks of Poland. He will demolish in Part II. Baron de Worms and the Jews with quotations from Gibbon; will paint the condition of the Turkish Empire with extracts from books of travel not quite selected on the audi alteram partem principle of the title-page, and fill in ad libitum with specimens of the fun of Kinglake, Thackeray, Dickens, and Burnand. The reckless mixture of jesting and hard hitting is at times amusing. A little, nay a good deal, less of both would make the "Defence" much more effective as an argument.

In "The Soul, and How it Found Me" (Tinsley Brothers) Mr. Edw. Maitland, author of that wondrous volume, "England and Islam," narrates "the phenomena connected with its production." Few, possibly, had patience to wade through a book which, commencing as a rejected letter to The Times on the Russo-Turkish war, lost itself, like an un-banked river, in the marsh of so-called prophesyings on the sin of Vivisection, the spiritual meaning of the Signs of the Zodiac, the balance of the Male and Female element in the Cosmos, and much besides we faintly recollect. The few who did so will not be surprised to learn that Mr. Maitland deems it a revelation from the spirit variously known in ancient times as Hermes, John the Baptist, or John of the Apocalypse; that at one time the hand of the Seeress (for a Seeress as well as a Seer is needed for a perfect revelation), approaching the planchette, was blistered by the spiritual heat; that at another the table, delighted at being quickly understood, hopped up and down untouched amidst a storm of raps; that once for seven whole days the Seer was incapacitated as the punishment of a lobster supper, and the Seeress paid the penalty of being exhorted to live "generously" by a frightful vision ushered in by a phantom hand that bore a glass of beer, and a phantom voice that said "Do not touch this;" or that so zealous an anti-vivisectionist as the Seer was honoured by the first communication on record from the spirit of a beatified dog, just raised enough in the scale of beings to be able to say in spirit-language, "Me not a dog," much as a child says "Me not a baby now." Can we wonder that such manifestations really "take," as a spirit said, "material particles from your brain"—perhaps in time disintegrate it altogether?

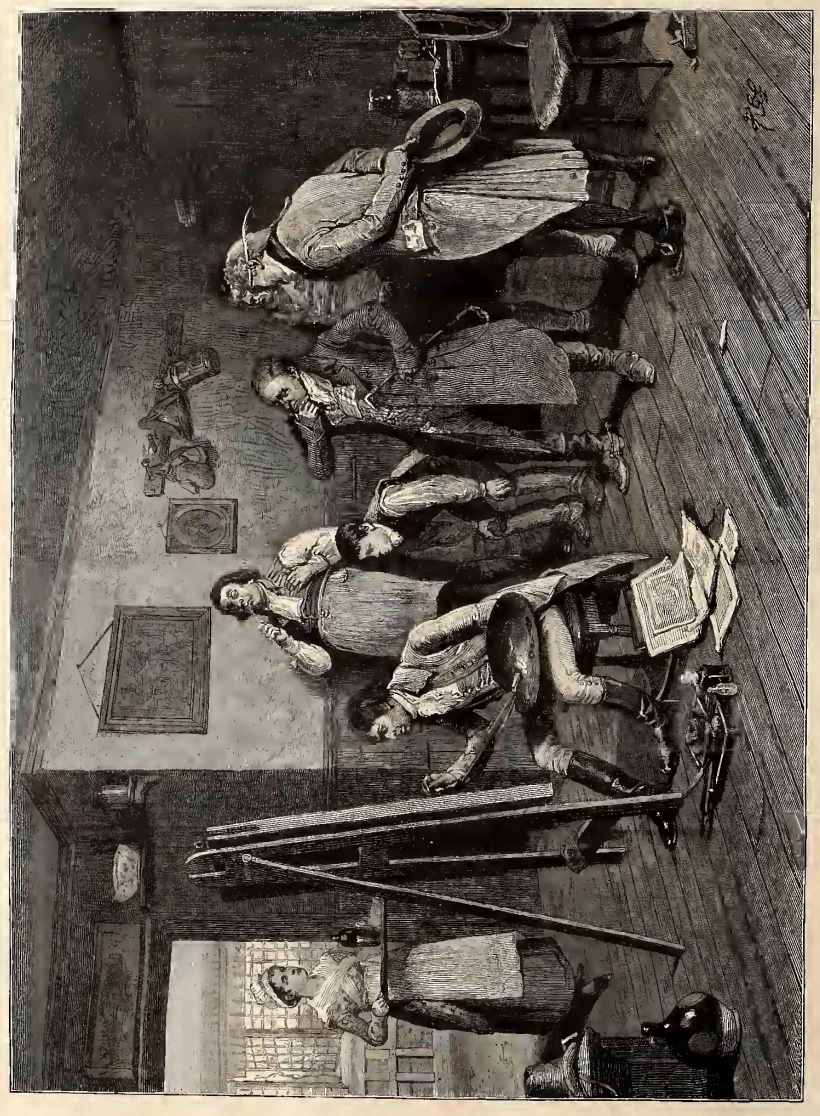
New editions of two volumes of sermons by writers, almost typical specimens in their way of modern forms of pulpit oratory; the one a leader of the Congregationalists, the other a well-known Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen—the "Vision of God," by Dr. H. Allon (Hodder and Stoughton), and the "Fight of Faith," by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke (H. S. King and Co.), though differing much in tone and style—Dr. Allon's stamped with the cold clear-cut thought of intellectual Nonconformity, Mr. Brooke's more rich in varied illustration of things of heaven by things of this world—will be almost equally valued by those who care less for "jots and tittles of the law" than for teachings which go straight to the root of our spiritual life. In many of Dr. Allon's sermons, more especially, e.g., in his "Voices of God," there is a vigorous eloquence that reminds us not a little of the old divines in modern dress.

◆

Red Deer in Cashmere are becoming very scarce. They are killed in great numbers every winter for the sake of their horns, which are sent to the Maharajah to adorn the walls of his Palace at Jummoo

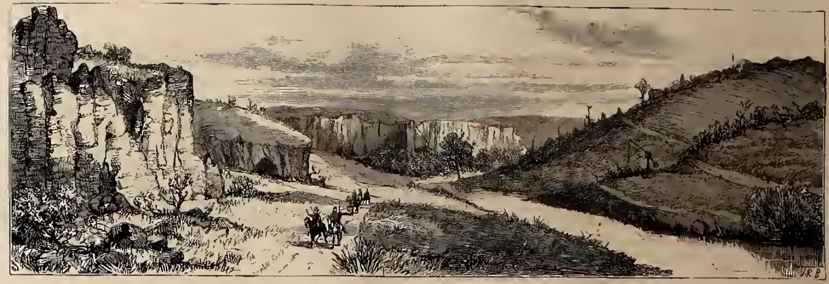
---

[*] Michel de Bourges had thus characterised Louis Bonaparte as the guardian of the Republic against the Monarchical parties.

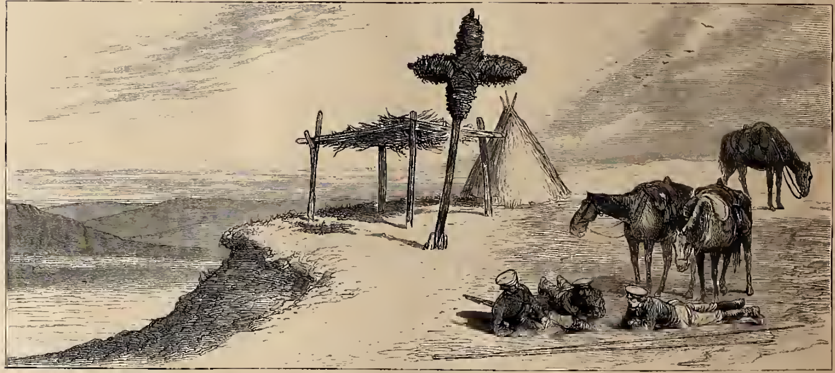


"A NEW SIGN FOR AN OLD SCORE"

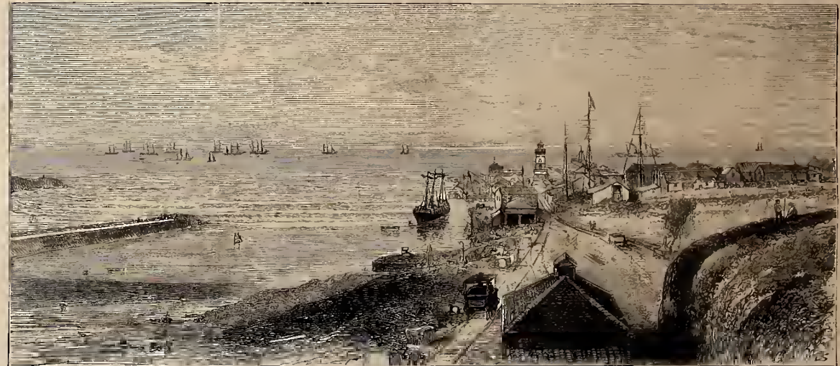
FROM THE PICTURE BY H. G. GLINDONI, EXHIBITED IN THE ROYAL ACADEMY



WITH THE RUSSIANS—IN THE VALLEY OF THE KARA LOM



WITH THE RUSSIANS—A FIRE SIGNAL STATION ON THE ROUMANIAN BANK OF THE DANUBE



THE KAFFIR WAR AT THE CAPE—VIEW OF EAST LONDON ROADSTEAD FROM WEST BANK, BUFFALO RIVER, WHERE THE TROOPS LANDED FOR THE FRONT

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——Plevna continues to occupy the chief attention of the Russians, although rumours have arisen of their intention to leave Plevna on one side, and make a bold push through the Balkans to Adrianople, rumours which have been somewhat strengthened by the capture of Teteven, a most important fortified position south of Orchanie, and which gives the Russians the key to an important pass in the Balkans. The affair cost little on either side, the Russians only losing one man, and the Turks escaping through the mountain paths to Carlovo and Orchanie. In the meantime, however, the Russians are energetically strengthening their position round the doomed town, and according to The Times correspondent the investing forces number 105,000 men. The Emperor and the Grand Duke Nicholas have been visiting the lines and the recently captured position at Gorny Dubnic and Telis, where it now appears that 7,000 prisoners were made during the recent combats, and amongst them three Englishmen, Dr. Douglas, of St. Thomas's, and Dr. Vachell, of the London Hospital, and Col. Coope, an officer of Baker Pasha's gendarmerie, but who at the time was serving with the Red Crescent. The two doctors are treated most kindly, and are admitted to the table of the Grand Duke Nicholas himself, but Colonel Coope is considered a prisoner of war. It is not encouraging to those who are so liberally subscribing to the fund for the sick and wounded to learn from the doctors that "the Turkish authorities declare that they do not want English doctors but English soldiers, that the wounded are of no use, as they cannot fight any more, and are only a useless burden to the State." To return to Osman Pasha, who, by the bye, announced to Colonel Coope that he was the "saviour of Turkey, and would rescue her without foreign assistance," he is certainly holding his own bravely and steadily, and is spoken of with great respect in the Russian camp. That the Russians have made up their minds for as active a winter campaign as the weather will permit is now manifest, and at Constantinople great anxiety is felt as regards the state of Plevna.

On the Lom the Russians are making good their positions, and are preparing for an investment of Rustchuk and Silistria. There has been a sharp engagement near Elena, in which both sides officially claim the victory. As for Suleiman Pasha, he is keeping even more quiet than his predecessor, Mehemet Ali Pasha, who has been restored to active service by being sent to Sofia, probably to organise the army of relief for Plevna, and to make good the defence of the Balkans should the Russians decide upon making an attempt to force their way through before dealing with Osman Pasha.

In the Shipka Pass there is a good deal of desultory fighting and numerous reconnaissances, but part of the Russian troops there are said to have been sent to the Hain Bogaz Pass—through which the Russians penetrated in the summer, and where they are now said to be concentrating their forces.

In ASIA the Russians have gained another most decided victory over unfortunate Mukhtar Pasha. He had entrenched himself at Deve-Boyun, was attacked in force on Monday, and after some hours' fighting was utterly routed, and himself slightly wounded. He then fell back upon Erzeroum, where, according to the Daily Telegraph, he wished to stand a siege, but was opposed by the inhabitants, who feared the result of a bombardment. At all events, he has now fallen back upon Erzinghan and Trebizond, and the Russians are before the Armenian capital. Kars is now completely invested, and, in short, the Turks are as badly off in Asia as they could well be without complete demoralisation.

The reports of mediation are becoming weekly more numerous and more decided. It is asserted that Italy is now earnestly endeavouring to form some plan of reconciliation which would prove agreeable to all Europe, and which could be accepted by both parties. In these praiseworthy endeavours she is also said to be warmly supported by England.

FRANCE.——The New Assembly met on Wednesday, and contrary to all the rumours and statements of the last three weeks, the De Broglie Cabinet remained in office to brave the responsibility of their acts. Attempts had been made to form an ad interim Cabinet, with M. Pouyer-Quertier as Premier, who, it appears, had actually succeeded in forming a Conservative-Clerical Ministry, and the list of his colleagues had been even published in well-informed journals, such, for instance, as the Moniteur, but it was evidently felt that such a Cabinet would have no more stability or chance of success than the existing Ministry, and as the Marshal evidently could not make up his mind to send for a pure Republican leader, it was ultimately determined that the De Broglie Ministry had better remain in office until the Assembly had fairly met and organised itself. The Cabinet has been rapidly losing its supporters. Last week there was the defection of the Orleanists, while this week the Bonapartists have clearly shown signs of desertion, and have even added insult to injury by opposing and defeating the Duc de Broglie himself at the election for the Councils-General. As for the opinion of the country at large it has been more plainly avowed than ever by the unseating of more than 100 Conservatives in favour of the Republican candidates—thus, in many cases, completely reversing the majority in the Departmental Assemblies, which will have to re-elect the first detachment of retiring senators next year. In the face of all this it is said that the Marshal intends to resign, as he is firmly determined not to govern with any but a Conservative Ministry, but this is all surmise, and it would be useless for us to chronicle the innumerable rumours and prophecies with regard to his intentions, when a very few hours will now in all probability clearly manifest them by accomplished facts. We may, however, mention that although the Bourse, that inevitable barometer of French crises, is terribly uneasy and has been slowly falling, there is a general feeling that the Marshal will not push things to extremes, but find some means of compromising without apparently "submitting" or actually "resigning." How this is to be managed, however, the most ingenious spirits of political jugglery have not yet ventured to guess.

There was little real business done either in the Senate or the Chamber of Deputies. The latter was at first presided over by M. Desseaux as senior deputy, M. Raspail being ill, and the only matters transacted were the re-election of M. Grévy as President and the formation of the Bureaux. In the Senate it had been at first suggested to propose an order of the day expressing confidence in the Marshal's "firmness;" but the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier plainly told the Duc de Broglie that he would not permit the discussion of so unconstitutional a motion which brought the Marshal to the front for the benefit of the Cabinet. As the Cabinet knew that no vote of confidence would be granted to the Ministry per se, no motion whatever was brought forward, and the sitting was merely formal. The Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier also saved the Cabinet from a second piece of folly by dissuading them from their intention of prosecuting Victor Hugo for "insulting the army" while describing the Coup d'État in his "Histoire d'une Crime."

Paris is still busy entertaining General Grant, to whom a grand banquet was given by the resident Americans at the Grand Hotel. General Noyes, Ambassador of the United States, presided, and made a speech detailing the life and adventures of their guest, to which the General replied with his customary terse brevity. The other noteworthy speech of the evening was made by M. Lafayette, who, after gracefully alluding to the time when the two flags fought side by side in a "just cause," hoped that "the two Republics would always remain united for the benefit of the liberty and independence of peoples." In theatrical circles there has been a most successful new opera at the Opéra Comique, La Surprise de l'Amour, a poem by Charles Monselet, set to music by M. Ferdinand Poise, which proved a veritable surprise to the audience, who were most enthusiastic on its first representation. The Théâtre Italien has reopened with Donizetti's Poliuto.

GERMANY and AUSTRIA are still wrangling over the negotiations for another commercial treaty, the details of which are far too technical and dry for reproduction here. Sufficient to say that Austria, having refused to renew for a year the existing treaty, consents to conclude a treaty based on the "most favoured nation" principle.

Field Marshal Wrangel died on the 1st inst. He was the oldest general in the Prussian army, having been born in 1784. He entered the army in 1791, and until lately has played a very important part in the political and military history of Germany.

ITALY.——The health of the Pope now seems to be causing considerable uneasiness at the Vatican. His doctor has permanently taken up his residence in the Vatican, and His Holiness never rises from his chair, to which it has been necessary to add new supports and cushions to afford him ease and relief. He is still carried out to sun himself in the garden, but the winter is looked forward to with gloomy forebodings. He still, however, continues to receive visitors.

Father Curci has resigned his membership of the Jesuits, which Father Beckx has accepted, and it is now proposed that Pius IX. should make the theory of the Papal temporal power a dogma, so as to tie the hands of the next Pontiff with regard to the subject. Sir George Bowyer, however, in a letter to The Times, denies the truth of this statement. Anent the Jesuits, the numbers of the order have increased during the twenty-five years' rule of Father Beckx from 4,000 to 9,000.—Cardinal Manning is at Rome, where he has gone to receive his Cardinal's Hat.

INDIA.——The north-east monsoon has burst, the numbers on the relief works are rapidly decreasing, the harvest accounts from the famine districts are everything that could be desired, the famine may now be considered virtually at an end, and the Governor of Madras has telegraphed to the Lord Mayor that all further collections for the relief fund may now cease. The total expenditure on account of the famine, including the loss of revenue, is expected to reach the sum of 8,500,000*l.* for Madras, and 2,000,000*l.* for Bombay.

UNITED STATES.——The old, old difficulty of hard and soft money, complicated with the new proposition for a silver and not a gold standard, still occupies the attention of the American Legislature and people. The Republicans can now scarcely command a majority in the matter, and the Democrats are busy doing their best to push forward bills providing for a silver standard. President Hayes, however, has declared that he will veto all such measures, and holds firmly to his determination of resuming specie payments in gold on January 1st, 1879.—President Hayes has had a most universally warm welcome throughout his southern tour. The Autumn elections have taken place; the most noteworthy incident being the complete victory of the Democrats in Pennsylvania.

THE KAFFIR WAR IN THE TRANSKEI.——Sir Bartle Frere is certainly the right man in the right place, and is acting with great promptitude and energy, which bids fair to put a speedy end to this little war. He has declared Chief Kreli deposed, and his country confiscated and annexed to the British dominions, and a strong body of troops have been sent to the front. There have been several engagements, in one of which the Fingoes and the frontier police surprised the Galekas, killing thirty, burning the kraal, and carrying off plunder. None of the other tribes have joined Kreli.

THE COURT

THE Queen and the Princess Beatrice remain at Balmoral. Last week Her Majesty and the Princess visited Lady Biddulph at Abergeldie Mains, and the Marquis and Marchioness of Huntly and Lord Brooke dined with the Queen. On Saturday morning Her Majesty drove to Abergeldie, and in the afternoon the Princess of Wales visited the Queen. Next morning Her Majesty and the Princess Beatrice attended Divine Service at Crathie Church, when the Rev. A. Campbell officiated. The Princess of Wales and her three little girls lunched at Balmoral on Monday, and afterwards drove out with the Queen and the Princess Beatrice. During the week Princess Beatrice has been out riding nearly every day.

The usual gathering at Sandringham to keep the Prince of Wales's birthday has not been held this year in consequence of the illness of Miss Knollys, who though better is not out of danger, and the Princess of Wales continues at Abergeldie, but will probably leave Scotland about the middle of next week. The customary ball on the 9th has been abandoned, and the Prince is only entertaining a few gentlemen at Sandringham. He left London for Norfolk on Saturday afternoon accompanied by the Crown Prince of Hanover, and on Sunday the two Princes attended Divine Service at St. Mary Magdalene's. Yesterday, (Friday) was the Prince of Wales 36th birthday, which was duly celebrated in London by illuminations and dinners, and at Windsor by the firing of salutes and ringing of bells.—The Prince will shortly pay a visit to Yorkshire to stay with Lord Londesborough, and will also spend a few days with Lord Alington, at Crichel, Dorset.

The Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne went down to Cambridge last week to see Lord Colin Campbell, the Marquis' youngest brother, who is studying at Trinity College. The Princess has contributed a painting done by herself to the Brighton Bazaar in aid of the Sussex County Hospital.—The Duke of Connaught is stationed at Fermoy with his regiment. On Friday night he was present at a banquet given by the Mayor of Cork.—The Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz left England for the Continent on Saturday, crossing from Dover to Calais.

The Empress of Austria intends to spend six weeks in England for the purpose of fox-hunting. She will be accompanied by the Crown Prince Rudolph, and will stay at Cottesbrook House, near Northampton.—Ex-Queen Isabella was to leave Spain for Paris this week, and will return about Jan. 20th., in order to be present at her son's marriage on the 23rd.

CHURCH NEWS

CONFESSION AND ABSOLUTION.——The Rev. Mgr. Capel has commenced a series of sermons on "The Priest in Absolution" at the Church of Our Lady, St. John's Wood.—The Bishop of Chester, in his Triennial Charge delivered the other day in Chester Cathedral, said that it was certainly not the meaning of the English Church that private confession should be made compulsory. She was content to leave repentance and absolution between the individual conscience and the Father of all flesh. The yearning after private Confession would not be as strong as it now was if the Confession and Absolution in the daily service were more properly understood.—The Archbishop of Dublin, in his annual Visitation Charge delivered last week, referred to the question of Confession, and said that the safety of the Church lay in abiding strictly within the lines of her formularies; not suffering any abridgment of her liberties, but resisting every attempt to make general and usual that which she has made special and exceptional. Speaking of the relative conditions of the Irish and English Church, he said that very grave dangers would henceforth beset the former, but that it had escaped other dangers which plainly lay in ambush for the latter.

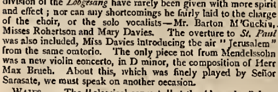
VARIOUS.——The Grand Lodge of the Irish Freemasons have unanimously resolved to refuse any longer to recognise the Orient of France as a Masonic body, on the ground of its having altered its constitution by omitting the declaration of belief in the existence of God and the immortality of the soul. All lodges working under the Irish constitution are directed to decline receiving as Masons any persons coming from the Grand Orient of France, or any lodge under its jurisdiction.—The Annual Assembly of the Welsh Congregationalists has been held this week at Chester. On Monday the Rev. E. Paxton Hood, of Manchester, preached; and on Tuesday Mr. Morley, M.P., presiding at the opening of the Congress, advised his hearers not to be afraid of being political. He reverted to the Sunday Closing Question and the Burials Bill, and said that he should like to see tried the curious legal point whether penalties could be imposed upon Nonconformists for conducting funerals in their own way in churchyards.—The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, concluding his Visitation Charge at Chipping Sodbury last week, discoursed on remedial counsels. Their first care should be an enlargement of Convocation, and their next the facilitation of its free and fair utterance by making it the really representative body of the Church; and, seeing that it met regularly, all proposals affecting doctrine should be originated therein, and the Royal assent ought not to be given to anything in opposition to the formally expressed opinion of Convocation.—The clergy of Sheffield have resolved to invite the Church Congress to hold its next year's meeting in that town. The proposal was opposed by some Low Churchmen on the ground that the Congress meetings did no real good, but tended to the spread of Ritualism, whilst one High Churchman opposed it because "schismatics and rebels" (men who had been repudiated by Rome and condemned by the Church of England) were admitted to take part in the debates.—Lord Oranmore and Browne presided at a large meeting of Evangelicals, held in Dublin on Monday, to protest against the recent holding of a "Retreat" by some Protestant clergymen in Blackrock, near Dublin. It is intended to hold a series of similar meetings throughout the country.

MUSIC

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.——The opening performance on Monday night was a well-deserved success. The opera, Il Trovatore, hackneyed though it be, retains its popularity, as the result showed. The cast was precisely as stated in the last number of The Graphic. Mdlle. Caroline Salla's Leonora surpassed expectation, notwithstanding the fact that much—very much—had been looked for. It is quite equal to any of her former impersonations, and a fresh evidence of her versatility. This young lady, if well cared for and induced to husband her resources, which are far beyond the average, can hardly fail to reach that goal which should be the aim of every conscientious and genuine artist. She has all in her favour—a good stage figure, strong dramatic feeling, prepossessing physiognomy, added to a voice of charming quality, capable of any amount of training. All through the opera Mdlle. Salla's talent shone conspicuously, her greatest effect, however, being produced in the "Miserere" —with Signor Fancelli, whose Manrico is what it has ever been —and the scene of Leonora's death, upon which the curtain falls. In both instances the French songstress exhibited histrionic as well as vocal powers of a high order. The "Miserere" was encored and repeated. This was Mdlle. Salla's first appearance in London as the heroine of Verdi's gloomily tragic opera; but the impression created was enough to guarantee that it is unlikely to be the last. About such familiar performances as the Conte di Luna of Signor Galassi (who was of course obliged to sing "Il balen" twice), and the vigorously melodramatic Azucena of Madame Lablache, we are not called upon to speak in detail. The orchestra, under the able superintendence of Signor Licalsi, though numerically less than that to which we are accustomed in the spring and summer season, is very efficient, and (pace Sir Michael Costa), in a house of the dimensions of the new theatre, strong enough for all purposes. The chorus, too, fulfils its duties carefully, and, indeed, the opening night may be pronounced a legitimate success. The audience was not so large as had been anticipated, the stalls, the newly-formed pit, and the grand tier of boxes, being but sparsely tenanted. The opera advertised for Tuesday was Il Barbiere di Siviglia; but Mdlle. Anna di Belocca and Signor Bettini being indisposed, Lucia di Lammermoor was substituted. About the execution of this, the most popular and the most worn-out of Donizetti's works, it is only necessary to say that the character of the ill-starred heroine was sustained by Mdlle. Alwina Valleria, an artist not merely worthy commendation on the account of her absolute merits, but on that of her readiness and ability to undertake almost any part in the "soprano" repertory at the shortest notice. Thus Mdlle. Valleria's services, in their way, cannot be over-estimated; and it must be added that her performance on Tuesday night was for the most part irreproachable. The other leading characters were undertaken by Signors Fancelli (Edgardo), Galassi (Enrico), Rioaldini (Arturo), and Broccolini (Raimondo). On Wednesday night there was yet another disappointment. The opera announced—Verdi's Un Ballo in Maschera, that comparatively feeble reflex of Auber's magnificent Gustave III. (which, nevertheless, it has driven even from the Parisian stage)—was not, it is true, withdrawn; but the part of Oscar, set down for Mdlle. Mila Rodani, was, in consequence of the illness of that promising young artist and well-deserving favourite, entrusted to Madame Bauermeister. Madame Bauermeister, however (like Mdlle. Valleria), never unprepared, is tolerably sure to content and please her audience, as was shown on the occasion of which we speak, when her assumption of the lively Court page was unanimously approved. The part of Amelia, Renato's unhappy wife, was that in which Mdlle. Caroline Salla made her début at Her Majesty's Theatre, in the summer of the present year. The praise bestowed upon her then was general; and her performance on Wednesday night justified in every respect the favourable criticism she had earned. A better Amelia has rarely appeared on the London boards. A new tenor, Signor Runcio (English, we believe) achieved merited success as the adventurous, and, though soft-hearted, somewhat unscrupulous Ricardo. This gentleman possesses a voice of agreeable quality, a good method of producing it, and a command of expression without forcing, which, in these times, when shouting and exaggeration are so much the fashion, it is pleasant to recognise. If we are not greatly mistaken, we shall hear more of Signor Runcio. His reception was unmistakeably cordial. Signor Galassi, the Renato of the evening, won the customary encore in "O dolcezze perdute" (obbligato flute, Mr. Keppell), and acted the character remarkably well throughout. Madame Lablache, as a matter of course, played the sorceress, Ulrica; and the entire representation was of more than average excellence. Rigoletto (with Signor Del Puente as the Jester) was to be given on Thursday, and Le Nozze di Figaro, the Barbiere (with Mdlle. Anna di Belocca as Cherubino) last night. For this evening we are promised Robert le Diable, with Madame Marie Rôze as Alice.

Crystal Palace Concerts.——The programme of Saturday's concert at the Crystal Palace was largely devoted to Mendelssohn, under the pretext that the anniversary of the great musician's death was November 4th. November 4th, however, falling on a Sunday, November 3rd answered the purpose just as well, and the performance was highly interesting. The three orchestral movements which precede the choral division of the Lobgesang have rarely been given with more spirit and effect; nor can any shortcomings be fairly laid to the charge of the choir, or the solo vocalists—Mr. Barton M'Guckin, Misses Robertson and Mary Davies. The overture to St. Paul was also included, Miss Davies introducing the air "Jerusalem" from the same oratorio. The only piece not from Mendelssohn was a new violin concerto, in D minor, the composition of Herr Max Bruch. About this, which was finely played by Señor Sarasate, we must speak on another occasion.

Waifs.——The "classical concerts" at the Alexandra Palace began on Saturday afternoon, with Mr. Frederick Archer in lieu of Mr. Weist Hill (retired) as conductor. There was principally a selection from the works of Mendelssohn, including the fragments from the unfinished oratorio, Christus, and the Symphony in A minor. We shall recur to these entertainments, which are highly creditable to the spirit and good taste of the directors. La Tzigane, Herr Johann Strauss's new operetta (bouffe), recently produced at the Théâtre de la Renaissance, has met with almost unanimous approval from the Parisian critics.—At the national Czech Theatre in Prague three operas from the pens of Bohemian composers are in preparation—Zavis, by Rozkosny; Selma Sedlák, by Dworàk; and Dve Vdovy (The Two Widows), by Smetana. When shall we in England possess a lyric theatre at which only works by native composers shall be produced?—The Abbate Franz Liszt will represent musical Hungary at the "Paris" Exposition Universelle next year. Verdi, it is said, has declined to represent Italy.



SPORTING

The Turf.——The late autumn meetings hardly seem to be going off with the same amount of spirit which they have shown of late years. The weather perhaps has had something to do with it, and perhaps horseflesh has been expended rather more freely than usual during the previous part of the season, while first-class animals have in large numbers retired into winter quarters. But many surmise that the prevailing dulness is to be attributed in no slight degree to the fact that "our friends, the enemy," as the result of Jongleur's victory in the Cambridgeshire and Gladia's third, have carried with them across the Channel something like 100,000*l.* of English money. Be this as it may, the Liverpool Meeting has certainly not been up to its usual mark, though some of the events were interesting enough. Old Hippias made another winning mark for Lord Wilton in the November Hurdle Race; and Pluton, who is evidently an improving horse, beat Lyceum and Trappist in the Stewards' Cup. Lord Lonsdale, with his able "Master of the Horse," seems in form just now, and took the Knowsley Nursery with Hackthorpe, who was made first favourite in a field of eleven; but the talent were not so fortunate in selecting Niger for the Westmoreland Welter Plate, won by Mango. King Sheppard took the Molyneux and Miss Pool the Liverpool Nursery; while the Alt Welter was secured by Templar, though he was not so much fancied as Palm Flower, a somewhat unlucky mare, who ran second. Old Congress was made favourite for the Sefton Steeple Chase, but came to grief, and the first important cross-country event of the season fell to Sir J. L. Kaye's Citizen. At the time of going to press the result of the Liverpool Cup was not known, but an acceptance of only sixteen out of a very large entry intimates a small field and a race of but little interest.

Football.——Good progress has been made in the first ties of the Association Challenge Cup; the Nottinghamshire v. Sheffield and Pilgrims v. Ramblers have resulted in draws. Marlow has beaten Henley, Grantham has succumbed to the Clapham Rovers, the Reading Hornets have suffered defeat from Maidenhead, High Wycombe has been victorious over Wood Grange, and Cambridge University over Dulwich College.—At the Oval on Saturday the Wanderers and Royal Engineers met for a friendly game, which resulted in a disastrous defeat to the once almost invincible soldiers.

Aquatics.——Without wishing to hurt any one's feelings it may be said that the match on Monday between the ex-champion Kelley and Sadler was little better than a farce, the latter winning as he liked. A better man on the river in his day than Kelley never sat a boat; but though Sadler is no chicken his opponent's years are far too many to warrant him rowing the championship course against anything like a first-class opponent. It may be taken for granted, probably, that both men have now stripped for the last time.—At both Universities Trial Eights are at work, but it is obviously premature even to guess whether Cambridge or Oxford will have the best material to select from for the great race next spring.

Cricket.——The members of the Australian Cricketing Team have been nominated, and will probably sail for this country by the March mail. Where does not cricket take root, except perhaps in France? The Parsees in India are evidently taking kindly to it, and show special skill in fielding. The Parsee Club, it is announced, will send an eleven to this country next season to play a series of matches.

Hunting.——On Tuesday, according to custom, the Royal Buckhounds had their first meet at Salthill, the noble master, Earl Hardwicke, being present, and the usual omnium-gatherum of carriages, carts, and pedestrians. When the deer got clear of all of them he gave a good run, being eventually taken at West Drayton.

Quoits.——This old classic game is another of those which has experienced a revival of late years. Lerham of Whifflet has just beaten James Armour of Loan Head for the professional Championship.

Pedestrianism.——Gale still walks on at the Agricultural Hall, giving proof that one man out of about a million can live almost without sleep.

RURAL NOTES

Milk and Water.——The Farmers' Club had a meeting on Monday night, the first of the winter season. Mr. Allender, one of the Aylesbury Dairy Company, was the gentleman selected to enlighten the bucolic mind. He took for his subject the "Dairy and its Products," and dealt with it in a clever manner. One thing, however, he did not quite point out which might have handily come in, that the lactometer does not always test accurately the quality of the milk from particular breeds of cattle. Men—honest men, we believe—have been fined on the supposition that the milk they sold was watered because it did not come up to the assumptive test of what milk in their opinion ought to be. In all cases it would be well for inspectors to learn the difference of the richness of the milk obtained from an Ayrshire, a Channel Island, or a Shorthorn cow. If that were done, in many instances "the cow with the iron tail" would not after all be so blameable. Mr. Allender gave good advice to farmers. They should pay more attention to dairy stock. Our imports of butter and cheese prove this, and our climate is better adapted for cattle than for corn.

The Weather.——Except some surreptitiously introduced Colorado beetles, more as a joke and for exhibition than anything else, nothing has been discovered about the insect. It is not wanted at all here, but, even if it came, it could not work more havoc than that insidious disease which has since 1846 been in the potato fields of our country, and the source and the cause of which epidemic no naturalist as yet has satisfactorily determined. In Scotland the heavy rain storms have made late potato fields utterly worthless. The tubers have simply been turned into a mass of pulp on late fields, and won't be worth the lifting. To a large number of farmers in the Three Lothians the potatoes are as the pig to Irishmen, the "rint payer." They won't be so this year. There are still oats out in the fields in Scotland, and they won't be much worth when carted. During the past fortnight, however, much farm work has been got through in scarifying and in ploughing the land by steam and horses, and cultivation, notwithstanding a backward harvest, is far forward.

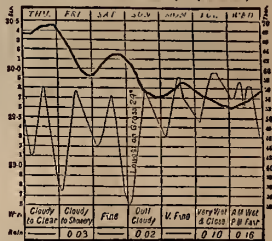
Central Chamber of Agriculture.——At the meeting of this Chamber on Tuesday there was a fair attendance of members. The ever-important, ever attractive, subject for loquacity, Local Taxation, was once more on the tapis, but did not give rise to quite so much speech as usual. One important statement made by Mr. Pell was that compulsory education is to be given to upwards of 2,000,000 of children, urban and rural, without the intervention of School Boards, the management of which are expensive. The report of the Cattle Diseases Committee of the Chamber is not of a dangerous character. They take credit to themselves that the decision of the Parliamentary Committee was based upon their judgment, and with sorrow notice that some "unbelieving Jews" accredit them with seeking to restore the "Old Order" abolished by Sir Robert Peel—in fact, horrible idea—of wishing to "bring back the Mastodon." The Committee in their statement say it is "a groundless imputation that our efforts to obtain security for our flocks and herds against imported disease arise from a desire to procure any reversal of the free trade policy long deliberately adopted by this country. We have throughout sought protection not against competition, but against contagion." There is just the slightest tinge of political matter in the sentence quoted that agricultural clubs profess to taboo. Mr. James Howard proposed that the President should fix upon Tuesday in the Smithfield week for a meeting with his Grace of Richmond (who, by the way, did not receive the Chamber very courteously on several occasions, at least so it is alleged), but Lord Fortescue thought that to dictate a particular time to the Lord President of the Council would be "only opening the door to have it shut up," and so it was arranged that a deputation should await the Duke's pleasure as to the time of meeting.

Miscellaneous.——The shorthorn season has finished well. Although the prices were not so sensational as they were at the beginning of the year; fortunately for tenant farmers—58*l.* per head for forty-two cattle is by no means a bad average. Mr. Thornton made that in Yorkshire last week. No other breed would fetch the same money.—Lord Bective has offered prizes for essays on "Farming in Westmoreland," special reference being had to the breeding and rearing of cattle fitted for the county.—How "the unco guid" in Scotland must be getting out of their stays! We read in a Scotch agricultural paper that "on at least two farms in the neighbourhood of Errol, Perthshire, last Sabbath all hands were busy leading in the grain." It is a blessing that "Holy Willie" is dead.—The members of the Lothian Hunt have made a presentation to Mr. Hope, Duddingston, on his retirement from the mastership of the hounds. Mr. Hope is a tenant farmer near Edinburgh, and the appearance of his crops marks his skill as a cultivator, while his form on horseback distinguishes him as a thorough cross-country rider. He well deserved the honour accorded him.

◆

WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

NOVEMBER 1ST TO NOVEMBER 7TH (INCLUSIVE)



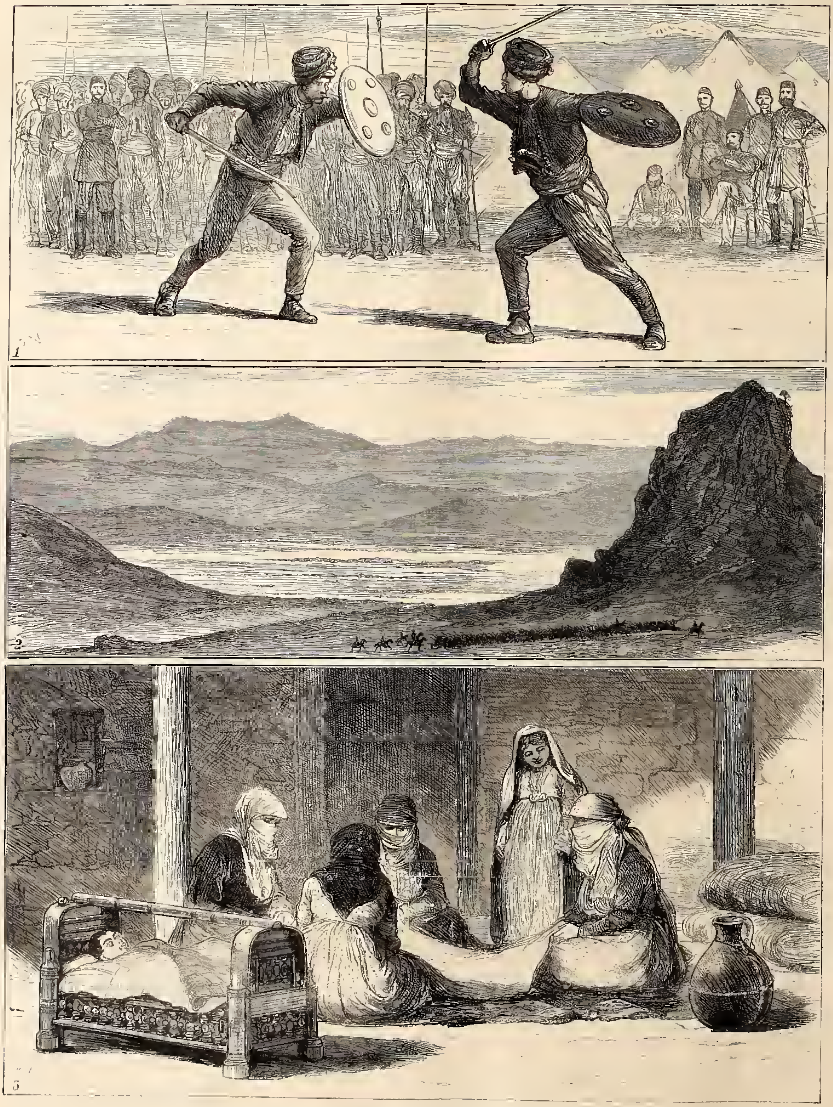
Explanation.—The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

Remarks.—During this week the barometer has remained highest over France and the Mediterranean, and lowest to the northward or north-westward of the United Kingdom. The prevailing winds have consequently been south-westerly, temperature has been high, and the air close and damp. A number of depressions, none of them very deep, have crossed over the country in a north-easterly direction, bringing with them fresh to strong breezes, and in some places slight gales, while a large quantity of rain has fallen all over the western and northern parts of the kingdom, and a smaller quantity elsewhere. The barometer was highest (30·45 inches) on Thursday night, the 1st instant; lowest (29·60 inches) on Wednesday morning, the 7th instant; range, 0·85 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (59°) on Tuesday, the 6th instant; lowest (31°) on Sunday morning, the 4th instant; range, 28°. On the latter occasion 8° of frost was recorded on the grass, but the daytime was mild notwithstanding. Rainfall: Total fall, 0·31 inches, on four days; greatest fall in one day, 0·16 inches, on Wednesday, the 7th instant.

LEGAL

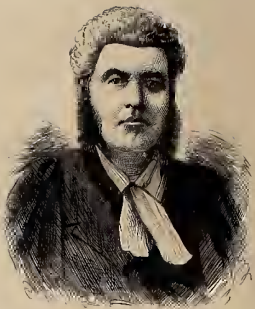
An Extradition Question.——The Queen's Bench Division last week decided a curious and important extradition question. A British subject who was accused of stealing some bonds in Switzerland, and whose extradition was demanded, had been arrested in this country, and would have been sent over for trial had it not been urged in his behalf that no Englishman should be delivered up under the Treaty and Order in Council under which he was charged. The Lord Chief Justice said that it was a great pity, but there was not a shadow of doubt as to the meaning of the treaty. He very much regretted it, but the prisoner must be discharged, because his case came within the terms of the treaty. It was better that one criminal should escape punishment than that an Extradition Treaty should be wrongly construed. He was not sorry that the case had arisen, because, being chairman of a committee sitting on the subject of extradition, he would take care, if possible, that this blot should be removed.

Miscellaneous Items.——The trial of the detectives is still dragging its weary length along, the case for the prosecution not being yet complete.—The irrepressible Mr. Cobbett appeared again in the Exchequer Court on Friday last to urge his claims to damages against Lord Beaconsfield, Sir S. Northcote, and others, in connection with the committal of the Tichborne Claimant, the legality of which he disputes. After listening for some time the Lord Chief Baron said that a gentleman bearing such a name as "Cobbett" should desist from opposing the course of justice, and if he continued to do so he would be guilty of a very grave offence. Unless it had been that he was labouring under some illusion, which was most clearly the case, he would have been committed to prison. Subsequently, while Baron Cleasby was speaking, Mr. Cobbett again interrupted, and the Lord Chief Baron said that he would have him removed and commit him to prison if he should again interrupt a learned judge while he was delivering judgment.—The Vestry of Chelsea have not only failed in their attempt to make the Misses Clarke pay for the repair of their cellar, which was broken in by a steam-roller, but have been ordered to pay twenty guineas costs.—A sham Roman Catholic priest made his appearance at Bath last week. He represented himself as belonging to the Benedictine Order, and coming from California, and after being entertained for some days at the Priory, and taking part in several services, he decamped with a roll of bank-notes belonging to one of the priests.—The question of illicit commissions is likely to be further ventilated. A court-martial is now being held at Aldershot on Commissary Spenceley, who is charged with accepting bribes from a milk-contractor.—The charge of cruelty brought against the captain of the Narcissus by several of his crew has completely broken down. It was shown that a mutiny had broken out on board, and that the mutineers invented the story to defend their misconduct. The jury gave a verdict of acquittal. Mr. Justice Lush expressed his regret that Captain Macintosh had been subjected to such a cruel persecution.—The boy William Lamhouroe, who was sentenced to twenty-one

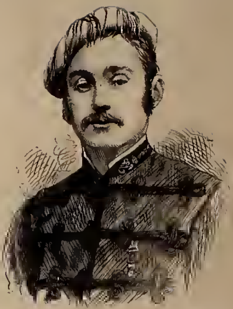


1. War Dance of the Kurds in Front of the Head Quarters, Camp of Ismail Kurd Pasha.—2. View of Musin, looking South from the Mountain Pass leading into Russian Territory.—3. Interior of a House at Musin : Armenian Women Weaving Carpets.

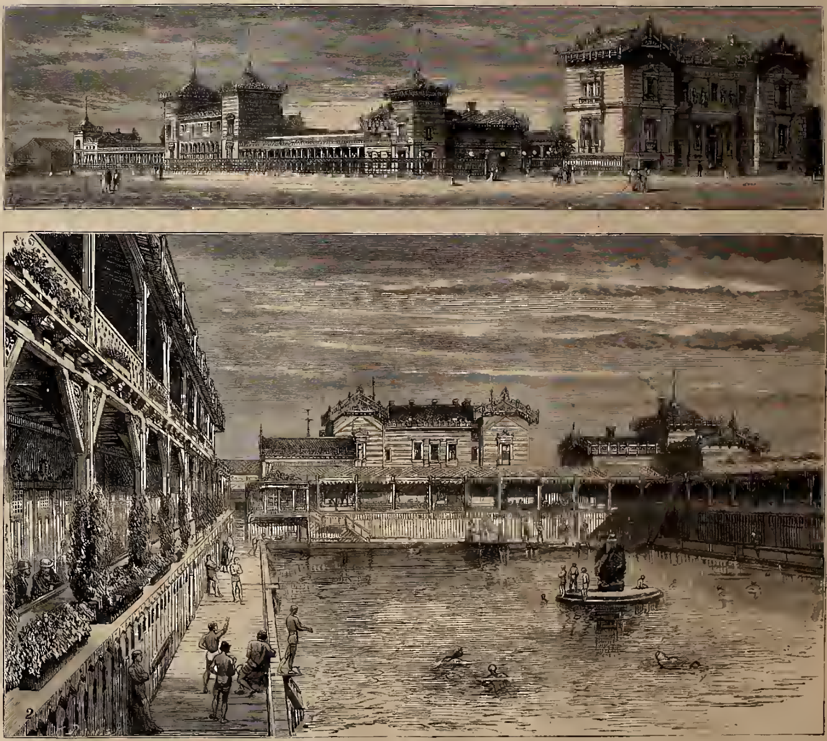
WITH THE TURKS AND ISMAIL PASHA IN ASIA



J. H. FAWCETT, ESQ.
British Consul-General and Judge of the Supreme Court, Constantinople



THE LATE MAJOR WILLIAM N. LEADER,
Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph with the Turks, died at Philippopolis, Oct. 16



1. Exterior, from the Foot of the Reichs Brücke.—2. Interior View.
THE GREAT SWIMMING BATHS ON THE DANUBE AT VIENNA

days' hard labour for plucking a house-leek in St. Pancras Churchyard, has been liberated by the Home Secretary after a week's detention.—The "benefit of the doubt" was the other day given by a Middlesex jury to a man caught almost in the act of stealing a watch, but who managed to get rid of the property before being searched. Mr. Serjeant Cox expressed astonishment at the verdict of acquittal, and told the fellow, against whom six convictions were recorded, that if he came there again he would not be likely to be so lucky, and would most certainly have penal servitude.—A foreigner, rejoicing in the euphonious cognomen of Melkym Chacknazarion, is in custody on a charge of conspiring, with another man not yet apprehended, to defraud the French Government by means of forged postage-stamps.—An extraordinary fraud is alleged to have been committed by a man named Drake, who is said to have obtained 300,000*l.* within the last two or three years by disposing of fictitious leases. The person arrested declares that he knows nothing whatever of the charge.—At Shrewsbury the proprietor of a colliery has been fined for several offences against the rules for the management of mines. On August 2nd, 700 cubic feet of gas was found accumulated in one part of the pit, for this the fine was 5*l.* and costs, for not having proper signals, 1*l.* and costs, and like penalties were imposed for not having certain dangerous machinery properly fenced, for neglecting to report some explosions which took place, and for not making a true report as to the ventilation of the mine. What will Mr. Macdonald say to this?

* * *

An Index Society has been formed in London with the object of compiling indexes to well-known books at present deficient in this respect, and of forming Subject Indexes. The Society also will probably make a General Index of Universal Literature, and will begin a Library of Indexes intended to include whatever can contribute to the formation of a comprehensive key to all knowledge.

H.R.H. the Princess of Wales.——Notwithstanding the numerous photographs of Her Royal Highness which are in existence, a portrait by a skilled artist is likely to be both more really truthful as a likeness and more attractive. Such a picture was painted a few years ago by Mr. H. Olrik, Member of the Royal Danish Academy, and was exhibited at Burlington House in the spring of 1873. Her Royal Highness gave the artist fourteen sittings for this portrait, an admirable engraving of which has recently been executed by Mr. John Ballin, and published by Mr. A. Borgen, of 142, New Bond Street, W.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

ADVERTISEMENTS intended for the GRAPHIC CHRISTMAS NUMBER must be sent in by the 20th inst. The terms are the same as last and previous years.

DEATH.

On the 23rd September, at the Consulate of Liberia, Sierra Leone, Emily Adelaide, the beloved wife of Moses S. Boyle, Consul for the Republic of Liberia, and youngest daughter of the late Wm. H. Pratt, Esquire, Marshal of the Vice-Admiralty Court of this Settlement. Friends will please accept this intimation.

FINAL COMPLETION
OF THE
UNDERGROUND INNER CIRCLE
RAILWAY SYSTEM.

ISSUE OF £1,200,000 SHARE CAPITAL
In 120,000 Shares of £10 each, of the METROPOLITAN INNER CIRCLE COMPLETION RAILWAY,

Which will connect the Metropolitan Railway at Aldgate with the Metropolitan District Railway at the Mansion House Station, thus uniting the two Railways in a complete circle.

In view of the great importance of the undertaking to the Metropolis generally, the following CASH SUBVENTIONS are by Act of Parliament secured to the Company:—

By THE METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS	£370,000
By THE COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS OF THE CITY OF LONDON	130,000
	£500,000

GUARANTEED MINIMUM TOLLS, £64,240 PER ANNUM, secured by Act of Parliament, which, with the other Sources of Revenue, will yield A CLEAR MINIMUM 4½ PER CENT. DIVIDEND on the Share Capital now for subscription, with probable increase to 5½ per cent. soon after the Opening of the Line, and further advancing as the Traffic is developed.

Directors.

The Right Hon. the LORD MAYOR . . Chairman.

Alderman Sir CHARLES WHETHAM, Chairman of the London and Blackwall Railway Company, of the National Provident Institution, and one of the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London.

Alderman Sir F. WYATT TRUSCOTT, Member of the Metropolitan Board of Works and one of the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London.

W. M. BULLIVANT, Esq. (Messrs. Bullivant and Co.), Millwall, and 72, Mark Lane.

JAMES GOODSON, Esq., Director of the Guardian Fire and Life Assurance Company.

E. F. D. WALSH, Esq., Charges Street, Piccadilly.

J. S. FORBES, Esq., Chairman of the Metropolitan District Railway Company, G. W. CURRIE, Esq., Vice-Chairman of the ditto ditto, The Right Hon. Viscount GORT, Director of the ditto ditto } Representing the Metropolitan District Railway Company.

Abridged Prospectus.

The Directors of the Metropolitan Inner Circle Completion Railway Company are now prepared to receive applications for £1,200,000, being the Share Capital proposed to be raised, in 120,000 Shares of £10 each, payable as follows:

£1 0 0	per Share, payable	on Application.
1 0 0	" "	on Allotment.
2 0 0	" "	on 1st February, 1878.
2 0 0	" "	on 1st April, 1878.
1 10 0	" "	on 1st June, 1878.
1 10 0	" "	on 1st December, 1878.
1 0 0	" "	on 1st February, 1879.
£10 0 0

The Metropolitan Inner Circle Railway, called the "Link Line," will supply the only link now wanting to complete the Underground Inner Circle Railway system, which, though hitherto incomplete, has so greatly benefitted the Metropolis generally, by affording quick and cheap locomotion to all parts.

Though a private undertaking, the character of the work and its great necessity and usefulness have excited an amount of public attention seldom given to other than National works.

The course of it will be as follows:—From the Mansion House Station of the District Railway it will pass almost entirely beneath Cannon Street, and thence under a new street to be formed by the Company between Eastcheap and Fenchurch Street, near Mincing Lane, and be continued under Fenchurch Street to the junction near Aldgate with the Metropolitan Railway. This street will, in fact, be an extension eastward of Queen Victoria Street and Cannon Street.

A contract has been entered into with Mr. T. A. Walker (who has had great experience in the construction of important underground lines in London, including the District Railway, and portions of the Metropolitan Railway), whereby he undertakes to construct and complete the railway, &c., and the street improvements, by 1st August, 1879 (with a bonus for earlier completion), and receiving the earnings of the line from the portions as opened until the whole is completed, to pay interest at 5 per cent. per annum on the capital paid up on calls from the due date of each call, until 1st of August, 1879.

The contract includes the construction of convenient Refreshment Rooms or Restaurants, Lavatories, &c., at each of the three stations, which owing to their central and public position in the heart of the business portion of the City, will yield a large annual rental to this Company. The Mansion House Station Restaurant alone, not nearly so well placed as the Stations of this Company, yields about £3,000 per annum income to the District Company.

The works will be proceeded with and continued with all vigour; and the portion from the Mansion House Station to Eastcheap, which includes the two Stations at Cannon Street and Eastcheap, will, with the New Street and street improvements, it is expected, be completed by 31st December, 1878.

The minimum guaranteed Toll on the 440 trains to be run per day, which, with the Rebate, is absolutely guaranteed by the District Company, with the other sources of Revenue mentioned below, which are estimated on reliable data, is equal to a Dividend of £4 10s. per cent. per annum on the Share Capital, as under:—

440 trains per day, at 8s. per train . .	£64,240
10 per cent. Rebate on new traffic . .	7,500
Rent of Refreshment Rooms, Book Stalls, Advertising Boards, Lavatories	13,000	84,740
Less—Running and Maintaining the Line, Board, Officers, and Office Expenses . .		14,000
		70,740
Interest on Debenture Stock, 4 per cent. on £400,000		16,000
Leaving net revenue available for dividend on the Share Capital of £1,200,000		54,740 being upwards of 4½ per cent. per annum.

By the agreement with the District Company, from the tolls payable on the 440 trains to be run per day, which with the rebate is absolutely guaranteed by the District Company, from the completion and opening of the line, combined with the other sources of revenue above specified, a net income equal to 4½ per Cent. on the Share Capital now for subscription will arise. Any arrears of such tolls and rebate would become a cumulative debt on that Company, payable out of its net profits available for Dividend on its ordinary Stock, in perpetual priority to the dividends upon the whole of that Stock, which profits are estimated by Mr. Forbes to reach and probably exceed £30,000 per annum, before the opening of the Link Line.

The financial prospects of the Link Line may therefore be considered sound and satisfactory, producing as they do a minimum dividend of £4 10s. per cent., rising steadily within a comparatively short period to a probable 6 per cent. and upwards on the Share Capital.

The agreement gives to the District Company the option, expressly stipulated for by them, of purchasing the entire undertaking on the following terms:— * * * * It will be seen, therefore, that a profit may be looked for if the line is purchased of from £22 to £46 per £100 Stock.

Subscribers are at liberty to pay up the balance due on their Shares on any day when an instalment becomes payable, whereupon interest at 5 per cent. per annum will immediately accrue thereon.

Full Prospectuses and Forms of Application, with Map of London showing the Link Line, &c., can be obtained at the Bankers, The National Provincial Bank of England, 112, Bishopsgate Street, E.C., and its branches, or Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, and Co., 67, Lombard Street, E.C., and of the Brokers, Messrs. Helbert, Wagg, and Campbell, 18, Old Broad Street, E.C., or Messrs. Panmure, Gordon, and Co., Hatton Court, Threadneedle Street, E.C., or at the Offices of the Company, 6, Westminster Chambers, Victoria Street, Westminster.

By Order of the Board,
ARTHUR HIGGINSON, Secretary.
London, Oct. 31, 1877.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will begin on Monday, January 28.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.—The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

FOR BLANC-MANGE, PUDDINGS, CUSTARDS,
CHILDREN AND INVALIDS' DIET,
AND ALL THE USES OF ARROWROOT,
BROWN and POLSON'S
CORN FLOUR
HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION,
AND IS DISTINGUISHED FOR
UNIFORMLY SUPERIOR QUALITY.

AMERICAN CENTENNIAL
PRIZE MEDAL.
FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.
"The Caracas Cocoa of such choice quality."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.

FRY'S EXTRACT OF COCOA.
Of great value to invalids who wish to avoid rich articles of diet.
"Which really consists of Cocoa Nibs deprived of the superfluous oil."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.
TENTH INTERNATIONAL MEDAL
awarded to J. S. FRY and SONS.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.
Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.
Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted. Four times the strength of Cocoas Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, Starch, &c., and really cheaper.
The Faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestive Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER," and invaluable for Invalids and Children. Keeps in all Climates. Requires no Cooking. A teaspoonful in Breakfast cup costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis.
H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam Street, London, W.C.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS.

JOHNSTON'S (The Old House)
CORN FLOUR
IS THE BEST.
"Is decidedly superior."—Lancet.
JOHNSTON'S SCOTCH OATMEAL, in packets, with plain directions for making Porridge, Brose, and Gruel.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. per bushel; households for bread, 9s. 4d.; wheat meal for brown bread, 8s. 8d; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s. 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 22s. 4d.; ground pollard, 1s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of George Young.

HEDGES and Butler, 155, Regent Street, London, and 30 and 74, King's Road, Brighton, invite attention to their
CLARET, at 14s., 18s., 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., to 84s.
SHERRY, at 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., to 60s.
CHAMPAGNE, at 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., 66s., to 78s.
OLD PORT, at 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., to 96s.
Fine old Pale Brandy, 48s., 60s., 72s., 84s.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. Hassall says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY
"THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."
Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS., 1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argylesbire.)

WILLS' "BEST BIRD'S-EYE" CIGARETTES
Sold everywhere in Sixpenny Packets (containing Ten), protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

WILLS' "THREE CASTLES."
"There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—Vide "The Virginians." Sold only in Packets, protected by the Name and Trade Mark of
W. D. and H. O. WILLS.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

E. DENT and CO., 61, Strand, and 43, Royal Exchange, London, Manufacturers of CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, CLOCKS, &c. (Catalogues free) to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and Foreign Sovereigns.
Makers of the Great Westminster Clock and of the New Standard Clock of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
Mansion House Buildings, City, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S TABLE CUTLERY.—BEST QUALITY DOUBLE SHEAR STEEL.

	Table	Dessert	Carvers
Ivory, per doz. . . .	15s. 0d.	11s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
Ivory, balance, per doz. .	19s. 0d.	15s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
Ivory, balance, per doz. .	22s. 0d.	16s. 0d.	7s. 6d.
Ivory, stout, per doz. .	32s. 0d.	22s. 0d.	9s. 6d.
4 inch fine Ivory, per doz. .	34s. 0d.	24s. 0d.	10s. 6d.

Oak Boxes always kept ready in stock.
Illustrated catalogues post free.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
76, 77, and 78, Oxford Street, West End, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

DEANE'S TABLE CUTLERY, celebrated for more than 150 years, remains unrivalled for quality and cheapness. The stock is extensive and complete, affording a choice suited to every purchaser.

Ivory Handles.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Table Knives, doz.	16 0	19 0	22 0	25 0	32 0	35 0	40 0
Dessert ditto "	14 0	16 0	19 0	21 0	27 0	30 0	34 0
Carvers, pair	6 0	6 6	7 0	8 0	9 0	10 6	13 0

DEANE'S FENDERS & FIREIRONS.
DEANE and CO.'s Show Rooms for these goods contain a large, cheap, and choice variety of patterns.

Fenders, Drawing Room	£2 5	£3 3	£6 6	£11 11	£15 0
Fire Irons ditto	1 5	1 15	2 2	4 10	5 10
Fenders, Dining Room .	0 17	1 4	1 10	2 5	4 4
Fire Irons ditto	0 10	0 15	1 1	1 10	2 5

Bed Room Fenders, 3s. to 18s.; Fire Irons, 3s. to 12s.
Deane and Co.'s Catalogue, with furnishing Estimates post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, King William St., London Bridge.

WEDDING PRESENTS.—MECHI, 112, Regent Street, W.—Customers wishing to obtain for WEDDING, BIRTHDAY, or COMPLIMENTARY PRESENTS, dressing-cases and dressing-bags, writing-cases, work-tables, inkstands, card-boxes, tea-caddies, cutlery in all its branches, electro-plated and silver dessert knives and forks, and other articles of utility or ornament, will find every variety in style, elegance, design, and price at MECHI'S, 112 Regent Street. Catalogues post free.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons.—

The Osborne, in pink or green	£3 5 0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3 13 6
The Bramble, in all colours	4 4 0
The One Thousand and Two	5 5 0
The One Thousand and Two A	5 5 0
The Japanese Bamboo	6 6 0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

FOR ARMS and CREST SEND NAME and COUNTY to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Office, 44, High Holborn, W.C. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. Illustrated Price Lists Post free.

TO MOUNT DRAWINGS, SCRAPS, PHOTOGRAPHS, &c., smoothly, and without the vexatious wrinkling, warping, and smearing usually attending the use of other adhesives, get "PARLOUR PASTE." Sold by all Stationers. Wholesale, J. ORDISH and CO., 108, Hatton Garden, London, E.C.

CLARKE'S LITTLE MODELLER.—How to make a Model Village, Railway Farm, Poultry Yard, and eight others. 250 Engravings. Post free for 14 stamps. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

THE MOST LAUGHABLE THING on EARTH.—A new Parlour Pastime, 30,000 Comical Transformations for Evening Parties. Post free for 14 stamps. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

THE WIZARD'S BOX of MAGIC. Instructions and Apparatus for performing Ten Capital Conjuring Tricks. Sufficient for one hour's amusement. Post free, 14 stamps.—H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

TOOTH-ACHE.
INSTANT CURE.
FORMS A STOPPING.
SAVES THE TOOTH.
J. Hounsell, Esq., Surgeon, Bridport, writes:—"I consider Bunter's Nervine a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief."
Of all chemists, at 1s. 1½d. per packet.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

WOOD-CUTTING for AMATEURS.—No previous knowledge required. Thousands of pretty things in Cut Wood, Baskets, Stands for Flowers, &c. Candelabras, Pipe Cases, &c., &c., can be cut by Lorin's Wood-cutting Machines, everything complete. Drawings, saws, &c., from 8s.—Wholesale and Retail, to be had at the Manufacturers, JACQUES LORIN FILS, 3, Rue de la Fidelité, Paris. Catalogues free on application.

A WELL FURNISHED BED and SITTING ROOM, communicating, TO LET for a Single Gentleman in a private family. No other lodgers and no young children. A good bathroom, with hot and cold bath. Easy access to the City.—Address F., 78, St. Augustine Road, Camden Square, N.W.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.
is now offering an extensive and well-selected Stock of SEAL, SABLE, and other CHOICE FURS, including
Russian Seal Jackets,
24 to 28 inches deep, 6 to 10 guineas.
Demi-fitting Seal Paletots,
30 to 36 inches deep, 9 to 20 guineas.
South Sea Seal Jackets, loose shapes, from 2 guineas.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN
MANTLES AND PALETOTS,
Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 2 to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL.
CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.
The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s.
Patterns and Engravings free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR WINTER DRESSES,
in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour,
From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

IN 62 NEW SHADES OF COLOUR.
CACHEMIRE DE PARIS.
This elegant material is all wool, beautifully soft, and richer in its colourings than any article previously introduced.
48 inches wide, 2s. 11d. and 3s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool,
This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 3s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

A NEW FABRIC FOR PALETOTS, &c.
POIL DE CHAMEAU (Registered).
This elegant fabric, though very warm, is remarkably light and soft, and can be had in choice shades of Fawn, Drab, Grey, Light Brown, &c. 54 inches wide, from 4s. 9d. per yd.
Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford St., W.

A NEW FABRIC IN BLACK
CRÈPE CASHMERE (Registered).
A most useful material in six different designs, full width, 1s. 9d. per yard. Specially adapted for this season's Costumes. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

NOW ON SALE AT HALF-PRICE.
1,000 UNMADE PALETOTS (Black),
Richly embroidered on very fine Cashmere or
Diagonal Cloth, full size and newest shapes,
from 29s. 6d. to 42s. each, formerly 3 to 4 guineas.

IN WHITE, BLACK, AND ALL NEW COLOURS
VELVET-FINISH'D VELVETEENS,
beautifully soft, rich, and very wide.
This charming Fabric can be had in Black,
from 2s. 9d. to 5s. 6d. per yard, and in 35 choice shades,
of colour, at 3s. 9d. per yard. Patterns free
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE PURCHASE OF
NEW COLOURED SILKS,
at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., and 4s. 4½d. per yard, also a richer quality at 5s. 3d., usually sold at 7s. 6d. per yard.
250 shades to select from. Patterns free.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES OF
BLACK GROS GRAINS.
This extensive purchase comprises Silks of the best and most reliable makes, and are specially recommended.
Prices 2s. 6½d., 3s. 3½d., and 3s. 9d. per yard.
Also richer goods from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

COLOURED GENOA VELVETS
to match every Silk, short pile, well covered, suitable for Gowns, 6s. 11d. per yard, any length cut. Patterns free.

BLACK GENOA VELVETS,
suited for trimming purposes, 2s. 11d. to 7s. 6d. per yd.
A special purchase of Black Lyons Velvet, all silk,
at 9s. 11d. per yard. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

COLOURED SILK COSTUMES
of the latest designs and most fashionable description,
in all the new colour Silks, commencing at 6½ guineas.
Patterns of the Silks and Engravings post free.

BLACK SILK COSTUMES,
made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, price with bodice complete, 5½ guineas.
Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN
WINTER COSTUMES.
Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas.
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling,
Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas.
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses.
Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses
in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas.
Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.
THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black),
profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train,
1 guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours,
for 28s. 9d., with material for bodice.
Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from
PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

Established in Seventeen Hundred and Seventy-Nine BRIDES AND BRIDESMAIDS are invited to inspect,
at CAPPER, SON, and CO.'S
Warehouses, the various qualities and designs in Underclothing, Silks, Fancy Dress Materials, Costumes, Millinery, Mantles, Sheetings, Towellings, Table Linen, Blankets, Quilts, and all similar requisites for personal as well as for household use.
These articles are all made up on the premises, and Ladies can select at the counters their Silks, Linens, Laces, Madeira Works, Longcloths, and other fabrics, before they are sent to the various work-rooms.
Lists, with prices,
On application to CAPPER, SON, and CO., Gracechurch Street and Fenchurch Street, London, E.C.

PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,
Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind
In London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.

"ON RECEIPT of LETTER
or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—
with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required),
without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well
as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY

PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street
OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended.

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d.
Joubert	at 4s. 6d.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.
Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk Trimming Velvets.
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.

A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK,
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned,
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One
Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,
Costumes in New Black Materials,
in various fashionable Styles,
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 52s. 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialité,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9½ guineas.
36 inches long for 11 guineas.
39 inches long for 13 guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
it is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

SEALSKIN PALETOTS.—Reduction of Prices.—Messrs. WAYRE having made large importations of Russian Sealskins, are enabled to offer

SEALSKIN PALETOTS, 30 inches long,
8 guineas.

SEALSKIN PALETOTS, 33 inches long,
9 guineas.

SEALSKIN PALETOTS, 36 inches long,
11 guineas.

SEALSKIN PALETOTS, 40 inches long,
16 guineas.

SEALSKIN PALETOTS, 46 inches long,
20 guineas.

SEALSKIN PALETOTS, 40 inches long,
richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 20 guineas; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 guineas; Skunk, 20 guineas.

SEALSKIN PALETOTS can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing
FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 33a, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus.

LADIES' IRISH ULSTER COATS,
made in the best manner by experienced tailors. Immense variety of Irish Frieres and other fashionable materials. Patterns and forms for self-measurement post free.
RICHARD ALLEN, Sackville Street, Dublin.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The
most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 30s., 40s., 45s. half-dozen.

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER-
SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk. It will entirely dispense with the ever-shrinking coloured flannel, 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-measure free by post.—FORD and CO., 41 and 44, Poultry, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW AUTUMN DRESS GOODS.
1,000 New Patterns of the choicest Shades and designs, the productions of various European nations.
7,000 yards of Autumn Serge, 10½d. the yard.
Yachting Serges, 6¾d. and 10½d. the yard.
Autumn Beges, 8¾d. the yard.
Matelasse Serge, 1s. 3½d. (Sage, Olive Green, &c)
Estamene Serges, 1s. 3½d. and 1s. 6½d.
Homespun Estamene, 1s. 6½d., 27 in. wide.
New Snowflakes, Camel's Hair, and Vicuna Cloths.
Shetland Estamene, 27 in. wide, 1s. 4½d. the yard.
Poil de Chameau, French production, all wool, 30 in. wide, 1s. 9½d. the yard.
The Royal Blue Naval Serge, 1s. 0½d. (all wool).
The "Inflexible" Serge, 1s. 0½d. and 1s. 4½d.
The "Princess" Serge, 1s. 6½d. and 1s. 11½d. yard.
The New Circassian Cord, 11½d. yd., superb colours.
Scarboro' Twill, 1s. 0½d.; Derby Matelasse, 1s. 0½d.; New Autumn Kink Skirting, 1s. 11½d. the yard, 40 in. wide; Indian Cashmere, Autumn Shades, 48 in. wide, 2s. 11½d. yard.
These and other Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW SILK PATTERNS are now ready.
The Princess Black Silk, 3s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 4s. 9d. } A New Make of
The Princess Black Silk, 5s. 9d. } Extreme Richness
The Princess Black Silk, 6s. 9d.
BLACK SILKS, 1s. 6½d. to 10s. the yard.
The Queen's Black Silk, 7s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 8s. 11d. } Superb Goods &
The Queen's Black Silk, 9s. 11d. } Splendid Wear.
The Queen's Black Silk, 10s. 11d.
A special parcel of Coloured Silks, 2s. 11½d. yard.
Coloured Gro Grain Silks, 3s. 11½d., 4s. 11d., 5s. 11d., and 6s. 11d. the yard. Floral Silks for Trimmings, 3s. 9½d. Japanese Figures, 1s. 3½d.
A Special Lot Black Velveteens, 1s. 11½d., and Colours, at 2s. 10½d. yard. Patterns free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.
Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 1s. 3½d. Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s. 11½d. Double-width Melton Cloths, 2s. 6½d., 1s. 11½d., and 2s. 11½d.
Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s. 11d. to 6s. 11d.
Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d. Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard. All Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S COSTUMES,
as lately shown at the Grand Autumn Exhibition and Costumes Contest at the Alexandra Palace.
"Harrogate"—Bronze Green Cachmere and Velveteen Costumes, £1 4s.
"Ventnor"—Fawn, Homespun, and Brown Braid, Jacket and Hat, £5 13s. 6d.
"Silverton"—Brown Cachmere and Velveteen, £3 18s. 6d.
"Glenthorne"—Prune Snowflake and Pink Silk, £2 10s. 6d.
"Bromley"—Bronze Cachmere and Blue Silk, with Cape, £4 4s.
"Clairmont"—Fawn Serge and Brown Velveteen, £2 10s. 6d.
"Christine"—Black Velveteen and Silk Jacket and Hat, £5 5s.
"Lymington"—Fawn Matelasse and Velvet Galloon, Jacket and Hat, £4 10s. 6d.
"Zasel"—Brown Velveteen and Cream Brocaded Silk, £4 4s.
"Moscow"—Fawn Camel's Hair Cloth, with Lynx Fur Jacket, Hat and Muff, £6 6s.
"Clyde"—Fawn, Chamrau, Cloth and Raccoon Fur, Jacket, Hat and Muff, £5 10s. 6d.
"St. Malo"—Prune Velveteen and Grey Fur, Jacket, Hat, and Muff, £5 18s. 6d.
"Bonnie Fishwife"—Blue Serge and Red Twill, with Cap, £2 18s. 6d.
"Normandy"—Green Serge and White Braid Jacket and Hat, £2 18s. 6d.
"Chiswick"—Deep Mourning Costume. Black Cachmere and Crape, with Bonnet, £4 10s. 6d.
"Chislehurst"—Complimentary Mourning Richly Trimmed Black Silk, £6 6s.
Patterns of Materials, Photographs, and every particular, post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
UNDERCLOTHING and OUTFITTING.
A new Illustrated Price List is now ready, and can be sent free to any address; also Photographs of the New Exhibition Prize Setts, Collars, and Collarettes.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
£20,000 worth.
Faithfully recommended to their Customers by MESSRS. JAY.
These Silks are unweighted, pure in quality, and may be fully relied on to wear well.

Present price	Last year's price
3s. 9d.	5s. 9d.
4s. 3d.	6s. 6d.
4s. 9d.	7s. 3d.
5s. 3d.	8s. 3d.
5s. 9d.	9s. 6d.
6s. 9d.	10s. 3d.

TO CHARITIES, COMMUNITIES,
&c.—BLANKET SERGE.—Messrs. JAY have had manufactured a really stout, warm, and durable BLANKET SERGE in Black, Grey, and Dark Blue, suitable for Dresses or Petticoats, which they are now selling in quantities of not less than one whole piece (60 yards) at the low price of One Shilling per yard.

SEALSKIN and FUR-LINED MANTLES.
Purchasers may rest assured that they have, by buying early, the first choice of the best furs and patterns, and can now get them at a Cheaper Cost at
JAY'S,
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
Regent Street, W.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.
BRUSSELS CARPETS.
VELVET CARPETS, &c.
EXHIBITION MEDALS, 1851, 1862: DUBLIN, 1865.
34 and 36, OLD BOND STREET, W.

DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP of
GASK and GASK.
SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK of
Silk Mercery, General Drapery, &c.
ALL NEW THIS SEASON.
Great reductions in price will be made
throughout all the departments, and all goods marked in plain figures at the lowest prices,
for ready money only.
Silks, Costumes, Mantles, Dress Fabrics, Linens,
Blankets, Gloves, Hosiery, Lace Goods, Mourning, &c., &c.
Doors will be opened at 10 o'clock.
GASK and GASK,
58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street, and Wells Street.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)
BOYS' SUITS.
SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

THE KENSINGTON SCHOOL OF
ART EMBROIDERY is NOW OPEN. Orders received for every description of Fancy Needlework.
95, High Street, Kensington.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the finest purifiers of the blood. They speedily correct all disorders of the liver and stomach, are invaluable in cases of dysentery, and as a general family medicine have no equal.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.

VICHY.
Property of the French Government.
CELESTINS—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.
HAUTERIVE—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.
GRANDE-GRILLE—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.
HOPITAL—For Stomach complaints, &c.
VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.
CAUTION—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.
Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants.
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S
EMACERATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing. 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, S.W.; or through any Chemist.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD
LIVER OIL (Registered).
The purest Oil, and by Almond flavouring rendered palatable and easy of digestion.
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.
British Medical Journal says—Whilst securing the beneficial results traceable to Cod Liver Oil as a valuable tonic and dietetic, we have found no difficulty in inducing our little patients to take it.
Sanitary Record says—We have tried its effect on the most delicate constitutions with marked effect, so well are the odour and taste of the Oil disguised that children will take the preparation with avidity.
Medical Times says—The taste is decidedly masked by the almond flavouring.
Medical Press—Has an agreeable smell and flavour, and we can testify that the result is satisfactory.
Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists,
And Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited),
Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.—
This excellent Family Medicine is the most effective remedy for indigestion, bilious and liver complaints, loss of appetite, drowsiness, giddiness, spasms, and all disorders of the stomach and bowels; or where an aperient is required, nothing can be better adapted.
For FEMALES, these Pills are truly excellent, removing the distressing headache so very prevalent, depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, and sallowness of skin, and give a healthy bloom to the complexion. Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS
POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 82, Southwark St., London.

CURES by DR. LOCOCK'S Pulmonic
WAFERS, of coughs, consumption, asthma, bronchitis, &c. Mr. Thresh, Chemist, Buxton, writes: "No other medicine cures so quickly, safely, or pleasantly." Price 1s. 1½d.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-
STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

MORSON'S
PEPSINE,
AND ITS PREPARATIONS
FOR INDIGESTION.
SEE NAME ON LABEL.
HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.
As WINE, in bottles, at 3s., 5s., 9s.
LOZENGES, at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.
GLOBULES, at 2s., 3s. 6d., and 6s. 6d.
And as POWDER, in one-ounce bottles, at 4s. each.
SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS, AND THE MANUFACTURERS,
MORSON and SON,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQUARE, LONDON.

TAMAR-INDIEN, a laxative, refreshing,
and medicated Fruit Lozenge—the effectual Cure of Constipation, Headache, Bile, Hæmorrhoids, &c. Tamar (unlike pills and the usual purgatives) is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation. 2s. 6d. per box; post free, 2s. 8d. E. GRILLON, Wool Exchange, E.C., and of all Chemists.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR INDIGESTION, WIND, HEARTBURN, &c.
Also unrivalled as a Tonic, Purifying, Family Aperient Medicine, without Mercury.

DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER
PILLS, prepared by W. LAMBERT, 1a, Vere Street, London, W. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box; post free for 15 or 35 penny stamps, or of all Chemists. See you have the right Pills, "Dr. Scott's," which are wrapped in a square green package.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT
BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877.
A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE

BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE
OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO.
Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE
and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE & LUBIN's SWEET SCENTS
—Opoponax, Jockey Club, Patchouly, Frangipanni, Kiss-me-Quick, White Rose, and 1,000 others from every flower that breathes a fragrance, 2s. 6d. each, 3 bottles in a case, 7s. The above sweet scents in sachet powder, 1s. 6d. each, can be forwarded by post. Sold by fashionable Druggists and Perfumers in all parts of the world.

PIESSE and LUBIN's PESTACHIO
NUT SKIN AND COMPLEXION POWDER imparts a natural whiteness and youthful delicacy to the skin attainable by no other means; also represses the unpleasantness of too copious perspiration.—2, New Bond Street, London, W. May be had of all the fashionable perfumers and druggists throughout the earth. In boxes, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.

HAIR DESTROYER.—248, High Hol-
born, London.—ALEX. ROSS's DEPILATORY removes superfluous hair from face and arms without injury. 3s. 6d. Sent post free, carefully packed, for 54 stamps by Alex. Ross.

THE NOSE MACHINE applied to the nose for an hour daily so directs the soft cartilage of the nose that an ill-formed one is quickly shaped, 10s. 6d. Sent for stamps.—ALEX. ROSS, 248, High Holborn, London.

Folio, price 7s. 6d. each.

THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS: a Series of Volumes illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.
"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to excite and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE
BOOK, No. 1: or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By ADAM WHITE, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE
BOOK, No. 2: or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE
BOOK, No. 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE
BOOK, No. 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION—
THE NEW PICTURE BOOK; or, PICTURIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by NICHOLAS BOHNY.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.

THE HEROES OF YOUNG
AMERICA. By ASCOTT R. HOPE, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominoes," &c., &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.

ADVENTURES IN THE AIR: being
Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. DE FONVIELLE. Translated and edited by JOHN S. KELTIE.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

JUST PUBLISHED.—RIMMELL'S
PERFUMED ALMANACS "ARTS AND SCIENCES," richly illuminated, 6d. FAN ALMANAC, 6d. COMIC POCKET BOOK ALMANAC (Olympus), 1s. Sent on receipt of Stamps, 96, Strand; 128, Regent Street; 24, Cornhill.

Just Published, in One thick Vol., strongly Half-bound, 760 pp., price 6s., postage 6d.

THE HOUSE BOOK: A BOOK for
EVERY FAMILY. Containing Housekeeping, Cookery, Household Work, Boldour, Nursery, Cellarage of Wines, Beer, &c., Dairy Management, Stable Economy, Gardening, &c.—Domestic Medicine, Symptoms, Causes, and Treatment of most Common Ailments. Accidents, Emergencies, &c.—Management of Health, Air, Light, Heat, Ventilation, Diet, Clothing, Sleep, Bathing, &c.
CROSBY LOCKWOOD and CO., 7, Stationers' Hall Court, London, E.C.

"FINIS."
The New Annual, by the Authors of the COMING K——, will be issued on 1st December. Published for the Benefit of the Children of the Late S. O. BEETON, by GOUBAUD and SON, 39 and 40, Bedford Street, Covent Garden. Price One Shilling. Postage 2d.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.

ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN.
Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

THE MUSICAL TIMES. Price 3d.
⁂ The largest and best Musical Journal.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for NOVEM-
BER contains:—The Great Composers, sketched by themselves; Mozart, by J. Bennett—A Sketch of the History of Music-Printing, by Dr. Chrysander (continued)—Festival Committees and New Works—Mdlle. Titiens—Crystal Palace Concerts—Liverpool Philharmonic Society—Advent Anthem: "Hearken unto Me, My People," by Arthur Sullivan—Reviews—Foreign and Country News, &c. Postage free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for NOVEM-
BER contains a New Anthem for Advent, by Arthur Sullivan, "Hearken Unto Me, My People." Price separately, 1½d.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC
Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By
ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr.
STAINER. Price 2s.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC
PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAU-TIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s.
(Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.)

LIEDER OHNE WORTE. Eight
Books. The only complete edition. Cloth, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S
CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS, NEW AND OLD. Edited by the Rev. H. R. BRAMLEY and Dr. STAINER. With 45 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Elegantly bound, 7s. 6d.
THE SUNLIGHT OF SONG. Sacred and Moral Songs, with Original Music by the most eminent English Composers. With 46 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Handsomely bound, 7s. 6d.
NATIONAL NURSERY RHYMES. Set to Music by J. W. ELLIOTT. With 65 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 21s.; octavo, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.; octavo, paper covers, 5s.
MOZART'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 18s.
MENDELSSOHN'S LIEDER OHNE WORTE. The best and only Complete Edition, containing the Seventh and Eighth Books. Folio, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 12s.; octavo, handsomely bound, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.
⁂ Order Novello's Edition.
RUBINSTEIN'S EIGHTEEN TWO-PART SONGS. German and English Words. Octavo, handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM. English and German Words. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM FOR YOUNG PIANISTS (Op. 68 and Op. 15). Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM. Original German Words, and an English Version by JOHN OXENFORD. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.
A DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. Edited by Dr. STAINER and W. A. BARRETT. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 16s.
MUSICAL MYTHS AND FACTS. By CARL ENGEL. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s.
LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.,
1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES in PIANOFORTES.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE. Compass 5 Octaves, 15 gs., or £1 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL PIANINOS. From Canadian Walnut, 20 gs., or 2 gs. per qr. on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS, 30 gs., or £3 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR PIANINO, 35 gs., or £3 10s per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL, 40 gs., or £4 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL, 45 gs., or £4 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S FOREIGN MODEL, 50 gs., or £5 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH OBLIQUE, 55 gs., or £5 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S OBLIQUE GRAND, 70 gs., or £7 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE, 90 gs., or £9 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND, 80 gs., or £8 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR IRON GRAND, 110 guineas, or £11 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED VARIETIES on VIEW.

MAY BE HAD OF ALL PIANO-FORTE DEALERS throughout the United Kingdom.

SHOW-ROOMS, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

STEAM FACTORY, CHALK FARM ROAD, N.W.

THE ILLUSTRATED SONGS OF SCOTLAND. BOOSEY and CO. beg to announce a new and very superb edition of the Songs of Scotland, containing twelve full-page illustrations by

Frank Dicksee.	A. Hunt.
J. MacRalston.	P. Skelton.
W. Small.	E. B. Leighton.

The book contains 190 songs, the music edited by J. Pittman and Colin Brown, the words revised (with notes) by Charles Mackay. The Illustrated Songs of Scotland are printed in one volume, imperial 8vo, very beautifully bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.

BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S
CHRISTMAS PRESENTS in MUSIC,
all handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges.
THE ILLUSTRATED SONGS OF SCOTLAND (190 songs with twelve full-page illustrations) 10s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited by W. Dorrell. 10s 6d.
MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS. 4s.
SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. 4s.
CHOPIN'S WALTZES, NOCTURNES, and MAZURKAS. 4s.
STRAUSS' WALTZ ALBUM (18 sets). 4s.
THE ROYAL SONG BOOKS.
RUBINSTEIN'S 50 SONGS. 4s.
RUBINSTEIN'S 18 VOCAL DUETS. 4s.
BEETHOVEN'S 76 SONGS. 4s.
MENDELSSOHN'S 60 Songs. 4s.
SCHUMANN'S 75 SONGS. 4s.
THE SONGS OF GERMANY. 4s.
The above have all German and English words.
THE SONGS OF ENGLAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF SCOTLAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF IRELAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF WALES. 4s.
The above form a complete collection of National Songs.
SACRED SONGS. ANCIENT and MODERN. 4s.
HUMOROUS SONGS. 4s.
CHOICE DUETS FOR LADIES' VOICES. 4s.
All the 4s. volumes can be had in paper covers, 2s. 6d. each.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRU-MENTS FOR AMATEURS.
THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.

The above instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co. at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO.
Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps.
Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.
SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Grafenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancée Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

TO LADIES.—SALE of NEW MUSIC at a large reduction in price.—The most popular songs, pieces, or dances of the day sent post free from 4d., 6d., 8d., 10d., 1s., &c. Best editions, new copies, all publishers. Catalogues sent post free.—A. M. MOFFATT, 3, Barnsbury St., N.

ESTEY AMERICAN ORGANS, cheapest and best for quality, &c. LOW PRICES FOR CASH, or by monthly payments (in London and Suburbs only). Lists on application.—J. A. MILLS, 60, Moorgate Street, E.C.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATA-LOGUES of MUSIC.
Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3. HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4. VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.
Sent post free to any part of the World
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

POPULAR CLASSICS.—A series of sterling compositions for the Pianoforte Solo. Selected, edited, and fingered by WALTER MACFARREN. Sixty Numbers, price from 2s. to 5s. each. The series contains some of the most celebrated and beautiful works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Steibelt, Dussek, Hummel, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, &c. Detailed Lists forwarded gratis post free to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

Figaro. Fantasia on Mozart's Opera	4	0
Cynthia. Serenade	4	0
Souvenir de Bal	4	0
Air Danois	4	0

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FLYING DUTCHMAN. A most successful and effective piece on the melodies in Wagner's grand opera. Price 4s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S "EN ROUTE."—A grand brilliant Military March. Played by the composer at his recitals with enormous success. Price 4s., duet, 5s.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER'S PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS.—A COMPLETE CATALOGUE is NOW READY, and will be sent, on application, gratis and post free, to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

KING CHRISTMAS. J. L. HATTON'S celebrated Song. The popularity of this capital baritone Song is ever on the increase. Price 3s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

STANDARD VOCAL PART MUSIC.
THE SINGER'S LIBRARY.
An Unequalled Collection of
VOCAL CONCERTED MUSIC, TRIOS, QUARTETS, QUINTETS, &c.
Sacred and Secular, by the most renowned Composers, English and Foreign.
Edited by JOHN HULLAH.
Upwards of 150 Numbers. Price Twopence each.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

THE GLEE and CHORAL LIBRARY.
A COLLECTION OF STANDARD and Well-known VOCAL COMPOSITIONS,
As well as recent works by Macfarren, Hutton, Leslie, Balfe, &c.
Eighty Numbers. Price Twopence each.
Catalogues gratis and post free to any part of the world.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER'S PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS.—A COMPLETE CATALOGUE is NOW READY, and will be sent on application, post free, to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS"
LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.
OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.
Now Ready.
QUADRILLES by ARBAN. Solo and Duet, 2s each.
SUITE DE VALSES by O. METRA. Solo and duet 2s each.
POLKA, by ARBAN. 1s. 6d.
POLKA MAZURKA. 1s. 6d.
QUADRILLES by O. METRA. Solo or duet, 2s. each.
Also in the Press.
PIECES by BRINLEY RICHARDS and W. KUHE.
VOCAL SCORE in English and French Words.
BRILLIANT FANTASIA by E. MONIOT. Price 1s 6d
COMPLETE OPERA PIANO SOLO. Price 2s. 6d net.
SELECTIONS OF AIRS IN TWO BOOKS by CRAMER. 3s. each.
N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

HAROLD THOMAS'S POPULAR PIANO PIECES, all at half-price.
OPERATIC (very brilliant).
Il Trovatore (new). 4s.
La Traviata (new). 4s.
Stradella (new). 4s.
Le Prophète (new). 4s.
Lohengrin. 4s.
Tannhauser. 4s.
Mosé in Egitto. 4s.
Les Huguenots. 4s.
Faust (Gounod). 4s.
Lucia. 4s.
Masaniello. 4s.
Marta. 4s.
Freischütz. 4s.
Don Giovanni. 4s.

DRAWING-ROOM PIECES.
Les Cuirassiers 4s.
The Sleigh Drive. 4s.
Chant Rouman. 4s.
Air Styrien. 3s.
Birdie and Brooklet. 3s.
The Musical Clock. 3s.

MOST USEFUL TEACHING PIECES.
Albion (English Airs). 4s.
Erin (Irish Airs). 4s.
Cambria (Welsh Airs). 4s.
Scotia (Scotch Airs). 4s.
Catalogues of all Thomas's Piano Pieces forwarded on application to JOSEPH WILLIAMS, 24, Berners Street, 123, Cheapside.

AS SUNG BY SIGNOR GIANINI AT PROMENADE CONCERTS, COVENT GARDEN.
DAWN SONG (L'AURORA).
FLORIAN PASCAL.
Compass E to F Sharp. Key of D.
English and Italian words. Post free 18 stamps.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach.
ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS.
"A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play"
Compass D to F (in C). Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.
LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A). Compass E to C flat.
THE SIRENS (in F). Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S NEW PIECES.
PRES DU LAC (Meditation), artistically illustrated. Price 2s net.
UN BIJOU PERDU, artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
BERCEUSE. Price 1s 6d net.
LES VIEUX TEMPS. Gavotte. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LA PRINCESSE. Gavotte moderne. 1s 6d. net.
TRANSCRIPTIO BRILLANTE (Braham). As played by Madame Arabella Goddard). 2s. 6d net.

CH. NEUSTEDT'S CARILLON, LOUIS XIV. Piano Solo, 3s.
PIANO DUET, arranged by RUMMELL. 3s.
SMALL BAND PARTS. 1s. 6d. net.
FULL ORCHESTRA. 2s. net.
As performed at the Promenade Concerts.

L. GREGH. LES BERGÈRES WATTEAU. Piano Solo. 3s.
PIANO DUET, arranged by J. RUMMEL. 3s.
ORCHESTRAL PARTS. 2s. net.
As performed at the Promenade Concerts.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

CONCERTS, PENNY READINGS, &c.—POPULAR SONGS, VOCAL DUETS, TRIOS, and QUARTETS (part songs), selected from Messrs. ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S CATALOGUE. This list may be had, gratis and post free, on application at New Burlington Street.

CONCERT SONGS. Always successful. Ever Thine (soprano) (Abt), 4s.; Kathleen Aroon (contralto) (Abt), 4s.; Still is the night (bass) (Abt), 3s.; The Cuckoo's Song (soprano) (Abt), 3s.; Thee only I love (soprano) (Abt), 3s.; The Blacksmith (bass) (Cherry), 3s.; Ay or No (tenor) (F. H. Cowen), 4s.; Dear England (baritone) (L. Diehl), 3s.; Love never dies (baritone) (A. S. Gatty), 4s.; O fair dove (contralto) (A. S. Gatty), 4s.; Sing me that song again (tenor) (Guglielmo), 3s.; My boyhood's dream (baritone) (Hatton), 4s.; Droop not, young lover (bass) (Handel), 3s.; Open thy lattice (tenor) (J. Hullah) 3s.; Weep not, fond heart (tenor) (F. Kücken), 3s.; Home they brought (contralto) (Lindsay), 4s.; The Knight's Shield (contralto) (Pinsuti), 4s.; Don't forget me (soprano) (Pinsuti), 3s. Half price in stamps, post free.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY H. F. LIMPUS. The Skylark, 3s.; Slumber Song, 3s.; Evermore, 3s.; The Lifeboat, 3s.; half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY B. TOURS. My Little Picture, 3s.; A Little Bird's Story, 4s.; The Dog and the Shadow (Illus.), 3s.; The Message to Heaven, 3s. Half price in postage stamps. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY FRANZ ABT. Ever Thine, in C and E flat, 4s; Still is the night, 3s.; Spring Morning, 3s.; Golden Sunshine, 3s.; O ye tears, 4s.; Kathleen Aroon, 4s. Half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY CIRO PINSUTI. Waiting for the Swallows, 3s.; Sunset on the River, 4s.; Summer Friends, 3s; Ocean Voices, 3s; Don't forget me, 3s; The Knight's Shield, 4s.; What shall I sing to thee, 3s. Half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

SONGS BY J. ROECKEL.—So Far Away, 3s.; Unforgotten Days, 3s. Half price in postage stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

JULIETTE.—NEW WALTZ by La-MOTHE. Played at Arditi's Promenade Concerts. One of the prettiest of Lamothe's waltzes; full of melody, and easy to play. Post free for 2s.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street, London, and of all musicsellers in town and country.

THE Popular Song, LOVED AND LOST. The Words by PERCY FITZGERALD, adapted to MULLER'S Beautiful Waltz, "Geliebt und Verloren." Sold by every Musicseller in the United Kingdom. Post free, 2s.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

POPULAR WALTZES, easily arranged, without octaves, for piano, by JULES ROCHARD.
Loved and Lost. Muller.
The Last Kiss. Müller.
Rêve d'Amour. Lamothe.
Manolo. Waldteufel.
Beautiful Danube. Strauss
Doctrinen. Strauss
Morgenblätter. Strauss
Thousand and One Nights. Strauss.
Post free, 1s. each.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

STOLEN KISSES WALTZ. By HANS WALDENFELT. Free, 2s. "Sweetly played, universally admired, and, having established itself as one of the most popular waltzes of the season, no programme will be complete without it."—WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough St.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.
All for Her. No. 1 sop., No. 2 contralto. A. S. Gatty.
Maiden May. Two keys. A. S. Gatty. Sung by Madame Cave-Ashton.
Before the Storm. Baritone. A. S. Gatty.
Meha. No. 1 tenor, No. 2 baritone. V. Capoul. Sung by M. Capoul.
Be My Love. Baritone. C. Fox.
My Star. No. 1, contralto, No. 2 mezzo-sop. Julia Wolff.
Little Nannie. Soprano. Julia Wolff. Sung by Mrs. Osgood.
The Trooper's Dream. Baritone. Julia Wolff.
Post free 24 stamps each.
ENOCH and SONS, 19, Holles Street, W.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.

BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.

Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 22, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price, £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Piano-FORTE SCHOOL.
Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

MUSICAL LIBRARY SERIES.
Edited and carefully fingered by CHARLES HALLÉ.
58 Numbers now ready.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉS New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.
For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20 —GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

NOTICE. — LINOLEUM. — OETZ-MANN and CO. have now received all the new PRIZE DESIGNS in this favourite Floor Covering—warm, soft, and carpet-like in appearance. Prices reduced. A visit of inspection solicited. The trade supplied.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZ-MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PRE-MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

THE SANDRINGHAM EASY CHAIR, full size, upholstered very soft and comfortable, suitable for any room, price 25s.; lady's ditto, smaller size, 21s. Also the Sandringham Couch, upholstered very soft and comfortable, price 2 guineas. Every one about to furnish should see these marvels of excellence and economy. Packed free and despatched same day on receipt of order per post.

DRAWING-ROOM SUITES.—OETZ-MANN and CO.—Elegant Drawing Room Suite, richly carved Italian walnut-wood, upholstered very soft and comfortable, in best rep, consisting of a Couch, two Easy Chairs, and six Chairs, price 15 guineas; ditto, very handsome design, upholstered in rich Pekinade, made and finished in superior style, 20 guineas; ditto, very elegant design, richly upholstered in finest satin, and finished in the best possible manner, 33 guineas; also a variety of other Drawing-Room Suites, in Black and Gold, Early English, and other designs.

ARTISTIC FURNISHING.—OETZ-MANN & CO. are introducing a variety of Elegant Persian and Indian designs in RUGS and MATS, to meet the requirements for artistic furnishing at moderate cost. Large Rugs (excellent copies of real Persian and Indian) from 10s. each. A visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN & CO.

TURKEY CARPETS.—CLEARANCE SALE.—OETZMANN and CO.—A quantity of Turkey, Indian, Persian, Jubbalpore, Masulipatam, Farahan, Khorassan, Serabend, Koula, Ghiordes, and Kelim Carpets and Rugs, clearing out at greatly reduced prices, ranging from 15s. 9d. to 80 guineas. A reduced Price List, with sizes and description, sent post free on application. Prices will be found much below those usually charged. A quantity of Indian Rugs, 15s. 9d. each; some very handsome ditto, at 35s. to 45s.
OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

FLOOR-Cloth, Floor-Cloth, Floor-Cloth. Well seasoned, colours and designs to suit every style of decoration. An immense assortment for selection. Clearing out at 1s. 6d. per square yard; best quality and newest designs, 2s. 6d. A quantity of squares, 2 yards by 3 yards, 3 by 4, and other useful sizes, very cheap. Quotations forwarded per post on receiving size of room or hall. Bordered floor-cloth for passage or stairs from 9d. per yard.—OETZMANN and CO.

MADRID STRIPED CURTAINS, all wool, 3 yards long by 48 inches wide, 15s. per pair; 3½ yards, 17s. 6d.; 4 yards, 20s; best Worsted Damask Curtains, in green crimson, or any self colour, plaited top, bordered all round with best embroidered silk lace, 3 yards long by 51 inches wide, 25s. per pair; 3½ yards, 30s.; 4 yards, 35s.; best rep, ditto, 3 yards by 54 inches wide, 42s.; 3½ yards, 50s.; 4 yards, 57s. 6d. Forwarded same day on receipt of order. One trial will ensure recommendation. No common damask or rep used, sold, or advised. Descriptive lists post-free.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

ELECTRO-PLATE. CUTLERY.
ELECTRO-PLATE. CUTLERY.
ELECTRO-PLATE. CUTLERY.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY DE-PARTMENT.—Superior Electro Plate Tea and Coffee Pots, Spoons, Forks, Cruets, &c. (quality guaranteed); best warranted Table Cutlery, handsome Coal Vases, from 3s. 11d upwards; Dish Covers; Japanned Toilet Sets, full size, bath, pail, and can, various neat designs in colours, 8s. 11d. per set. Kitchen Ironmongery of every description. Mats, Matting, Brooms, Brushes, Pails, &c. Bronze Umbrella Stands, from 3s. 9d. Table Lamps, complete, good style, 3s. 11d.

EXHIBITION PATTERN COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the season much admired, handsomely japanned, and rich burnished gold ornamentation, with opal handles, strong loose lining, a great convenience and saving in wear. Price complete, 21s.—OETZMANN and CO.

CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICE.— OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGN, a beautiful Grecian shape, meets the great desideratum of art manufactures—viz., the shape best adapted for purposes of use required, combined with the most artistic design and decoration. Prices from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive Price List post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.
PULVERMACHER'S "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."
In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to
J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—NOVEMBER 10, 1877.

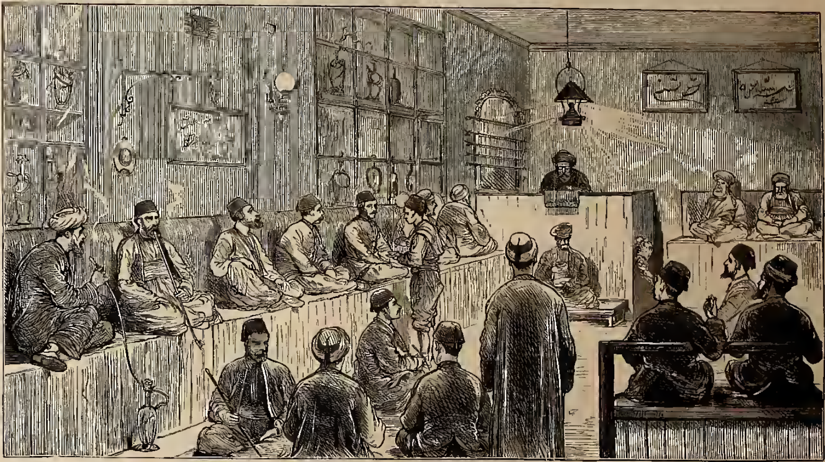
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

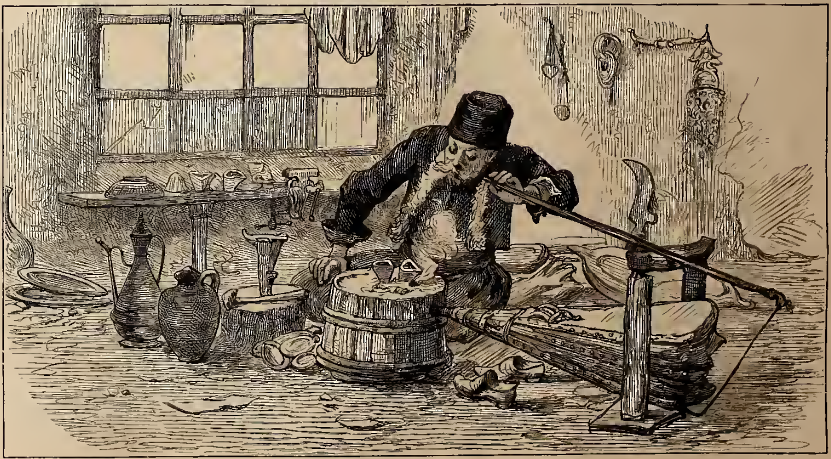
VOL. XVI.—No. 416
Regd at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



WITH THE TURKS AT CONSTANTINOPLE—READING NEWSPAPERS ALOUD AT NIGHT IN A STAMBOUL CAFÉ



WITH THE RUSSIANS AT SISTOVA—A JEWELLER'S SHOP

Topics of the Week

THE PROSPECTS OF PEACE.——Lord Beaconsfield has rarely succeeded better in mystifying the public than in his speech at the Guildhall last week. The Czar, he said, has solemnly asserted that his only object in fighting the Porte is to secure justice for the Christians. On the other hand, the Sultan loses no opportunity of declaring that he wishes nothing more earnestly than that the Christians should be happy and prosperous under his rule. Then why, asked the Premier, should we not have peace forthwith? He ought, however, rather to have asked, Why should there ever have been war? Since the two Sovereigns are so much of one mind, why are they not the best friends in Europe? Probably Lord Beaconsfield was only indulging in a little characteristic sarcasm; but his remarks have undoubtedly given rise to a vague idea that we may possibly soon see the end of the war. According to some observers, the fall of Plevna will be followed by immediate negotiations for peace. That Turkey would act wisely if she were to come to terms we have already repeatedly said, but we very much doubt whether she is likely to take the same view. Mr. Forster, in his speech at Bristol, accused Lord Beaconsfield of having indirectly, by the tone of his comments on the war, encouraged the Turks to continue fighting. Whether the charge is well founded or not, it is to be feared that they stand in very little need of encouragement. In the opening scenes of the campaign they were so brilliantly successful that their warlike spirit has been thoroughly aroused; and they are probably of opinion that if the standard of the Prophet was raised they would once more enter upon a career of victory. Besides, the Czar, although perhaps seeking no direct gain for Russia, would unquestionably make demands on the Porte which the Turks could accept only in case of utter exhaustion. On the whole, therefore, England is not likely for some time to come to find a favourable opportunity for the exercise of her good offices as a mediator.

LONDON WATER SUPPLY.——The Metropolitan Board of Works have decided to apply to Parliament for powers to buy up the rights of the existing Water Companies, and also to obtain a fresh supply of water from the chalk strata near London (which are calculated to be capable of yielding 16,000,000 gallons daily) for drinking purposes and for the extinction of fires. It is unnecessary at present to examine the details of this gigantic scheme, as it is sure to be thoroughly sifted in Parliament—the more so because the existing Water Companies, so far from being willing to surrender their privileges, are also intending to apply to Parliament for powers enabling them largely to increase their present works. The primary question, therefore, to be considered is whether the existing companies or the Metropolitan Board of Works are likely to furnish London in the future with the best and most plentiful supply of water. The fact that Glasgow, Manchester (pace the Thirlmere scheme), and other provincial cities are satisfactorily supplied with water by their respective municipalities scarcely furnishes sufficient data for applying the system to such an enormous area of inhabitancy as London comprises. The odds are that the existing companies who are in possession would do the work cheaper than the Board of Works; for, if they are compelled to sell, they are pretty sure, as in all such cases, to get a very high price for their property; and, if proper Parliamentary pressure is applied to them, they may be made to furnish their customers with a constant, instead of the present intermittent supply, which necessitates cisterns, in which the water stagnates and grows foul, and also to furnish an originally purer liquid than is in some cases now given. There certainly seems one weak point in the Metropolitan scheme, namely, the proposal to use the newly-obtained chalk water for putting out fires. Surely, for this purpose, and for street cleansing, any water would do. The true solution of the insufficient water-supply problem (though its practical application would be attended with considerable difficulty) would be to supply two distinct sorts of water; one for drinking, and for such manufacturing processes as require pure water; the other for purposes where extreme purity is not necessary.

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT AND THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.——The Republicans have begun their contest with the Government with remarkable prudence. They have simply taken steps to secure that the facts connected with the recent electoral struggle shall be fully and impartially investigated. Had the Ministry resigned when the will of the nation was made known, there would have been no absolute necessity for entering upon so disagreeable an inquiry; but they have chosen to retain their places, cynically relying upon the material force by which it is supposed that Marshal MacMahon can in the last resort defend himself and them. It is, therefore, essential that every fair political weapon should be turned against them; and probably none could be sharper and more effective than the simple exposure of their recent doings. It is notorious that they have violated the whole spirit of modern freedom in their insolent attempt to crush the national feeling, and it is at any rate possible that when the history of their misdeeds is made known, even they will be unable to stand before the storm of contempt of which they are certain to become the objects. According to the most probable accounts, the Duc de Broglie has enough shame left to make him sincerely anxious to escape from his present unenviable position. The Marshal alone appears to be responsible for his retention of power. With an obstinacy that has hardly a parallel in recent history, Marshal MacMahon is resolved to fight to the utmost against the country he nominally represents. He still continues to identify himself with a party, and to prove that he will use every means at his disposal to place in the hands of that party the political destinies of France. The Republicans, however, are acting with so much discretion that every day his chances of success become more and more slight. It is now clear to nearly everybody but himself that since he will not submit and cannot appeal to the army, he must ultimately resign. He might try another dissolution, if he could, but the Senate is hostile to the proposal, and even if it agreed, it may be doubted whether the Chamber would consent to dissolve, and whether it would not prove itself strong enough to maintain its obvious rights.

CHARITABLE OVER-BUILDING.——Those persons who are entrusted with the care of charity-money appear to be sorely tempted, if an opportunity offers, to sink an undue proportion of the funds at their disposal in bricks and mortar. The temptation can be easily understood. Not only are they surrounded at the time when building operations are deemed indispensable by architects, builders, and others who are more interested in enhancing their own reputation and in filling their own pockets than in securing the well-being of the institution; but also, it is just possible that, in some cases, a big imposing edifice acts as a good advertisement, it implies energy and prosperity, and, on the principle that "nothing succeeds like success," tends to attract further donations. But those charitable trustees whose building operations are in excess of their genuine requirements are not always so fortunate, and two recent examples—if not of absolute failure, at all events of crippled usefulness—should induce them for the future to act with greater caution. The liberal sum paid by the South-Eastern Railway Company for the site of St. Thomas's Hospital in the Borough seems to have turned the heads of the Governors of that institution. They erected at Stangate a splendid structure in separate pavilions. It is an undeniable ornament to the rather dull banks of our river, but it cost such a heap of money (600,000*l.*) that the Governors had to mortgage part of their hospital income before they could pay the bill. This lessened the means at their disposal so much that they were obliged to appeal to the public in order to put beds into the wards, and even now "a large portion of the vast building," to quote the words of The Times, "is, and is likely to remain, absolutely empty, useless, and unemployed." Truly this is a pretty specimen of charitable management! Turn we next to the Royal Dramatic College at Maybury, another glaring example of brick-and-mortar charity. To our thinking, no building was necessary in such a case. The disabled actors and actresses had much better have been provided with annuities, and suffered to spend them where they pleased. The College is now in extremis. All the funds save one poor thousand pounds are gone, and the Council have very sensibly resolved, under the advice of the Charity Commissioners, to sell the building, and do the best they can with the money for the decayed dramatic artists who have hitherto found shelter within its costly walls.

THE AGITATION FOR DISESTABLISHMENT.——Lord Hartington was probably not aware of the full importance of the statement he made in Edinburgh with regard to the Scotch Established Church. He apparently fancied he was uttering a mere commonplace in declaring that if the Scotch Liberals were unanimous in desiring disestablishment they would not be opposed by the English Liberals. The result of his words, however, has been that the English Nonconformists have felt themselves greatly encouraged in their crusade against the Church of England. Their organs in the Press have rarely spoken more hopefully than they are speaking now; and in his speech at Bradford the other evening Mr. Chamberlain seemed to have no doubt that the proposal for disestablishment would soon be accepted by a vast majority of the Liberal party. He and his friends are, we believe, building on an extremely inadequate foundation. The truth is that the English Liberals are not at all likely to be asked for help in the destruction of the Scotch Establishment. It is a complete mistake to suppose that the Scotch people as a whole wish to see the relations between the State and their Church broken up. The Northern Dissenters doubtless include a considerable party which desires disestablishment as ardently as the English Nonconformists; but the members of the Free Church firmly believe in the principle of Establishment, and the majority of them would by no means vote for the application of the doctrines of the Liberation Society. The members of the Kirk itself are unanimous in wishing that present arrangements should be let alone. If, then, the English Church is to be considered absolutely safe until the Scotch Church has fallen, the Bishops need be under no apprehension that a cry of danger will be raised in their time.

PROCESSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.——We are not a processional people. We have too much insular mauvaise honte about us. Thackeray somewhere contrasts the shamefaced manner in which an Englishman does the cavalier seul in a quadrille with the joyous abandon and self-confidence wherewith a Frenchman executes the same feat. So in a procession. The Englishman in plain clothes in a procession is apt to fancy that the bystanders are scoffing at him, and that he looks ridiculous; and the effect of this belief is that he often does actually look ridiculous. A uniform, it must be allowed, largely enhances his confidence; not only does it act as a partial disguise, but it furnishes him with an esprit de corps before unknown Now, of late years, the mediæval love of processions has undergone a decided revival. There was a dismal, drab-coloured era, about a generation ago, when Lord Mayors' Shows were regarded as mere tomfoolery, only fit for children and nursery maids. We are wiser now. We see how much evil has been wrought by the dingy, colourless, workaday monotony of modern existence, and we are trying, feebly and awkwardly perhaps, to make amends for past neglect. But now that men who are reputed wise no longer despise the Ninth of November pageant, could it not be made more worthy of acceptance? Putting aside the unfortunate weather of last Friday, the Show was, after all, rather a stagey, mountebank affair. They manage these things better in Belgium. That is the country, par excellence, of processions. Some of our City fathers should run over and see how the Flemings do it, and being thus fortified with experience they would easily find at home men of genuine artistic taste who would help them to make a Lord Mayor's Show something really worth looking at. But, in that case, would it not be advisable to make it a summer pageant? Why not have two City festivals: the turtle, and champagne, and the Ministerial speeches in November, and the outdoor show in June or July?

BELGIUM AND GERMANY.——The Pall Mall Gazette had a somewhat alarming article this week on the relations of Belgium to Germany. It stated with an air of authority that Prince Bismarck is making a determined effort to induce the Belgians to give up their national independence. They would still be permitted to manage their internal affairs; the proposal is that they should place their army at the disposal of Germany, and allow it to be modelled in accordance with the German military system. The inducement held out to Belgium is said to be that its territory would thus be protected from invasion in the event of war between France and Germany. We have no means of knowing whether the statement of our contemporary is founded on fact; but in itself it is not at all improbable. There can be no sort of doubt that the ruling classes of Germany look forward to a war with France as one of the certainties of the future, and it is quite in accordance with the principles which have dominated the career of Prince Bismarck that he should make such an attempt to strengthen his position beforehand. Assuming that there is some truth in the story, we cannot believe that Belgium will for an instant think of bartering its independence. It is at least possible that, as it was able to keep out of the last war, it might be able to keep out of similar wars in future. To ally itself with Germany in the manner proposed would be to make neutrality impossible. Moreover, such a connection could hardly be confined within the limits now mentioned. A big Empire has an unpleasant tendency to absorb small States that enter into any sort of relation with it; and the tendencies of Germany are no exception to the general rule. It would, however, be unwise to forget that the scheme is a possible one, and that it very distinctly involves the interests of this country.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.——Those people who believe that religious instruction is of more importance than all other instruction put together, must feel that Sunday Schools are especially valuable at the present time, when so much of the week-day teaching is of a purely secular character.

It is satisfactory, however, to learn from Mr. Holms' interesting address last Tuesday, that whereas formerly many children came to the Sunday School ignorant of their A B C, they now come provided with the first requisite for reading the Bible, namely, a fair knowledge of their letters. We should have been glad if Mr. Holms had offered some suggestions for the improvement of the Sunday School system, for in some respects it cannot be regarded as satisfactory. In the first place, do we not lay too heavy a burden on the children of the poor, as compared with children of the wealthier classes? We expect a model poor man's child to go twice to school and twice to church. But this swallows up (the dinner interval excepted) nearly all the child's daylight hours, at any rate during the winter months; and too often, when the Sunday School age has passed, a reaction sets in, and the over-schooled and over-churched lad or lass neglects public worship altogether. Parents, however careless or irreligious themselves, rarely object to the Sunday School, because it takes the children conveniently out of the way just at the time when they are apt to be troublesome, namely, when father is "cleaning himself," or when mother is exercised with the arduous culinary duties of the Sunday. Secondly, as the children come to school rarely feeling much zeal for learning, and as the teachers, unlike the week-day pedagogues, are mainly amateurs, there is apt to be a good deal of noise and disorder. As the teachers have no official means of enforcing discipline (a fact of which the children are well aware) they are dependent on the personal influence which they exert. This may occasionally be powerful, but where teachers are irregular in attendance, and are often changed, their personal influence is usually but small. In rural places, we admit, children are as a rule better behaved and more submissive, but in towns it is to be feared that Sunday School teaching is, in many instances, very uphill work.

NOTICE.——The Half-Sheet this week, though delivered in the middle of the paper, must be placed for binding between pages 468 and 477.

AMUSEMENTS

HENRY DUNBAR, by TOM TAYLOR, Powerfully Cast, and A ROUGH DIAMOND, by J. B. Buckstone, on MONDAY, Nov. 19 (for a limited number of Nights). Box Office Hours, 11 to 5. No Fees for Booking. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. Doors open at 7, commence at 7.30.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD RIGHTON.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, £200 A-YEAR. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. At 9.45, ISAAC OF YORK. Messrs Rydee, F. H. Macklin, Gaines, A. H. Warren, C. Collette, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames C. Loseby, C. Lewis, Lucette, E. Ritta, Coupion, I. Clifton, R. Sanger. Acting Manager, Mr. E. CLIFTON.

GLOBE THEATRE.—MORNING PERFORMANCES EVERY SATURDAY.—TO-DAY, Saturday, Nov. 17, at 2, SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.

NEW GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, the successful drama, BOUND TO SUCCEED. Messrs. George Conquest, W. James, Sennett, Syms, Birchenough, George Conquest, jun., &c. Misses Mabel Verner, Victor, Henill, &c. To conclude with GUY FAUX. The Guy, Mr. George Conquest.—Acting Manager, Mr. ALPHONSE ROQUES.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—EVERY EVENING, at 6.45, TWO SONS, a New Drama by F. Manuel, Esq. MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. The Phoites, Kate Barstone, Teddy Mosedale, Miss Ella Wesner. Concluding with A WIFE YET NO WIFE. Mrs. S. Lane.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening [illegible]

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN. — NOTICE. — These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, and Hubart Pasha. Also Portrait Models of the Penge Convicts and the Perpetrators of the Great Turf Frauds, Benson and Kurr. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

BRIGHTON. — PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.
EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.
The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.
J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE. — Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Engagement for Six Nights only, commencing MONDAY, November 19, of the Celebrated Comedienne, Mrs. JOHN WOOD. Monday, Nov. 19, LONDON ASSURANCE. Tuesday and Thursday, Nov 20 and 22, LEAP-YEAR. Wednesday, Nov. 21, PAUL PRY. Friday, Nov. 23 (Mrs. John Wood's Benefit), LONDON ASSURANCE. Saturday, Nov. 24, SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

"GONE," by FRANK HOLL.—This Fine Picture is now ON VIEW at the ANNUAL WINTER EXHIBITION, 5, Haymarket (opposite Her Majesty's Theatre.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, by artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN, at Thomas McLean's Gallery, No. 7, Haymarket. Admission, including catalogue, 1s.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom . £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast	France	Natal
Austria	Germany	Norway
Belgium	Gibraltar	Portugal
Brazil	Holland	Russia
Canada	Italy	St. Thomas
Cape of Good Hope	Jamaica	Suez
Constantinople	Malta	Sweden
Denmark	Mexico	Switzerland
Egypt	Monte Video	West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia	Via Brindisi,	India
Ceylon	36s. thin edition.	Japan
China	45s. thick edition.	New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD, 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher.

Our Illustrations

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH THE TURKS—COFFEE-HOUSE POLITICIANS

"IN the Turkish quarters," writes our artist at Constantinople, "people do not trouble themselves about politics during the day, when work occupies their thoughts; but in the evening, after dinner, they resort to the cafés, where the various papers are read aloud. Amongst the frequenters to the café there are always to be found one or two, generally hodjas (schoolmasters), who are ready to undertake this task. Towards ten or eleven the audience separate to meet again the following day. The papers are all brought by the customers themselves, the cafedje (proprietor) only having to provide an extra lamp for the reader."

WITH THE RUSSIANS AT SISTOVA

IN our sketch a peaceful Bulgarian jeweller of Sistova is pursuing his avocations as calmly as though his old master, the Turk, still reigned supreme, and war was still only a probability to be discussed over the midday coffee. His mode of working is certainly primitive. He melts silver and brass in the manner depicted, and then casts the metal into sand moulds of the rude form of jewellery with which the Bulgarian women love to deck themselves. Besides his trade, however, the old fellow follows another occupation. Leaning against the wall may be seen a pruning hook, for he has a small vineyard to attend to, and sometimes he will go away and leave his shop for hours, "having yet to learn," writes our artist, "that soldiers are not so honest as his fellow townspeople."

A VISIT TO HELIGOLAND

See page 471

THE FIFTY HOURS' RIDE

THIS match, which took place at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, was to be for fifty hours—that is to say, from Thursday, Nov. 8, at 9 P.M., to Saturday, Nov. 10, at 11 P.M. The competitors were Leon, the Mexican horseman, whose feats at the Alexandra Palace and the Agricultural Hall last year are not forgotten, and a Yorkshire amateur, riding in the assumed name of Newsome. Leon was to ride his Mexican mustang, Tom; Newsome, his own horse Telegram. Compared with steeple-chasing, and various other sports in which horses are concerned, there was little to complain of in the match on the score of cruelty, as there were disinterested persons present to see that the horses were not overdone, and as each horseman was allowed to pull up and rest both himself and his beast when he pleased, the winner of the stakes being he who, between the start and the finish, had scored the greatest distance. The match was rather grandiloquently styled "England v. Mexico," and we regret to say that our native country got decidedly the worst of a contest which did not arrive at a legitimate conclusion. Leon, though a stone and a half the heavier man, is a very neat horseman, and rode with a great determination of purpose. His pace, almost from first to last, was an easy and steady canter; his seat, of its kind, perfect; and his hands exactly where they should be, supporting and feeling his horse's mouth with a delicate play of the wrist. Mr. Newsome, on the contrary, is described as having a loose and jolting seat of the "washball" order, hands heavy and unsympathetic, at one time dashing into a swinging gallop, or subsiding into a slow walk. Telegram showed his disapproval of this erratic method of progression by shying and jibbing. At 5.30 on Friday evening, the Animals' Society's agent interfered, and insisted that Telegram should be replaced by another horse, although it was pretty apparent that his temper rather than his physical endurance was at fault. Leopold, a dark bay hunter, accordingly took his place; but Mr. Newsome returned on Saturday morning at 8.30 to Telegram, who expressed his opinion of the proceedings by pitching his rider over his head, and going on in a very sulky and disagreeable manner throughout the day. At 10.10 on Saturday night the two veterinary surgeons insisted that Tom, who was just going to recommence his task after a rest, should be replaced by another horse, whereupon Leon mounted Sappho; but she was so frightened at the unruly conduct of the mob that Inspector Jamieson, fearing an accident, stopped the proceedings at 10.30, amidst the greatest confusion and uproar. The match was virtually won by Leon, who completed (allowing for deductions) 168 miles six laps, while the Yorkshireman had only made 150 miles six laps, the number of laps to a mile being seven. We have borrowed the above details from the Morning Advertiser, but we must add that we rejoice that there were persons present to watch the interests of the horses, who deserve especial consideration, as they don't share in the gate-money, and are unable to tell us whether they approve of such feats.

THE PRINCE IMPERIAL AT CHATHAM

OUR sketch, for which we are indebted to Captain H. G. Robley, represents an incident during the recent visit of the Prince Imperial to the military schools and works at Chatham, over which the Prince was conducted by Colonel Cox. The greater part of the time was spent in inspecting the field works, but the subject of our engraving is the hand-grenade practice by a number of officers. The hand-grenades are intended for use in the defence of a fort or breastwork, being thrown amidst the storming parties, in whose ranks they are likely to make great havoc. They are small spherical shells, fitted with slow fuses, and can be thrown round-handed fashion a distance of from twenty-five to forty yards. A larger kind are rolled over the parapet along sloping shoots similar to those one sees in an American bowling alley, the shell being started with a smart push to carry it clear into the ditch beyond. The practice involves much coolness and judgment, as if the grenades are thrown too soon after the ignition of the fuse, the enemy will be able to avoid them or to roll them out of the way before they burst, whilst if retained too long the consequences would manifestly be more awkward for the besieged than the besiegers.

THE TRIAL OF THE DETECTIVES

THIS extraordinary inquiry is now rapidly drawing to a close, but we can hardly expect the verdict to be given before next week. The evidence for the defence naturally occupied but little time, consisting as it did mainly of testimonials as to the high character which had been borne by each defendant up to the time when this charge was instituted. The speeches of the counsel for the defence commenced on Friday last, Mr. Montagu Williams first addressing the jury on behalf of Meiklejohn. He concluded his remarks on Monday, and was followed by Mr. Douglas Straight in defence of Druscovich. After him came Mr. Besley, Palmer's advocate, who was in turn succeeded by Mr. Edward Clarke for Clarke and Mr. Collins for Froggatt (the solicitor). Then came the Attorney-General's reply for the prosecution, which was commenced on Thursday, and was going on when we went to press. This would of course be followed by Baron Pollock's summing up, which will certainly occupy a whole day, perhaps more, and then the jury will have to deliberate upon their verdict, a task of undeniable difficulty when it is remembered that there are five defendants, that the charge itself is somewhat vague, and is founded upon an immense mass of evidence relating to a series of extremely complicated transactions, and coming mainly from witnesses whose words, to say the least, are not to be preferred to those of other men. Although no verdict has yet been given rumour is already discussing the amount of punishment to be allotted to the defendants in the event of conviction. There is some wild talk about penal servitude for life, but Mayfair declares itself to be in a position to state "that the offence with which they are charged in the indictment now being proceeded with is a misdemeanour, and is punishable with not more than two years' hard labour."—Some of the portraits in our engraving have been produced by the assistance of photographs by C. Watkins, Parliament Street, Adolphe Beau, Regent Street, and the London Stereoscopic Company, 54, Cheapside.

THE LORD MAYOR'S SHOW

IF regarded from an artistic point of view the Civic pageant of last week can hardly be said to have been a success, but the people, for whose delectation it was mainly designed, and who, defying the elements, crowded the streets through which the procession had to pass, appeared to be thoroughly satisfied with the display. What if the gay uniforms of the military, and the still more gorgeous liveries of the City flunkies were hidden beneath cloaks and coats of sombre hue; what if the Civic dignitaries, with the exception of brave Sir John Bennett, were compelled to shelter themselves in closed carriages; what if the pedestrian portion of the procession were as mud-bespattered as scavengers; had not Messrs. Sanger provided material enough to gladden the eyes of the spectators? Not only were there elephants, double-humped dromedaries, ridden by "persons representing Nubians," but there was the model of Cleopatra's Needle, with several imitation Egyptian beauties gracefully posed on each side, and the gigantic allegorical car, with living representations of Peace and Plenty, the Muses, Britannia, Old Father Thames, and we know not what or whom beside. The crowd had come out to enjoy itself, and good humouredly took things as they came, waiting patiently for the advent of the Show, and cheering lustily as it went by.

All went on swimmingly until the railway viaduct on Ludgate Hill was reached, and a great gap was created in the middle of the procession by the delay in working the machinery of the allegorical car, which had to be reduced in height to enable it to pass under. This operation had to be repeated at Temple Bar, where the unsympathetic crowd chaffed the Muses and other allegorical figures, and when at last the car was got through, raised a cheer, and demanded a speech from the irate Mr. Sanger, who, however, made no audible response to the invitation.

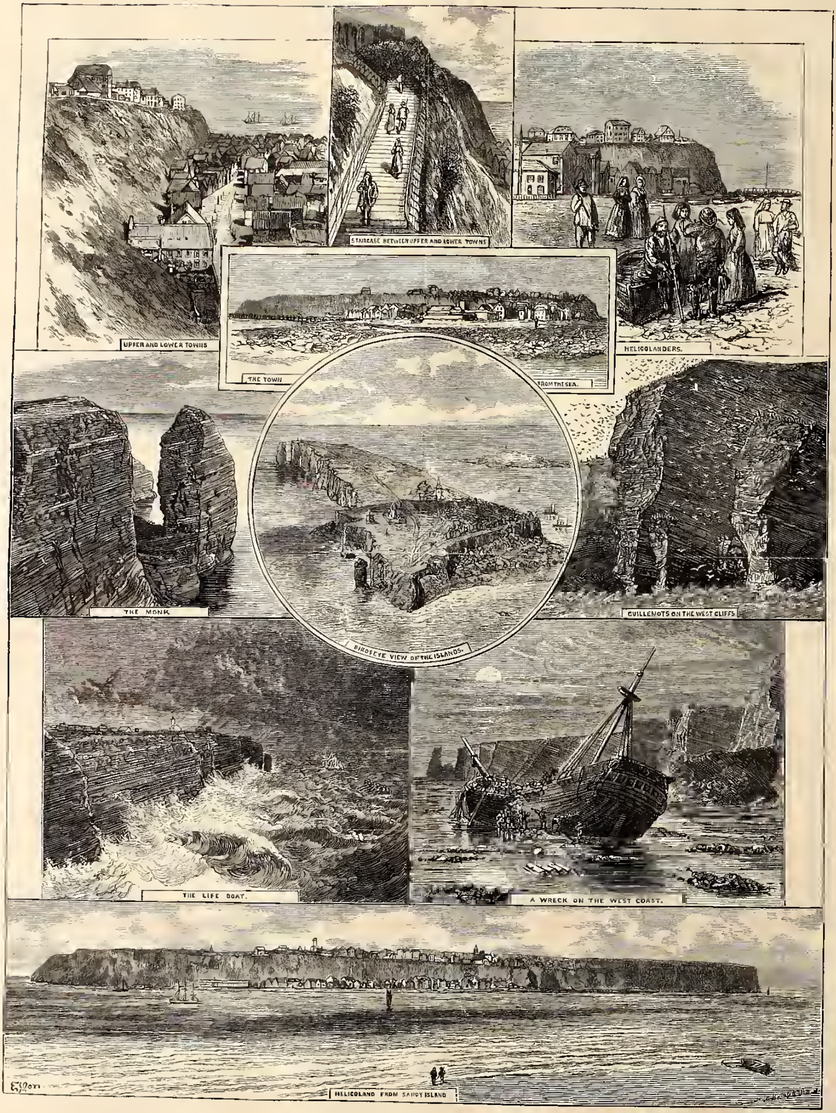
Decorations were pretty general throughout the City, especially on the line of route; but the most profuse display was naturally within the ward to which the new Chief Magistrate belongs. At the junction of Gracechurch Street with Lombard Street and Fenchurch Street there was a kind of triumphal arch formed of garlands looped to clusters of masts. Venetian masts and banners lined each side of the streets, and at the farther boundary of the ward there was a very effective group of statuary surrounded by hot-house plants. A noticeable feature in Bishopsgate Street was the decoration of the Sir Paul Pindar, which is being pulled down to make room for the new buildings of the Metropolitan Free Hospital. It consisted of a tasteful arrangement of flags and shields, beneath which was a large covered stand for spectators, on the frieze of which was written, in gold letters on a red ground, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 469.

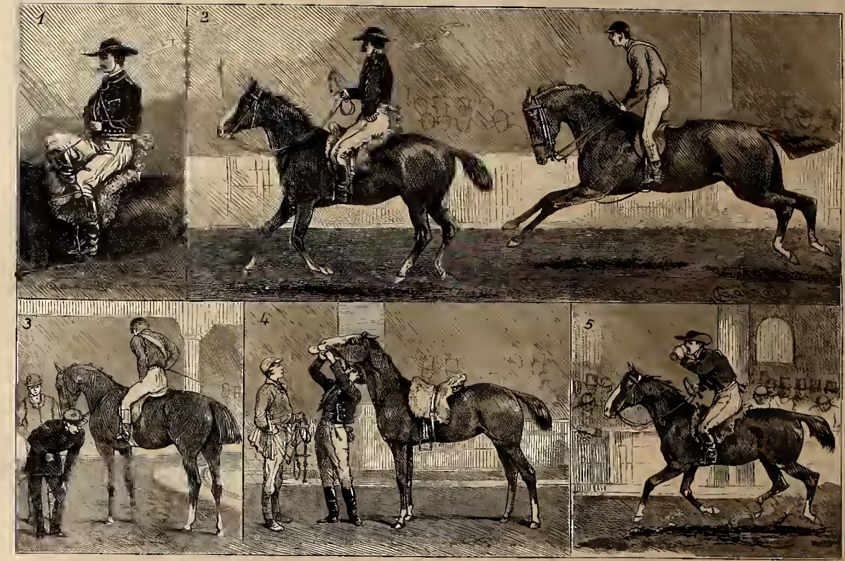
"THE FINISHING TOUCH"

MRS. STAPLES, who is better known to the public by her maiden name, M. Ellen Edwards, is especially happy in the delineation of scenes where a touch of pathos or a little bit of sentiment is conveyed by the attitudes and occupations of either a single figure, or at the utmost a pair. In the picture now



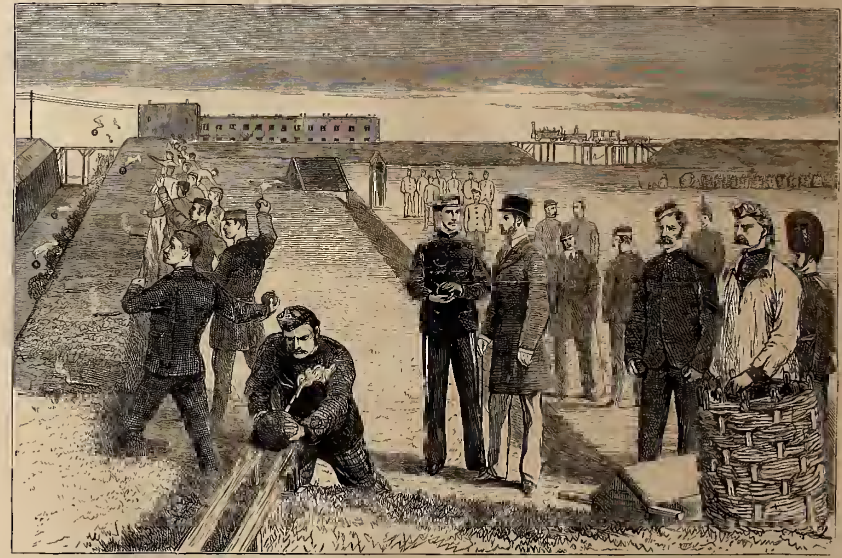
UPPER AND LOWER TOWNS
STAIRCASE BETWEEN UPPER AND LOWER TOWNS
HELIGOLANDERS.
THE TOWN FROM THE SEA.
THE MONK
GUILLEMOTS ON THE WEST CLIFFS
BIRDSEYE VIEW OF THE ISLANDS.
THE LIFE BOAT.
A WRECK ON THE WEST COAST.
HELIGOLAND FROM SANDY ISLAND

A VISIT TO HELIGOLAND



1, 2. "Manner and Gait."—3. Inspection by an Officer from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—4. "Staying Power."—5. A Drink by the Way.

THE ANGLO-MEXICAN RIDING MATCH AT THE AGRICULTURAL HALL, ISLINGTON



THE PRINCE IMPERIAL AT CHATHAM—OFFICERS AT HAND GRENADE PRACTICE before us we are introduced to a pretty little domestic idyll, in which the young husband is putting the finishing touch to his wife's charming toilette by clasping the necklace round her pretty neck. The pose and expressions of the happy couple are exceedingly natural; he is evidently as pleased to execute the task as she is that he should undertake it.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO's new work is continued on page 473.

MORMONISM

THE recent death of President Brigham Young has again drawn the attention of the outer "Gentile world" to the Mormon settlement at Salt Lake City, and our readers will probably be interested in the following sketches of some of those who are the recognised leaders of this strange sect.

BRIGHAM YOUNG, the founder of the Mormon Settlement of Utah, was born in Whitingham, Windham County, Vermont, June 1st, 1801. He was the immediate successor of the original Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith. For twelve years he followed the occupations of carpenter, joiner, painter, and glazier. From the fact of his leading his people, in 1846, on their famous exodus, from Nauvoo, in search of a new Zion in the distant valleys of the Rocky Mountains, he has been called "the Moses of the latter days," as Joseph Smith was styled "the Mahomet of the West." It was Brigham Young who established the social and religious system of Mormonism as it exists at the present day—with its characteristic polygamy. He was the leader of his sect through numberless vicissitudes, for thirty-four years; and he recently died in the 77th year of his age. A man of strong will and great sagacity, he was ever prompt in action, intolerant of opposition, and, like all his compeers, actuated by a spirit of fanaticism and fierce bigotry.

WILFORD WOODRUFF was born March 1st, 1807. As a young man he performed, on foot, an arduous mission to Southern Missouri, Northern Arkansas, and Western Tennessee, through most desolate and unhealthy tracts of country. In 1839 he came to England, and in the course of seven months, he and his colleagues are said to have baptised over 1,800 persons in Herefordshire, Gloucestershire, and Worcestershire. He was one of the 143 pioneers to Utah. The Mormon Church history is to a great degree compiled from his journals.

GEORGE Q. CANNON was born in Liverpool, England, on the 11th of January, 1827. He crossed the American plains with the Mormon emigrants in 1847. In 1850, he went on a mission to the Sandwich Islands, where he translated "the Book of Mormon" into the Hawaiian language. At different periods he has been builder, farmer, gold-miner, printer, publisher, and newspaper editor. While in England in 1863-4, he is said to have shipped 13,000 emigrants, as Latter Day Saints, to Utah. He is now delegate to Congress for Utah Territory.

ORSON HYDE was born January 8th, 1805. He began life in an iron-foundry, and was afterwards a wool-carder. Later he travelled, without purse or scrip, as a Mormon minister. In 1837, with five other elders of the Church, he came to England on the first Mormon mission. In 1840 he went to Palestine. On the death of Joseph Smith, it was he who proposed Brigham Young as the prophet's successor. He is now a presiding Apostle in various settlements of Utah.

ORSON PRATT was born September 19th, 1811, in Hartford, Washington Co., N.Y. He is one of the very few survivors of the first Quorum of the Twelve Apostles to whom the prophet Joseph gave a commission to preach the Mormon Gospel to all nations. He and Erastus Snow were the two first Mormons who entered the valley of the Salt Lake, on the 21st July, 1847. He is considered the greatest preacher of the Church of Latter Day Saints, and in consequence he has sometimes been called "the Paul of Mormonism.

ALBERT CARRINGTON was born January 8th, 1813. At different times he has been a school-teacher, a lead-miner, and a lawyer. He was one of the original band who, leaving Nauvoo, crossed the Mississippi for the Rocky Mountains. In 1868 he presided over the Mormon mission in England. For twenty years he has acted as secretary to President Brigham Young. He has sometimes been called "the Mormon Wolsey."

JOHN TAYLOR has lately been nominated to act in the place of Brigham Young. John Taylor was born 1st November, 1808. He has edited and published various Mormon Church newspapers and books. He was with Joseph and Hyram Smith when they were assassinated in Carthage Gaol, and on that occasion he himself received four bullet wounds. He was Probate Judge of Utah County, and for long a member of the Utah Legislature.

The remaining portraits are those of Bishop JOHN LEE and ELIZA YOUNG, Brigham Young's nineteenth and last wife. The latter, after a brief experience of the manners and customs of the Latter Day Saints, abandoned the community and her husband, returned to the Gentiles, and is now lecturing against Mormonism and the wickedness of polygamy! Respecting Bishop Lee, his trial and execution took place last March on the very spot of the Mountain Meadow Massacre of 1857, for his participation in that terrible crime. Bishop Lee was the commander of the Mormon detachment which ruthlessly mowed down 120 unfortunate emigrants who were peacefully wending their way from Arkansas to California—a deed of blood which will ever be remembered against the Mormon community.—Our portraits are from photographs by Messrs. C. W. Carter, C. R. Savage, and Anderson and Smith, all of Salt Lake City, Utah, U.S.A. We are indebted for the use of these photographs, and for the above details, to Dr. David B. Smith, 14, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

AN AUSTRALIAN HEROINE AND
THE LATE REV. G. B. WHEELER

See page 473.

GUSTAVE BRION

THIS well-known Alsatian painter died suddenly on Sunday week of apoplexy at the age of fifty-three. M. Brion was a native of Rothau, in the Vosges, and was a pupil of M. Gabriel Guerin, a Strasbourg painter. In 1850 M. Brion came to Paris, and in 1853 his picture of "Schlitteurs de la Forêt-Noire" at once secured him a good position in the foremost rank of French painters. This picture, subsequently placed in the Strasbourg Museum, was burnt during the bombardment of 1870. Space will not allow us to enumerate the various works which M. Brion has since exhibited, but we may mention amongst his chief paintings the "Noce en Alsace," "Pelerins de Sainte Odile" (in the Salon this year), and "Une Lecture de la Bible," which secured him the grand medal of honour in 1868, and which by many is considered to be his greatest work. He had previously in 1863, been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He also executed a large number of drawings on wood, notably for Victor Hugo's "Miserables" and "Nôtre Dame de Paris," and at the time of his death he was illustrating for our pages the "History of a Crime," the picture of "The Arrested Representatives," which we published last week, being the last work which emanated from his pencil.—Our portrait is from a photograph by C. Reutlinger, 21, Boulevard Montmartre, Paris.

MR. GLADSTONE AT THE CITY HALL, DUBLIN

THE presentation of the Freedom of the City of Dublin to Mr. Gladstone was made in the Council Chamber of the City Hall, which was crowded with a brilliant company of spectators. Mr. Gladstone, who was accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Gladstone, and by several of the friends with whom he had been staying, was greeted with much enthusiasm. The burgess ticket was beautifully illuminated and enclosed in a handsome casket of bog-oak, and the Mayor of Dublin in presenting it adverted to the fact of the reformed Corporations of Ireland having been deprived in 1841 of the right of bestowing the honorary freedom of their respective cities, and the restoration of that right by Act of Parliament during the Session of last year. He also pointed out that the vote conferring the freedom of the City on Mr. Gladstone was divested of all political significance, having been proposed by a Jew, seconded by a Catholic, and unanimously passed by the members of the Corporation, who held widely different opinions, as a recognition of his great abilities, his fervent eloquence, and his many services to the State.

Mr. Gladstone acknowledged the honour done him in a speech which lasted about an hour. Accepting the gift in the spirit in which it was intended, he assured his hearers that he meant to say nothing that could hurt any of their political or religious feelings, and went on to vindicate the various measures which he had passed or suggested for Ireland, declaring that he had been prompted throughout by a spirit of justice and equality. He also expressed his surprise and gratification at the signs of commercial life and the evidences of prosperity which he had seen in Dublin and the surrounding country, and concluded by declaring that no Irishman could more heartily pray that the country might become ever more prosperous and powerful, free and glorious, a happy and contented part of the great United Empire.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——The speech of the week has been, of course, that of the Premier at the Lord Mayor's Banquet. Lord Beaconsfield took at optimist view of affairs. The war had enabled the gallant Turk to disabuse the public mind of a serious error. Turkey had proved herself to be a Power, and vindicated her place in European society. The policy of neutrality which had been adopted by the British Government had been best both for England and Turkey. His hope as to the future was founded on the fact that Russia had now no prestige to recover, and she only wished to benefit the Christian population, and it was also equally evident that the Porte was desirous of discharging its duties towards the Christians.—Mr. Gladstone returned from Ireland on Monday, and on his way home stopped at Holyhead to deliver his promised address. He congratulated his hearers on the approaching termination of the Indian Famine, and referring to the War said that the Turks had no doubt exhibited heroic courage, although it had been for an evil cause. He had been described, he said, as the enemy of Turkey, but it was not he who had brought the Ottomans to their present pass; it was their friends who had done it. He vigorously defended the bag-and-baggage policy he had recommended a long while ago, and, referring to the speech of the Prime Minister at the Guildhall, pointed to the fact that it contained no allusion to the integrity of the Ottoman Empire.—The Duke of Argyll has written to The Times, declaring his entire disagreement with Lord Hartington on the question of Disestablishment. He says that he cannot consent to oppose measures which are Liberal in their principle merely because they are proposed by a Tory Government. The Abolition of Patronage Act was essentially a Liberal measure, and it was as such that he supported it. His opinion was and is that patronage, so far from having been one of the bonds between Church and State in Scotland, has been always the one thing which weakened and endangered the connection between them, and he thinks that no man who knows anything of the history of Scotland can doubt or deny the proposition.—The memory of the founder of the Colston charities in Bristol, was celebrated in the usual manner on Tuesday. At the Anchor (Liberal) banquet, Mr. Forster, who was the principal speaker, expressed his sympathy with the Republicans in the struggle now going on in France, and a hope that the contest would result in the permanent establishment of order and liberty. Adverting to the Eastern war, he congratulated Lord Beaconsfield upon the moderation of his Guildhall speech, as contrasted with the manifesto which was made on the same occasion last year; but, at the same time, he failed to detect in the speech itself any indications that the Government were in earnest in their efforts to secure peace. At the Dolphin (Conservative) dinner, Mr. Stephen Cave responded for Her Majesty's Ministers. The Grateful Society (neutral in politics) also held its accustomed gathering.—Sir Harcourt Johnstone, M.P., addressing his constituents at Scarborough on Tuesday, defended Mr. Gladstone from the charge of having promoted the War; and announced himself as a convert to the Disestablishment movement.—Mr. Gorst, M.P., speaking to his constituents at Chatham on Wednesday, expressed approval of the conduct of the conduct of the Government with regard to the war, except in seizing the Turkish ironclads now in the Victoria Docks, which he said was contrary to the Foreign Enlistment Acts. Turkey was willing to carry out reforms, and to give guarantees to her ancient ally, but would yield nothing demanded by Russia at the point of the sword.—On the same day Mr. Plimsoll made a speech at Derby. He said that the administration of the Merchant Shipping Act was as lax as its provisions were inadequate, and he should be glad to see established a Merchant Shipping Board apart from the Board of Trade, even were all the members elected by the shipowners. He believed that Russia had declared war under false pretences, and that the struggle in France was the result of a similar plot to subject the rights and liberties of the people to the Roman Catholic priesthood.

MISCELLANEOUS.——The students of Edinburgh University have chosen Lord Hartington as their Lord Rector. His lordship polled 932 votes against 684 given to the rival candidate, Mr. Cross.—Mr. Robert Browning has been nominated for the Lord Rectorship of St. Andrews, and will probably be elected without opposition, as Mr. Matthew Arnold has declined to stand.—The storm, of which we received warning from America, arrived punctually, and proved to be one of great severity. The weather grew rough on Friday, was of a fitful character on Saturday, and on Sunday and Sunday night became extremely violent. Much damage was done to property both inland and on the coast, and several lives were sacrificed.—On Tuesday the new Public Halls of Glasgow, which have been erected at a cost of 100,000*l.*, were opened in the presence of the Princess Louise, the Marquis of Lorne, and Lady Elizabeth Campbell. The chief feature of the ceremony was the performance of the Messiah, upon a scale never before attempted in the city.—The election of mayors for the provincial boroughs took place according to annual custom last week. At Hartlepool Mr. James Grove was re-elected for the fourth time, and at several other places the choice fell upon gentlemen who had previously served either one year or two. At East Retford, the parties in the Council being equally divided, the candidates, Mr. Alderman Jenkinson, and Mr. Councillor Curtis, agreed to settle the matter by tossing ("best two out of three"), and fortune favouring the last-named gentleman, he was unanimously declared mayor for the ensuing year.—At St. Ives a singular dispute has arisen. In the seventeenth century a lady made a bequest to the Corporation, from the proceeds of which they were to pay the vicar a sovereign yearly to preach a sermon to the new mayor every November 9. The Council now allege that they have no property, and, as they are all Dissenters but one, they object either to pay the sovereign or to go to church. Legal proceedings are threatened by the vicar.—Birkenhead, which has 85,000 inhabitants, has just been incorporated. The first election of Town Councillors took place on Wednesday. There were 87 candidates for 43 seats.—The strike of the London masons still continues. The masters have resolved not to give way, and have refused to hold a conference with the men.—At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday, Sir Rutherford Alcock, who presided, delivered an address on the exploration of Africa, in the course of which he spoke highly of Mr. Stanley's enterprise and exertions. Pointing out that nearly all the European Governments, under the Presidency of the King of the Belgians, had sent out exploring parties, Sir Rutherford remarked that all that was now wanted to complete the exploration and civilisation of the whole of Africa was money. If the Portuguese Government were able to give 20,000*l.* for this object, how much more ought the British Government, which had a much larger stake in the future of Africa, to be able to contribute?—The Daily Telegraph has published two more letters from Mr. Stanley, one of which contains an interesting account of the country through which he passed on his journey westward, and a suggestion that England and Portugal should proclaim sovereignty over the Livingstone River; the other is an exciting narrative of the manner in which his faithful friend, Francis Pocock, lost his life in one of the terrible cataracts of the Livingstone River. Mr. Stanley is expected to arrive at Plymouth early in next month, and he will soon afterwards read an account of his expedition before the members of the Geographical Society.—The Hall of the Scottish Corporation, in Crane Court, Fleet Street, which was built by Wren in 1665, was on Wednesday totally destroyed by fire. Amongst the treasures were some very valuable paintings, none of which could be saved.—The Board of Works have decided to ask Parliament for power to buy up the London Water Companies. The proposed scheme not only includes a supply of pure water for drinking, but will, it is said, effect an annual saving of 112,250*l.* by rendering certain other works unnecessary.

THEATRES

MR. AND MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.——On Monday a quaint little sketch, entitled Once in a Century, by Gilbert A'Beckett, with music by Vivian Bligh, was produced at ST. GEORGE'S HALL, and met with a well-merited success. The story is very simple. An amiable baronet, Sir Digby Dimple (Mr. Alfred Reed), has a ward, Lilian (Miss Fanny Holland), an heiress, who loves and is loved by Michael Angelo Brown (Mr. Arthur Law). This affection, however, is not precisely what the baronet could wish, and during a visit to the remains of an ancient feudal castle he attempts to undeceive the young people, but is interrupted by Mr. Baily Young (Mr. Corney Grain), his rising nephew. By and by he makes a second attempt to carry out his resolve, which results in another failure owing to the arrival of a charming widow, Mrs. Butterfligh (Mrs. German Reed). A fearful thunderstorm comes on, and they fly to the dungeon-tower for shelter, with the exception of Sir Digby, who retires into the relic chamber. That which follows has, of course, been planned by the lovers and the widow, who by appearing, together with his nephew, to the baronet as ghosts, in accordance with an old legend connected with the castle, gain his consent to the union of the heiress with Michael Angelo Brown, and compel him to offer his hand to Mrs. Butterfligh—a consummation which she has devoutly wished for some time. The piece is productive of much amusement, and the music is bright and melodious—"Sweet Olden Days," a prettily-plaintive song, admirably rendered by Miss Fanny Holland, being deservedly encored. Mr. Corney Grain followed with his laughable and clever "At the Seaside;" and the performance concluded with "No. 204" (by F. C. Burnand, music by German Reed), in which unfounded jealousy and its results is the subject of a lesson which some of us might do well to learn.

CRYSTAL PALACE.——A series of modern comedies, under the direction of Mr. Charles Wyndham, will be performed at the Crystal Palace on successive Tuesdays and Thursdays, beginning November 20th. The following plays will comprise the series:—Progress, One Hundred Thousand Pounds, Love Wins, Blow for Blow, American Lady, Contested Election, War to the Knife.

OPERA COMIQUE.——The new comic opera, entitled The Sorcerer, by Messrs. W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, will be produced at the Opera Comique this evening (Saturday), and not at the Royalty, as stated in our last issue.

MOHAWK MINSTRELS.——The fifth anniversary "festival performance" of this clever troupe of burnt-cork melodists was given last week at the Agricultural Hall, before a densely-packed audience. The programme included a great variety of sentimental and humorous songs, all admirably rendered, besides some grotesque dances and amusing character sketches. The new song "Cleopatra's Needle," during the singing of which a miniature fac-simile of the monolith was made to dance about the stage, was an immense success, as was also the final scene "Di Luna Deluded," in which several members of the company took part.

◆

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

I.

THE history of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, oft told as it has been, yet acquires an evergreen freshness from each new narrator. "The Heathen World and St. Paul" (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge), a four-volume series of sketches by different authors, treats of the Apostle's widespread labours by illustrating the people, places, and times with which he had to deal. Beginning with his conversion, the Rev. J. Rawlinson, in "St. Paul at Damascus," gives a glowing representation of the "Pearl of the East"—that ancient city which, unlike most of its Bible rivals, is now nearly as prosperous as in its earlier days—and we only regret that St. Paul as a central figure is somewhat eclipsed by his surroundings; "St. Paul in Asia Minor," by the Rev. E. H. Plumptre, follows more the lines of Scripture in the style of a Commentary on parts of the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles; "St. Paul in Greece," by the Rev. G. S. Davies, is decidedly the most interesting of the series, abounding with vivid pictures of the life and condition of the ancient Greeks—notably the description of St. Paul addressing the Athenians on the Areopagus; while a companion picture of Roman habits and customs is furnished by Dean Merivale's "St. Paul at Rome," in which are depicted the closing scenes of the Apostle's career.—In striking contrast to the noble existence of the Christian teacher stands out the life of the Moslem prophet enthusiast in "Islam and its Founder," by J. W. H. Stobart (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge). Sir W. Muir's "Life of Mahomet" has been largely drawn upon for reference, and cursory readers who would not venture upon the more formidable volumes of Irving and Sir W. Muir, will find all necessary information carefully and readably condensed in this capital little handbook. Companion volumes describe the two other great creeds of the East. Professor Monier Williams in "Hinduism," contributes a scholarly sketch of the Brahman doctrines, and minutely describes the nature of the Vedas and the different schools of philosophy, the varied forms of the gods, and the respective castes and sects; while Mr. Rhys Davids in "Buddhism" discusses the mystical belief held by so large a number of Orientals, recounting the life of Gautama Buddha, and the growth, nature, and development of the faith. He is, however, hardly so successful as his fellow-writers in conveying a clear idea of his subject.—Two fresh volumes appear of "Ancient History from the Monuments" (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge). Assyria, Persia, and Egypt have already been treated, and now a melancholy interest is attached to "Babylonia," the last production of Mr. George Smith, edited by the Rev. A. H. Sayce. Mr. Smith fortunately had nearly completed his work at the time of his death, so Mr. Sayce had only to revise it and make a few additions, notably a good table of Babylonian Kings. "Greek Monuments," by W. S. W. Vaux, is in a drier style, and represents in detail the ancient towns and villages of Asia Minor. Recent discoveries are also touched upon, and the author is not over-complimentary to Dr. Schliemann.—Australia and the Australians are delineated with a practised hand in "The Fifth Continent," by C. H. Eden (same publishers). The first part of the book, which is devoted to the general characteristics of the country—its natives, history, geography, and fauna—is perhaps the best, as the chapters on the respective colonies are a trifle too statistical; but the work is really valuable as the fruits of experience, and not mere hearsay.—The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge does not confine itself to instructive publications, but sends us a copious selection of moral fiction. Patience and contentment are taught by "Our Valley," by the author of "The Children of Seelisberg," a charming tale of Devonshire life, breathing an air of rural freshness; while the Highland moors, and busy Glasgow form the scene of "The Shepherd of Ardmuir," which is as dull as the proverbial Scottish Sunday, and is decidedly tiresome to the Southron by reason of its dialect.—Three capital tales of adventure strike the same keynote—of shipwreck, energy under difficulties, and the reward of the virtuous. A disobedient sea-struck boy in "Drifted Away" is duly punished by a tedious existence on a desert island; "The Two Voyages" narrates the trials of an orphan brother and sister who are separated on their journey, wrecked, rescued, and re-united; but Mr. W. H. Kingston's "Owen Hartley" bears away the palm for excitement, for the hero is twice shipwrecked, fights aboard a man-of-war, and saves innumerable lives.—Suitable literature for a Sunday School class is Mrs. Stanley Leathes' "Girls of Bredon," as it chiefly narrates the experiences of village girls, all adorned with well-pointed morals.—"The Snow Fort and the Frozen Lake," by Eadgyth had better be kept out of the way of schoolboys, who might be tempted to emulate with disastrous results the escapades of the Douglas and Cameron family. On the other hand selfish children might take a hint from "The Snowball Society," by M. Bramston, wherein the little heroes and heroines labour earnestly towards buying a playground for poor children.—Turning from English life to scenes abroad, we meet with gentle Papa Haydn in "Seppi," by M. Campbell, from the German of F. Hoffmann. Here is little Joseph, unconscious of his future greatness, composing childish songs in the fields, going to Vienna with the Imperial chapel-master, and after many trials becoming the pupil of Porpora—a simple episode attractive alike to children and to their elders. Another Teutonic story, "An Eventful Night," from the German of E. Andolt, recounts the misfortunes of an innocent country pastor seized in error for a disaffected nobleman during the troublous times of French rule in Prussia.—The history of more modern Italy is, perhaps, less known than that of other countries, and Mr. Montgomerie Ranking's "Stories from Italian History" may well fill a vacancy. These vigorous sketches of Rienzi, the Sicilian Vespers, Fiesco, Masaniello, &c., slight as they are, will certainly prove so attractive as to excite a wish for fuller information.—The brave Spaniard, Gonsalvo de Cordova, who played so prominent a part in the conquest of Granada and the French Expedition to Italy, has never as yet found an English biographer, and Mr. U. R. Burke's "The Great Captain" is intended to supply the gap. Gonsalvo was as remarkable for diplomacy as for military skill, for vanity as for bravery, but his life was strangely chequered, and notwithstanding his brilliant achievements he died in disgrace with crafty Ferdinand.

"My Rambles in the New World," by Lucien Biart — a translation of that author's "À Travers l'Amerique," by Mary de Hauteville—(Sampson Low and Co.), is a collection of very amusing and readable sketches of numerous trips on the American Continent, undertaken at various times, and embracing a somewhat extensive area, ranging from Labrador and the Esquimaux huts in the North to Mexico and half-breeds' ranchos in the south, from New York and Quebec in the east, to the inevitable San Francisco in the Far West. M. Biart appears to have met with many startling adventures, which he relates with all the humorous vivacity of a practised French writer, while the gastronomic egotism so characteristic in every Gaul peeps out in the contempt with which he regards the different "national" dishes of the countries which he visits, the Canadian oyster coming in for a specially decisive condemnation. Amongst the various articles we may particularly mention "Niagara in Winter," "Christmas Day at Havannah," "The Tuxpango Cascade," and the "Dead City," where M. Biart, while making a most interesting voyage of discovery up the Rio Obispos, came upon one of the abandoned cities of the ancient Mexicans. "A Serpent Charmer" is an amusing account of the author's exposure of a curado or snake sorcerer who professed to be able to handle poisonous reptiles with impunity. The illustrations with which the work abounds are admirable, and altogether the book, which is well and fluently translated, may be pronounced one of the most entertaining gift books of the season.

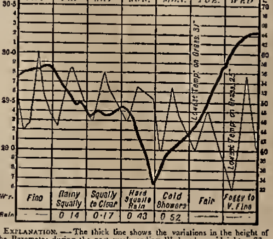
If young housekeepers break down in their domestic economy it is hardly from lack of manuals to teach them success. "Common Sense Housekeeping," by Phillis Browne (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), is as practical as amusing, and contains plentiful valuable hints on the direction of a household, from managing servants and children to the cure of accidents and going out of town. The culinary department also is duly advised by "Common Sense Cookery," by A. G. Payne (Cassell), wherein are delicious and economical recipes in addition to instructions for tastefully arranging a table.—Two pretty gift-books for girls are "Woodland Romances," by C. L. Matéaux (Cassell), a collection of poems and graceful illustrations, and "Stories of Girlhood," by Sarah Doudney (Cassell), which contains three pleasantly told tales. From the same publishers come a fresh edition of Professor Morley's fanciful "Fables and Fairy Tales," under the new garb of "The Chicken Mart" and "Little Talks with Little People," and "Pet's Posy of Pictures and Stories," in which are given pictures of domestic, foreign and historic scenes, each accompanied by a brief description for youthful readers.

Three excellent children's stories are published by Messrs. Griffith and Farran. "Ten of Them," by Mrs. R. M. Bray, is the record of a large family, who are not so good as to be priggish, nor so naughty as to be unreal; "Those Unlucky Twins," by A. Lyster, illustrates the adventures of a devoted brother and sister; and "The Secret of Wrexford," by Esther Carr, tells of a solitary child, who discovers long-lost family treasures in an old ruin.—Birthday books are fast going the round of the poets, and "The Tennyson Birthday Book," edited by E. Shakespear (H. S. King) is a tasteful addition to the list. —Plain needlework is happily more attended to in schools nowadays than in times past, when many children of the working classes often could achieve an elaborate strip of useless embroidery, but were utterly unable to make their own clothes. Two very sensible and straightforward handbooks for school teaching, "Standard Guide to Needlework," and "Standard Guide to Knitting" (Central School Depôt), have been compiled according to the new code by a Lady Manager, and have already been used with considerable success, the Princess Louise having patronised the works. The former treatise lays out a plan of gradual instruction for infants and girls, from the simplest hemming to cutting out and making undergarments, and is accompanied by diagrams and patterns, while the latter "Guide" gives similar progressive directions, beginning with a plain strip of knitting, and ending with the ever-useful stocking.

◆

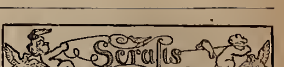
WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

NOVEMBER 8TH TO NOVEMBER 14TH (INCLUSIVE)



EXPLANATION.—The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

REMARKS.—This week has been one of very disturbed and stormy weather. It commenced with barometrical readings varying from 30·1 inches in the South of France to 29·5 inches on the north coast of Scotland. In the course of Thursday, the 8th instant, a rather deep depression passed in a north-easterly direction along our extreme western coasts, causing southerly gales in Ireland and St. George's Channel, and strong breezes elsewhere, with a great deal of rain. A second disturbance came in on the following day, and Saturday, the 10th instant, found us with a somewhat complex disturbance off our south-western coasts, and strong southerly to south-westerly winds or gales all over the country. During the day the weather improved generally, and the barometer rose briskly on our south-western coasts; but on Sunday morning, the 11th instant, a storm set in at the Irish stations, which swept over the whole of our islands later in the day, blowing with great violence, and accompanied by heavy rain. In it the barometer fell as low as 27·86 inches at Stornoway, and 28·58 inches even in London. The squalls were extremely heavy, the air close, and the wind southerly. From this depression a rapid recovery has since been in progress; but at the close of the period a new system of disturbance has appeared in the west, and more bad weather is anticipated. The barometer was highest (30·25 inches) at midnight on Wednesday, the 14th instant; lowest (28·58 inches) at midnight on Sunday, the 11th instant; range, 1·67 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (60°) on Thursday, the 8th instant; lowest (37°) on Wednesday, the 14th instant. On the latter occasion 7° of frost occurred on the grass. Range, 23°. Rainfall. Total fall, 1·26 inches, on four days; greatest fall in one day, 0·52 inches, on Monday morning, the 12th instant. The total fall from Sunday morning, the 11th instant, to Monday morning, the 12th instant, was 0·91 inches.



A MONUMENT TO THE LATE FIELD-MARSHAL VON WRANGEL is to be erected at Berlin.

THE COPYRIGHT OF MENDELSSOHN'S WORKS expired, writes a German correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, on the 4th inst., the thirtieth anniversary of his death.

THE LIVINGSTONIA MISSION at Lake Nyanza will try to cultivate cinchona, tea, and coffee, and the Madras Government will supply the young plants to the mission.

BENGALESE NEWSPAPERS are conducted in a very free and easy style, to judge from a paragraph in a Dacca journal, the East, which states, "We claim our usual Dussemh holidays; the East will not be out for the next two weeks."

A RUSSIAN MUSICAL ACADEMY is to be established on the model of the French Conservatoire in order to develop native talent. Students will be trained for the opera, concert-room, and the stage, and will also be instructed in literature and physiology.

THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY.——On Wednesday, at a meeting of the Royal Scottish Academy, held in Edinburgh, Sir Daniel Macnee, President, in the chair, Mr. W. D. Mackety, Edinburgh, Mr. D. W. Stevenson, Edinburgh, and Mr. J. Docherty, Glasgow, were elected Associates.

PRINCESS MARY'S VILLAGE HOME FOR LITTLE GIRLS.——H.R.H. The Prince of Wales has consented to preside at a dinner to be held in March next, in aid of the funds of this institution, situated at Addlestone, Surrey. Upwards of 150 little girls are now in these homes, for whose maintenance funds are urgently needed.

THE PRESENT SITUATION OF THE FRENCH MINISTRY has been cleverly adapted by a Paris satirical journal, the Grelot, to a well-known picture by M. de Neuville, "The Last Cartouche." The members of the De Broglie Cabinet are grouped together in a room in various attitudes of resistance, while M. de Fourtou fires his last shot out of the window. The caricature has been seized by the police.

THE MODEL OF CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE in Parliament Square has been increased in height by the alteration of the pedestal, which has been made slightly tapering, according to Egyptian custom, and the addition of a stylobate between the pedestal and the steps. The total elevation of the obelisk is now nearly 91 feet—the supports measuring 22½ feet, and the shaft from base to apex 68 feet 5½ inches—10 feet higher than previously.

THE METROPOLITAN FREE HOSPITAL, late of Devonshire Square, Bishopsgate, is to be rebuilt on the first proposed site in Bishopsgate Street Within, and the Committee appeal for funds to carry out the reconstruction. The Lord Mayor and Corporation support the appeal, and donations may be sent to the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House; or the bankers, Messrs. Glynn, Mills, and Co., Messrs. Barnett, Hoares, and Co., and Messrs. Coutts and Co.

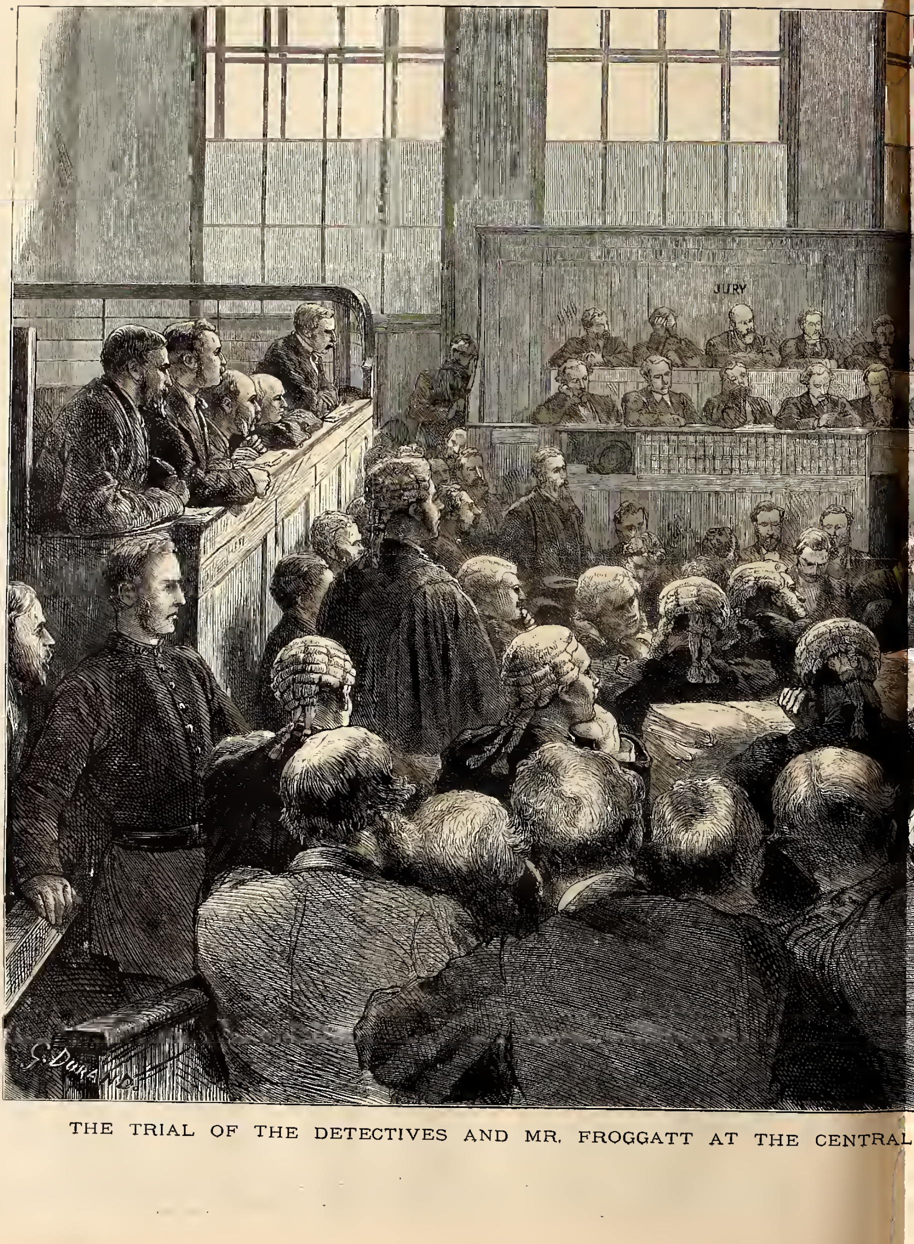
BIRD LIME is manufactured extensively in Japan, and is made from a dark evergreen growing on the mountains of the South. Good-sized animals are successfully snared by the lime, for when they get the stuff on their paws they soon become covered with it, while large sea birds are caught by knotting together the shoots of the Wisteria, smearing them with lime, and floating them out to sea, where they speedily attract the wild fowl. The lime is also largely used for medicinal purposes in cuts and wounds.

A NEW ENDING TO "DON GIOVANNI" was recently furnished at a San Francisco theatre by two misguided supers who enacted the devils in the last scene. At rehearsal Don Giovanni had been absent, and Leporello had rehearsed the part with the devils, so when the evening came the supers fixed upon Leporello and bore him away to the infernal regions, ascribing his struggles and declarations that he was the wrong man to realistic acting. Poor Don Giovanni stood helpless on the stage until he was fetched off ignominiously by a prompter in his shirt-sleeves.

HYDROPHOBIA IN FRANCE during the last twenty-six years has caused at most twenty-eight deaths per annum, the disease being most prevalent in September, October, and November. Children form the greater part of the cases, but the bite appears to grow more fatal as age increases, two-thirds of the cases of persons from fifty to seventy years of age resulting in death, and a similar result following three-quarters of the bites of persons from seventy to eighty-one years old. Cauterisation has proved fairly successful, and only twenty per cent. of the bites so treated have been fatal, while seventy-eight per cent. of the non-cauterised wounds have proved mortal.

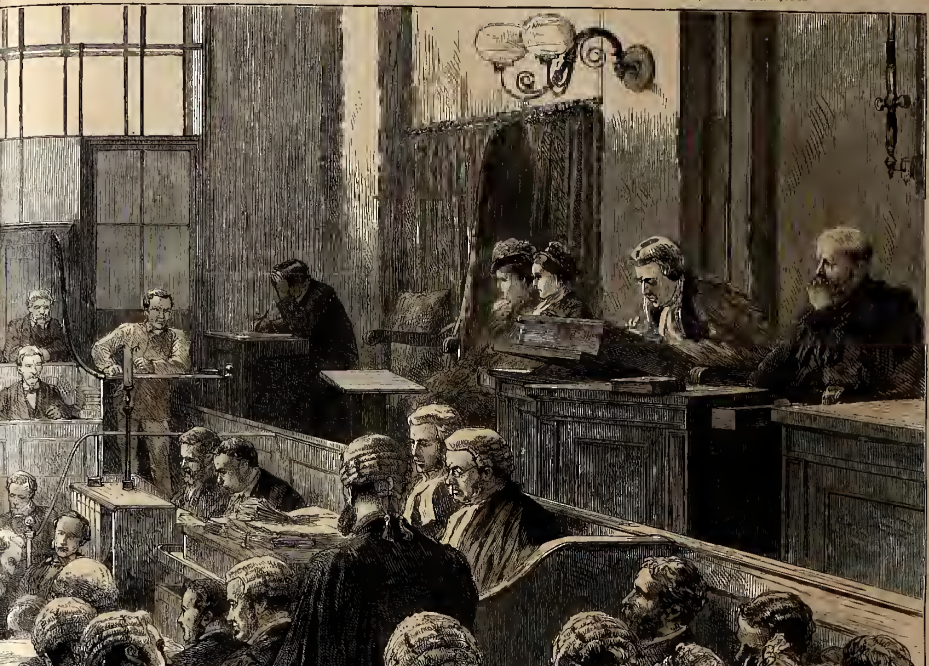
LONDON MORTALITY increased by only one death last week, and numbered 1,448 against 1,447, registered during the previous seven days, being 139 below the average, and at the rate of 21·4 per 1,000. There were 25 deaths from small-pox (an increase of 16, a higher number than has been registered in any week since last July), 62 from measles (an increase of 15), 67 from scarlet fever (a decline of 20), 6 from diphtheria (a decrease of 3), 15 from whooping-cough (a decrease of 9), and 42 from different forms of fever (an increase of 3). Deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 338 (an increase of 3, being 51 below the average), of which 203 resulted from bronchitis, and 98 from pneumonia. There were 2,432 births registered, against 2,667 the previous week, being 70 below the average. The mean temperature was 51·0 deg., or 6·4 deg. above the average. The duration of sunshine was 12·7 hours in the week, out of 64·7 hours that the sun was above the horizon.

NATIVE LITERATURE IN INDIA shows a steady progress, and the demand for vernacular books is rapidly increasing, while their political tone has also improved. More than half the volumes printed in India during 1875 were original works, and nearly three-quarters of these were in the vernacular of the various provinces, Bengal claiming the largest number. Works on law and medicine and school text-books preponderated, biography was poorly represented, and history left to English writers; but poems and dramas were plentiful, and were mainly on topical subjects, the Bengalese "fish-scare" having inspired many writers with such pleasant poems as "Small-pox in the Fish," "Shall We Eat Worms or Fish?" &c. The Baroda trial, the hardships of gaol life, the evils of child marriage, the degeneracy of the times, and the Mutiny were other favourite themes. English is evidently best known in the Bombay Presidency, where, however, Mill's "Political Economy" has been translated into Guzerati, while Sanscrit books abounded in Madras, and Calcutta was principally remarkable for a fresh publication of Shakespeare and the compilation of seventeen keys to books in use at the schools and colleges.



NATHANIEL DRUSCOVICH
GEORGE CLARKE
MR. DOUGLAS STRAIGHT
JOHN MEIKLEJOHN
WILLIAM PALMER
EDWARD FROGGATT
MR. MONTAGU WILLIAMS
MR. B. T. E. BESLEY
JURY
G. DURAND

THE TRIAL OF THE DETECTIVES AND MR. FROGGATT AT THE CENTRAL



WILLIAM KURR, CONVICT WITNESS
SIR HARDINGE STANLEY GIFFARD, SOLICITOR-GENERAL
SIR JOHN HOLKER, ATTORNEY-GENERAL
MR. ALDERMAN DAVID HENRY STONE
BARON CHARLES EDWARD POLLOCK, THE PRESIDING JUDGE

CRIMINAL COURT—SCENE DURING THE EXAMINATION OF WILLIAM KURR

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——Plevna has not yet fallen, and the Russians are still busily engaged in drawing their lines closer round the city, and in making their soldiers as comfortable as possible with wooden and iron huts. Although Ghazi Osman is said still to possess sufficient provisions for six weeks, there is reported to be considerable distress inside the town, maize apparently now forming the sole food, while the number of sick and wounded is very large, and their state—according to a correspondent of The Times—most hopeless and loathsome, cases of confluent small-pox being placed indiscriminately among the wounded, many of whom are suffering from fractures of forty days' standing still unset. Yet, with all this, Osman Pasha obstinately refuses the aid of the British surgeons of the Stafford House Committee, and to remove the wounded out of the town. South of Plevna there has been some sharp skirmishing, and the Russians, under General Leonhardt, are reported to have gained a slight success at Wratza, while on the 9th inst., General Skobeleff, carried an important height on the Green Hills, near Brestovec, which the Turks subsequently attempted unsuccessfully to retake. In the mean time the Turkish army of relief is being organised under Mehemet Ali Pasha who, it is said, has been entrusted with the difficult task of breaking through the Russian lines, and at the same time of keeping Servia in awe. General Todleben, who by the way, is reported to be ill, has now completely closed all communication from the west, and any approach of a relieving army would be very quickly signalled to headquarters. The Porte is now not unnaturally getting very anxious about that General and his army, and is by no means desirous that Plevna should prove the Metz of the present campaign.

In the East the Czarevitch, whose army has been weakened by the reinforcements sent to the army investing Plevna, has suffered one or two small reverses, and the troops have been compelled by Suleiman Pasha to evacuate Opaka and Epolomarka. Both sides are showing considerable activity on the Lom, and the Russians continue their preparations to lay serious siege to the great Danubian fortresses still in the hands of the Turks, and to Rustchuk in particular.

In the Shipka Pass there has also been considerable movement, the Turks continuing to keep up a vigorous bombardment.

In ASIA, Mukhtar Pasha on the 9th inst. repulsed a Russian attack on the outworks of Erzeroum, and it is now thought in Constantinople that he will be able to hold that town until winter fairly sets in and compels a suspension of operations. The dilatoriness of the Russians in not at once following up their victory is much commented upon, as Mukhtar's army having been utterly disorganised, he at first had intended to withdraw immediately from Erzeroum; but time having been allowed to him, be speedily reorganised the remnants of his army, and was able to inflict defeat upon the attacking detachment. The mistake of the Russians is all the greater, as the rapidity with which earthworks can be thrown up by the Turks is well known, and unless General Heimann makes an attack in force, Erzeroum, now merely defended by a wall, may in a few days be rendered as impregnable as Plevna. Kars is now completely invested, and has been summoned by General Melikoff to surrender—a summons which was duly considered at a council of war by the besieged and universally rejected. Kars is known to be well provisioned, and no immediate fear is regarded as to its safety. Batoum, where are Dervish Pasha and his division, is being vigorously bombarded by the Russians.

In CONSTANTINOPLE there is serious uneasiness, owing to a reported plot against the Sultan for the purpose of overthrowing Mahmoud Damad Pasba, and of restoring Murad (who is reported to have perfectly recovered) to the throne. There are various versions of the affair, and one thing only is certain, that numerous placards have been posted on the walls of Stamboul calling upon the people to assassinate Mahmoud Damad Pasha, and accusing him of intending to bring about peace, and to betray Turkey to Russia. It is said that there has been an attempt to poison Mahmoud (who is certainly ill), and ex-Sultan Murad has been removed from the Palace of Teheragao to that abode of evil omen, the Old Seraglio. In the meantime Sultan Abd-ul-Hamid has dreamed that the Prophet Mahomed appeared to him in person, and advised him to conclude peace—curiously enough the chief Imâm having a similar vision; there have been a few unimportant changes in the Ministry; the Deputies to represent Constantinople in the forthcoming Parliamentary Session have been elected; and there has been great rejoicing over Lord Beaconsfield's Guildhall speech and his words of encouragement to Turkey.

SERVIA is growing more and more warlike, has refused the request of Turkey to withdraw her army of observation from the frontier, and has received another large subvention from Russia. —MONTENEGRO is continuing active operations against Fort Serdar, near Spuz, and General Verbissa is actively besieging Podgoritza. The Miridites have joined Prince Nikita, and other Christian tribes are negotiating with him to the same effect.

FRANCE.——The great battle began, as had been expected, on Monday, the Republicans boldly opening the campaign by bringing forward a resolution proposing the formation of a commission of thirty-three members to inquire into the asserted illegitimate acts and violations of the law which have been committed during the past five months in order to exert undue pressure upon the electors. This proposition, which was read out by Albert Grévy, and which was signed by eighteen deputies, including M. Gambetta, caused the greatest surprise to the whole house, for even the Left were in ignorance of what precise step their leaders were likely to adopt. The greatest surprise was manifest upon the Ministerial bench, but when the first moment of astonishment was over the Duc de Broglie at once ascended the tribune and asked for urgency upon the proposition, as the "Government demanded that light should be thrown upon those accusations which for five months have been heaped upon it." He continued, however, with the significant statement that when the time arrived to make this Parliamentary inquiry "we shall perhaps demand more impartial judges than those proposed for us." The proposition was then at once handed over to the usual Committee of the Bureaux to report on it next day. The first impression of the proposition on the Deputies in general was not wholly favourable, as it seemed to possess a revolutionary character, and to forshadow a "Convention;" while the number of preliminary "whereases," and certain expressions that the responsibility of the authors of the illegal violences, "whoever they might be," should be brought home to them, were thought to point directly at the Marshal, whom impartial observers are anxious to keep out of the conflict. Upon consideration, and after explanations from the Left leaders, the document was found to be constitutional, and the uneasiness was allayed. The Government, however, at once proceeded to make capital out of the affair, and next morning an official note appeared stating that the Marshal, considering the accusations brought against the Ministers which implicated the whole Government, had refused to accept their resignation, and begged them to remain at their posts.

On Tuesday, after a new regulation—proposed the preceding day—had been adopted, which prohibited the continual noisy interruptions which so hindered business last session, the report of the Committee was read by M. Lebloud, which unanimously advised the adoption of the proposition for a Commission of Inquiry. Thereupon ensued an agitated debate, in which M. Baragnon abused the Republic to his heart's content, stigmatised the proposed Commission as a "revolutionary usurpation," and declared that the Constitution was protected "by the Senate, by the chief of the State, who wields the right and the force." To this M. Léon Renault replied in a splendid speech, bringing accusation upon accusation against the Ministry, defending the right of the Chamber to appoint a Committee of Inquiry, and declaring that the Senate—a guarantee of public liberties in the eyes of real Conservatives—had in the person of the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier refused to allow itself to be held up as an instrument of a second dissolution. M. Fourtou then prepared to reply, but the sitting was adjourned until the next day, when the Minister delivered a rambling speech of the tu quoque order, citing M. Gambetta's proceedings after the 4th September as an excuse for the recent Ministerial action, and recapitulated all the well-worn Conservative arguments about Radical excesses and the desire of France for a "Government of order, peace, and stability." He also twitted the Republicans with sending articles to the foreign Press. He was followed by M. Jules Ferry with yet another stirring denunciation of the Cabinet, and after a somewhat noisy scene the sitting was adjourned until Thursday, when the Duc de Broglie was to speak. The Senate, which had been adjourned from last week, met on Wednesday; but nothing was done except announcing the death of M. de Franclieu, an ardent Legitimist and a life senator. On Thursday the vacancies to four life senatorships were to be filled up.

At the time we are writing it would be useless to analyse the feelings produced by the great Parliamentary struggle—suffice it to say that the most intense agitation and excitement prevails in all circles, that the Prefects have been requested to remain at their posts, and that all eyes are fixed upon the Marshal, whose slightest utterance, real or asserted, is twisted and turned about until what was at first a supposition becomes a positive statement. The apprehension of an appeal to the Senate, and, failing that, a coup d'état, is growing stronger daily, and is carefully fostered by the Conservative journals, who triumphantly point to the Marshal's army of 400,000 men, and unconsciously echo Victor Hugo's words in the "History of a Crime," "Where Might exists the People lose their Right."

ITALY.——The health of the Pope continues to excite great uneasiness, and at one time the report of his death was current. However, he is now officially stated to be better, and he certainly continues to receive various deputations. Signor Vanzetti, the celebrated Padua surgeon, has nevertheless been summoned to the Vatican, where, by the way, Cardinal Randi is suffering from small-pox.—There have been a few unimportant changes in the Ministry, the resignation of Signor Zanardelli, Minister of Public Works, being the most noteworthy.

INDIA.——The harvest and weather reports, with the exception of Scinde, continue satisfactory. The situation continues to improve, and prices are falling in most districts.—Frontier affairs continue to excite considerable apprehension, and regiments have been warned that a service expedition of six weeks' duration is decided upon, but the general impression is that if a campaign be begun it will last much longer than six weeks.—The official report on the great cyclone and storm wave in Bengal last November states that 90,000 persons were drowned and 75,000 people carried off by the subsequent outbreak of cholera, making a total loss of 165,000 lives.

UNITED STATES.——A caucus of Republican Senators has decided that the majority are not in accord with President Hayes' Southern policy, but that there also is not a majority disposed to raise a formal issue with him on the point.—The House of Representatives have still further reduced the army from 22,500 to 20,000 men.—The Senate has unanimously confirmed the appointment of Mr. John Welsh as Ambassador to England.

MISCELLANEOUS.——RUSSIA is going to issue another loan for 15,000,000*l.* at Berlin and Amsterdam at 76½, bearing 5 per cent. interest, and redeemable in thirty-seven years at par.—Lord Beaconsfield's speech has not been too favourably commented upon in GERMANY and RUSSIA, but is said to have given great satisfaction in AUSTRIA, where the Russian victories are beginning once more to excite apprehension, and "mobilisation" is again being talked about.—The BELGIAN parliament was opened by the King, whose speech from the throne was wholly confined to home topics, though warlike, or rather so called "offensive," preparations formed the majority of them. He concluded with an appeal for "union" amongst all the political parties. —From the TRANSKEI we hear that the Kaffir war still continues, and that several skirmishes have occurred with the Galekas, in which the Colonial forces have been successful.

THE COURT

THE Queen will leave Scotland for Windsor on Friday next. Meanwhile, Her Majesty and the Princess Beatrice remain at Balmoral, where the Prince of Wales' birthday was duly kept last week. The Princess of Wales and her three daughters came over to lunch at Balmoral, and after luncheon the Queen, the Princess of Wales, Princess Beatrice, and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud met the members of the Royal Household, and the servants and tenants of Balmoral, in the ball-room, and drank the Prince of Wales' health. On Sunday Her Majesty was present at the morning service performed at the Castle, the Rev. Dr. Scott officiating, and next day the Princess of Wales visited the Queen. Her Majesty and the Princess Beatrice have driven to the Linn of Dee and Allan Quoich, while Sir J. and Lady Clark have been staying at the Castle, and Major Bambridge and Lieuts. Duckett and Toogood of the 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers have been received by the Queen.—The Court is now in mourning for the Queen Dowager of Saxony until Dec. 6. The Prince of Wales' birthday was celebrated at Sandringham last week by the usual dinner of roast-beef and plum-pudding to the labourers on the estate, and the Prince visited the Royal mews during the dinner. On Saturday the Duke of Cambridge and the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh left Sandringham, and the Prince of Wales and the Crown Prince of Hanover hunted with the West Norfolk hounds, while in the evening the Duke of Teck arrived. On Monday the party broke up, the Prince of Wales leaving Sandringham on a shooting visit to Lord and Lady Walsingham at Merton, and the Crown Prince of Hanover and the Duke of Teck going to Cambridge, where they spent the day and returned to town on Tuesday.—The Princess of Wales and her three daughters are expected home from Scotland this week, as Miss Knollys is now quite out of danger.

The Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne visited Glasgow on Tuesday, and were present in the evening at the opening of the new Public Hall, when the Messiah was performed. On her arrival the Princess was presented with a casket containing a photograph of the building and an illuminated programme.

The Queen Dowager Amélie of Saxony, who died last week, aged 75, was the mother of the reigning King, and daughter of the late King Maximilian I of Bavaria. Her Majesty and the late King John of Saxony kept their golden wedding in 1872, just a year before the King's death.—The fourth son of the Khédive of Egypt, Prince Ibrahim, is now in England studying for his entrance examination to Woolwich.

CHURCH NEWS

THE CHURCH ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE was held at Birmingham on Thursday last week, under the presidency of Mr. T. R. Andrews, chairman of the Council. Papers were read on "Theological Instruction of Candidates for the Ministry," and "Can the Desire of the People for More Cheerful and Musical Worship be met without Danger to the Simplicity and Spirituality of Worship?" In the evening an enthusiastic Anti-Confessional meeting was held in the Town Hall, at which resolutions were passed condemning the practice of Auricular Confession, and calling on the Archbishops and Bishops to take prompt steps for its suppression.

VARIOUS.——Last Sunday being Hospital Sunday in Dublin, appeals were made in all the Protestant and Dissenting places of worship in the city and county on behalf of the hospitals. The churches were well filled, although the weather was very inclement. The Catholics do not join in the scheme, and those hospitals which are under Catholic management do not share in the benefits.—Mr. Tennant, one of the Conservative members for Leeds, speaking a few nights since at a soirée of the Pudsey Church Institute, said that he could not see why Churchmen should want to enforce upon Nonconformists any particular form or ceremonial to be adopted in the burial of the dead. He for one did not object to Dissenters burying their dead in the churchyards in any form they pleased, provided they did it in a Christian and orderly fashion. He did not think the Church of England would suffer by the severance of its connection with the State, though he thought the time was far distant when this would be put to the test. It would be otherwise, however, were disendowment to follow as a matter of course. So long as the rights of property were respected, so long would the Church have her own endowments.—On Tuesday Mr. Titus Salt presided over a large Disestablishment meeting at Bradford. Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., who was one of the speakers, said that a remarkable change had come over the character of that controversy, and as an instance of the fact he referred to the recent Church Congress, where there was a large minority in favour of Disestablishment. "The boasted independence of the clergy was a scandal to the country, and there were instances in which convicted ecclesiastical felons had been allowed to continue their ministrations on ticket-of-leave."—The Bishop of Chester, at his Triennial Visitation at Liverpool on Tuesday, alluded to the proposed erection of a see there, and said that his consent was conditional upon there being no diversion of existing ecclesiastical endowments from the purposes to which they were now devoted. He thought that no smaller sum than 4,000*l.* a year should be the income of the new Bishop.—Mr. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., not content with the opportunities for oratorical display afforded by the Law Courts and by the House of Commons, has invaded the pulpit. Last Sunday he preached at a Wesleyan chapel, High Barnet, and rated his hearers soundly on their lack of liberality. Ministers were sometimes afraid to speak on this matter lest congregations should think they were asking for something for themselves. He as a layman could speak without reserve, and he would lay it upon their consciences that Christian liberality had decreased during the last few years to an enormous extent. Christians did not give one-half of what their fathers did, and not one-tenth of what they would give if they were honest with God.—The Rev. T. H. Tait, of Aberlady, has resigned his position as a minister of the Church of Scotland, because he can no longer adhere to the doctrines of the Confession in reference to the Divine decrees, and some other points. The Presbytery of Haddington have accepted his resignation, and some of the members, while expressing their regret at his change of opinion, complimented him on having the courage of his convictions instead of remaining in the Church and circulating views antagonistic to her creed.

MUSIC

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.——The performances of Rigoletto, Le Nozze di Figaro, and Robert le Diable last week may be dismissed with brevity. In Rigoletto we have simply to congratulate Mdlle. Valleria on her impersonation of Gilda, a part in which so many eminent artists, from Angiolina Bosio to Adelina Patti and Emma Albani, have won distinction that it is difficult for after-comers to satisfy exacting connoisseurs. In Le Nozze a new singer, Mdlle. Parodi, made her début. Endowed with a legitimate mezzo-soprano voice, Mdlle. Parodi sang both airs which Mozart has put into the mouth of his dejected, yet always loving, heroine with extreme good taste and proportionate effect. Another assumption, interesting not merely on account of its novelty, but also of its unquestionable merit, was the Cherubino of Mdlle. Anna di Belocca, a young and prepossessing lyric comedian, who may be remembered at Her Majesty's Opera (Drury Lane) some three years since, and who is welcome back again. A livelier portraiture of the enamoured page could hardly have been wished. Although Mdlle. di Belocca did not completely express the deep sentiment of "Non so più cosa son" (taken, as always, too fast), she happily caught the spirit of the still more beautiful canzonet, "Voi che sapete," which she sang with expression so true and unaffected as to charm the audience, who insisted upon and obtained its repetition. The part of Susanna was sustained by Madame Marie Rôze, like one well acquainted with its traditions and thoroughly versed in the music. Her delivery of the air in the last act, "Deh vieni non tardar?" was all that could be wished. Signor Del Puente is a somewhat heavy Count, and Signor Galassi a still heavier Figaro—but both are conscientious and painstaking. In Robert le Diable Madame Marie Rôze, for the first time (in England, at least) undertook the part of Alice, with a success that must add very considerably to her repute. The first Italian Alice here was Jenny Lind (now Madame Goldschmidt). The "Swedish Nightingale" made her début as the devoted Norman peasant in the spring of 1847 (May 4th), when the late Mr. Lumley was director of Her Majesty's Theatre. Since then we have had many other representatives of Alice, including among them the modern "Swedish Nightingale"—Christine Nilsson. It is, therefore, no little to say of Madame Marie Roze that she created a marked impression in a character so exacting both in its vocal and histrionic requirements. That the impression produced was legitimate may be stated without hesitation. If in no instance stirringly dramatic, the acting of Madame Rôze was, nevertheless, easy and natural throughout. She rose with the situations—a proof that she understood them; and was most successful where most was demanded of her. Further comments would be superfluous. About the Robert of Signor Fancelli, the Isabella of Mdlle. Valleria, the Bertram of Signor Foli, and the Elena of Madame Katti Lanner it is unnecessary to speak, so familiar are one and all these performances to the opera-going world. Mdlle. Caroline Salla's first appearance as Margaret gave special interest to the performance of Faust on Monday night. Judged from a dramatic point of view the young French lady's impersonation is beyond reproach, and in all the more impassioned music she realised every demand. In the one brilliant air, however—the "Jewel song"—a certain want of fluency and equality in the execution of florid passages was remarked; and as such are to be met with, to a greater or lesser extent, in all modern operas, it behoves Mdlle. Salla to give further and serious attention to this particular phase of her art. In the great duet with Faust she was perfect; as she was also in the scene at the Cathadral, where Mephistopheles derides the prayers of the penitent girl. With further consideration, indeed, there is no evident reason why Margaret should not become one of Mdlle. Salla's best parts. She has all the requisites for it, physical and intellectual. Mdlle. de Belocca was an agreeable representative of the insipid character of Siebel, which M. Gounod's librettists, for the sake of French hypersentimentalism, have thrust upon Goethe. Signors Fancelli, Del Puenta, and Galassi, as Faust, Mephistopheles, and Valentine, were—apart from exceptions here and there—thoroughly efficient; so, too, was Madame Lablache in the subordinate, though by no means unimportant character of Martha. The choral and orchestral music was performed in a manner highly creditable to the conductor, Signor Licalso, and those who work under his direction, not the least performance of the evening being that of the "chorus of soldiers" in Act IV. It only remains to be added that the Barbiere (the evergreen!) was the next opera, and that Mdlle. di Belocca was, both vocally and dramatically, as charming a Rosina as when she first appeared among us.

MUSIC AT GLASGOW.——The opening of the new Public Halls in this great Scotch commercial city has been taken advantage of this week in a musical sense, the Glasgow Choral Union, under the able direction of Mr. H. A. Lambeth, so long a professional resident, playing a conspicuous part. In honour of the "inauguration" of the new municipal buildings (Tuesday night) there was a performance of Messiah, in which Mesdames Lemmens Sherrington and Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Signor Foli assisted as leading singers, supported by the chorus of the Glasgow Union, already named, and an orchestra of tried performers, upwards of fifty in number—with Mr. W. T. Best, from Liverpool, organist, and Mr. Lambeth as conductor. On Thursday night Professor Macfarren's new cantata, The Lady of the Lake, composed expressly for the occasion, was produced, with Mesdames Sherrington and Patey, Messrs. Shakespeare, Robert Hilton, and Santley as solo vocalists. Last night Dr. Hans von Bülow was to conduct the first of a series of six orchestral concerts, for which he is expressly engaged—Mr. Arthur, to the unanimous regret of Glasgow amateurs, having seceded from the post he has hitherto occupied with so much credit to himself and those who worked under his direction.

WAIFS.——The music of the late Hector Berlioz, at one time so neglected in his own country, is now becoming everywhere popular in France. His great symphonies are repeatedly performed in the concerts of M. Pasdeloup, at the Cirque, and in those of M. Colonne, at the Châtelet. The Sinfonie Fantastique seems to be an especial favourite with Parisian amateurs.—We hear good reports of the new work by Messrs. Arthur Sullivan and Gilbert, to be produced this evening at the Opera Comique. Let us hope for a new Cox and Box, or, still preferable, a new Contrabandista. Of another Trial by Jury it would be preposterous to think.—Madame Marie Rôze leaves England next month for a five months' engagement in the United States.—Madame Arabella Goddard is to play at the Vienna Winter Concerts.—We must postpone till next number our remarks upon the first "Popular Concert," which, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Chappell, commenced the 20th series brilliantly on Monday evening.

SPORTING

THE TURF.——It may be worth while for a moment to refer to the race for the Liverpool Cup last week, for though as we anticipated the field was a small one, only eight starting, the contest was a far more interesting one than might have been expected. Whitebait, who was to all appearance leniently dealt with by the handicapper, and had a fair chance of being in season now or never, resumed the premiership in the market before the flag fell, while Sign Manual came with a rush into the second place, Sunray and Footstep being next in demand. Of all these, however, only the last-named could get a place at the finish, but she had to be contented with third honours, Arbitrator and Advance filling the two first places in the order named. At the distance Advance seemed to have the race in hand, but the Irish colt, ridden admirably by Glover, gradually drew up and won by a head on the post. The Hibernians present were of course in ecstacies, as well they might be, for to give 4 lbs. to a good four-year-old like Advance, and as a three-year-old to win under 8 st., and that, too, over heavy ground, was a grand performance. Though not equal to those of Jongleur in the Cambridgeshire, it makes Arbitrator one of the best of our three-year-olds. To prove the truth of the running, Arbitrator on the next day, carrying 12 lbs. extra, won the Great Lancashire Handicap, beating Whitebait again, who ran second, and Hesper, the favourite, who only gave the winner 9 lbs. for the year between them.

Somewhat of the same apathy which overshadowed Liverpool last week seemed to hang about Shrewsbury this, though most of the leading members of the Turf, gentle and simple, were present, and the racing itself certainly good. Proceedings commenced with the Autumn Steeplechase, for which Lancet, who had been previously spotted as the winner, failed to put in an appearance. Chillilain was therefore elected favourite in a field of seven, but the backers began badly as he could not get a place, the race falling to the Duke of Hamilton's Birdcatcher, who went the course in capital style, and eventually beat Craven by a head. Speculators were more fortunate in selecting Red Comyn as their fancy in the Groby Cut for juveniles, which he won cleverly enough from Speculator in the large field of sixteen. The greatest mistake made in the day was backing Great Tom at nearly 2 to 1 for the Queen's Plate, won by Sheldrake, who ran his best race of the season. The racing on the Wednesday was even better than that of the previous day, and again matters did not go very well with the favourites, Macadam, a rank outsider in consequence of his indifferent running on the Tuesday, winning the Welton Welter, and Zanoni upsetting the fancied ones in the 100 sov. Plate. The chief race of the day was the Great Shropshire Handicap, which had not evoked so much previous speculation as in former years. Helena, however, had been spotted as well in, and though the field numbered thirteen the Duke of Westminster's filly was backed freely at 2 to 1. Fortune certainly does not smile on his Grace in connection with the Turf, and Helena could only get second place, another Duke in the person of His Grace of Montrose with Hopbloom, who last year was a very fair animal, but owing to very indifferent performances this season had the best of the weights on the present occasion.

COURSING.——Notwithstanding several "divisions" the Newmarket Champion Meeting was a grand success, and it may be fairly said to have established itself as second only to the Grand Waterloo gathering at Altcar. The Champion Puppy Stakes were divided between Mr. R. Gitters with Palm Flower, and Mr. Apsland with Polly Ann, both animals, however, being actually owned by Mr. J. S. Postle, whose kennel seems almost invincible hitherto. It may be remembered that last year Mr. Gittens nominated Coomassie, who divided at, and afterwards won the Waterloo Cup. There are many more unlikely things than that we have here the next Waterloo winner in Palm Flower.

FOOTBALL.——The long list of the first ties in the Association Challenge Cup is being got through by degrees. Of the recent competitions the most noticeable have been those between the Old Harrovians and 105th Regiment, the former being victorious, between the Swifts and Leyton, resulting in the defeat of the latter, and that in which the Wanderers, the holders of the Cup, beat the Panthers by nine goals to one.—Football seems to be taking strong hold of the Welshmen, a Challenge Cup contest according to Association rules having just been organised for the Southern portion of the Principality.

BICYCLING.—The Hon. Keith-Falconer has given proof that he still retains his old form by winning the Five Mile open race at the meeting of the Cambridge Bicycle Club.—We notice that Keen and Stanton have been again matched for a fifty miles race at the Agricultural Hall on the 19th inst.

AQUATICS.——The final heat for the Fours at Oxford resulted in the victory of Brasenose, which keeps up its tradition as a boating college with wonderful vitality. Two trial eights are out almost daily. At Cambridge the Colquhoun Sculls have been won by T. W. Barber of 1st Trinity, whose great strength gave him a considerable advantage over his last opponent, A. H. G. Prior, of St. John's, on a rough day. On the Cam, too, a pair of Trial Eights are in constant practice.

No true lover of sport will regret that the riding "endurance" match, dignified in some papers with the heading "England v. Mexico," at the Agricultural Hall, ended in a complete fiasco, the officers of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals causing the absurd exhibition to be brought to a close. It should never have been countenanced by the public, which is more to blame than the performers in these miserable "endurance" expositions.—Gale is alive, we believe, at the time of our going to press, but whether he is walking in his sleep or sleeping in his walk, we cannot say. After he has concluded his present exhibition, unless, indeed, as has been suggested, he is taken before a magistrate for attempting to commit suicide, perhaps he will be advertised to stand on one leg, or on his head for the matter of that, against "time" or "any other man," till a morbid public has had its fill.

New Music

MESSRS. DUFF AND STEWART.——A cheerful and taking narrative song is "Jeannette," written and composed by Edward Oxenford and Louisa Gray, compass from D below the lines to E fourth space.—Alfred de Musset's graceful poem, "Rappelle Toi," has been set to a pleasing melody by P. de Faye, who has also supplied the English version of the words; the compass is the same as the above-named song.—Three moderately difficult pianoforte pieces of a more ordinary type than we usually get from the clever composer, Michael Watson, are "Danse des Bayadères," a morceau de salon—best of the three—"Morceau à la Cracovienne," and "Danse Grotesque," which like many other would-be funny things is exceedingly dull.

MESSRS. METZLER AND CO.——Neither F. E. Weatherley nor J. Blumenthal was in a happy vein when he wrote and composed a monotonous song, entitled "Across the Far Blue Sea, Marie."—Two songs, which may lay claim to originality as far as the poetry is concerned, are "Bedouin Love Song," the music by Ciro Pinsuti, and "King Henry's Song" ("Youth will need have Dalliance"), the quaint words of which are by no less illustrious a personage than King Henry VIII.; the fairly appropriate music, with a chorus ad libitum, by Arthur Sullivan. Both the above-named songs will prove effective at a Christmas party; the one is for a bass, the other for a tenor.—A pathetic song of a serious character is "Far from Home," written and composed by E. Oxenford and G. B. Allen. Tenors will find useful "The Past is but a Troubled Dream," from Mr. Austin's Cantata, The Fire King, words by Maud Hargreaves, and "Mine Own," written and composed by F. E. Weatherly and H. Gadsby—the former is of a sentimental, the latter of a more cheerful nature.—Sung with a due amount of piquancy, "Whispering Kisses," for a soprano, will make as great a hit in private circles as it has done on the stage; the words, by H. B. Farnie, are quaint, and free from vulgarity, the music, by Emile Jonas, is bright and tuneful.—Molloy's charming song, "The Clang of the Wooden Shoon," forms the leading theme of an admirable valse by Charles Godfrey; it promises to be one of the favourites of the coming season.—The reverse may be said of "The Sea Nymph's Quadrille," from Lecocq's operetta of that name, arranged by C. Godfrey.

MESSRS. WOOD AND CO.——A fairly written love song is "One Night," words by Professor D'Oull, music by R. F. Harvey.—Organists and their hearers will pronounce a favourable verdict on "The Festival Day March for the Organ," by Walter Spinney, a composition which is full of life and vigour.—A capital and not difficult duet for the pianoforte, as an after-dinner piece, is "Woodland Whispers," a mazurka, by J. Nordman.

MESSRS. B. WILLIAMS AND CO.——One of the popular composer, Julia Woolf's, recent and most pleasing ballads, is "A Great Secret"—published in two keys—the piquante poetry is by F. E. Weatherley, M.A.—Two songs by Wilford Morgan show clearly that he is getting into a groove of ballad-writing to order, so fatal to originality. "The Realm of Love," words by Edward Oxenford, and "My Love loves Me dearly," words by Henry Hersee, are of the most ordinary and well-known type.

LEGAL

PROPOSED COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.——Sir J. Eardley Wilmot has prepared a bill, which he intends to introduce next session, for the establishment of a Court of Criminal Appeal in capital cases only. It is proposed that the new court shall consist of the chiefs of the High Court of Justice—namely, of the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer Divisions—the three senior judges, and the Home Secretary, five to form a quorum. This court is to take up any or every capital case after sentence has been passed, on the appeal of the condemned prisoner or of his attorney. It is to hear counsel both for the prisoner and for the conviction, the Government paying the expenses of both, and no judgment of the court is to be valid unless arrived at by at least two-thirds of its members.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.——The trial of the detectives and Mr. Froggatt we have alluded to in "Our Illustrations" column.—Dr. Kenealy has been occupying the attention of the Common Pleas Division for several days this week, appearing as the defendant in a suit brought against him by a solicitor named Coote, who sued him for the balance of a bill of costs. Soon after the opening of the case Lord Coleridge, who presided, offered to retire and allow some other judge to hear the pleadings if either party wished him to do so, but as there was no intimation to that effect he kept his seat, the trial went on, and at the close the jury decided in favour of the plaintiff. Dr. Kenealy's admirers in the gallery were so unruly that after the second day his lordship ordered the Court to be kept clear.—Last week the head master of the St. Thomas Charterhouse School in the Goswell Road was summoned for having assaulted one of his pupils, whom he had caned for some breach of school discipline. It was shown that the boy was very troublesome, and that no excessive violence had been used, and the charge was accordingly dismissed.—At the Liverpool Assizes in August last three men were convicted of a gross outrage upon a woman named Bridget Blackburn, and were each sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. The solicitor for the defence, however, felt confident of their innocence, and at his own expense he obtained such further evidence as induced the Treasury to prosecute three other men as participators in the crime. These have just been tried and acquitted, and the jury expressed an opinion that the alleged offence had never been committed at all. Mr. Justice Lush agreed with their verdict, and in consequence of his representations to the Home Office, a "free pardon" has since been granted to the men convicted at the first trial.—An attendant at the Sedgeley Workhouse has been sent to prison for two months for a brutal assault upon an inmate, who is blind, dumb, and paralysed. The magistrates were sorry that they could inflict no heavier punishment—and so are we.—The remains of a woman and a child aged about five years have been found buried beneath a cellar-floor in one of the narrow courts of Clerkenwell. They are supposed to have been murdered and to have lain there for about forty years.—A Fenian leader named O'Sullivan has got into the hands of the police for sending threatening letters to some of his associates who refused to join him in creating a riot at the recent banquet given to the Duke of Connaught by the Mayor of Cork. The idea was to cut the gas-pipe, break the windows from the street, and then rush into the place and do all the mischief they could. The Mayor had, however, timely warning of this pleasant intention, and ample precautions were taken to prevent its being carried out.—The Faversham Guardians have placed the Weekly Dispatch upon their "Index Expurgatorius." The other day an aged inmate of the workhouse managed to smuggle in a copy of the prohibited journal, and, worse still, dared to read it on a Sunday. He was found out, and is now suffering a week's imprisonment for "insulting" the Rev. E. J. Luce, the chaplain of the Union, who took the pernicious print away from him. We are not told the nature of the insult, nor the offence for which the Weekly Dispatch has been placed under the awful ban of the workhouse authorities.—Mr. T. Ellison, the judge of the Sheffield County Court, made a remarkable observation the other day during a case in which a woman was sued for medical fees. He said "There is more perjury committed in this Court by women ten times over than by men; they don't seem to care what they swear."—Last week a Linlithgow jury having retired to consider their verdict sent the court-officer to tell the sheriff that no verdict would be given until refreshments had been supplied.

SITE OF THE METROPOLITAN
FREE HOSPITAL
LATE DEVONSHIRE SQUARE
SECRETARY
HE THAT GIVETH TO THE POOR LENDETH TO THE LORD
WINE SPIRIT STORES

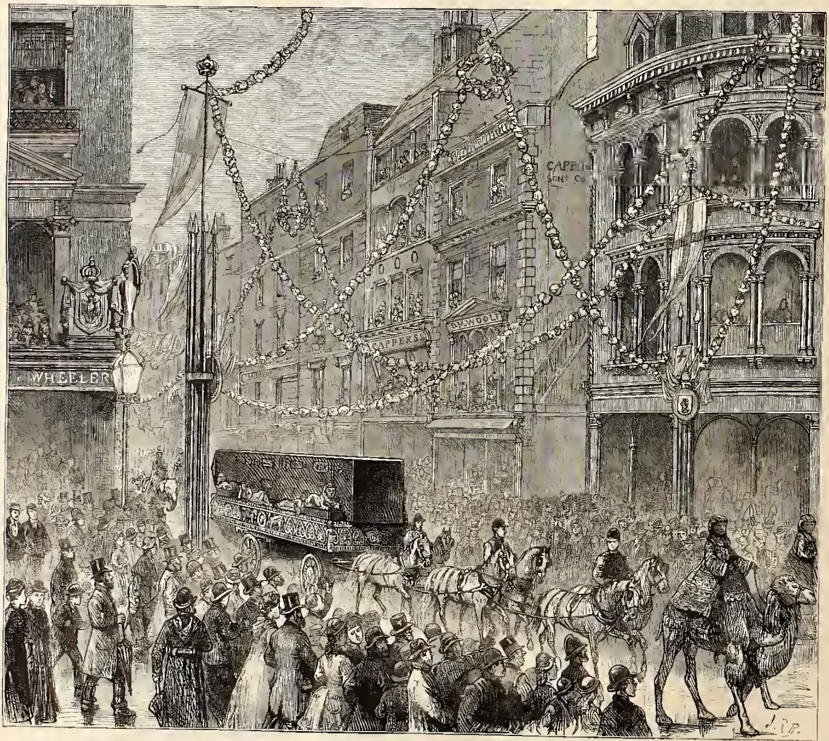
THE PROCESSION PASSING THE "SIR PAUL PINDAR" IN BISHOPSGATE STREET



WHEELER
CAPPERS
CAPPER SON & Co
D.M.WOOLF

THE PROCESSION WITH CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE PASSING DOWN GRACECHURCH STREET

LORD MAYOR'S DAY

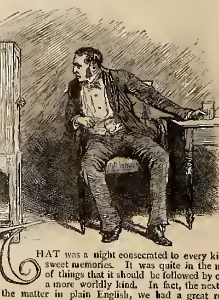
BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXIII.

MRS. PONTIFEX ASKS WHAT IT MEANS



THAT was a night consecrated to every kind of sweet memories. It was quite in the nature of things that it should be followed by one of a more worldly kind. In fact, the next day, to put the matter in plain English, we had a great row, a family row.

It began with Aunt Jane. She came to tea, accompanied by her husband; and she came with the evident intention of speaking her mind. This made us uneasy from the beginning, and although Mrs. Tyrrell attempted to pour oil on the troubled waters by producing her very best tea service, an honour which Mrs. Pontifex was certain to appreciate, she failed. Even tea services in pink and gold, with the rich silver teapot, accompanied by a lavish expenditure in seedcake, and Sally Lunns, and muffins, failed to bring a smile to that severe visage. Mrs. Pontifex was dressed for the occasion in a pyramidal cap trimmed with lace, beneath which her horizontal curls showed like the modest violet peeping between April leaves of grass. She wore her most rustling of black silk robes, and the most glittering of her stud-clasps in the black velvet ribbon which girt her brow. She sat bolt upright in her chair; and such was her remarkable strength of character, testimony to which has already been given by her husband, that she struck the key-note to the banquet, and made it joyless.

Who could be festive when Mrs. Pontifex icily refused sugar with her tea, and proceeded to deny that luxury to her husband?

"No, John Pontifex," she said. "It is high time to set less store upon creature comforts. No sugar, Celia, in my husband's tea."

Mr. Pontifex meekly acquiesced. He was already in the most profound depths of depression when he arrived, and a cup of tea without sugar was only another addition to his burden of melancholy. I conjectured that he had passed the afternoon in the receipt of spiritual nagging. In this art his wife was a proficient; and although nagging of all kinds must be intolerable, I think the religious kind must be the most intolerable. The unfortunate man made no effort to recover his cheerfulness, and sat silent, as upright as his wife, the cup of unsweetened tea in his hand, staring straight before him. Once, his wife looking the other way, he caught my eye and shook his head solemnly.

Under these circumstances we all ran before the gale close reefed.

It was a bad sign that Mrs. Pontifex did not talk. If she had been critically snappish, if she had told her niece that her cap was unbecoming, or Celia that her frock was unmaidenly, or me that an account would be required of me for my idle time—a very common way she had of making things pleasant—one would not have minded. But she did not speak at all, and that terrified us. Now and then she opened her lips, which moved silently, and then closed with a snap, as if she had just framed and fired off a thunderbolt of speech. Her husband remarked one of these movements, and immediately replacing his cup upon the table, softly rose and effaced himself behind the window curtains, where he sat with only a pair of trembling knees visible. Mr. Tyrrell pretended to be at his ease, but was not. His wife was not, and did not pretend to be. As soon as we reasonably could we rang the bell for the tea-things to be removed, and began some music. This was part of the regular programme, though no one suspected Mrs. Pontifex or her husband of any love for harmony. And while we were playing came Herr Räumer, at sight of whom Mrs. Pontifex drew herself up more stiffly than before, and coughed ominously.

He looked very fresh and young, this elderly foreigner. He was dressed neatly in a buttoned frock (no one in our circle wore evening dress for a gathering under the rank of dinner party or dance), and had a rose in a button hole. A little bit of scarlet ribbon in his breast showed that he was the possessor of some foreign Order. In his greeting of Celia he showed a Romeo-like elasticity and youthfulness, and he planted himself on the hearthrug with an assured air, as if the place and all that was in it belonged to him.

In front of him, upon a small couch, sat Mrs. Pontifex, her lips moving rapidly, and her brow darker than ever. Either Herr Räumer was going to interrupt the battle, or he was himself the cause of it. Celia rose from the piano, and sat beside her great-aunt. Mr. Tyrrell was in an easy chair on one side the fireplace, and his wife on the other, fanning herself, though it was by no means a warm night. As I said before, Mr. Pontifex was in hiding. I sat on the music stool and looked on. Had there been any way of escape I should have taken advantage of that way. But there was none.

The awful silence was broken by Aunt Jane.

"'Be ye not yoked unequally with unbelievers,'" she said. Then her lips closed with a snap.

No one answered for a while. The curtain alone, behind which was her husband, showed signs of agitation.

"John Pontifex," said his wife. "Assist me."

He obeyed immediately, and took up a position behind her, standing opposite to the German. He looked very, very meek.

"John Pontifex and I were talking this afternoon, Clara Tyrrell and George Tyrrell, and we naturally discussed the strange—the very strange—rumours that are afloat with regard to Celia. Her name, George Tyrrell, has been coupled with that of this—this foreign gentleman here."

Mr. Pontifex shook his head as if more in sorrow than in anger.

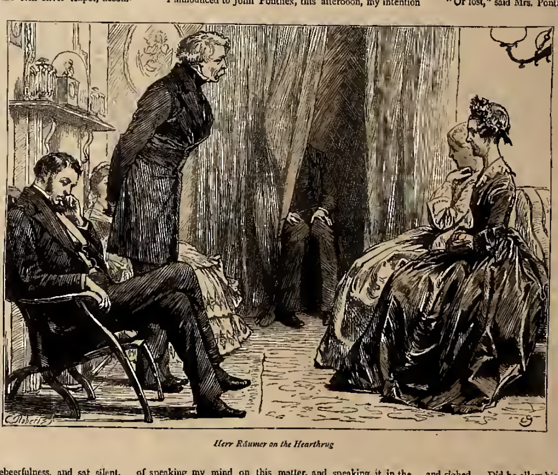
"It is—alas!—the fact that such rumours are prevalent."

"You hear, George Tyrrell?" she went on.

"I hear," he replied. "The rumours are not without foundation."

Poor Celia!

"I announced to John Pontifex, this afternoon, my intention of speaking my mind on this matter, and speaking it in the actual presence of Herr Räumer himself, if necessary."



Herr Räumer on the Hearthrug

"I am infinitely obliged to you, madam," said that gentleman, with a bow. "I wish that I was already in a position to ask for your congratulations."

"Flap-doodle and fudge," said Aunt Jane. I do not defend this expression, but it was her own, reserved for use on those occasions which required the greatest strength of the English language.

All trembled except the German. Celia, by the way, except that she looked pale, took no apparent interest in the conversation.

"Congratulations are useless ornaments of conversation," he said. "That, I presume, is what you mean, Mrs. Pontifex?"

She snorted.

"Pray, sir,—will you tell us first, to what religious persuasion you belong?"

The unexpected question staggered him for a moment. I thought he was lost. But he recovered.

"My excellent parents," he said, "who are now no longer living, brought me up in the strictest school—Mrs. Pontifex is, I believe, a member of the Anglican Church—of German Calvinism."

"And what church do you attend in this town?"

"Unfortunately, there is no church of my views in this town. The English churches, however, approach my distinctive doctrines near enough for me." He said this meekly, as if conscious of a superiority which he would not press.

"No blessing shall come from me on any marriage where both members are not communicants of the English Establishment."

She said that with an air of determination, as if the matter was settled.

Herr Räumer laughed softly.

"If that is your only objection, my dear Madam, it is easily removed. Mademoiselle vaut bien une messe."

"I do not understand French."

"I mean that love, coupled with a short conversation with your learned husband over a few doctrinal difficulties, would permit me to present myself to you in the novel character of a communicant."

He overacted the speech, and no one could fail to see the sneer behind it.

"John Pontifex."

"My dear, I am—in point of fact—behind you."

"You hear what this gentleman says. You can hold a discussion with him in my presence. If, in my opinion, he proves himself worthy of our Communion I shall withdraw that part of my objection."

"It is true," said John Pontifex, "that I am not at the present moment—alas!—deeply versed in the points which—ahem—separate us from German Calvinism. But no doubt Herr Raumer will enlighten me."

"Or," said the suitor, rolling his head, "let me refer myself to a fairer theologian. Celia herself shall convert me."

Celia made no sign.

"This is mockery," Mrs. Pontifex ejaculated. "But it is what I expected, and indeed said to John Pontifex as we drove here. That a foreigner should value Christian privileges is hardly to be looked for."

"That is, I believe," said Herr Räumer, with the faintest possible suspicion of contempt in his smooth tones, "the prevalent belief among English people. And yet no Englishman has yet publicly doubted that even a foreigner has a soul to be saved."

"Or lost," said Mrs. Pontifex sternly.

Her husband, who was still standing meekly beside her, his long arms dangling at either side, looking exactly like a tall schoolboy afraid of his schoolmaster, groaned audibly.

"Or lost," echoed Herr Räumer.

"And pray, sir, if I may ask, what are your means of existence? No doubt Mr. Tyrrell knows all about your family and the way in which you get your living, but we have not yet been informed, and we also have an interest in Celia Tyrrell."

"I have private property," he replied, looking at Mr. Tyrrell, "on the nature of which I have satisfied the young lady's father."

"Perfectly, perfectly," said Mr. Tyrrell.

"How do we know but what you have a wife somewhere else—in Germany, or wherever you come from?"

"Madame's intentions are no doubt praiseworthy, though her questions are not perhaps quite conventional. However, there is no question I would not answer to secure the friendship of Celia's great-aunt. I have no wife in Germany. Consider, Mrs. Pontifex, I have resided in this town for some twelve years. Would my wife, if I had one, be contented to languish in solitude and neglect? Would you, Mrs. Pontifex, allow your husband to live as a bachelor—perhaps a wild and gay bachelor—at a distance from yourself?"

The Rev. Mr. Pontifex smiled and sighed. Did he allow his imagination even for a moment to dwell on the possibility of a wild and rollicking life away from his wife?

"My wild oats," he said, very slowly, with emphasis on each word, and shaking his head. "My—wild—oats—are long since—ahem!—if I may be allowed the figure of speech—sown."

"John Pontifex," said his wife, "we are not interested in your early sins."

"I was about to remark, my dear, that they have produced—Alas!—their usual crop of repentance—that is all. The wages of youthful levity——"

"We will allow, Herr Räumer," Mrs. Pontifex interrupted her husband, "that you are what you represent yourself to be. You have means, you are a bachelor, and you are a Christian. Well—my questions are not, as you say, conventional, but Celia is my grand-niece, and will have my money when my husband and I are called away. It is no small thing you are seeking."

"I am aware of it," he replied. "I am glad for your sake that your money is not a small thing."

This he should not have said, because it was impolitic.

"I have one question more to ask you," said Mrs. Pontifex, drawing herself more upright than ever. "You are, I understand, some sixty years of age."

"I am sixty-two," he replied blandly. "It is my great fortune to have been born forty-four years before Miss Celia Tyrrell."

"Then, in the name of goodness," she cried, "what on earth do you want with a young wife? You are only three years younger than I. You might just as well ask me to marry you."

"My dear!" cried John Pontifex, in natural alarm.

"I cannot, madam," Herr Räumer replied,—"however much one might desire such a consummation.—I cannot ask you in the very presence of your husband."

Everybody laughed, including Celia, and Aunt Jane drew herself up proudly.

"You disgraceful man," she said. "How dare you say such things to me? If John Pontifex were not in Holy Orders I should expect him to—to—"

"I fear I should do so, my dear," John Pontifex interposed. "I am sure, in fact, that, without the—ahem!—the deterrent influence of my cloth, I should do so."

"I am unfortunate this evening," the German went on, still bland and smiling. "I am advanced in years. All the more reason why a young lady—of Christian principles—should assist me in passing those years pleasantly."

"Pleasantly?" she echoed. "Is all you think of—to pass the last years of your life pleasantly? Would I allow my husband to pass his time in mere pleasantness?"

"You would not, my dear," said John Pontifex, firmly.

"Mere pleasantness: a Fool's Paradise. George and Clara Tyrrell, I am your aunt, and entitled, I believe, to be heard."

"Surely," said Mr. Tyrrell. "Pray say what you think."

Celia laid her hand on her aunt's arm.

"Dear Aunt Jane," she said, "Herr Räumer has done me the very great honour of asking me to be his wife. He has also very kindly consented not to press for an answer. I feel—I am sure he feels himself—the many difficulties in the way. And if those difficulties prove insuperable, I trust to his generosity—his generosity as a gentleman—not to press me any longer."

"To be sure," said Aunt Jane, "people can always be put off. We can tell them that Herr Räumer felt for you the affection of a grandfather."

The German winced for a moment.

"Thank you, dear Mrs. Pontifex," he said. "You would smooth all the difficulties for us, I am sure."

He shrugged his shoulders.

"Let us have no more explanations. I have to thank Celia—Miss Tyrrell—for putting the position of things clearly. If she cannot see her way to accepting my addresses—there is an end—and things"—looking at Mr. Tyrrell—"must take their own course. If she can, she will have in me a devoted husband who will be proud to belong to the families of Tyrrell and Pontifex."

Aunt Jane was not, however, to be mollified. She kissed Celia on the forehead. "You are a sensible girl, my dear, and you will know how to refuse a man old enough to be your grandfather,"—then she gathered her skirts together. "George and Clara Tyrrell, when you have got over this folly, we shall be glad to see you at our house again. If it comes to anything further I shall alter my will. John Pontifex, I am ready."

She swept out of the room followed by her husband.

Then Mrs. Tyrrell sat up and began to express her indignation.

"When young people desire to marry," she said to her future son-in-law, who was not much more than twenty years older than herself, "they speak to each other, and then to their parents. That is regular, I believe?"

"Quite regular," said the Herr.

"When they have asked each other, and then spoken to the parents," she went on, exhausting the subject, "what else remains to be said?"

"Clearly, nothing."

"There certainly is a difference in age," said the good lady, "but if Celia does not mind that——"

"Quite so," he interrupted.

"Religion, too, the same," she went on.

"Actually a coincidence in religion."

"Then what Aunt Jane meant by going off in that way, I cannot conceive. The very best tea-things, too!"

"My dear Mamma," said Celia, "the conversation is useless. I am not engaged to Herr Räumer."

Nothing more was said, and the lover presently withdrew.

Mr. Tyrrell led me down stairs to his own office.

There he took the step common among Englishmen who are anxious and nervous, especially when they want to deaden repentance. He drank a tumbler and a-half of brandy and water strong.

"I wish he was dead, Laddy," he murmured; "I wish he was dead."

"Can you do nothing?"

"I can put him off—I can gain time—and perhaps something will happen. If not, she must marry him. She must. Else——"

He finished his glass of brandy and water.

"She must not. Face anything rather than bring such a fate upon your daughter."

"Face anything?" he repeated. "What do you know about it?"

"At least, I know that there is nothing in common with him and your daughter."

"What have I in common with my wife? Stuff and nonsense. What has any man in common with his wife? The husband and the wife lead different lives. When they are together in what they call society, they pretend. Rubbish about things in common."

"Then look at the difference of age."

"So much the better, Ladislas," said Mr. Tyrrell, fiercely. I hardly knew him to-night in this unusual mood. "So much the better. He will die soon, perhaps, the sooner the better."

"Will he treat her kindly?"

"They will live in this town. I shall watch them. If he ill treats my little girl—my pretty Celia—I will—I will—but that is nonsense. He will make her his plaything."

"Is that what Celia looks for in marriage?"

"Will you have some brandy and water? No. I take it now, just for the present while this business worries me, to steady the nerves."

He mixed himself another tumbler.

"Why, Ladislas," he resumed this talk, "how foolishly you talk. One would think you were a girl. What Celia looks for in marriage! What is the use of looking for anything, either from marriage or anything else in this world? Disappointment we shall get—never doubt it—and punishment for mistakes—never doubt that. Probably also bad men, unscrupulous men, will get a hold of you, and make you do things you would rather afterwards not have done.

"If I had the key of that safe," he murmured, sinking into a chair; "if I only had the key of that safe"—it was the small fireproof safe, with Herr Räumer's name upon it—"Celia should be free."

I came away, sick and sorry. I had heard enough, and more than enough. I knew it all along. My poor Celia!

"If I had the key of that safe!"

Then it occurred to me that the German must have it somewhere. I went to bed, and dreamed that I was prowling round and round his room, looking for a key which I could not find.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE CONSPIRATOR

THE Polish question was not forgotten. In truth, it was not easy altogether to forget it. The burning fervour of Wassielewski, his glorious indifference to the probabilities of death, his scorn of failure provided the sacred fire was kept burning,—all this could not but impress the imagination. When I thought of them my heart burned within me, and it seemed for the time a light thing to join my countrymen, and march with them to certain death, if only to show the world that Poland was living yet. Celia thought this kind of patriotism, this carrying on of a vendetta from father to son, was unworthy. But I never could get her to see the beauty of war, even in the palmy days of Crimean victory.

I laid my case before her, as much as I knew of it, then little but the loss of my inheritance, the death of my father, my long line of brave progenitors, the obligations of a name.

She could not be persuaded.

"You are not a soldier, Laddy," she said. "You are a musician and an artist. It is not for you to go fighting. And think of all the misery that you and I have seen. Why does not every man resolve that he for one will not fight unless he has to defend himself? Be one of the peacemakers. After all, you foolish boy, it is not you that the Russians have injured, and you have grown up an Englishman. Why, you cannot even speak your own language."

"Wassielewski will be my interpreter."

"Poor old Wassielewski! He will run against the first Russian bayonet he meets, and be killed at the very beginning."

That was, indeed, just what the old man would do. He came to see me one day, with eyes full of fervour, and a voice trembling with excitement.

"Come out, Ladislas, I have much to say to you."

He took me into St. Faith's Square, a large irregular place, with the red brick church at one end. He dragged out of his pocket a pile of papers and letters tied round with ribbon. It struck me disagreeably that Herr Räumer was walking on the other side of the Square.

"They are all with us," he whispered. "See, here are the men from Exeter, here are the London men, here are the Paris men, we have emissaries in Vienna and in Rome; for the present the country is kept quiet, no suspicions are awakened yet; no movement of Russian troops have been made towards Poland; we shall strike a desperate blow this time."

I mechanically took the papers which he gave me to read. There were lists of names, copies of compromising letters, mysterious notes dated Paris, Vienna, Rome. This old enthusiast was a sort of Head Centre, or, at least, a confidential and trusted agent of a wide-spread conspiracy. My heart sank when I saw my own name at the head of a long list.

"The plan of the campaign is being considered. I have sent in my ideas. They are, after making a feint in Warsaw, to——"

We will not follow the conspirator's plans through all its details. I thought five years later, when the rising of 1863 took place, of Wassielewski's projected campaign, and for my country's sake regretted that they had not been adopted.

"In a very short time—it may be to-morrow—it may be in six months—we shall receive our orders to move."

"And am I to see no one first—to obey orders blindly?"

"Not blindly, Ladislas Pulaski. I shall be with you."

I suppose there was something of uncertainty in my face, for he quickly added,

"You shall see some of our people before you go. Ladislas, your heart is not yet wholly with us. I have seen that all along. It is my fault. I ought to have educated you from the beginning into hatred of the Muscovite. There ought to have been no single day in which you should not have recited the catechism of Poland's wrongs. My fault—mine."

"Forgive me, Wassielewski."

"But another day of retribution is coming. There will be another massacre of Polish patriots to rouse Poland out of her sleep, and fill the hearts of Polish women with renewed hatred. You and I shall be among the slain, and yet you do not rejoice."

He looked forward to his own death with exaltation, much as a Christian martyr brought before Nero may have looked to the cross or the stake with the fiery fervour of a confessor who glorifies the faith. And he lamented that I, fifty years younger than himself, with no personal memories of struggle and of wrong, could not rise to his level of self-sacrifice.

"I do not rejoice, Wassielewski. I have no wish, not the slightest, to be killed, even for Poland."

He groaned.

"You must wish. You must go with me as I go, ready to be killed—because we shall not succeed this time—for the cause. You must feel as I feel. The others think we shall not fail; they know nothing; those of us who have better information know that Russia is too strong. I want to take you with me knowing all. I pray, night and morning, that you may come to me of your own accord, saying, 'Son of Roman Pulaski and the Lady Claudia, I belong to Poland.'"

I was deeply moved by the old man's eagerness.

"What can I say, Wassielewski? When I am with you my spirit leaps up at your words. Helpless hunchback as I am, I am ready to go with you and do what you command. Away from you, my patriotism is feeble, and I care little for Poland. Forgive me, but I tell you the simple truth."

"There is one thing I have never told you. I meant to keep it till I landed you on the sacred soil of Poland. But I will tell you now. No; not now. I must go home and think before I can tell you that. Come to me to-morrow at this time, to my room, where you and I can talk alone. You will need to be alone with me when you hear all, Ladislas Pulaski—with that knowledge ringing in your brain, the scales will fall from your eyes and you shall see."

What was he to tell me? Were there not horrors enough that I had heard already? Men beaten to death; men tortured by the knout; men sent by thousands into exile; women insulted; brides robbed of their bridegrooms, mothers of their sons; was there one single outrage in the long list of possible crimes that had been committed in that dark story of Polish revolt and Russian repression? Needs must, but war brings misery. The annals of the world are red with tears of blood; "woe to the conquered" is the inevitable law; but such woe, such tears, such misery, as fell upon Poland by the will of the Czar are surely unequalled since the days when a conquered people all fell by the sword, or were led away to a hopeless servitude. What more had Wassielewski to tell me?

By some strange irony I always met Herr Räumer after Wassielewski had been with me. That same evening, as I came home from a walk with Celia, I was saluted by him. He looked down upon me with his white shaggy eyebrows and his green spectacles, as if half in pity, half in contempt. In his presence I felt a very small conspirator indeed.

"I saw you this morning," he said, "walking and talking with your old rebel, Wassielewski. Brave old man! Energetic old man! Useful to his friends. And, oh! how useful to his country!"

Nothing could surpass the intense scorn in his voice.

"He is getting up another little rebellion, I gather from certain Cracow papers. At least, there are indications of another rising, and it is not likely that Wassielewski will be out of it. Such a chance does not come often."

"You mean, such a chance for Poland?"

"No—I mean for a conspirator. You do not understand—how can you?—the charm of rebellion. Once a rebel—always a rebel. It is like acting. Those who have faced the footlights once are always wanting to go on again. Wassielewski is seventy years of age, and for sixty, or thereabouts, has been conspiring. It would have been a good thing for Poland had some one knocked him on the head when he first began. And a good thing for you."

"Why for me?"

"Because Roman Pulaski would still be living and still be a great proprietor in Poland; because you would have been, as he was, a friend and protégé of the Imperial Court."

"How do you know so much about me?"

He laughed.

"I have read current history. I read, and I remember. And I know the story of Roman Pulaski. It was Wassielewski who took your father from his quiet chateau, and launched him on the stormy waters of rebellion. Thank him, then, not Russia, for all your misfortunes. You ought to be very grateful to that old man."

This was a new view of the case, and, for the moment, a staggerer.

"That is for the past, Ladislas Pulaski. Now for the future."

"What of the future?"

"It is a Paradise of Fools. In the Future Poland will be restored; there will be no more wars; nationalities will not be repressed in the Future——"

"At all events, it is better to believe in the Future than in the Present."

"You think so? That is because you are young. I believe in the Present because I am old. I love the Present, and work for it. When I am dead people may say of me what they like, and may do what they like. That is their own business. I eat well; I drink good wine; I read French novels; I smoke excellent tobacco: what more can the Future give me? Your friend Wassielewski fought once for the Future. He gets tenpence a day for his reward; he fiddles for sailors; he conspires for Poland; he will die in some obscure field leading peasants armed with scythes against Russian troops armed with rifles."

"I would rather be Wassielewski than——"

"Than I? Ça va sans dire. You are young," he laughed, and showed his white teeth. "Meantime, remember what I told you. Where there are three conspirators there is one traitor. Have nothing to do with them; refuse to be murdered for Poland; go on with your music-lessons—anything you like—but do not join conspiracies."

He seemed to know everything, this man. For the first time a strange thought crossed my brain. Could he have received intelligence of the intended rising?

"I mean well by you, Ladislas Pulaski, although you suspect me, and do not love me. That does not matter. I wish to see you kept out of the fatal business which killed your father.

"Crack-brained idiots!" he ejaculated. "There is in the Kremlin a box. In the box is a most valuable document, shown to strangers as a curiosity. It is the Constitution of Poland. Reflect upon that fact. Again, there is outside Cracow a mound erected in immortal memory of Kosciusko. It is a mound so high that it dominates the town. Therefore, the Austrians have turned it into a fort by which, if necessary, to crush the town. That is another inspiriting fact for a Pole to consider."

"It is like the Austrians."

"Doubtless. Otherwise they would not have built their fort. You would have preferred seeing them sympathise with the fallen hero. England and France have made of Poland a beautiful theme for the most exalted sentiments and speeches. But they do not fight for Poland. Voltaire, who did not share in the general enthusiasm, even wrote a burlesque poem on the Poles. Then England put clauses in the Treaty of 1815 to ensure the government of the country by her Constitution. When Nicholas laughed at the clauses and tore up the treaty, England and France did not fight. Who keeps treaties when he is strong enough to break them? Who goes to war for a broken treaty when he is not strong enough? What does the new Czar say to the Poles? 'No dreams, gentlemen.' It is a dream to believe that Poland is not abandoned. It is a dream that a few madmen can get up a successful rebellion. Finis Poloniæ!"

He inhaled a tremendous volume of smoke, and sent it up in the air in a thick cloud.

"Look——There goes the liberty of Poland. Say I will, Ladislas Pulaski?"

"No," I replied, bluntly.

"Did you ever hear what a great Pole said when they wanted him to conspire? 'Mourir pour la patrie? Oui, je comprends cela; mais y vivre? Jamais.' And he did neither."

I was filled with strange forebodings; with that feeling of expectancy which sometimes comes over one at moments when there seems impending the stroke of Fate; I could not rest; wild dreams crossed my brain. Nor was Celia happier. We wandered backwards and forwards in the leafy and shady retreat, restless and unhappy. The great elms about us were bright with their early foliage of sweet young June; the birds were flying about among the branches where they were never disturbed; the thrush with his low and cheerful note, surely the most contented among birds; the blackbird with his carol, a bird of sanguine temperament; the blue tit, the robin, the chaffinch—we knew every one of them by sight because we saw them everyday. And the meadows at the foot of the walls were bright with golden cups.

"How can I give it up, Cis?" I asked.

She answered with her sweet sad smile. We had both been brooding in silence.

"I am selfish," she said. "I think of nothing but my own troubles. You must not give it up, Laddy. You belong here, to the Captain, and to me. You must not go out among strangers."

I shook my head.

"Wessielewski says I must. It would be hard to tear myself away, Cis—not to talk to you ever again, to see you no more."

"Why no more, Laddy?"

"I am to give more than my presence to the revolt, Cis. I am to give what Wassielewski gives—my life."

Just then we saw him marching along the ramparts towards us. His eyes were upon us, but he saw nothing. He came nearer and nearer, but he took no notice; he swung his arms violently to and fro; his long white hair streamed behind him in the wind; he carried his black felt hat in one hand; he halted when he came to the wall of the bastion, leaned for a moment upon the rampart, gazing fixedly out upon the bright waters of the harbour. What did he see there? Then he turned and faced us, but spoke as if he saw us not.

"The time is at hand," he murmured, in the low tones of a prophet. "The wolves and the ravens may gather in the woods and wait for the dead. The mothers shall array their sons—the wives shall buckle the sword for their husbands, the daughters for their lovers; once in every generation the sacrifice of the bravest and noblest, till the time comes; till then the best must die."

"Not Ladislas," cried Celia, throwing herself in front of me. "Take any one else, take whom you please to be murdered. But you shall not take my brother Ladislas."

He made no answer; I suppose he did not hear. Presently he stepped lightly from the breastwork, and walked slowly away, still waving his arms in a sort of triumph.

"He is mad, Laddy," Celia whispered. "You must not trust your fate to a madman."

"He is only mad sometimes, Cis. It is when he thinks too much about the past."

"Laddy, if you go away and leave me; if Leonard—but that is impossible. God will be good to us—yet. I could not bear my life without you."

"Tell me, Cis dear, has he pressed for an answer?"

She shook her head.

"It is not that," she said. "He is patient. But it is my father. Do not put my thoughts into words, Laddy. They are too dreadful. And my mother sees nothing."

NOTE.——The vessel depicted in the illustration to this story last week was not the Asia, as stated underneath, but the Blonde, an old French prize.

(To be continued)

◆

HELIGOLAND

THE rough Frisian doggrel which declares that the little group of islands called after the largest, Heligoland, is made up of red earth, green grass, and white sand, hits off in four lines pretty nearly the main features of this small but important English possession. The islands stand in the North Sea, about forty miles from the German coast, and at nearly the same distance from the mouths of the Elbe, the Weser, the Eyder, and the Jade, on which Williamshaven, the comparatively new dockyard of Germany, has been built. These rivers are frozen over in the winter and are not navigable, whereas the roadstead of Heligoland is open, and on one side or the other affords always a safe anchorage. Besides Heligoland there is Sandy Island, where everybody bathes; a terrible net-work of rocks extends on every side, of which the principal are the Monk and the Steen. The main island is scarcely a mile in length, and is divided into High land and Low land; as one is 170 feet in some parts above the other, you have to climb a flight of 203 steps to get to it, and on its summit stands a magnificent lighthouse. Comparatively little is known about Heligoland in England, and it really deserves a closer acquaintance. The improvements the present Governor has made during the last ten years have so changed it that Heligoland, if revisited, by one who knew it then, would be almost unrecognisable. From an island inhabited by a lawless, reckless set of people given up to peculation, plunder, and pillage, without credit or character, it is now inhabited by a clean, tidy-looking set of people, whose winter occupation is fishing and salvaging, employing themselves in summer in ministering to the wants of visitors, Austrian and German, who come to enjoy the pure air, the delicious sea-bathing on Sandy Island, and the quiet and rest of a place, where everybody can do exactly as they like. On Sandy Island, very good sport can sometimes be obtained, especially in autumn, when the woodcocks arrive, and in winter, when the wild-fowl of all kinds land in great numbers. Once there were a few rabbits, but they have long since died or been exterminated by visitors. In the memory of man we believe there never has been a single live rabbit on Heligoland itself, so that the fables one is constantly hearing of the island being gradually undermined and scratched into the sea by those active little animals are entirely false.

The history of Heligoland extends far backwards into the dim regions of mythology. In more recent times it was a dependency of Denmark. Napoleon used it as a storehouse until September, 1807, when it was blockaded by a small English squadron under Admiral Russel, to whom it surrendered after a short resistance. By the Treaties of Paris, in 1814 and 1815, Heligoland was finally transferred to Great Britain, in whose possession it has ever since remained under the rule of a Governor. But there were many old abuses to correct, and it was difficult to change bad habits. The old "Strandricht" became virtually a court for giving legal sanction to acts of peculation and piracy, which the new Governor found himself at last powerless to stop. The clergyman used to pray in the church for wrecks, and would be the first to lead his parishioners to murder and pillage. Shaky shipowners with leaky ships knew only too well where to send them to make sure of never hearing of them any more, while merchants found out that it was more than useless to attempt to recover debts in Heligoland.

In 1864 the Heligolanders had the excitement of witnessing a naval engagement in their waters between the Austrian Admiral Tegethoff and the Danes, in which the former was very severely handled, and lost 82 out of his crew of 300 men. In 1870-71, during the Franco-Prussian War, the islanders were kept in a continued state of excitement by the arrival of stray prizes taken by one or other of the combatants, and occasionally by the landing of a boat's crew in search of water and provisions. Sometimes questions of neutrality arose, but they were all amicably settled.

To turn, however, to more domestic and peaceful matters, the usual autumn English tourist might do worse than go to Heligoland. After a five hours' river and a three hours' sea passage from Hamburg, he would find himself on a pleasant little pier running out into the sea from among clusters of clean little wooden houses, and would land in a town inhabited by a picturesque Frisian population. The dress of the women is pretty enough, consisting of a pink or bright red cloth petticoat, edged with a wide band of gold braid, a white high dress open behind to show the petticoat, and a pretty twist of the Heligoland colours, red, green, and white, in satin ribbons with gold fringes, which form a sort of turban on their heads. On Sundays, however, they shroud their finery in a long black full cloak, with a dark poke bonnet, something like a Quaker's. The men look just like sailors on the stage, with their light blue shirts, bright coloured comforters and caps, and wide trousers tucked into high thick boots. Everybody seems to let lodgings, and it is absurd to see the way in which they rush down to the beach when the Hamburg steamer is in sight, to introduce themselves and their houses to the notice of the travellers. If they have not exactly turned their swords into ploughshares, they have, at all events, left off wrecking and pillaging, and devote themselves to more peaceful occupations. There are very nice people to be met here, principally Austrians and Germans, and there is an excellent little theatre, with good actors from all parts of Europe. There is also an excellent band, to whose music you may listen two or three times a day; the bathing is simply delightful, and is so well managed that you take your bath in perfect privacy as well as luxury. A sail across to Sandy Island, breakfast at an excellent little restaurant, and a brisk walk among the sand-heaps, with a stroll along the shore to wind up, make out a very pleasant morning. In summer Heligoland is a most enjoyable place, but what shall we say in winter, when, as is frequently the case in the North Sea, it blows great gales for weeks together, and even the inhabitants can scarcely leave their inhospitable shores. But the pleasure and health-seeking summer visitors are sure thoroughly to enjoy a stay of two or three months on the island during the summer days of the year.

THE READER

"MEMOIRS OF MADAME DE STAAL" (Bentley and Sons), translated by Selina Bathurst. A book which Fontenelle described as "pleasantly written but not worth writing," may prove very tolerable reading to us who, unlike Fontenelle, are a full century and a half away from the times of the Regent and Dubois, of the Duc du Maine and the Grand Nights at Seaux, from the period of which Saint Simon has left so true a picture, and the society which Le Sage has hardly caricatured in his imaginary Spaniard. Nor, if the criticism does at times suggest itself on turning over its pages, will it prevent our lingering long over the story of the protégée of the Duchesses de la Ferté and du Maine, the cleverest of those clever portionless girls whom the grandes dames of the old régime would sometimes take from the convent or from the fields to pet and patronise for a while, then use as half companion, half soubrette, then marry off in the sere and yellow leaf to elderly widower, obliging guardsman, or chevalier, who, like the proffered bride, had overstayed his market. There is much that reminds us of Fanny Burney with Queen Charlotte in this tragi-comic diary of the fair and witty Mdlle. de Launay—the petted darling of her convent and of the learned friends of the good abbess—in her semi-servitude at Seaux, all loyalty and conviction that a princess's favour is a sacred thing, yet all conscious, too, that it has its inconveniences, now trembling lest she be sent to the ladies' maids' room for good, now consoling herself in the Bastille with the thought that imprisonment is but another form of captivity, or now again recounting in old age her innocent affaires du cœur, or her more serious negotiations for sober matrimony (with the widowed husband of the learned Madame Dacier among others), till mated at last with the respectable Lieutenant in the Guards, who thus gains at once a Captaincy and a wife. Historically, perhaps, the Memoirs are of little value—their one great incident, the story of the Porto Carrem plot, having been often told before. As sketches of the times, enlivened by a thousand touches which only a clever Frenchwoman could bestow, they are in many ways most excellent, though not a few may think with Grimm that their most interesting personage after all is that honest Lieutenant of the Bastille—one of Thackeray's Newfoundland dog-like men—who falls in love with his fair prisoner, fetches and carries for her like a slave, arranges meetings with her careless suitor De Mesnil, and, on her release goes quietly into the country and dies. The translator has done good service in re-introducing to the general public these little-known and piquant memoirs.

In "European Colonies" (Macmillan and Co.), or Part VII. of Mr. E. A. Freeman's "Historical Course for Schools," Mr. E. J. Payne has been fortunate enough to light on an almost virgin field of history. So new, indeed, and scantly known and rich in matter is the subject—how many, for instance, could tell off-hand the story of the Central American Pentarchy, or the lives even of Bolivar and Paez?—one quite regrets that it should be compressed, however ably, within the limits of a schoolboy's manual. For to found colonies has been perhaps the special gift of the European races, from days when the Mediterranean shores were to them the limits of the habitable world, and colonisation only came to an end when every sea-board State was welded into the empire of Rome, to the aftertime when the old dream of lands beyond the outer ocean became a certainty, and colonisation began anew, less now under the auspices of kings and states than of hardy seamen and shrewd merchant traders. Nothing can well be better than the arrangement of Mr. Payne's manual, from the general survey of the "Old Europe and the New" to the detailed history of the colonies of each nation in the successive eras of dependency and independence, or more complete than its able summary of the events connected with their growth and progress, with the single exception, perhaps, of its somewhat scanty notice of the Portuguese in Africa. Condensed as it is, it is a volume which boys will turn to with pleasure, and many grown men with much advantage. Greater expansion would have made it more interesting than the best romance.

"A Hand-book of Brazil," by the Messrs. Mullhall, editors of the Buenos Ayres Standard, and authors of a well-known "Guide to the River Plate," although a somewhat startling volume at first sight—one half on dingy paper and faint type of native manufacture, the other clear and clean from the presses of Messrs. Spottiswoode—will be found on closer inspection both readable and useful. "Hand-book," of course, in a country as large as Europe, and for three-fourths of its extent hardly more trodden of white men than Central Africa, is a term to be used with some reservation. It is only for inhabited Brazil—for the provinces of the coast and the lands abutting on the authors' own Republics of the Plate that anything strictly to be called "guide-book" can be written, and this the Messrs. Mullhall have done well. The chapters on Rio and Bahia, the general survey of public and private enterprise in the Empire, and the descriptions of a run through ruined Paraguay and among the flourishing German colonies of Rio Grande do Sul—the only European settlements that have prospered in Brazil, and these, we suspect, only after a process of "survival of the fittest"—are especially interesting, if here and there a little rose-coloured.

"Colonial Experience in New Zealand," by An Old Colonist (Chapman and Hall), or the struggles of a settler in the South Island ere Canterbury had come into being, and when flour was often classed among the luxuries of life, must claim approval as a plain, but evidently truthful, tale of competence achieved by honest work, and readiness to turn one's hand to anything, rather than for dramatic incident or adventure. The references to colonial politics will prove, we fear, caviare to the great mass of English readers.

Adventures, on the other hand, of the most melodramatic type will be found and to spare in Mr. J. C. Fernan's "Reign of Rosas" (S. Tinsley), or reminiscences in the garb of fiction of the days when the "Tiger of Buenos Ayres" and his masorcheros were names of fear from the Andes to the coast. As illustrative of the Reign of Terror on the Plate some five-and-thirty years ago the three stories which make up the volume possess an interest to which, simply as stories, they could have little claim.

The wintering of Barents and his mates in Ice Haven, Novaya Zemlya, just twenty years short of three centuries ago, has ever since been ranked among the minor romances of Arctic voyaging. Revisited for the first time in 1871 by the Norwegian Carlsen, the spot where the Dutch sailors had found shelter yielded up many relics of their stay, which were deposited shortly afterwards in the Museum at the Hague. Another visit in 1876 by Mr. Gardner, in the yacht Glow-worm, brought to light after much pains some further relics—the most important of these a paper signed "Barents," and the fragments of a quaint book of pious songs, with which no doubt the worthy mariners beguiled the tedium of their imprisonment. In a pretty little volume "The Barents Relics" (Trübner and Co.), Mr. Van Campen has given us, with map and preface, a translation of the official narrative of the latter "find" by Mr. de Jonge, the deputy archivist of the Hague. A volume not perhaps of great importance, but a pleasing souvenir for those who love a legend of the sea.

Names crowd almost too thickly on one another in Vol. III. and last of M. Van Laun's "History of French Literature" (Smith, Elder, and Co.), or from the end of the reign of Louis XIV. to the end of the reign of Louis Philippe. With the death of the Grand Monarque the age of authority passed definitely away. Even the poor faiseurs des vers, the mediocre fabulists, dramatists, and essayists, who form the link between the Augustan epoch and the new, feel on them a strange breath of liberty. With Montesquieu and his Spirit of Laws, and with the reaction upon France of the sceptical materialistic spirit that was born in England, but bore there no practical fruit, begins the era of Voltaire and the Encyclopædists, of the men who paved the way for the destructive ardour of the Revolution. From the temporary stagnation of literature under the First Empire, and the fierce passion of an age of conquest, is born again that revival of romanticism which in a few years under Victor Hugo and his friends will deprive the old classicalism of the last remnants of its ascendancy. The Novel takes its place beside the Drama. The newspaper and the review first supplement, then almost supersede, the oratory of the pulpit and the tribune. Poetry in the hands of Hugo, Beranger, or Musset imbibes new strength by drinking once again of the older fountains of French minstrelsy. Thiers and Louis Blanc, Guizot and Michelet, represent with equal success the philosophical and the descriptive schools of history.

◆

RECENT POETRY AND VERSE

THE plan of the work, as set forth in a careful preface, renders criticism of "The Agamemnon of Æschylus, transcribed by Robert Browning," (Smith, Elder), somewhat difficult from a poetical point of view. Where the avowed object is, at all hazards, to give a literally faithful reproduction of the original, it becomes a question whether we are entitled to look for ordinary rhythmic graces in what claims, above all, to be a translation such as may give the unlearned reader some adequate notion of the meaning of the Greek poet. On the other hand, it is impossible not to feel that a work professing to embody itself in English metres,—especially when the subject is one of such magnificence,—should as far as possible approximate to the most stately and melodious form of verse, and this we cannot feel that Mr. Browning's translation does, whether in its blank verse or its lyrics. Occasionally the poet even seems wilfully to have sacrificed smoothness, as for instance in the opening lines of Cassandra's speech at page 113, where we read

> Yet once for all, to speak a speech, I fain am:

although the natural grammatical sequence of the last three words would have been more melodious, without in any way affecting the sense of the passage, or its faithfulness. In short, as the production of a scholar, and a sincere lover of the Greek drama, the book challenges admiration, and will have its use; considered as a poem it falls short of what may be desired. Not but that it contains passages of great merit; such are the description, by the chorus, of Iphigenia's death:

> And as to ground her saffron-vest she shed,
> She smote the sacrificers all and each
> With arrow sweet and piteous,
> From the eye only sped,—
> Significant of will to use a word,
> Just as in pictures: since, full many a time,
> In her sire's guest-hall, by the well-heaped board
> Had she made music,—lovingly with clime
> Of her chaste voice, that unpolluted thing
> Honoured the third libation,—paian that should bring > Good fortune to the sire she loved so well.

Almost equally good are the lines beginning "O Zeus the king, and friendly Night;" but as a rule it is in the spirit of the words, rather than in their form, that the manifold beauties of the poem must be sought. Of Mr. Browning's employment of the Greek forms of orthography there is nothing to be said; such a course is, at any time, a matter of taste, and in a work professing the object of the present there is much to be said in its favour. But the "Agamemnon" in this its English dress will appeal to the scholar rather than the poet.

There is at times considerable power shown in "Dion: a Tragedy; and Poems," by Walter Rew (Trübner), but the play is marred by prolixity in its earlier portions, and a tendency to obscurity of diction. The author has probably formed his style upon that of Mr. Browning; but at times he shows that he does not want a certain amount of native poetic talent, and his verse is best when most original. There is, for example, true dramatic force in the scene between Pallasana and the tyrant Dionysius, and the hero's address to the troops, which opens

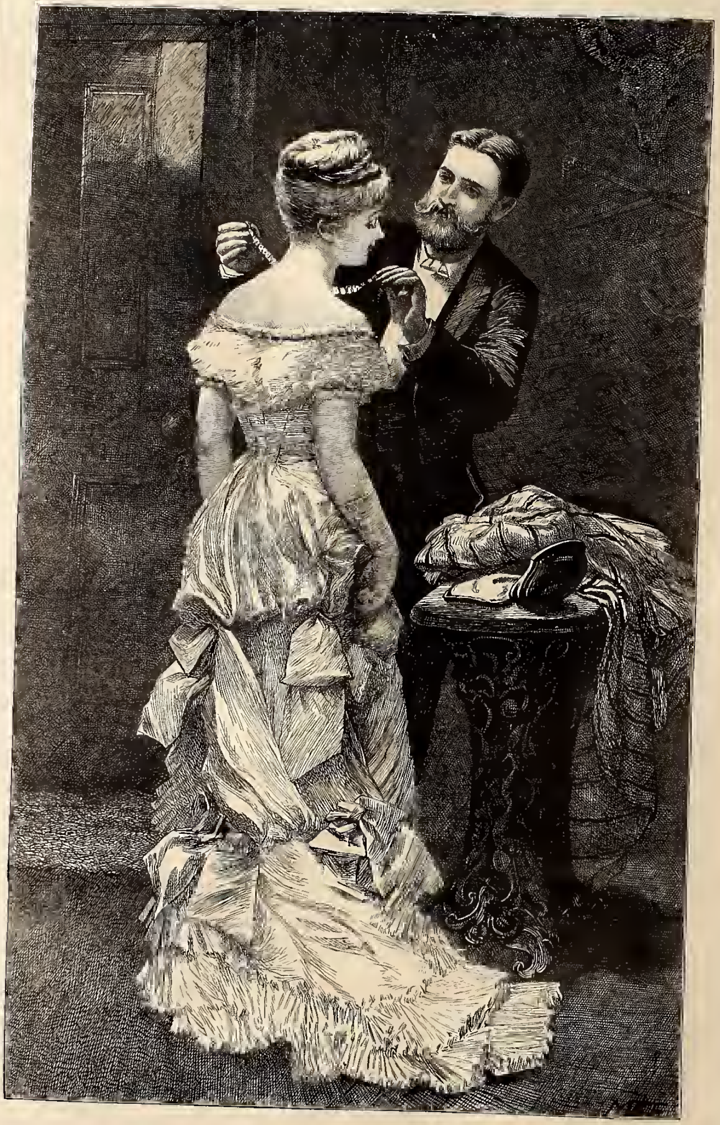
> I fly to save my Syracuse. And yet—is a good, ringing piece of declamatory verse. But better than anything else is the fragment "Prometheus," both thoughtful and musical; the lyrics are not particularly good.



"THE FINISHING TOUCH"

FROM THE PICTURE BY MRS. STAPLES, EXHIBITED IN THE BLACK AND WHITE EXHIBITION

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

XIV.

THE D'ORSAY BARRACKS

(continued)

COLONEL FERAY, the son-in-law of Marshal Bugeaud, was in command at the barracks; he offered the use of his drawing-room to M. de Broglie and to M. Odilon Barrot, who accepted it. The barrack doors were opened to M. de Kératry, on account of his great age, to M. Dufaure, as his wife had just been confined, and to M. Étienne, on account of the wound which he had received that morning in the Rue de Bourgogne. At the same time there were added to the two hundred and twenty MM. Eugène Sue, Benoist (du Rhône), Fayolle, Chanay, Toupet des Vignes, Radoubt-Lafosse, Arbey, and Teillard-Latérisse, who up to that time had been detained in the new Palace of Foreign Affairs.

Towards 8 o'clock in the evening, when dinner was over, the restrictions were a little relaxed, and the intermediate space between the door and the barred gate of the barracks began to be littered with carpet bags and articles of toilet sent by the families of the imprisoned Representatives.

The Representatives were summoned by their names. Each went down in turn, and briskly remounted with his cloak, his coverlet, or his foot-warmer. A few ladies succeeded in making their way to their husbands. M. Chambolle was able to press his son's hand through the bars.

Suddenly a voice called out, "Oho! We are going to spend the night here." Mattresses were brought in, which were thrown on the tables, on the floor, anywhere.

Fifty or sixty Representatives found resting-places on them. The greater number remained on their benches. Marc Dufraisse settled himself to pass the night on a footstool, leaning on a table. Happy was the man who had a chair.

Nevertheless, cordiality and gaiety did not cease to prevail. "Make room for the 'burgomasters!' said smilingly a venerable veteran of the Right. A young Republican Representative rose, and offered him his mattress. They pressed on each other offers of overcoats, cloaks, and coverlets.

"Reconciliation," said Chamiot, while offering the half of his mattress to the Duc de Luynes. The Duc de Luynes, who had 80,000*l.* a year, smiled, and replied to Chamiot: "You are St. Martin, and I am the beggar."

M. Paillet, the well-known barrister, who belonged to the "Third Estate," used to say, "I passed the night in a Bonapartist straw mattress, wrapt in a burnouse of the Mountain, my feet in a Democratic and Socialist sheepskin, and my head in a Legitimist cotton nightcap."

The Representatives, although prisoners in the barracks, could stroll about freely. They were allowed to go down into the courtyard. M. Cordier (of Calvados) came upstairs again saying: "I have just spoken to the soldiers. They did not know that their generals had been arrested. They appeared surprised and discontented." This incident raised the prisoners' hopes.

Representative Michel Renaud of the Basses-Pyrénees found several of his compatriots of the Basque country amongst the Chasseurs de Vincennes who occupied the courtyard. Some had voted for him, and reminded him of the fact. They added, "Ah! We would again vote for the 'Red' list." One of them, quite a young man, took him aside, and said to him. "Do you want any money, sir? I have a forty sous piece in my pocket."

Towards ten o'clock in the evening a great hubbub arose in the courtyard. The doors and the barred gate turned noisily upon their hinges. Something entered which rumbled like thunder. They leaned out of window, and saw at the foot of the steps a sort of big, oblong chest, painted black, yellow, red, and green, on four wheels, drawn by post horses, and surrounded by men in long overcoats, and with fierce-looking faces, holding torches. In the gloom, and with the help of imagination, this vehicle appeared completely black. A door could be seen, but no other opening. It resembled a great coffin on wheels. —"What is that? Is it a hearse?"—"No, it is a police-van." —"And those people, are they undertakers?"—"No, they are gaolers."—"And for whom has this come?"

"For you, gentlemen!" cried out a voice.

It was the voice of an officer; and the vehicle which had just entered was in truth a police-van.

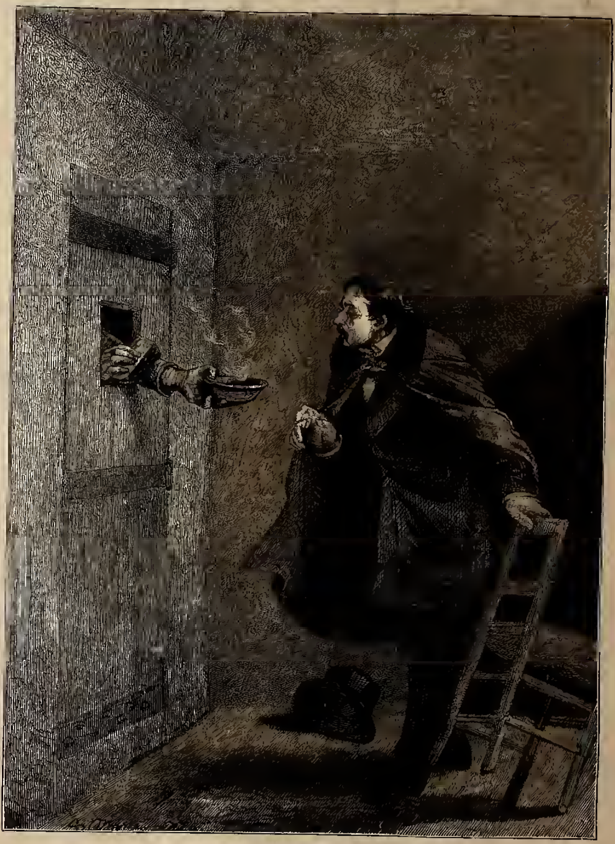
At the same time a word of command was heard: "First squadron to horse." And five minutes afterwards the Lancers who were to escort the vehicle formed in line in the courtyard.

Then arose in the barracks the buzz of a hive of angry bees. The Representatives ran up and down the stairs, and went to look at the police-van close at hand. Some of them touched it, and could not believe their eyes. M. Piscatory met M. Chambolle, and cried out to him:—"I am leaving in it!" M. Berryer met Eugène Sue, and they exchanged these words—"Where are you going?"—"To Mount Valérien. And you?"—"I do not know."

At half-past ten the roll call of those who were to leave began. Police agents stationed themselves at a table between two candles in a parlour at the foot of the stairs, and the Representatives were summoned two by two. The Representatives agreed not to answer to their names, and to reply to each name which should be called out, "He is not here." But those "Burgraves" who had accepted the hospitality of Colonel Feray considered such petty resistance unworthy of them, and answered to the calling out of their names. This drew the others after them. Everybody answered. Amongst the Legitimists some serio-comic scenes were enacted. They, who alone were not threatened, insisted on believing that they were in danger. They would not let one of their orators go. They embraced him, and held him back, almost with tears, crying out, "Do not go away! Do you know where they are taking you! Think of the trenches of Vincennes!"

The Representatives, having been summoned two by two, as we have just said, filed in the parlour before the police agents, and then they were ordered to get into the "robbers' box." The stowage was apparently made at haphazard and promiscuously; nevertheless, later, by the difference of the treatment accorded to the Representatives in the various prisons, it was apparent that this promiscuous loading had perhaps been somewhat prearranged. When the first vehicle was full, a second, of a similar construction, drew up. The police agents, pencil and pocket-book in hand, noted down the contents of each vehicle. These men knew the Representatives. When Marc Dufraisse, called in his turn, entered the parlour, he was accompanied by Benoist (du Rhône).—"Ah! here is M. Marc Dufraisse," said the attendant who held the pencil.—When asked for his name Benoist replied "Benoist."—"Du Rhône," added the police agent; and, he continued, "for there are also Benoît d'Azy and Benoît-Champy."

The loading of each vehicle occupied nearly half an hour. The successive arrivals had raised the number of imprisoned Representatives to two hundred and thirty-two. Their embarkation, or, to use the expression of M. de Vatimesnil, their "barrelling-up," which began a little after ten in the evening, was not finished until nearly seven o'clock in the morning. When there were no more police-vans available omnibuses were brought in. These various vehicles were portioned off into three



THE REPRESENTATIVES AT MAZAS

A bell rang in the prison, the grating of the door opened, and an arm held out to the prisoner a pewter porringer and a piece of bread detachments, each escorted by Lancers. The first detachment left towards one o'clock in the morning, and was driven to Mont Valérien; the second towards five o'clock, and was driven to Mazas; the third towards half-past six to Vincennes.

As this business occupied a long time those who had not yet been called benefited by the mattresses and tried to sleep. Thus, from time to time, silence reigned in the upper rooms. In the midst of one of these pauses M. Bixio sat upright, and raising his voice, cried out, "Gentlemen, what do you think of 'passive obedience?" An unanimous burst of laughter was the reply. Again, during one of these pauses another voice exclaimed:

"Romieu will be a senator."

Émile Péan asked:

"What will become of the Red Spectre?"

"He will enter the priesthood," answered Antony Thouret, "and will turn into the Black Spectre."

Other exclamations which the Historians of the Second of December have spread abroad were not uttered. Thus, Marc Dufraisse never made the remark with which the men of Louis Bonaparte have wished to excuse their crimes: "If the President does not shoot all those among us who resist, he does not understand his business."

For the Coup d'État such a remark might be convenient; but for History it is false.

The interior of the police-vans was lighted while the Representatives were entering. The air-holes of each compartment were not closed. In this manner Marc Dufraisse through the aperture could see M. du Rémusat in the opposite cell to his own. M. du Rémusat had entered the van coupled with M. Duvergier de Hauranne.

"Upon my word, Monsieur Marc Dufraisse," exclaimed Duvergier de Hauranne, when they jostled each other in the gangway of the vehicle, "upon my word, if any one had told me that 'You will go to Mazas in a police-van,' I should have said, 'It is improbable;' but if they had added, 'You will go with Marc Dufraisse,' I should have said, 'It is impossible!'"

As soon as a vehicle was full five or six policemen entered and stood in the gangway. The door was shut, the steps were thrown up, and they drove off.

When all the police-vans had been filled there were still some Representatives left. As we have said, omnibuses were brought into requisition. Into these Representatives were thrust, one upon the other, rudely, without deference for either age or name. Colonel Feray, on horseback, superintended and directed operations. As he mounted the steps of the last vehicle but one, the Duc de Montebello cried out to him, "To-day is the anniversary of the battle of Austerlitz, and the son-in-law of Marshal Bugeaud compels the son of Marshal Launes to enter a convicts' van."

When the last omnibus was reached, there were only seventeen places for eighteen Representatives. The most active mounted first. Antony Thouret, who himself alone equalled the whole of the Right, for he had as much mind as Thiers and as much stomach as Murat, Antony Thouret, corpulent and lethargic, was the last. When he appeared on the threshold of the omnibus in all his hugeness, a cry of alarm arose: "Where was he going to sit?"

Antony Thouret noticing Berryer at the bottom of the omnibus went straight up to him, sat down on his knees, and quietly said to him: "You wanted 'compression,' Monsieur Berryer. Now you have it."

XV.

MAZAS

The police-vans, escorted as far as Mazas by Lancers, found another squadron of Lancers ready to receive them at Mazas. The Representatives descended from the vehicle one by one. The officer commanding the Lancers stood by the door, and watched them pass with a dull curiosity.

Mazas, which has taken the place of the prison of La Force, now pulled down, is a lofty reddish building, close to the terminus of the Lyons Railway, and stands on the waste land of the Faubourg St. Antoine. From a distance the building appears as though built of bricks, but on closer examination it is seen to be constructed of flints set in cement. Six large detached buildings, three stories high, all radiating from a rotunda which serves as the common centre, and touching each other at the starting point, separated by courtyards which grow broader in proportion as the buildings spread out, pierced with a thousand little dormer windows which give light to the cells, surrounded by a high wall, and presenting from a bird's-eye point of view the shape of a fan—such is Mazas. From the rotunda which forms the centre, springs a sort of minaret, which is the alarm tower. The ground floor is a round room, which serves as the registrar's office. On the first storey is a chapel where a single priest says mass for all; and the observatory, where a single attendant keeps watch over all the doors of all the galleries at the same time. Each building is termed a "division." The courtyards are intersected by high walls into a multitude of little oblong walks.

As each Representative descended from the vehicle he was conducted into the rotunda where the registry office was situated. There his name was taken down, and in exchange for his name he was assigned a number. Whether the prisoner be a thief or a legislator, such is always the rule in this prison; the Coup d'État reduced all to a footing of equality. As soon as a Representative was registered and numbered, he was ordered to "file off." They said to him, "Go up stairs," or "Go on;" and they announced him at the end of the corridor to which he was allotted by calling out, "Receive Number So-and-So." The gaoler in that particular corridor answered, "Send him on." The prisoner mounted alone, went straight on, and on his arrival found the gaoler standing near an open door. The gaoler said, "Here it is, sir." The prisoner entered, the gaoler shut the door, and they passed on to another.

The Coup d'État acted in a very different manner towards the various Representatives. Those whom it desired to conciliate, the men of the Right, were placed in Vincennes; those whom it detested, the men of the Left, were placed in Mazas. Those at Vincennes had the quarters of M. Montpensier, which were expressly reopened for them; an excellent dinner, eaten in company; wax candles, fire, and the smiles and bows of the governor, General Courtigis.

This is how it treated those at Mazas.

A police-van deposited them at the prison. They were transferred from one box to another. At Mazas a clerk registered them, weighed them, measured them, and entered them into the gaol-book as convicts. Having passed through the office, each of them was conducted along a gallery shrouded in darkness, through a long damp vault to a narrow door which was suddenly opened. This reached, a gaoler pushed the Representative in by the shoulders, and the door was shut.

The Representative, thus immured, found himself in a little, long, narrow, dark room. It is this which the prudent language of modern legislation terms a "cell." Here the full daylight of a December noon only produced a dusky twilight. At one end there was a door, with a little grating; at the other, close to the ceiling, at a height of ten or twelve feet, there was a loophole with a fluted-glass window. This window dimmed the eye, and prevented it from seeing the blue or grey of the sky, or from distinguishing the cloud from the sun's ray, and invested the wan daylight of winter with an indescribable uncertainty. It was even less than a dim light, it was a turbid light. The inventors of this fluted window succeeded in making the heavens squint.

After a few moments the prisoner began to distinguish objects confusedly, and this is what he found: Whitewashed walls here and there turned green by various exhalations; in one corner a round hole guarded by iron bars, and exhaling a disgusting smell; in another corner a slab turning upon a hinge like the bracket seat of a fiacre, and thus capable of being used as a table; no bed; a straw-bottomed chair; under foot a brick floor. Gloom was the first impression; cold was the second.

There, then, the prisoner found himself, alone, chilled, in this semi-darkness, being able to walk up and down the space of eight square feet like a caged wolf, or to remain seated on his chair like an idiot at Bicêtre.

In this situation an ex-Republican of the Eve, who had become a member of the majority, and on occasions sided somewhat with the Bonapartists, M. Émile Leroux, who had, moreover, been thrown into Mazas by mistake, having doubtless been taken for some other Leroux, began to weep with rage. Three, four, five hours thus passed away. In the mean while they had not eaten since the morning; some of them, in the excitement caused by the Coup d'État, had not even breakfasted. Hunger came upon them. Were they to be forgotten there? No; a bell rang in the prison, the grating of the door opened, and an arm held out to the prisoner a pewter porringer and a piece of bread.

The prisoner greedily seized the bread and the porringer. The bread was black and sticky; the porringer contained a sort of thick water, warm and reddish. Nothing can be compared to the smell of this "soup." As for the bread, it only smelt of mouldiness.

However great their hunger, most of the prisoners during the first moment threw down their bread on the floor, and emptied the porringer down the hole with the iron bars.

Nevertheless the stomach craved, the hours passed by, they picked up the bread, and ended by eating it. One prisoner went so far as to pick up the porringer and to attempt to wipe out the bottom with his bread, which he afterwards devoured. Subsequently, this prisoner, a Representative set at liberty in exile, described to me this dietary, and said to me, "A hungry stomach has no nose."

Meanwhile there was absolute solitude and profound silence. However, in the course of a few hours M. Émile Leroux—he himself has told the fact to M. Versigny—heard on the other side of the wall on his right a sort of curious knocking, spaced out and intermittent at irregular intervals. He listened, and almost at the same moment on the other side of the wall to his left a similar rapping responded. M. Émile Leroux, enraptured—what a pleasure it was to hear a noise of some kind!—thought of his colleagues, prisoners like himself, and cried out in a tremendous voice—"Oh, oh! you are there also, you fellows!" He had scarcely uttered this sentence when the door of his cell was opened with a creaking of hinges and bolts; a man—the gaoler—appeared in a great rage, and said to him:—

"Hold your tongue!"

The Representative of the People, somewhat bewildered, asked for an explanation.

"Hold your tongue," replied the gaoler, "or I will pitch you into the dungeon."

This gaoler spoke to the prisoner as the Coup d'État spoke to the nation.

M. Émile Leroux, with his persistent parliamentary habits, nevertheless attempted to insist.

"What!" said he, "can I not answer the signals which two of my colleagues are making to me?"

"Two of your colleagues, indeed," answered the gaoler, "they are two thieves." And he shut the door, shouting with laughter.

They were, in fact, two thieves, between whom M. Émile Leroux was, not crucified, but locked up.

The Mazas prison is so ingeniously built that the least word can be heard from one cell to another. Consequently there is no isolation, notwithstanding the cellular system. Thence this rigorous silence imposed by the perfect and cruel logic of the rules. What do the thieves do? They have invented a telegraphic system of raps, and the rules gain nothing by their stringency. M. Émile Leroux had simply interrupted a conversation which had been begun.

"Don't interfere with our friendly patter," cried out his thief neighbour, who for this exclamation was thrown into the dungeon.

Such was the life of the Representatives at Mazas. Moreover, as they were in secret confinement, not a book, not a sheet of paper, not a pen, not even an hour's exercise in the courtyard was allowed to them.

The thieves also go to Mazas, as we have seen.

But those who know a trade are permitted to work; those who know how to read are supplied with books; those who know how to write are granted a desk and paper; all are permitted the hour's exercise required by the laws of health and authorised by the rules.

The Representatives were allowed nothing whatever. Isolation, close confinement, silence, darkness, cold, "the amount of ennui which engenders madness," as Linguet has said when speaking of the Bastille.

To remain seated on a chair all day long, with arms and legs crossed. Such was the situation. But the bed! Could they lie down?"

No.

There was no bed.

At eight o'clock in the evening the gaoler came into the cell, and reached down, and removed something which was rolled up on a plank near the ceiling. This "something" was a hammock.

The hammock having been fixed, hooked up, and spread out, the gaoler wished his prisoner "Good night."

There was a blanket on the hammock, sometimes a mattress some two inches thick. The prisoner, wrapt in this covering, tried to sleep, and only succeeded in shivering.

But on the morrow he could at least remain lying down all day in his hammock?

Not at all.

At seven o'clock in the morning the gaoler came in, wished the Representative "Good morning," made him get up, and rolled up the hammock on its shelf near the ceiling.

But in this case could not the prisoner take down the authorised hammock, unroll it, hook it up, and lie down again?

"Yes, he could. But then there was the dungeon.

This was the routine. The hammock for the night, the chair for the day.

Let us be just, however. Some obtained beds, amongst others MM. Thiers and Roger (du Nord). M. Grévy did not have one.

Mazas is a model prison of progress; it is certain that Mazas is preferable to the piombi of Venice, and to the under-water dungeon of the Châtelet. Theoretical philanthropy has built Mazas. Nevertheless, as has been seen, Mazas leaves plenty to be desired. Let us acknowledge that from a certain point of view the temporary solitary confinement of the lawmakers at Mazas does not displease us. There was perhaps something of Providence in the Coup d'État. Providence, in placing the Legislators within Mazas, has performed an act of good education. Eat of your own cooking; it is not a bad thing that those who own prisons should try them.

XVI.

THE EPISODE OF THE BOULEVARD ST. MARTIN

When Charamaule and I reached No. 70, Rue Blanche, a steep lonely street, a man in a sort of naval sub-officer's uniform was walking up and down before the door. The portress, who recognised us, called our attention to him. "Nonsense," said Charamaule, "a man walking about in that manner, and dressed after that fashion, is assuredly not a police spy."

"My dear colleague," said I, "Bedeau has proved that the police are blockheads."

We went upstairs. The drawing-room and a little antechamber which led to it were full of Representatives, with whom were mingled a good many persons who did not belong to the Assembly. Some ex-members of the Constituent Assembly were there, amongst others, Bastide and several Democratic journalists. The Nationale was represented by Alexander Rey and Léopold Duras, the Révolution by Xavier Durrieu, Vasbenter, and Watripon, the Avénement du Peuple by H. Coste, nearly all the other editors of the Avénement being in prison. About sixty members of the Left were there, and among others Edgar Quinet, Schœlcher, Madier de Montjau, Carnot, Noël Parfait, Pierre Lefranc, Bancel, de Flotte, Bruckner, Chaix, Cassal, Esquiros, Durand-Savoyat, Yvan, Carlos Forel, Etchegoyen, Labrousse, Barthélemy (Eure-et-Loire), Huguenin, Aubry (du Nord), Malardier, Victor Chauffour, Belin, Renaud, Bac, Versigny, Sain, Joigneaux, Brives, Guilgot, Pelletier, Doutre, Gindrier, Arnaud (de l'Ariége), Raymond (de l'Isère), Brillier, Maigne, Sartin, Raynaud, Léon Vidal, Lafon, Lamargue, Bourzat, and General Rey.

All were standing. They were talking without order. Léopold Duras had just described the investment of the Café Bonvalet. Jules Favre and Baudin, seated at a little table between the two windows, were writing. Baudin had a copy of the Constitution open before him, and was copying Article 68.

When we entered there was silence, and they asked us: "Well, what news?"

Charamaule told them what had just taken place on the Boulevard du Temple, and the advice which he had thought right to give me. They approved his action.

"What is to be done?" was asked on every side. I began to speak.

"Let us go straight to the fact and to the point," said I. "Louis Bonaparte is gaining ground, and we are losing ground, or rather, we should say, he has as yet everything, and we have as yet nothing. Charamaule and I have been obliged to separate ourselves from Colonel Forestier. I doubt if he will succeed. Louis Bonaparte is doing all he can to suppress us, we must no longer keep in the background. We must make our presence felt. We must fan this beginning of the flame of which we have seen the spark on the Boulevard du Temple. A proclamation must be made, no matter by whom it is printed, or how it is placarded, but it is absolutely necessary, and that immediately. Something brief, rapid, and energetic. No set phrases. Ten lines—an appeal to arms! We are the Law, and there are occasions when the Law should utter a war cry. The Law outlawing the traitor is a great and terrible thing. Let us do it."

They interrupted me with "Yes, that is right, a Proclamation!"

"Dictate! Dictate!"

"Dictate," said Baudin to me, "I will write."

I dictated:

> "To the People.
>
> "Louis Napoléon Bonaparte is a traitor.
>
> "He has violated the Constitution.
>
> "He is forsworn.
>
> "He is an outlaw. . . . ."

They cried out to me on every side:

"That is right! Outlaw him!"

"Go on."

I resumed the dictation. Baudin wrote:

> "The Republican Representatives refer the People and the Army to Article 68. . . . ."

They interrupted me: "Quote it in full."

"No," said I, "it would be too long. Something is needed which can be placarded on a card, stuck with a wafer, and which can be read in a minute. I will quote Article 110. It is short, and contains the appeal to arms." I resumed:

> "The Republican Representatives refer the People and the Army to Article 68 and to Article 110, which runs thus—'The Constituent Assembly confides the existing Constitution and the Laws which it consecrates to the keeping and the patriotism of all Frenchmen.'
>
> "The People henceforward and for ever in possession of universal suffrage, and who need no Prince for its restitution, will know how to chastise the rebel.
>
> "Let the People do its duty. The Republican Representatives are marching at its head.
>
> "Vive la République! To Arms!"

They applauded.

"Let us all sign," said Pelletier.

"Let us try to find a printing-office without delay," said Schoelcher, "and let the proclamation be posted up immediately."

"Before nightfall—the days are short," added Joigneaux.

"Immediately, immediately, several copies!" called out the Representatives.

Baudin, silent and rapid, had already made a second copy of the Proclamation.

A young man, editor of a provincial Republican journal, came out of the crowd, and declared that, if they would give him a copy at once, before two hours should elapse the Proclamation should be posted at all the street corners in Paris.

I asked him:

"What is your name?"

He answered me:

"Milliére."

Millière. It is in this manner that this name made its first appearance in the gloomy days of our History. I can still see that pale young man, that eye at the same time piercing and half-closed, that gentle and forbidding profile. Assassination and the Pantheon awaited him. He was too obscure to enter into the Temple, he was sufficiently deserving to die on its threshold. Baudin showed him the copy which he had just made.

Millière went up to him.

"You do not know me," said he. "My name is Millière, but I know you, you are Baudin."

Baudin held out his hand to him.

I was present at the handshaking between these two spectres.

Xavier Durrieu, who was editor of the Révolution, made the same offer as Millière.

A dozen Representatives took their pens, and sat down, some around a table, others with a sheet of paper on their knees, and called out to me:

"Dictate the Proclamation to us."

I had dictated to Baudin, "Louis Napoléon Bonaparte is a traitor." Jules Favre requested the erasure of the word Napoléon, that name of glory fatally powerful with the People and with the Army, and that there should be written, "Louis Bonaparte is a traitor."

"You are right," said I to him.

A discussion followed. Some wished to strike out the word "Prince." But the Assembly was impatient. "Quick! quick!" they cried out. "We are in December, the days are short," repeated Joigneaux.

Twelve copies were made at the same time in a few minutes. Schœlcher, Rey, Xavier Durrieu, and Millière each took one, and set out in search of a printing office.

As they went out a man whom I did not know, but who was greeted by several Representatives, entered and said: "Citizens, this house is marked. Troops are on the way to surround you. You have not a second to lose."

Numerous voices were raised.

"Very well! Let them arrest us!"

"What does it matter to us?"

"Let them complete their crime."

"Colleagues," said I, "let us not allow ourselves to be arrested. After the struggle, as God pleases; but before the combat,—No! It is from us that the people are awaiting the initiative. If we are taken all is at an end. Our duty is to bring on the battle, our right is to cross swords with the Coup d'État. It must not be allowed to capture us, it must seek us and not find us. We must deceive the arm which it stretches out against us, we must remained concealed from Bonaparte, we must harass him, weary him, astonish him, exhaust him, disappear and reappear unceasingly, change our hiding-place, and always fight him, be always before him, and never beneath his hand. Let us not leave the field. We have not numbers, let us have daring."

They approved of this. "It is right," said they, "but where shall we go?"

Labrousse said,

"Our former colleague of the Constituent Assembly, Beslay, offers us his house."

"Where does he live?"

"No. 33, Rue de la Cerisaie, in the Marais."

"Very well," answered I, "let us separate. We will meet again in two hours at Beslay's, No. 33, Rue de la Cerisaie."

All left; one after another, and in different directions. I begged Charamaule to go to my house and wait for me there, and I walked out with Noël Parfait and Lafon.

We reached the still then uninhabited district which skirts the ramparts. As we came to the corner of the Rue Pigalle, we saw at a hundred paces from us, in the deserted streets which cross it, soldiers gliding all along the houses, bending their steps towards the Rue Blanche.

At three o'clock the members of the Left rejoined each other in the Rue de la Cerisaie. But the alarm had been given, and the inhabitants of these lonely streets stationed themselves at the windows to see the Representatives pass. The place of meeting, situated and hemmed in at the bottom of a backyard, was badly chosen in the event of being surrounded; all these disadvantages were at once perceived, and the meeting only lasted a few seconds. It was presided over by Joly; Xavier Durrieu and Jules Gouache, who were editors of the Révolution, also took part, as well as several Italian exiles, amongst others Colonel Carini and Montanelli, ex-Minister of the Grand Duke of Tuscany; I liked Montanelli, a gentle and dauntless spirit.

Madier de Montjau brought news from the outskirts. Colonel Forestier, without losing and without taking away hope, told them of the obstacles which he had encountered in his attempts to call together the 6th Legion. He pressed me to sign his appointment as Colonel, as well as Michel (de Bourges); but Michel (de Bourges) was absent, and besides, neither Michel (de Bourges) nor I had yet at that time the authority from the Left. Nevertheless, under this reservation I signed his appointment. The perplexities were becoming more and more numerous. The Proclamation was not yet printed, and the evening was closing in. Schœlcher explained the difficulties: all the printing offices closed and guarded; an order placarded that whoever should print an appeal to arms would be immediately shot; the workmen terrified; no money. A hat was sent round, and each threw into it what money he had about him. They collected in this manner a few hundred francs.

Xavier Durrieu, whose fiery courage never flagged for a single moment, reiterated that he would undertake the printing, and promised that by eight o'clock that evening there should be 40,000 copies of the Proclamation. Time pressed. They separated, after fixing as a rendezvous the premises of the Society of Cabinet Makers in the Rue de Charonne, at eight o'clock in the evening, so as to allow time for the situation to reveal itself. As we went out and crossed the Rue Beautreillis I saw Pierre Leroux coming up to me. He had taken no part in our meetings. He said to me:

"I believe this struggle to be useless. Although my point of view is different from yours, I am your friend. Beware. There is yet time to stop. You are entering into the catacombs. The catacombs are Death."

"They are also Life," answered I.

All the same, I thought with joy that my two sons were in prison, and that this gloomy duty of street fighting was imposed upon me alone.

There yet remained five hours until the time fixed for the rendezvous. I wished to go home, and once more embrace my wife and daughter before precipitating myself into that abyss of the "unknown" which was there, yawning and gloomy, and which several of us were about to enter, never to return.

Arnauld (de l'Ariége) gave me his arm. The two Italian exiles, Carini and Montanelli, accompanied me.

Montanelli took my hands and said to me, "Right will conquer. You will conquer. Oh! that this time France may not be selfish as in 1848, and that she may deliver Italy." I answered him, "She will deliver Europe."

Those were our illusions at that moment, but this, however, does not prevent them from being our hopes to-day. Faith is thus constituted; shadows demonstrate to it the light.

There is a cabstand before the front gate of St. Paul. We went there. The Rue St. Antoine was alive with that indescribable uneasy swarming which precedes those strange battles of ideas against deeds which are called Revolutions. I seemed to catch, in this great working-class district, a glimpse of a gleam of light which, alas, died out speedily. The cabstand before St. Paul was deserted. The drivers had foreseen the possibility of barricades, and had fled.

Three miles separated Arnauld and myself from our houses. It was impossible to walk there through the middle of Paris, without being recognised at each step. Two passers by extricated us from our difficulty. One of them said to the other, "The omnibuses are still running on the Boulevards."

We profited by this information, and went to look for a Bastille omnibus. All four of us got in.

I entertained at heart, I repeat, wrongly or rightly, a bitter reproach for the opportunity lost during the morning. I said to myself that on critical days such moments come, but do not return. There are two theories of Revolution: to arouse the people, or to let them come of themselves. The first theory was mine, but, through force of discipline, I had obeyed the second. I reproached myself with this. I said to myself, "The People offered themselves and we did not accept them. It is for us now not to offer ourselves, but to do more, to give ourselves."

Meanwhile the omnibus had started. It was full. I had taken my place at the bottom on the left; Arnauld (de l'Ariége) sat next to me, Carini opposite, Montanelli next to Arnauld. We did not speak; Arnauld and myself silently exchanged that pressure of hands which is a means of exchanging thoughts.

As the omnibus proceeded towards the centre of Paris the crowd became denser on the Boulevard. As the omnibus entered into the cutting of the Porte St. Martin a regiment of heavy cavalry arrived in the opposite direction. In a few seconds this regiment passed by the side of us. They were cuirassiers. They filed by at a sharp trot and with drawn swords. The people leaned over from the height of the pavements to see them pass. Not a single cry. On the one side the people dejected, on the other the soldiers triumphant. All this stirred me.

Suddenly the regiment halted. I do not know what obstruction momentarily impeded its advance in this narrow cutting of the Boulevard in which we were hemmed in. By its halt it stopped the omnibus. There were the soldiers. We had them under our eyes, before us, at two paces distance, their horses touching the horses of our vehicle, these Frenchmen who had become Mamelukes, these citizen soldiers of the Great Republic transformed into supporters of the degraded Empire. From the place where I sat I almost touched them. I could no longer restrain myself.

I lowered the window of the omnibus. I put out my head, and, looking fixedly at the dense line of soldiers which faced me, I called out, "Down with Louis Bonaparte. Those who serve traitors are traitors!"

Those nearest to me turned their heads towards me and looked at me with a tipsy air; the others did not stir, and remained at "shoulder arms," the peaks of their helmets over their eyes, their eyes fixed upon the ears of their horses.

In great affairs there is the immobility of statues; in petty mean affairs there is the immobility of puppets.

At the shout which I raised Arnauld turned sharply round. He also had lowered his window, and he was leaning half out of the omnibus, with his arms extended towards the soldiers, and he shouted, "Down with the traitors!"

To see him thus with his dauntless gesture, his handsome head, pale and calm, his fervent expression, his beard and his long chestnut hair, one seemed to behold the radiant and fulminating face of an angry Christ.

The example was contagious and electrical.

"Down with the traitors!" shouted Carini and Montanelli.

"Down with the Dictator! Down with the traitors!" repeated a gallant young man with whom we were not acquainted, and who was sitting next to Carini.

With the exception of this young man, the whole omnibus seemed seized with terror!

"Hold your tongues!" exclaimed these poor frightened people; "you will cause us all to be massacred." One, still more terrified, lowered the window, and began to shout to the soldiers, "Long live Prince Napoléon! Long live the Emperor!"

There were five of us, and we overpowered this cry by our persistent protest, "Down with Louis Bonaparte! Down with the traitors!"

The soldiers listened in gloomy silence. A corporal turned with a threatening air towards us, and shook his sword. The crowd looked on in bewilderment.

What passed within me at that moment? I cannot tell! I was in a whirlwind. I had at the same time yielded to a calculation, finding the opportunity good, and to a burst of rage, finding the encounter insolent.

A woman cried out to us from the pavement, "You will get yourselves cut to pieces." I vaguely imagined that some collision was about to ensue, and that, either from the crowd or from the Army, the spark would fly out. I hoped for a sword cut from the soldiers or a shout of anger from the people. In short I had obeyed rather an instinct than an idea.

But nothing came of it, neither the sword cut nor the shout of anger. The soldiers did not bestir themselves and the people maintained silence. Was it too late? Was it too soon?

The mysterious man of the Elysée had not foreseen the event of an insult to his name being thrown in the very face of the soldiers. The soldiers had no orders. They received them that evening. This was seen on the morrow.

In another moment the regiment broke into a gallop, and the omnibus resumed its journey. As the cuirassiers filed past us Arnauld (de l'Ariége), still leaning out of the vehicle, continued to shout in their ears, for as I have just said, their horses touched us, "Down with the Dictator! Down with the traitors!"

We alighted in the Rue Lafitte. Carini, Montanelli, and Arnauld left me, and I went on alone towards the Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne. Night was coming on. As I turned the corner of the street a man passed close by me. By the light of a street lamp I recognised a workman at a neighbouring tannery, and he said to me in a low tone, and quickly, "Do not return home. The police surround your house."

I went back again towards the Boulevard, through the streets laid out, but not then built, which make a Y under my windows behind my house. Not being able to embrace my wife and daughter I thought over what I could do during the moments which remained to me. A remembrance came into my mind.

(To be continued)

"TOUCH AND GO," by Jean Middlemass, author of "Wild Georgie," &c. (3 vols: Chatto and Windus).—Miss Middlemass certainly succeeds in surrounding her heroines with a veil of mystery which we altogether fail to penetrate till she sees good to raise it with her own hand, and in surprising us with a dénouement quite other than what we had anticipated. We are afraid, however, that her secret must be said to be secure principally because nobody's wits are likely to travel far enough afield to guess it. When an author sets probabilities at defiance, the mystification of the reader becomes a comparatively easy task. The plot is not very intelligible even when we are supposed to know all about it, for we cannot understand how an experienced man of the world like Henry Durant could be such a simpleton as to place his new love under the care and protection of his old, knowing as he did the character of the aforesaid old love, the adventuress Margaret Denham, passing in Parisian society as Mrs. Fitzalan, or how he could reconcile it with honour and conscience to keep silence as to the wrong Mrs. Fitzalan was inflicting on Cicely by living in luxury on a fortune which belonged to the other. The transformation, again, of this heroine Cicely, in a bare six weeks, from a country lass, brought up in a gate-keeper's lodge, accustomed to curtsey to her "betters," and play on the village green, into the fashionable young lady whom we meet at her first ball, parrying soft speeches and exchanging repartee as though she had breathed the air of "society" all her life, is a great deal more wonderful than natural. Nevertheless, though there is nothing in the book to raise it above the ordinary circulating-library level, it escapes being dull, and may even be found entertaining by those whose taste is not exacting. Some two or three of the minor characters, notably old Mr. Bertrand, the squire of Swinton Hall, are indeed drawn not unskilfully. Occasionally, we must remark, the author's English is, to say the least, peculiar, and has the air of being inspired by Mrs. Malaprop. Thus, in the first volume, we read of a clergyman "individualising himself with his parishioners," "individualising" being presumably substituted for "identifying;" and for a long time we get "amalgamation" where "complication" is obviously intended. But the book may very likely find its readers.

"Dita," by Lady Margaret Majendie, author of "Giannetto" (Blackwood).—We were going to say that Lady Margaret Majendie was one of the most promising among rising novelists, but it seems out of place to speak of promise when performance is already so rich and assured. Nothing can be brighter or more touching, as occasion requires, than this charming little story, which will meet with a hearty welcome from all who can appreciate careful and highly-finished workmanship. Perdita, or "Dita," is an orphan, deprived of her heritage by a wicked uncle, who steals and secretes the papers proving his dead brother's marriage to Assunta de Caroli, an Italian lady, but her fortunes we must leave readers to learn for themselves. The worthy couple, Andrew Fearon, bookseller, of Edgar Street, Soho, and Nannie his wife, who adopt the heroine, when still a baby, on the death of her ill-starred mother in a workhouse, are admirably drawn; and the effect upon them of their sudden promotion to great riches, and the possession of Salford Abbey, a grand old feudal country seat, is an episode full of humorous touches, and not without its pathetic side also, as poor Nannie pines and fades away under the burden of the greatness thrust upon her, which she finds too strange and overpowering for assimilation. But, in fact, the book is of striking excellence from the first page to the last, and we can only hope that the author, now that she has so successfully proved her powers, may be willing to ascend from the novelette to the novel, and attempt a work which may enable her to display her many good gifts more freely.

"Spoiled by a Woman," by A. C. Sampson, author of "Crushed beneath His Idol," &c. (3 vols.: Tinsley).—We cannot pretend to an accurate remembrance of Mr. Sampson's former work, still we had the impression that it was one not wholly devoid of power of a certain kind, though this power was marred by extravagance. Under this impression, therefore, we waded wearily on through page after page in the work before us, trusting that, barren as the land about us seemed, we might yet in the end light upon something that should be worth reading. In all sadness of heart we are bound to record the fact that our expectation proved a fond dream. The book falls conspicuously short even of that low level of excellence which we term "the average" when speaking of the novels of the day.

"Cleansing Fires," by Mrs. Newton Sears, author of "Kismet" (3 vols.: Remington and Co.).—"Kismet" was outrageously silly and stagey; "Cleansing Fires" is also silly and stagey, but, we think, on the whole, less outrageously. If the author continues to write novels which grow gradually less and less bad it is possible she may in the end cross the line between negative and positive merit, and give us a work in which we may be able to discern some rudimentary glimmer of excellence. Should she, however, stop short at that line, and cease to produce at all, the world might not be much the worse for it.

In "Never Despair," by H. Richardson Clerk (Remington and Co.), we have some "scenes from Clerical Life," presented not, indeed, quite after the fashion of George Eliot, but yet not altogether ill. The tale has at least the merit of being a very little one.

◆

BOOKS RECEIVED

Waverley; Told by the Sea: F. Frankfort Moore: All in a Garden Green: E. C. Traice; Fairy Circles, from German of Villamaria. Marcus Ward and Co.

Our Work for Christ: M. A. Morrell: The Church Builder, 1877. Rivingtons.

Ally Sloper's Book of Beauty. Judy Office.

Earlier Poems of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. B Robson, Cranbourne St.

The Diplomatic History of the Greek War, from the Foundation of the Hetairia to the Treaty of Adrianople: Francis Francis: J. A. Brook and Co.

Myths and Marvels of Astronomy: R. A. Proctor. Chatto and Windus.

The Baby in the House. Beaumont and Co.

A Cosmopolite's Dream. Marchant, Singer, and Co.

A Douce Lass (2 vols.): by the author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline." Smith, Elder, and Co.

Lectures of a Certain Professor: Rev. J. Farrell. Macmillan.

The Wreck of the Grosvenor (3 vols.): Life and Letters of the Hon. Charles Sumner (2 vols.): Edward L. Pierce; Recollections of Samuel Breck: H. E. Scudder; In the Levant: C. D. Warner. S. Low and Co.

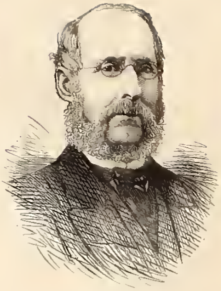
Village Lyrics: H. and C. Arnold. Provost and Co.

In the Dark: R. E. Francillon's Christmas Number. Grant and Co.

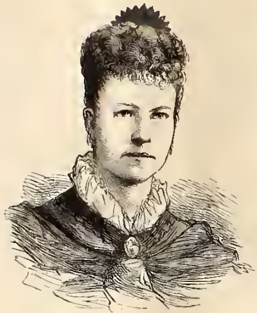
Ione (a Poem): the author of "Shadows of Coming Events." H. S. King and Co.

The Last Grave of the Nebescos: E. W. Spencer; Disappeared from her Home: Mrs. F. E. Pirkis. Remington.

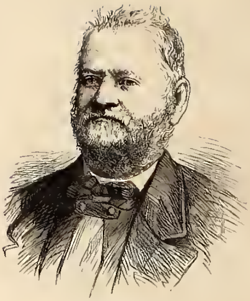
The Rhine Illustrated. Bickers and Son.



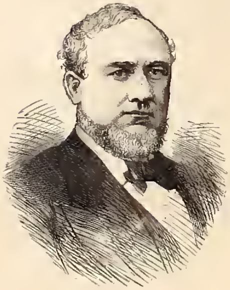
ALBERT CARRINGTON
Secretary to the late Brigham Young



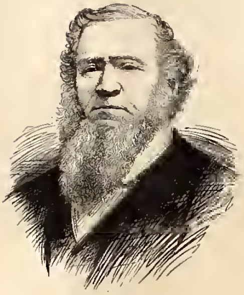
ANN ELIZA YOUNG (NÉE WEBB)
Nineteenth and Last Wife of the late Brigham Young



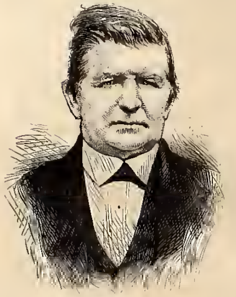
ORSON HYDE
Missionary and Apostle



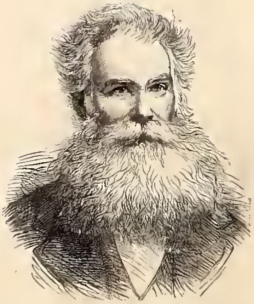
GEORGE Q. CANNON
Missionary and Delegate to Congress



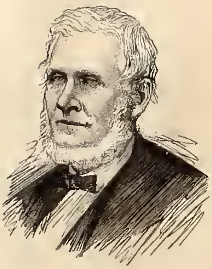
THE LATE BRIGHAM YOUNG
President of the Mormon Church, Founder of the Utah Settlement



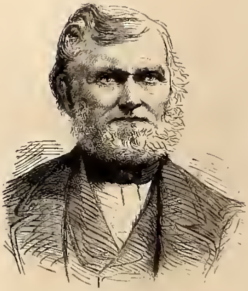
BISHOP JOHN D. LEE
Executed March, 1877, for taking part in the Mountain Meadow Massacre in 1857



ORSON PRATT
One of the Original Twelve Apostles

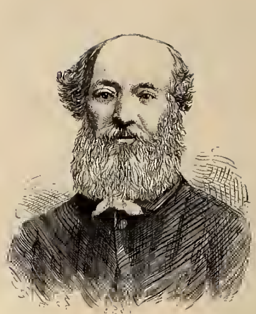


JOHN TAYLOR
Temporary President



WILFORD WOODRUFF
The Church Historian

THE LATE BRIGHAM YOUNG AND SOME PROMINENT MORMONS



THE LATE REV. G. B. WHEELER.
Editor of the Irish Times, died Oct. 20, aged 71

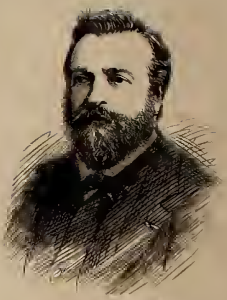
MISS GRACE VERNON BUSSELL
The Australian Grace Darling



THE LATE M. GUSTAVE BRION (ARTIST)
Died Nov. 4, aged 53

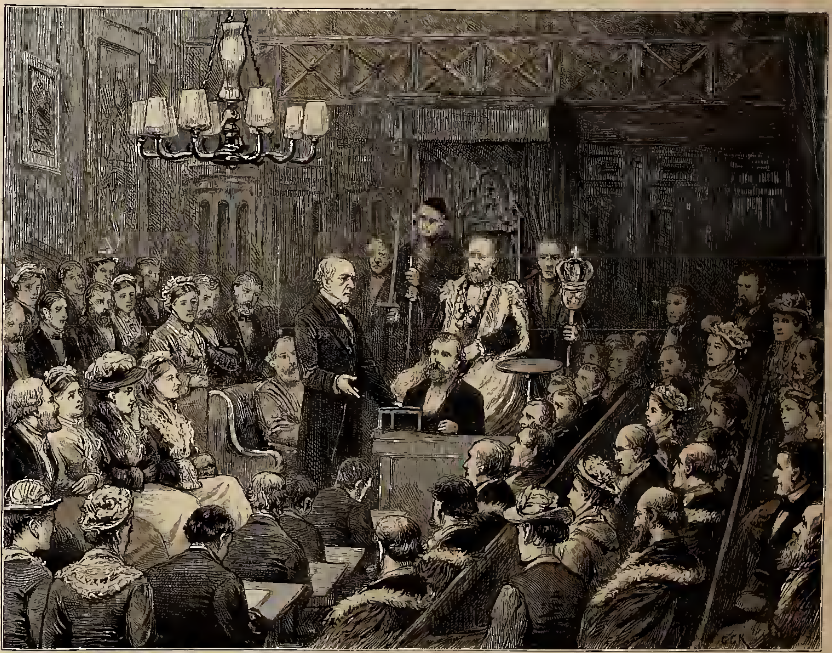
AN AUSTRALIAN HEROINE

The screw-steamer Georgette, when on a voyage from Fremantle to Adelaide, was wrecked on the 2nd December, 1876. She had sprung a leak, and was with difficulty brought to the coast, where she grounded at a spot 180 miles south of Fremantle. The coast in that direction is wild and desolate; no shelter for vessels, and heavy surf almost always dashing on the shore. More than a score of miles may be traversed by any one who ventures over the rough country near the coast without a human habitation coming in view.

About eight miles north of the place where the unfortunate vessel struck the rocks stands Wallcliffe, the residence of Alfred P. Bussell, Esq., J.P., and by good fortune it chanced that one of his daughters, Miss Grace Vernon Bussell, then riding through the bush in that vicinity accompanied by a coloured servant, saw the wreck and made for it. A boat had been launched, but capsized in the heavy surf, and they were an hour in righting her and returning to the ship. They then took a line from the ship, and putting some women and children into the boat, they paid out the line to try to get to the shore.

The boat swamped, they were all in the water in the most imminent danger, when Grace Bussell rode down the steep cliff and out beyond the second line of roaring breakers, and though her horse stumbled over the rope, and her peril was extreme, she forced her way on to the boat, and with as many women and children clinging to her and the horse as was possible, she made her way to the shore and safely landed them. So fierce was the surf that it took four hours to land fifty people, and every boat engaged was capsized.

Most of the wrecked people were taken to Mr. Bussell's house, and there tended and cared for with such extreme kindness and hospitality that at the late meeting of the Legislative Council a sum of 100*l*. was voted for presentation to this gentleman, who is one of the oldest and most respected settlers in West Australia, as a mark of public recognition of his generous and valuable aid



MR. GLADSTONE IN IRELAND—PRESENTATION OF THE FREEDOM OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN AT THE CITY HALL o the distressed people.—We are indebted for the above particulars, and for the photograph (by Alfred Chopin, of Perth and Freemantle, West Australia,) from which Miss Bussell's portrait is engraved, to Dr. Henry C. Barnett, J.P., colonial surgeon at Fremantle, West Australia.

THE LATE G. B. WHEELER

The Rev. George B. Wheeler, Rector of Ballysax, and for many years editor of the Irish Times, was born in 1805, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he subsequently became the chief classical teacher. He edited a great variety of classical text-books and of Greek and Latin Grammars, and his success as a "grinder" was extraordinary. His pupils were legion, and many of them have since risen to great eminence. Amongst them were Mr. Law, the late Solicitor-General for Ireland, the late Judge Willis, Judge Tyrrell of Allahabad, and Lord Cairns, the present Lord Chancellor. His first connection with the Press was as a writer for the Dublin Daily Express, and he afterwards became a frequent contributor to All the Year Round and Chambers' Edinburgh Journal, besides several other papers. In July, 1859, he accepted the editorship of the Irish Times, which he retained to the day of his death. In addition to his literary labours Mr. Wheeler had clerical and parochial duties to perform, for he had been Rector of Ballysax since the year 1861, previous to which he had been chaplain to the Smithfield Reformatory Prison in Dublin. His preaching was characterised by a simple eloquence which went straight to the hearts of his hearers, and his kindly disposition and ready benevolence won the esteem and love of all who knew him. His death was the result of an accident which happened about three weeks previously. He had just mounted a hackney car, when part of the harness gave way, and the vehicle was upset. Mr. Wheeler tried to save himself by jumping, but in the effort broke his thighbone, an injury which ultimately proved to be fatal. He has left a widow and seven sons and daughters, all of whom are now adults.—Our portrait is from a photograph.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

ADVERTISEMENTS intended for the GRAPHIC CHRISTMAS NUMBER must be sent in by the 20th inst. The terms are the same as those of last year's Christmas Number.

Folio, price 7s 6d each.
THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS: a Series of Volumes illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.
"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to excite and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 1: or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By Adam White, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 2. or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.
RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION—THE NEW PICTURE BOOK; or, PICTORIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by Nicholas Bohny.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.
THE HEROES OF YOUNG AMERICA. By Ascott R. Hope, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominoes," &c., &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.
ADVENTURES IN THE AIR: being Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. De Fonvielle. Translated and edited by John S. Keltie.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

CHAPMAN and HALL'S
NEW NOVELS.
New Novel by the Author of "Fashion and Passion."
WHO IS SHE? A MYSTERY OF MAYFAIR.
By the Author of "Fashion and Passion."
3 vols.

New Novel by Lady Wood.
SIREN'S FOREMAN. By Lady Wood, Author of "Wild Weather," "Below the Salt," &c. 3 vols.

New Novel by Annie Thomas.
A LAGGARD IN LOVE. By Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Author of "Dennis Donne" and "Called to Account." 3 vols.

New Novel by the Author of "Clytie."
THE QUEEN OF BOHEMIA. a Novel. By Joseph Hatton. 2 vols.

GREY ABBEY. By Old Calabar, Author of "Jack Blake," "Over Turf and Stubble." 2 vols.

ROTHERY SELFERT, Q.C. By John Ollive, Author of "A Wooing of Ate." 3 vols.

193, PICCADILLY.

Just Published, in One thick Vol., strongly Half-bound, 760 pp., price 6s., postage 6d.
THE HOUSE BOOK: A BOOK for EVERY FAMILY. Containing Housekeeping, Cookery, Household Work, Boudoir, Nursery, Cellarage of Wines, Beer, &c., Dairy Management, Stable Economy, Gardening, &c.—Domestic Medicine, Symptoms, Causes, and Treatment of most Common Ailments. Accidents, Emergencies, &c.—Management of Health, Air, Light, Heat, Ventilation, Diet, Clothing, Sleep, Bathing, &c.
CROSBY LOCKWOOD and CO., 7, Stationers' Hall Court, London, E.C.

FUNNY FOLKS' ANNUAL
Now Ready—Price Sixpence.
London: JAMES HENDERSON, Red Lion Court, Fleet St.

24th Edition, 8vo, cloth, pp. 1,102; price 16s.
HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. Laurie, M.D. Completely re-arranged and revised, by R. S. Gutteridge, M.D. The most comprehensive Guide published for the use of families, emigrants, and missionaries, being free of all technicalities. The present edition contains, in addition to the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of females and children, many important new chapters, comprising among others the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, plain directions for the treatment of accidents, and illustrations delineating the minor operations in surgery. Hydropathic appliances, affection of the eyes (with a description of the eyes and their appendages, and illustrations showing the various parts of the eye). Full directions are also given for the treatment of diseases prevalent in tropical climates. A new and concise Dictionary of Medical Terms and Treatment, with leading indications of treatment prefixed to the various chapters and divisions.—An Epitome of the above, 20th Edition, price 5s.
LEATH and ROSS, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, and 9, Vere Street, London, W.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.
ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

THE NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.
Now ready at all the Libraries.
THE VILLAGE COMEDY. By Mortimer and Frances Collins. 3 vols.
THE SQUIRE'S COURTSHIP. By Mrs. Mackenzie Daniel. 3 vols.
A JEWEL OF A GIRL. By the Author of "Queenie," &c. 3 vols.
MAUD LESLIE. By Lady Charles Thynne. 2 vols.
TWO TALES OF MARRIED LIFE: HARD TO BEAR, by Georgiana M. Craik; and A TRUE MAN, by M. C. Stirling. 3 vols.
GLORY. By Mrs. G. Linnæus Banks. 3 vols.
CHEAP EDITION of PHŒBE, JUNIOR. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol. 5s. bound and illustrated.
DORIS BARUGH. By Mrs. Macquoid, Author of "Patty," "Diane," &c. 3 vols. [Next week.
HURST and BLACKETT, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

CONSUMPTION: its Proximate Cause and Specific Treatment by the HYPOPHOSPHITES, upon the Principles of Stœchiological Medicine, by John Francis Churchill, M.D.,
With an Appendix on the Direct Treatment of Respiratory Diseases (Asthma, Bronchitis, &c.) by Stœchiological Inhalants. And Reports of nearly Two Hundred Cases by Drs. Churchill, Campbell, Heslop, Sterling, Bird, Santa Maria, Gomet, Maestre, Parigot, Reintillier, Galvez, Leriverend, Ilrnobele, Fridman, Pfeiffer, Vintras, Hougard, Tirilahy, Lanti, Fabbri, Panegrossi, Cerasi, Gualdi, Todini, Ascenzi, Kegnoli, Valentini, Casati, Blasi, Borromeo, Fiorelli, and Fedeli.
London: LONGMANS and CO. Price 2s.

NEW ANTHEM FOR ADVENT.— "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." By William Carter. Just published, price 4d.
NOVELLO, EWER, and CO., 1, Berners Street, Oxford St.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Flutes, Clarionets, Flageolets, Guitars, Zithers, Banjoes, Accordions, Flutinas, Cornets, Saxhorns, Drums, Fifes, and Musical Instruments of every description. Largest assortment in the kingdom at BUTLER'S MANUFACTORY, 29, Haymarket, London.—Illustrated catalogue, 50 pages, post free.

TO LADIES.—SALE of NEW MUSIC at a large reduction in price.—The most popular songs, pieces, or dances of the day sent post free from 4d., 6d., 8d., 10d., 1s., &c. Best editions, new copies, all publishers. Catalogues sent post free.—A. M. MOFFATT, 3, Barnsbury St., N.

AMERICAN ORGAN for SALE.—A fine AMERICAN ORGAN by MASON and HAMLIN, containing Automatic Swell, Foot Swell, Sub Bass, Diapason, Flute, Melodin, Dulcians, Octave Coupler, Euphone, 2 Pedals suitable for drawing room, and sufficiently powerful for schoolroom or small church. Cased in American Black Walnut. Cost 55 guineas, now offered for £40 cash.—Apply by letter to X 2, Messrs. Geo. Rees, 43, Russell Street, Covent Garden.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20 —GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).— Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

THE WANDERERS' CLUB, Pall Mall. This Club having now reached 1,378 Members, there remain only 200 VACANCIES.
Annual Subscription: Town Members, 8 guineas; Country Members, 4 guineas; Members Abroad, 2 guineas. Present Entrance Fee, 10 guineas. Apply to Major T. H. P. KENNAN, Secretary.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.— The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

MALVERN COLLEGE. The ANNUAL EXAMINATION for ENTRANCE EXHIBITIONS and SCHOLARSHIPS will be held on December 20th and 21st.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

ACCIDENTS by FLOOD and FIELD. —Accidents of all kinds may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.
Hon. A. KINNAIRD, M.P., Chairman.
Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.
£1,120,000 has been paid as compensation.
No. 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Sec.

SOUTH KENSINGTON and BELGRAVIA HOUSE AGENCY OFFICES, 116, Cromwell Road, and 1, Holcomb Street, S.W.—Mr. HOWELL'S PRINTED INDEX LIST, post free, of Choice Residences to be LET or SOLD.

A WIDOW LADY, who has many little Children entirely dependent on her, earnestly begs for orders for most exquisite etchings of animals. A beautiful specimen etching sent, with particulars of her case and references (if desired) on receipt of 5s. in stamps.—Address Box 23, Penzance.

A WELL FURNISHED BED and SITTING ROOM, communicating, TO LET for a Single Gentleman in a private family. No other lodgers and no young children. A good bathroom, with hot and cold bath. Easy access to the City.—Address F., 78, St. Augustine Road, Camden Square, N.W.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

FOR ARMS and CREST SEND NAME and COUNTY to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Office, 44, High Holborn, W.C. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. Illustrated Price Lists Post free.

WEDDING PRESENTS.—MECHI, 112, Regent Street, W.—Customers wishing to obtain for WEDDING, BIRTHDAY, or COMPLIMENTARY PRESENTS, dressing-cases and dressing bags, writing-cases, work-tables, inkstands, card-boxes, tea-caddies, cutlery in all its branches, electro-plated and silver dessert knives and forks, and other articles of utility or ornament, will find every variety in style, elegance, design, and price at MECHI'S, 112, Regent Street. Catalogues post free.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

	£	s.	d.
The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	5	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

JEWEL ROBBERIES.—CHUBB'S SAFES for JEWELS give the greatest security from the attacks of burglars, and are also Fire Resisting. All sizes, with various fittings. Chubb's Latches and Detector Locks. Price List sent free.—CHUBB and SON, 128, Queen Victoria Street, St. Paul's, E.C., and 68, St. James's Street, S.W.

DUPLEX TABLE LAMP, with instantaneous extinguisher.—The Lamp of the Season for petroleum or rock oil, gives an intense, pure, and beautiful light, equal to that of 24 sperm candles, at a cost of about one farthing per hour. Deane and Co. have a large stock on sale in Crystal, China, Ormolu, and Bronzes. Prices from 17s. 6d. to £6 6s.
Deane and Co.'s Illustrated Priced List for 1877 post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, King William St., London Bridge.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY,
LONDON.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S
SPOONS AND FORKS
Equal in Finish and Appearance to Sterling Silver.

	Plain		Ornamental
Table Spoons or Forks, pr. doz.	30s. od.	40s. od.	60s. od.
Dessert do. do. do.	24s. od.	32s. od.	44s. od.
Tea do. do. do.	12s. od.	16s. od.	28s. od.
Salt, Mustard, or Egg, each	1s. 3d.	2s. od.	3s. 6d.
Sugar Tongs do.	2s. 6d.	3s. 6d.	6s. od.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S
ELECTRO-SILVER PLATE.
New Registered Designs, plain or richly ornamental.

THE HIGHEST QUALITY, at Lowest Prices.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES Post Free.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
76, 77, and 78, OXFORD STREET, WEST END,
LONDON.

COCK'S READING SAUCE
Is the best and most economical Sauce ever manufactured
FOR FISH, ENRICHING SOUPS, GRAVIES, &c.
It only requires a trial to convince the purchaser of its excellence.
CAUTION.—The genuine is protected by Trade Mark, viz., CHARLES COCKS' Signature on a white ground across the Reading Arms.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.
JAMES EPPS AND CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. per bushel; households for bread, 9s. 4d.; wheat meal for brown bread, 8s. 8d.; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s. 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d.; ground pollard, 1s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meal biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of George Young.

Established 1837.
CUSTARDS WITHOUT EGGS.
ALFRED BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER makes the finest Custards without Eggs, and at one-half the cost and trouble. Sold by all Chemists, Italian Warehousemen, and Grocers.—Wholesale at BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon Street, London.
In packets, price 6d. and 1s. each.
Manufactory—69, Worcester Street, Birmingham.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W., is now offering an extensive and well-selected Stock of SEAL, SABLE, and other CHOICE FURS, including Russian Seal Jackets, 24 to 28 inches deep, 6 to 10 guineas.
Demi-fitting Seal Paletots, 30 to 36 inches deep, 9 to 20 guineas.
South Sea Seal Jackets, loose shapes, from 2 guineas.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN
MANTLES AND PALETOTS,
Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 2 to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL.
CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.
The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 51s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s.
Patterns and Engravings free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR
WINTER DRESSES,
In every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour,
From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

IN 62 NEW SHADES OF COLOUR.
CACHEMIRE DE PARIS.
This elegant material is all wool, beautifully soft, and richer in its colourings than any article previously introduced, 48 inches wide, 2s. 11d. and 3s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool,
This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

A NEW FABRIC FOR PALETOTS, &c.
POIL DE CHAMEAU (Registered).
This elegant fabric, though very warm, is remarkably light and soft, and can be had in choice shades of Fawn, Drab, Grey, Light Brown, &c. 54 inches wide, from 4s. 9d. per yd.
Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford St., W.

A NEW FABRIC IN BLACK.
CREPE CASHMERE (Registered).
A most useful material in six different designs, full width, 1s. 9d. per yard. Specially adapted for this season's Costumes. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

WHITE, BLACK, AND ALL NEW COLOURS.
VELVET-FINISHED VELVETEENS,
beautifully soft, rich, and very wide.
This charming Fabric can be had in Black, from 2s. 9d. to 5s. 6d. per yard, and in 35 choice shades of colour, at 3s. 9d. per yard. Patterns free
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street,
is now offering a second delivery of New
COLOURED LYONS SILKS.
In this collection will be found White, Cream, Ivory, Tilleul, Moonlight, Corail, Eau de Nil, &c., &c., specially prepared for BRIDAL AND EVENING WEAR,
also every new shade of Bronze, Navy, Claret, Prune, &c., &c., at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 4½d., and 5s. 3d. per yard.
250 Shades to select from. Patterns free on application to
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES OF
BLACK GROS GRAINS.
This extensive purchase comprises Silks of the best and most reliable makes, and are specially recommended. Prices 2s. 6½d., 3s. 3½d., and 3s. 9d. per yard.
Also richer goods from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patterns free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

COLOURED GENOA VELVETS
to match every Silk, short pile, well covered, suitable for Gowns, 6s. 11d. per yard, any length cut. Patterns free.

BLACK GENOA VELVETS,
suited for trimming purposes, 2s. 11d. to 7s. 6d. per yd.
A special purchase of Black Lyons Velvet, all silk, at 9s. 11d. per yard. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

COLOURED SILK COSTUMES
of the latest designs and most fashionable description, in all the new colour Silks, commencing at 6½ guineas.
Patterns of the Silks and Engravings post free.

BLACK SILK COSTUMES,
made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, price with bodice complete, 5½ guineas.
Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London, W.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN
WINTER COSTUMES.
Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas.
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling, Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas.
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses.
Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas.
Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.
THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black), profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train, 1 guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 28s. 9d., with material for bodice.
Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from
PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

WOOLLEN CLOTHS.
Waterproof Tweeds, Matelasse Cloths, Sealskins, Fur Beavers, and other materials for Ladies' Jackets; also every kind of Woollen Goods for Gentlemen's and Boys' wear.
C. MEEKING and CO., Woollen Warehouse,
111 and 112, Hatton Garden, Holborn Circus, London.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 30s., 40s., 45s. half-dozen.

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER-SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk. It will entirely dispense with the ever-shrinking coloured flannel, 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-measure free by post.—FORD and CO., 41 and 44, Poultry, London.

PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,
Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER
or TELEGRAM."
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—
with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required),
without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well
as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY
PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street
OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended.

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. od
Jaubert	at 4s. od.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.
Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk-Trimming Velvets.
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.
A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK.
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,
Costumes in New Black Materials,
in various fashionable Styles,
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 52s 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialité,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9½ guineas.
36 inches long for 11 guineas.
39 inches long for 13 guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
it is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS.
REDUCTION OF PRICES.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
30 inches long, from 8 to 12 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long, from 10 to 15 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
36 inches long, from 12 to 16 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
40 inches long, from 16 to 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
46 inches long, from 20 to 28 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
40 inches long, richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 70 gs.; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 gs.; Skunk, 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

---

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 332, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus). Established Half-a-Century.

THE MOST USEFUL WEDDING PRESENT OR PURCHASE.—The next consignment of TARTHOL and OMRWS' celebrated LINEN WEDDING CHESTS, containing Blankets, Quilts, Sheets, Toilet Covers, Table Linen, ditto Cloths, Towels, &c., &c., complete, will be ready for delivery January 1, 1878.

Orders executed in rotation, and should be sent in as early as possible to prevent disappointment. Prices as usual, six, nine, and twelve guineas. Every article guaranteed. Lists of contents free.
Sole Importers, WILKS BROTHERS, Uttoxeter, Stafford.

LADIES' IRISH ULSTER COATS, made in the best manner by experienced tailors. Immense variety of Irish Frieres and other fashionable materials. Patterns and forms for self-measurement post free.
RICHARD ALLEN, Sackville Street, Dublin.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW AUTUMN DRESS GOODS.
1,000 New Patterns of the choicest Shades and designs, the productions of various European nations.
7,000 yards of Autumn Serge, 10½d. the yard.
Yachting Serges, 6¾d. and 10½d. the yard.
Autumn Beges, 8¾d. the yard.
Matelasse Serge, 1s. 3½d. (Sage, Olive Green, &c.)
Estamene Serges, 1s 3½d and 1s. 6½d.
Homespun Estamene, 1s. 6½d., 27 in. wide.
New Snowflakes, Camel's Hair, and Vicuna Cloths.
Shetland Estamene, 27 in. wide, 1s 4½d. the yard.
Poil da Chameau, French production, all wool, 20 in. wide, 1s. 9½d. the yard.
The Royal Blue Naval Serge, 1s. 0½d. (all wool).
The "Inflexible" Serge, 1s. 0½d. and 2s. 4½d
The "Princess" Serge, 1s. 6½d. and 1s 11½d yard.
The New Circassian Cord, 11½d. yd., superb colours.
Scarboro' Twill, 1s. 0½d.; Derby Matelasse, 1s. 0½d.; New Autumn Rink Skirting, 1s 11½d. the yard, 40 in wide; Indian Cashmere, Autumn Shades, 48 in. wide, 2s. 11½d. yard.
These and other Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW SILK PATTERNS are now ready.

The Princess Black Silk, 3s. 9d.	A New Make of Extreme Richness
The Princess Black Silk, 4s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 5s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 6s. 9d.

BLACK SILKS, 1s. 6½d. to 10s. the yard.

The Queen's Black Silk, 7s. 11d.	Superb Goods & Splendid Wear.
The Queen's Black Silk, 8s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 9s 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 10s. 11d.

A special parcel of Coloured Silks, 2s. 11½d. yard.
Coloured Gro Grain Silks, 3s. 11½d., 4s. 11d., 5s. 11d., and 6s 11d. the yard. Floral Silks for Trimmings, 3s. 9½d. Japanese Figures, 1s. 3½d.
A Special Lot Black Velveteens, 1s. 11½d., and Colours, at 1s. 10½d. yard. Patterns free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.
Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 2s. 3½d. Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s 11½d. Double-width Melton Cloths, 1s. 6½d., 1s 11½d., and 2s 11½d.
Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s 11d. to 6s. 11d.
Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d. Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard. All Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
GRAND EXHIBITION OF COSTUMES.
At the Grand Autumn Exhibition and Costume Contest just concluded at the Alexandra Palace we exhibited upwards of Fifty very superior Ladies' and Children's French Model Costumes, and many new things in Mantles, Jackets, Bonnets, &c., which obtained 25 prizes and many honourable mentions for style and cheapness.
Patterns of Material, Photographs, Instructions for Self-Measurement, and other particulars, sent post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street.

HENRY GLAVE'S
UNDERCLOTHING and OUTFITTING.
A new Illustrated Price List is now ready, and can be sent free to any address; also Photographs of the New Exhibition Prize Setts, Collars, and Collarettes.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP of
GASK and GASK.
SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK of
SILK MERCERY, GENERAL DRAPERY, &c.
ALL NEW FOR THIS SEASON.

GREAT REDUCTIONS in PRICES have been made throughout, and all articles marked in plain figures at the lowest prices for READY MONEY ONLY.

SILKS and VELVETS of all kinds, cheaper than they have ever been sold.

BONNET'S and PONSON'S CELEBRATED BLACK SILKS, greatly reduced in price.

COSTUMES.—Perhaps the largest and best Stock of New Costumes in London. Paris Models in Silk, Silk and Velvet, Silk and Cachemire, new Silkan and Woollen Fabrics, &c., all now marked exceedingly cheap.

EVENING COSTUMES in Tulle, Net, Tarlatan, &c.; beautiful new designs, all equally cheap, commencing at 15s. 9d. each.

MANTLES, PALETOTS, JACKETS.—All the vast collection, new for this season, of Paris Mantles, &c., in Cloth, Vigognes, Camel's Hair, Matelassé, Velvet, fur-lined Cachemires and Silks, Sealskins, Ulsters, &c., has been re-marked at exceptionally low prices.

DRESS FABRICS.—A great collection of all the newest materials, Foreign and English, all marked at the reduced prices.

Gloves, Hosiery, Linen Goods, Blankets, Flannels, Calicoes, Lace Goods, Ties, Scarves, Fichus, Ribbons, Trimmings, Umbrellas, Ladies' Underclothing, Millinery, Mourning Goods of all kinds, &c.

All purchasers must effect a considerable saving during this Sale. Patterns free to the country.

The doors are opened each morning at ten o'clock.
58 to 63, Oxford Street; 1 to 5, Wells Street, London.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)
BOYS' SUITS.
SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.,
IMPORTERS.
TURKEY CARPETS.
PERSIAN CARPETS.
INDIAN CARPETS.
35 and 36, OLD BOND STREET.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY	"THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."

Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS.
1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire)

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.— Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality.

CHRISTMAS CASES, One Guinea, containing 3 Bottles of Port, 3 Sherry, 1 Gin, 1 Rum, 1 Whiskey, 1 Brandy, 1 lb. Tea. All reputed quart bottles, warranted pure and genuine. Sent bottles, case, and carriage free, to any Railway Station in England, by the VICTORIA WINE CO., 12, Mark Lane. P.O.O. to W. W. HUGHES.

WILLS' "BRISTOL MIXTURE"
MILD AND FRAGRANT.
WILLS' "SMOKING MIXTURE,"
A CHOICE COMBINATION OF "FIRST GROWTHS."
Sold everywhere in One, Two, and Four Ounce Packets, protected by our Name and Trade Mark, W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the finest purifiers of the blood. They speedily correct all disorders of the liver and stomach, are invaluable in cases of dysentery, and as a general family medicine have no equal.

PHOTOGRAPHS and VIGNETTES beautifully coloured for 2s.
Mrs. RUSSELL, 30, Seafield, West Brighton.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependance can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 82, Southwark St., London.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.

The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."

Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

GOUT and RHEUMATISM.—The excruciating pain of gout or rheumatism is quickly relieved and cured in a few days by that celebrated medicine, BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.

They require no restraint of diet during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part.

Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

CONSUMPTION! CONSUMPTION! SILPHIUM CYRENAICUM (the celebrated plant of the Ancients) has now been acknowledged by the principal celebrities of the French faculty to be the only cure for Consumption, and all affections of the Pulmonary Organs, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c., &c. Its effect is magical, and the cure certain. To be obtained from all Chemists, with pamphlets, full instructions, &c. Wholesale from London Patent Medicine houses.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

TOOTH-ACHE.
INSTANT CURE.
FORMS A STOPPING.
SAVES THE TOOTH.
J. Hounsell, Esq., Surgeon, Bridport, writes—"I consider Bunter's Nervine a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief."
Of all chemists, at 1s. 1½d. per packet.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA. The best Remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and safest aperient for delicate constitutions, ladies, and children. Of all Chemists.

THOMPSON AND CAPPER'S
DENTIFRICE WATER
Arrests Decay in the Teeth and Sweetens the Breath.
55, Bold Street, Liverpool. Sold in 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Bottles, by all Chemists.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S EMACERATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, S.W.; or through any Chemist

---

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"I recommend them as a safe and effectual remedy for coughs and chest complaints."—G. Wood, 60, City Road, Hulme, Manchester. Price 1s. 1½d. per box.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
The purest Oil, and by Almond flavouring rendered palatable and easy of digestion.
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.

Lancet.—"The natural nauseous taste of the Oil is disguised with considerable art."

British Medical Journal.—"Whilst securing the beneficial results traceable to Cod Liver Oil, we have found no difficulty in inducing our little patients to take it."

Sanitary Record.—"We have tried its effect on the most delicate constitutions with marked results."

Medical Times.—"The taste is decidedly masked by the almond flavouring."

Medical Press.—"Has an agreeable smell and flavour, and we can testify that the result is satisfactory."

Medical Record.—"It may be confidently recommended."

Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.

Retail of all Chemists and Druggists, and Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited), Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.—A neat Perfume Case, registered by E. RIMMEL, of 96, Strand, London, on sale (price 1s.), at the principal Perfumery Stores

---

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877.
A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London.
All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers

---

ROWLAND'S ODONTO.
Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE & LUBIN's SWEET SCENTS —Opoponax, Jockey Club, Patchouly, Frangipanni, Kiss-me-Quick, White Rose, and 1,000 others from every flower that breathes a fragrance, 2s. 6d. each, 3 bottles in a case, 7s. The above sweet scents in sachet powder, 1s. 6d. each, can be forwarded by post. Sold by fashionable Druggists and Perfumers in all parts of the world.

PIESSE and LUBIN's PESTACHIO NUT SKIN AND COMPLEXION POWDER imparts a natural whiteness and youthful delicacy to the skin attainable by no other means; also represses the unpleasantness of too copious perspiration.—2, New Bond Street, London, W. May be had of all the fashionable perfumers and druggists throughout the earth. In boxes, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.

GOLDEN HAIR.—Robare's Aureoline produces, by two or three applications, the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. of all perfumers and chymists. Wholesale, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough Street, W., and 93 and 95, City Road, E.C., London; Pinaud and Meyer, Boul. de Strasbourg, 37, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; and Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

NUDA VERITAS.—Grey Hair restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

HAIR DESTROYER.—248, High Hol-born, London.—ALEX. ROSS's DEPILATORY removes superfluous hair from face and arms without injury. 3s. 6d. Sent post free, carefully packed, for 54 stamps by Alex. Ross.

THE NOSE MACHINE applied to the nose for an hour daily so directs the soft cartilage of the nose that an ill-formed one is quickly shaped, 10s. 6d. Sent for stamps.—ALEX. ROSS, 248, High Holborn, London.

ESTABLISHED
1832.
NONE
GENUINE
EXCEPT IN PINK PAPER
WRAPPERS.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

AMONG THE CULTIVATED AND REFINED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, THIS RENOWNED PREPARATION IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED FAVOURITE WITH BOTH SEXES. OVER FORTY YEARS' TRIAL AND EXPERIENCE HAVE ESTABLISHED ITS SUPERIORITY AND EXCELLENCE.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

IT CANNOT FAIL TO RESTORE GREY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. WHEN THE HAIR TURNS GREY, LOSES ITS LUSTRE, AND FALLS OUT, IT SIMPLY REQUIRES NOURISHMENT. MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER, BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION, STRENGTHENS AND INVIGORATES THE HAIR, AND, BY THE OPERATION OF NATURAL CAUSES, GREY OR WHITE HAIR IS QUICKLY RESTORED TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. IT WILL STOP ITS FALLING, AND INDUCE A HEALTHY AND MOST LUXURIANT GROWTH. USE NO OTHER PREPARATION WITH IT, NOT EVEN OIL OR POMADE, OR ZYLO-BALSAMUM.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
IS THE BEST
TO RESTORE GREY HAIR.

BECAUSE IT IS MADE FROM THE CHOICEST MATERIALS, AND PREPARED WITH THE UTMOST CARE AND SKILL. OVER FORTY YEARS THE FAVOURITE PREPARATION. ENJOYING BY FAR THE LARGEST SALE, IT MUST BE THE BEST. IT DOES NOT DYE THE HAIR, BUT STRENGTHENS IT. GREY HAIRS SOON DISAPPEAR. BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION THE ROOTS ARE STRENGTHENED, THE SOFT AND SILKY TEXTURE OF HEALTHY HAIR FOLLOWS ITS USE.

Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Articles.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN
manufactures two entirely
distinct Preparations for the Hair.
One or the other is suited to every condition
of the Human Hair. Both are never required at one time. For details as to each Preparation, kindly read above and below this paragraph. Readers can easily determine which of the two they require. These Preparations have a world-wide reputation. Enormous and increasing sale through Forty Years.
Every Chemist and Dealer in
Toilet Articles has both
Preparations.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
ZYLO-BALSAMUM.
For the Growth and Preservation
of the Hair.
It is a cooling, vegetable, and transparent liquid,
without sediment

A SIMPLE TONIC AND DRESSING OF INESTIMABLE VALUE TO BOTH SEXES. THE FAVOURITE WITH THE YOUNG AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE NO GREY HAIR. IT WILL NOT CHANGE THE COLOUR OF THE HAIR, BUT, BY EARLY USE, IT WILL PREVENT IT TURNING GREY. PREMATURE LOSS OF THE HAIR, SO COMMON IN THESE DAYS, MAY BE ENTIRELY PREVENTED BY THE USE OF ZYLO-BALSAMUM. PROMPT RELIEF IN THOUSANDS OF CASES HAS BEEN AFFORDED WHERE THE HAIR HAS BEEN COMING OUT IN HANDFULS. IT PROMOTES A HEALTHY AND VIGOROUS GROWTH. HAIR DRESSED WITH ZYLO-BALSAMUM IS ALWAYS CLEAN, FREE FROM DANDRUFF, AND WITH THAT BEAUTIFUL GLOSS ONLY SEEN IN HEALTHY HAIR. IT IS DELIGHTFULLY FRAGRANT. NO OIL OR POMADE SHOULD BE USED WITH IT.

CAUTION!—The Genuine only in Bluish Grey Wrappers.
Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Article

---

THE FAVOURITE TOILET WATER OF THE AGE.
GOLDEN STAR
BAY LEAF WATER,
TRIPLE DISTILLED FROM THE FRESH LEAVES
of the BAY TREE (Myrcia Acris),
FOR THE TOILET, NURSERY, AND BATH.

A
Toilet Water
of peculiar and delightful fragrance,
delicate and lasting,
refreshing and soothing.
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,
triple distilled from the fresh leaves of
the Bay Tree (Myrcia Acris) Indispensable
and a luxury for the TOILET, NURSERY, and BATH.
A few drops on a Sponge or Towel moistened with water, and the FACE and HANDS bathed with it, is very beneficial to the skin, removing all roughness. Most highly recommended to apply after SHAVING. A small quantity in the HAIR gives a delightful aroma, and it has most remarkable CLEANSING PROPERTIES. Particularly adapted to the BATHING OF INFANTS and young children; a few drops are sufficient for a basin of water. Most grateful to INVALIDS and all who suffer from HEADACHE, from mental labour or fatigue. Buy only the genuine
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,
sold in three sizes Toilet Bottles,
2s. 6d., 5s., 8s., by Chemists
and Perfumers, or on receipt of stamps from the wholesale depôt, 114 & 116,
Southampton Row,
London.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES in PIANOFORTES.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE. Compass 5 Octaves, 15 gs., or £1 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL PIANINOS. From Canadian Walnut, 20 gs., or 2 gs. per qr. on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS, 30 gs., or £3 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR PIANINO, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL, 40 gs., or £4 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL, 45 gs., or £4 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S FOREIGN MODEL, 50 gs., or £5 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH OBLIQUE, 55 gs., or £5 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S OBLIQUE GRAND, 70 gs., or £7 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE, 90 gs., or £9 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND, 80 gs., or £8 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR IRON GRAND, 110 guineas, or £11 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED VARIETIES on VIEW.

MAY BE HAD OF ALL PIANO-FORTE DEALERS throughout the United Kingdom.

SHOW-ROOMS, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

STEAM FACTORY, CHALK FARM ROAD, N.W.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. Price 2s.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAU-TIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s. (Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.)

LIEDER OHNE WORTE. Eight Books. The only complete edition. Cloth, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS, NEW AND OLD. Edited by the Rev. H. R. BRAMLEY and Dr. STAINER. With 45 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Elegantly bound, 7s. 6d.

THE SUNLIGHT OF SONG. Sacred and Moral Songs, with Original Music by the most eminent English Composers. With 46 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

NATIONAL NURSERY RHYMES. Set to Music by J. W. ELLIOTT. With 65 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 21s.; octavo, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.; octavo, paper covers, 5s.

MOZART'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 18s.

MENDELSSOHN'S LIEDER OHNE WORTE. The best and only Complete Edition, containing the Seventh and Eighth Books. Folio, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 12s.; octavo, handsomely bound, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

 Order Novello's Edition.

RUBINSTEIN'S EIGHTEEN TWO-PART SONGS. German and English Words. Octavo, handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM. English and German Words. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM FOR YOUNG PIANISTS (Op. 68 and Op. 15). Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM. Original German Words, and an English Version by JOHN OXENFORD. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. Edited by Dr. STAINER and W. A. BARRETT. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 16s.

MUSICAL MYTHS AND FACTS. By CARL ENGEL. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s.

LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.,
1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO. Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps. Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

NO. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.
SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Gräfenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancee Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

STOLEN KISSES WALTZ. By HANS WALDENFELDT. Free, 2s.—WOOD & CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street. "Sweetly played, universally admired, and, having established itself as one of the most popular waltzes of the season, no programme will be complete without it."

ESTEY AMERICAN ORGANS, cheapest and best for quality, &c. LOW PRICES FOR CASH, or by monthly payments (in London and Suburbs only). Lists on application.—J. A. MILLS, 60, Moorgate Street, E.C.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATA-LOGUES of MUSIC.
Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3. HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4. VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.
Sent gratis and post free to any part of the World.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

POPULAR CLASSICS.—A series of sterling compositions for the Pianoforte Solo. Selected, edited, and fingered by WALTER MACFARREN. Sixty Numbers, price from 2s. to 5s. each. The series contains some of the most celebrated and beautiful works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Steibelt, Dussek, Hummel, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, &c. Detailed Lists forwarded gratis post free to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

Figaro. Fantasia on Mozart's Opera	4	0
Cynthia. Serenade	4	0
Souvenir de Bal	4	0
Air Danois	4	0

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FLYING DUTCHMAN. A most successful and effective piece on the melodies in Wagner's grand opera. Price 4s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S "EN ROUTE."— A grand brilliant Military March. Played by the composer at his recitals with enormous success. Price 4s., duet, 5s.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

CARE IS ALL FIDDLE-DE-DEE. A merry Christmas Song with Chorus (from the Extravaganza "The Miller and His Man"). Words by F. C. BURNAND; Music by ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

KING CHRISTMAS. J. L. HATTON'S celebrated Song. The popularity of this capital baritone Song is ever on the increase. Price 3s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

STANDARD VOCAL PART MUSIC.
THE SINGER'S LIBRARY.
An Unequalled Collection of
VOCAL CONCERTED MUSIC, TRIOS, QUARTETS, QUINTETS, &c.
Sacred and Secular, by the most renowned Composers, English and Foreign.
Edited by JOHN HULLAH.
Upwards of 150 Numbers. Price Twopence each.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

THE GLEE and CHORAL LIBRARY.
A COLLECTION OF STANDARD and Well-known VOCAL COMPOSITIONS,
As well as recent works by Macfarren, Hatton, Leslie, Balfe, &c.
Eighty Numbers. Price Twopence each.
Catalogues gratis and post free to any part of the world.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER'S PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS.—A COMPLETE CATALOGUE is NOW READY, and will be sent on application, gratis and post free, to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST. ALL MUSIC POST FREE AT HALF-PRICE.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."
LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.
OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.
Now Ready.
QUADRILLES by ARBAN. Solo and Duet, 2s. each.
SUITE DE VALSES by O. METRA. Solo and duet 2s. each.
POLKA, by ARBAN. 1s. 6d.
POLKA MAZURKA. 1s. 6d.
QUADRILLES by O. METRA. Solo or duet, 2s. each.
Also in the Press.
PIECES by BRINLEY RICHARDS and W. KUHE.
VOCAL SCORE in English and French Words.
BRILLIANT FANTASIA by E. MONIOT. Price 1s. 6d.
COMPLETE OPERA PIANO SOLO. Price 2s. 6d. net.
SELECTIONS OF AIRS IN TWO BOOKS by CRAMER. 3s. each.

N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

SIR MICHAEL COSTA'S NAAMAN.
Vocal Score, complete, Octavo Edition. 4s. net.
Do. do. bound in cloth. 6s. net.
All the numbers of "Naaman" can also be had separately, including the celebrated Aria, "I Dreamt I was in Heaven," 3s.; and the Triumphal March, "Naaman," as Piano Solo, 3s. Piano Duet, 3s.; and also as Organ Solo, with Pedal, 3s.

SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT'S WORKS for the PIANOFORTE, in two vols. Cheap Edition now ready, including the celebrated Toccato Scherzo, Op. 13; Capriccio, Op. 27; Three Sketches, &c. Price 6s. net each vol.; or, bound, cloth, 8s. net.

PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS. By SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT.
NEW EDITION CAREFULLY FINGERED, &c.

Capriccio. Op. 2.
The Lake. Op. 10, No. 1.
The Millstream. Op. 10. No. 2.
The Fountain. Op. 10. No. 3.
Three Musical Sketches. Complete.
Allegro con Precisione. Op. 11. No. 1.
Moderato Grazioso. Op. 11. No. 2.
Allegro Brillante. Op. 11. No. 3.
Vivace Giocoso. Op. 11. No. 4.
Andante Capriccioso. Op. 11. No. 5.
Allegro Agitato. Op. 11. No. 6.
Six Studies. Complete.
Andante Expressivo. Op. 12 No. 1.
Grazioso. Op. 12. No. 2.
Presto. Op. 12. No. 3.
Three Impromptus. Complete.
Serenata. From Op. 13.
Scherzo. From Op. 13.
Sonata.
Allegro Grazioso. Op. 18.
Caprice. Op. 22.
Presto Leggiero. Op. 24. No. 1
Capricciosa. Op. 24. No. 2.
Agitato Assai. Op. 24. No. 3.
Alla Fantasia. Op. 24. No. 4.
Presto Agitato. Op. 24. No. 5.
Lento-Allegro con Bravura. Op. 24. No. 6
Suite de Pieces. Op. 24. Complete.
Rondo Piacevole. Op. 25.
Scherzo. Op. 27.
Introduzione e Pastorale. Op. 28. No 1.
Rondino. Op. 28. No. 2.
Capriccio. Op. 28. No. 3.
L'Amabile. Op. 29. No. 1.
L'Appassionata. Op. 29. No. 2.
Two Characteristic Studies. Op. 29.
Tema e Variazioni. Op. 31.
Pastriste Pas Gal. Op. 34.
Rondeau à la Polonaise. Op. 37.
Toccata. Op. 38.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S NEW PIECES.
PRES DU LAC (Meditation), artistically illustrated. Price 2s net.
UN BIJOU PERDU, artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
BERCEUSE. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LES VIEUX TEMPS. Gavotte. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LA PRINCESSE. Gavotte moderne. 1s. 6d. net.
TRANSCRIPTIO BRILLANTE (Braham). As played by Madame Arabella Goddard). 2s. 6d. net.

A BOON TO YOUNG PIANISTS.
A. GRENVILLE'S LA PRINCESSE. Price 1s. 3d. net.
A. GRENVILLE'S AIR DE BALLET. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S BELLONA POLKA MAZURKA. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMELL'S CHASSE GALOP. Price 1s. 3d. net.
J. RUMMEL'S LUCY VALSE. Price 1s. 3d. net.
PETITE COQUETTE POLKA. Price 1s. 3d. net.

CATALOGUES GRATIS and POST FREE.
Shipping Orders on most favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

THE ILLUSTRATED SONGS OF SCOTLAND. BOOSEY and CO. beg to announce a new and very superb edition of the Songs of Scotland, containing twelve full-page illustrations by

Frank Dicksee.	A. Hunt.
J. MacWhirter.	P. Skelton.
W. Small.	E. B. Leighton.

The book contains 190 songs, the music edited by J. Pittman and Colin Brown, the words revised (with notes) by Charles Mackay. The Illustrated Songs of Scotland are printed in one volume, imperial 8vo, very beautifully bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d. Ready on the 10th inst.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

NANCY LEE WALTZ. On the Cele-brated Song. The Waltz of the Season. Price 2s. net. Solo and Duet; Septet, 1s.; Orchestra, 2s.

NANCY LEE GALOP. By Frewin. On Adams' Popular Ballad. 2s. net. [This day.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

F. H. COWEN.—AT LAST.—Miss ANNA WILLIAMS will Sing AT LAST in the following Towns:—Sheffield, November 19; Leamington, 20; Cheltenham, 21; Brighton, 22; Southsea, 23; Hastings, 24; Rochester, 25; Warrington, 27; Leicester, 28; Wolverhampton, 30; Bolton, Dec. 1; Southport, 3; Liverpool, 4; Worcester, 6; Preston, 7; Glasgow, 8; Dundee, 10; Newcastle, 11; Birkenhead, 12; and Hull, 14.

F. H. COWEN. — THE BETTER LAND.—A new setting of Mrs. Hemans' celebrated words, to be Sung for the first time by Madame ANTOINETTE STERLING at the first Ballad Concert. Price 2s. net.

STEPHEN ADAMS. — THE TAR'S FAREWELL.—Mr. SANTLEY will sing a New Song by the composer of "Nancy Lee," THE TAR'S FAREWELL (the Words by F. C. BURNAND) at the second Ballad Concert, November 28. Price 2s. net.

STEPHEN ADAMS.—YOUTH AND AGE.—Mr. MAYBRICK will Sing this New Ballad by the Composer of "Nancy Lee" at the first Ballad Concert, November 21st. Price 2s. net.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRU-MENTS FOR AMATEURS.
THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.

The above instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co. at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

THE HOLY FAMILY. Sacred Melo-dies. Arranged by W. H. CALLCOTT for the Pianoforte. Solos complete in 12 books, 5s. each; duets, 6s. each; ad lib. accompaniments for flute, violin, and violoncello, 1s. each. Each book free at half-price in stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

MUSIC.—Just issued, gratis and postage free, a CATALOGUE of more than Five Hundred Popular Publications for the Pianoforte, by BRINLEY RICHARDS and GEORGE FREDERICK WEST.—Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

CONCERTS, PENNY READINGS, &c.—POPULAR SONGS, VOCAL DUETS, TRIOS, and QUARTETS (part songs), selected from Messrs. ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S CATALOGUE. This list may be had, gratis and post free, on application at New Burlington Street.

THE SOLDIER'S DREAM: a Descrip-tive Fantasia for the Pianoforte. By J. PRIDHAM. Illustrated Title 4s., post free 24 stamps.
THE SAILOR'S DREAM: a Descriptive Fantasia for the Pianoforte. By J. PRIDHAM. Illustrated Title. 4s., post free 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE LOOK-OUT QUADRILLE, for the Pianoforte, composed by COTSFORD DICK, 4s. (quite equal to the popular Osborne Quadrilles). Also by the same composer, "A SINGING QUADRILLE," 4s., and "L'Eclair Galop," 3s. (all with illustrated titles), post free at half-price.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE ECHO OF LUCERNE. For Piano. By BRINLEY RICHARDS. 4s. "Mr. Richards has introduced it (the echo) with marvellous effect. All will admire the perfect taste, &c., and thank the skilful arranger for those notes."—Swansea Herald. Half price, free by post in stamps.—London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street: and of all Musicsellers.

HALF-HOURS WITH THE ORA-TORIOS, and other Sacred Compositions. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by GEORGE FREDERICK WEST (elegantly illustrated Titles). Six Books, 4s. each; all at half-price, post free.—London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

JULIETTE.—NEW WALTZ by La-MOTHE. Played at Arditi's Promenade Concerts. One of the prettiest of Lamothe's waltzes; full of melody, and easy to play. Post free for 2s.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street, London, and of all musicsellers in town and country.

LOVED AND LOST (Geliebt und Ver-loren) WALTZES, by OTTO MULLER (performed at the Promenade Concerts, Theatre Royal, Covent Garden). These Celebrated WALTZES may be had of all Musicsellers. Solo or Duet, 2s. net.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

DUFF and STEWART'S DANCE ALBUM, containing Under the Mistletoe, Quadrille, C. Godfrey; Fontainebleau, Valse, G. Lamothe; Christmas Tree Polka, H. Farmer; Old English Lancers, C. Marriott; Welcome Home, Galop, C. Godfrey; Croquet Schottische, C. Marriott; Esmeralda Valse, C. Godfrey; Caledonians, C. Coote; Beatrice, Polka Mazurka, J. T. Trekell; English, Scotch, and Irish National Dances. One Shilling.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street, and all Musicsellers.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.
All for Her. No. 1 sop., No. 2 contralto. A. S. Gatty.
Maiden May. Two keys. A. S. Gatty. Sung by Madame Cave-Ashton.
Before the Storm. Baritone. A. S. Gatty.
Meha. No. 1 tenor, No. 2 baritone. V. Capoul. Sung by M. Capoul.
Be My Love. Baritone. G. Fox.
My Star. No. 1, contralto, No. 2 mezzo-sop. Julia Wolff.
Little Nannie. Soprano. Julia Wolff. Sung by Mrs. Osgood.
The Trooper's Dream. Baritone. Julia Wolff.
Post free 24 stamps each.
ENOCH and SONS, 19, Holles Street, W.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 56, Cheapside, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.
BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 40, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

NOTICE.—CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICES.—Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have completed arrangements at the Works, affording greatly increased facilities for producing this speciality, and hope to keep pace with the demand which they have hitherto been unable to do. Customers can now be supplied with any of the colours direct from stock.—OETZMANN and CO., Complete House Furnishers, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road. Descriptive Price Lists post free.

NOTICE.—THE NEW IRIDESCENT GLASS. This beautiful Prismatic Glass can now be obtained at OETZMANN & CO.'S in a great variety of articles, useful and ornamental. Also the best quality in DE DE BASTIE'S Toughened Glass. OETZMANN & CO., Complete House Furnishers, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZ-MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PRE-MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.
OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DE-PARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, handsomely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in rich Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk and Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites, from 12 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas; solid Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best Marone Leather, 14 guineas; Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 15s.; handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'s FIVE GUINEA NONPAREIL BEDSTEAD and BEDDING is a marvel of quality and economy combined—consists of a 4 ft. 6 in. wide handsome Brass and Iron French Bedstead, one of O. and Co.'s patent Pallio Mattresses, and a good Wool Upper Mattress, good Feather Bolster, and two Pillows. Every one about to furnish should see this excellent set on view in the Show Rooms. Also to suit the above, two fine Linen Sheets, one ditto Bolster-case, two ditto Pillow-cases, three superior quality Blankets, and handsome white Marsella Quilt, for 78s. 6d. the set.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN'S Patent Pallio Mattress supersedes the use of the old rigid Palliasse; is more cleanly, healthy, and elastic; combines the advantages of a Mattress and Palliasse at the cost of one article. Price from 16s. 9d. upwards. See page 123 in "A Guide to House Furnishing," sent post free on application.—OETZMANN and CO.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPET DEPARTMENT. — Stout Tapestry Brussels Carpet, 1s. 9½d.; handsome pattern ditto, from 2s. 3d. to 2s. 9d. per yard; superior Brussels, new designs, from 2s. 11d. upwards. These prices are much below value. Kidderminster Carpet, all wool, 1s. 11d. per yard; Patent Felt Carpeting, from 11½d. per yard; Superior Rock Dye ditto, handsome designs, double width, 1s. 11d. per yard; excellent Stair Carpet, from 6d. per yard; Best Quality, all Wool, ditto, 1s. per yard.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

ELEGANT TAPESTRY CRETONNE CURTAINS, in various choice designs, adapted for drawing-rooms, dining-rooms, parlours, bedrooms, &c., lined throughout with the new Cretonne lining, and bound all round with best silk Paris lace or Cretonne binding, 3 yards long by 30 inches wide, 10s. 6d. per pair; ditto, 45 inches wide, 15s.; ditto, 3½ yards long by 45 inches wide, 17s. 6d. Also every description of materials used for curtains. One of the largest and best assortments in London to select from.

BOMBAY STRIPED CURTAINS.— The cheapest Curtains extant. Effective style, 3 yards long by 46 inches wide, 9s. 9d. per pair; 3½ yards, 11s. 9d.; 4 yards, 13s. 9d. Patterns on application.

KITCHEN REQUISITES.—OETZ-MANN and CO.'S TEN POUND SET (List No. 24, page 231, in their "GUIDE TO HOUSE FURNISHING," sent post free on application), includes Tables, Chairs, Clock, &c., with the various culinary utensils and requisites, contains all the most useful articles required in every kitchen, each being of superior quality, and is the most practical selection extant.—OETZMANN and CO.

CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICE.— OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGN, a beautiful Grecian shape, meets the great desideratum of art manufactures—viz., the shape best adapted for purposes of use required, combined with the most artistic design and decoration. Prices from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive Price List post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

POSTAL ORDER DEPARTMENT.— OETZMANN and CO.—ORDERS sent per POST, whether large or small, receive prompt and careful attention. Those residing at a distance, or any to whom a personal visit would be inconvenient, desirous of leaving the selection to the Firm, may rely upon a faithful attention to their wishes and interest in the selection. This Department is personally supervised by a member of the Firm. For further particulars please see page 287 in Catalogue, sent free on application

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—NOVEMBER 17, 1877.

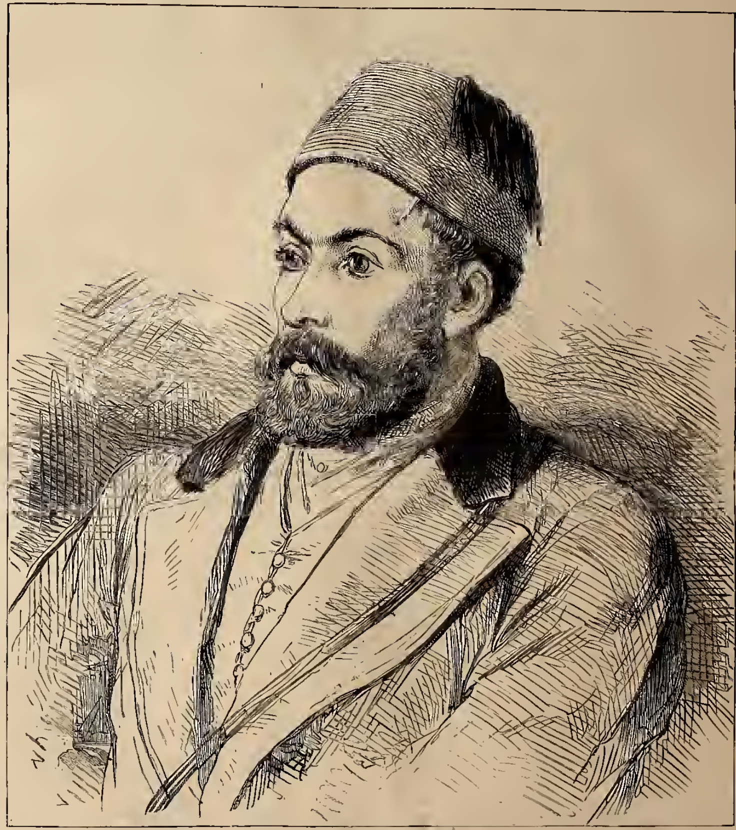
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 417
Regd at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



His Excellency
Osman Pasha sketched from life in his tent Septr. 21st 1877
by Victor Lorie

Topics of the Week

England and the Dardanelles.——Since the fall of Kars there has been a large amount of speculation as to the possibilities of peace, and journals have been laying down the terms which will be offered by the Czar as if they were admitted to his most secret counsels. Some critics go so far as to say that he will require the Dardanelles to be opened to the war ships of Russia and Turkey alone. This may be dismissed as absurd, since England could never submit to a provision that would so seriously imperil her interests; but there can be no doubt that if the fortune of the war continues on the side of Russia there will be a demand that the Straits shall be no longer closed. Holy Russia, in proclaiming war, would not allow that she was moved by other than noble impulses; but lofty protestations and grasping ambition are not in her case incompatible. Will this country object to the fulfilment of her design? We observe that some of the Ministerial papers assert in positive terms that the Government will resist the scheme to the uttermost; but no member of the Cabinet has ever declared that we should fight to keep the Straits closed. In his famous despatch at the outbreak of war Lord Derby said no more than that we could not regard with indifference any proposal to alter existing arrangements. The probability is, then, that if no further difficulty occurred, England would quietly submit to this particular change being effected. Mr. Bright would be delighted at this result; but it would involve consequences of considerable importance to the British taxpayer, seeing that the Mediterranean fleet would at once have to be largely strengthened. For our part, we see no sort of reasonable claim that can be put forth on behalf of Russia. She can have no lawful occasion for a powerful force in Southern waters, and Turkey has quite as much right to object to the fleets of her enemy freely passing Stamboul as we should have to the fleet of an enemy anchoring in the Thames.

Foreign Competition and Free Trade.——There is an uneasy feeling abroad, which is not altogether unjustified, that the doctrines of Free Trade are not regarded in this country with such unquestioning complacency as they used to be. The truth is that hitherto we have never had an opportunity of impartially testing the effects of Free Trade. When Free Trade was definitively established in this country thirty years ago, we were, in matters of material progress, a century ahead of the rest of Europe. This was partly due to our political institutions, partly to our untiring industry, partly to the happy juxtaposition of our coal and iron; but, chiefly of all, to our prolonged immunity from invasion and domestic strife. Consequently, it was our aim in 1846 to import all necessary raw materials (food especially) as cheaply as possible, in order that we might spin, and weave, and forge for the whole Continent. This was Mr. Cobden's idea of the mission of England, namely, that her surface should be thickly dotted over with cotton mills and foundries, and that she should supply the Continent with unlimited calicoes and edge-tools. Gradually, however, the Continent began to join in the industrial race, and now there are several nations which are pretty well abreast of us. Hence some people are beginning to say, "Free Trade, like early rising, may be quite right in theory, but it may be very unpleasant in practice," and they proceed to doubt whether they should believe in it so thoroughly if some of our staple industries were in actual danger of being swamped by foreign competition. Then, again, example counts for a good deal. When the word "Protection" merely conjured up the image of a top-booted farmer or a haughty "haristocrat," the town artisan scorned the name, but now that he finds his fellow Democrats in Australia and America are rabid Protectionists, he begins to think there may be some sense in the belief. The doctrines of Trades Unionism, again, with which the working classes are largely imbued, are completely hostile to Free Trade. Believing, as we do, that the world would be more prosperous if every Custom House were removed, it is melancholy to reflect that there are few staunch upholders of Free Trade except in England, and that most of our own Free Traders belong to the middle and upper classes.

Marshal MacMahon and the Republicans.——Although the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues have resigned, the situation in France has by no means improved during the present week. The Marshal seems resolved not to alter his policy; and by the vote of Monday the Senate distinctly indicated its willingness to support him. It was hoped that the fear of losing their seats would deter the Constitutionalists from openly opposing the Republicans; but the Duc de Broglie managed with his usual adroitness to fill them with terror of Radicalism, and once more they submissively followed his lead. The result is that Marshal MacMahon supposes he has a perfect right to neglect the will of the Chamber of Deputies. If we may believe the République Française, the Republicans will respond by refusing to vote the Supplies. This will be a very unpopular measure among the large class whose comfort it will affect; but France elected the present majority for the express purpose of establishing the Republic, and they have no right to shrink from any means that may be necessary for realising the political ideal of the country. If the Supplies are stopped, a conflict more or less violent cannot be avoided, for the proposal to dissolve would undoubtedly meet with vehement opposition from the Left. The suggestion of a coup d'état, which had become highly improbable last week, has been much talked of even by cautious observers within the past few days. It is to be feared that the only consideration which makes the Marshal hesitate is a doubt whether he can be sure of the army. He is so much in the power of the reactionary party, which knows it is now playing its last card, that all higher arguments appear to have lost their influence over him. Fortunately this is an argument of immense weight. Republican opinions never were more common in the army; and he himself excites no enthusiasm. The hope of the Republicans, therefore, is that if a coup d'état is attempted it will not only fail, but involve in its failure the complete and final triumph of the popular side.

Street Rowdyism.——Continental rows are much more bloody than English rows. They use bullets and bayonets where we are content to use sticks and stones and fists. A Continental mob (at all events among the Latin races) is far more savage and dangerous than an English mob. But then rows on the Continent are rare, and they are almost always connected with religion or politics. The idea of making a row for the sake of a row is quite foreign to the Continental mind, and there is probably more rowdyism between sunset and sunrise in a large English city than in all the cities of the Continent put together. There is among our countrymen a fondness for rough horse-play and larking which is by no means altogether to be discouraged if kept within due bounds—for it is closely allied to important qualities which have largely contributed to our national greatness—but which is apt to degenerate into downright ruffianism. We are not here speaking of the brutal outrages which are so common in some of our great northern cities; from which Birmingham also suffers; and from which London, judging from recent occurrences in the neighbourhood of the Edgware Road, is not altogether free. We allude here to milder outbreaks of the spirit of disorder, distinguished rather by thoughtless mischief than by deliberate malice; as, for example, when, on Sunday evenings, bands of idle youths march along six or seven abreast, shouting out vulgar songs and insulting persons going to or returning from church. This phase of street rowdyism seems to be especially a winter amusement, and comes in with the hot chestnuts. In some neighbourhoods such disorder prevails at these times that respectable young women are quite shy of going to evening service. It is bad enough to have rude remarks made about your bonnet, or to have "Whoa, Emma!" suddenly bellowed in your ear, but it is still worse to be jostled off the pavement, or to be forcibly kissed by an objectionable stranger. Serious-minded people will say that the idle young rascals who play these pranks ought to be at church or chapel. But if they won't go, what is to be done with them? Those who make such a fuss about opening picture-galleries and museums on Sundays, should remember that, if Sunday is a day of rest for some it is emphatically a day of mischief for many others.

The Detectives.——The decision of the jury before which the case of Froggatt and the four detectives was tried has been very generally approved. The guilt of Clarke was certainly not demonstrated, and that of the other accused persons was put beyond the possibility of doubt. The sentence was in no sense harsh. Although two of the criminals were recommended to mercy, the utmost punishment which could be inflicted was inadequate, so that even the least guilty may congratulate themselves on having got off lightly. The question which now disturbs the public is whether such crimes as those that have been brought to light are at all common. Suspicions have been freely expressed that if the truth were known we should be horrified to find to how great an extent corruption prevails. We have before pointed out some of the peculiar temptations to which detectives and the police generally are exposed, and there can be no hope of a perfectly pure service if the authorities do not seriously endeavour to counteract these enticements. There is only one way of doing it, and that is by pitching the rate of pay so high that it will attract really good men. At present the pay is so inadequate that the authorities can hardly expect to withdraw from other callings persons who could hope to rise in them to distinction or competence. For the moment every one is anxious that, at whatever sacrifice, the system should be thoroughly overhauled and reformed. We fear, however, that this virtuous movement will not last very long. John Bull is the most impulsive and unreasonable of mortals. He will not be at the pains to investigate facts, but has a vague notion that when he has vehemently expressed a wish it must have been forthwith attained.

Salt in Beer.——Not content with his crusade against rotten ships, plucky Mr. Plimsoll has now gone a-tilting against the brewers, whom he charges with putting salt in their beer. "A Common Brewer" retorts that the barge load of salt which Mr. Plimsoll saw being delivered at a certain brewery must have contained enough salt to spoil all the beer which a very extensive brewery could manufacture during four years. The matter is both interesting and important, and we should be glad to have trustworthy information on the subject. On the one hand, Parliament would scarcely have included salt in a list of articles forbidden to be used in brewing had it not been shown on good evidence that salt was habitually put into beer; and, secondly, we have always understood, however innocent the brewers may be, that the "doctor"—that mysterious being who goes about "making up the cellar" for publicans—is in the habit of adding salt as well as other ingredients to the malt liquor which he manipulates. On the other hand, everybody knows that a very small quantity of salt gives a perceptibly unpleasant taste to any liquid, and the question then remains whether an amount which would be imperceptible to the palate can have any thirst-breeding effect. Most people eat as much salt with an egg as would make a quart of beer nauseous, yet eating eggs does not make people thirsty.

Lord Rectors.——We hear a great deal in these days of the candidature of distinguished men for the office of Lord Rector in one or other of the Scotch Universities. Mr. Browning, Mr. Arnold, Mr. Gladstone, and half-a-dozen other prominent names have lately been thrust before the public in this way. A few raw lads meet, and resolve that they will propose a particular person for the post. The momentous decision is immediately telegraphed to all parts of the kingdom, and people have a vague idea that something very important has happened or is about to happen. Mr. Gladstone, who was elected this week by the students of one of the Universities, wrote to them in a tone of triumph, as if even the honours of a Prime Minister were nothing compared with those of a Lord Rector, and as if he could now look forward with confidence to the future of the Liberal party. Is not all this a little foolish? We do not wish to say anything against the free expression of their opinions and sympathies by the students. By all means let them elect the men whose public career they admire, or whose writings give them pleasure. Sensible men will like them all the better for their enthusiasm, and easily forgive them if its manifestations are not always kept within decorous bounds. But surely the manner in which they exercise the right entrusted to them does not very vitally concern the public, and we see no reason why the papers should be continually calling our attention to the whim which happens to prevail among them at any particular moment. The elections are wholly without political significance. The majority of the voters are very young, and care nothing for politics; they support a side merely because they are under the influence of some energetic young leader, or because they are attracted by an eminent name.

Telephonic Anticipations.——If the telephone comes into general use, it will probably produce one effect. It will teach us to speak more clearly and distinctly than we now do. Of all nations the English have the most slipshod and careless utterance, a circumstance which adds greatly to the perplexity of foreigners learning our language. When, however, John Bull has to pay so much a minute for the privilege of talking to somebody a hundred miles off, he will find it advisable to practise the art of distinct pronunciation. This reminds us that the Telephone, like most other inventions, will not prove an unmixed blessing. The post coming in six or eight times a day is bad enough, but fancy a private Telephone hanging up in your office! Why, you will be at the mercy of all the bores in Christendom who have the pleasure of your acquaintance. The difference of longitude will add to the nuisance. Jones at Sydney, who has finished the work of the day, will relax his mind by talking politics to Smith in London, who has just begun to open his letters; while, vice versa, Brown in San Francisco will worry Robinson at his Clapham villa with commercial items just as the latter is going to bed. And are not the telegraph clerks and clerkesses to be pitied? If the Telephone is perfected, their occupation will be gone, and they will feel as the old Admiralty official felt when he set the arms of the semaphore swinging for the last time.

"THE GRAPHIC"

CHRISTMAS NUMBER,

READY EARLY IN DECEMBER, WILL BE OF EXCEPTIONAL INTEREST.

An entire novelty has been introduced this year, as a large number of the Engravings have been printed in colours, besides the Presentation Coloured Plate usually issued.

In addition to this Plate one of the Sheets will also be in Colours, illustrating a Tale called "THE ANIMATED PORTRAIT," so that with this Number there will be

NINE PAGES OF COLOURED ENGRAVINGS, besides many others of seasonable interest, printed in Black and White. The following is a List of the Illustrations:

COLOURED PLATES.

ONCE UPON A TIME.
(PRESENTATION PLATE).

THE CALICO BALL AT GROBY CASTLE (Double-page).
"The dresses had been very carefully designed, and they attracted a great deal of attention, as they afforded a pretty complete panorama of costume from the Middle Ages up to a recent date."

THE CARICATURE.
"The children were absorbed in their occupation, and totally unconscious that anybody was behind them, while Sir Anthony stood frowning and pursing up his lip."

LADY MILDRED AND HER LOVER.
"Very fascinating she looked, for her face wore an especially bright animated expression as she conversed with the rising young diplomat."

LILIAN'S BIRTHDAY PRESENTS.
"It was a pretty sight to see her arrive, her face grave with excess of joy, and her little arms laden with gifts."

CUPBOARD LOVE.
"Hilda had coaxed several of the deer from the park into the hall to eat there dainties from her hand."

A COTTAGER'S CHRISTMAS HAMPER.
"None received her more gladly than old Mrs. Boscobel, who delighted in a visit from the great folks at the Castle."

A CHRISTMAS HAMPER.
Maria started when she spied
The little winged boy inside. . . .
"You looked for game, sweet girl," cries he,
"Henceforward don't make game of me!"

BLACK AND WHITE ENGRAVINGS.

ANCESTOR RALPH.
"Both the girls distinctly saw the right hand of the Portrait move out of the canvas!"

THE CHRISTMAS GUEST.
"Psyche! Psyche! look!" cried Eros, starting to his feet in joyous excitement.

BLISSON'S LAST ROUND. Six Illustrations.
"He was in the act of lifting the tankard to his lips when I saw his face change suddenly. . . . Leaning against the clock in an attitude of dejection stood the Figure."

THE BARLEY MOW. Ten Illustrations.
"The disturbance outside continued. "My 'usband! My 'usband!" cried the voice; "what have you done with my 'usband?"

A HORRIBLE TALE (Double-Page).
Our blood was chilled, we could not speak,
We could not even raise a shriek,
Each moment seemed a tedious week.

THE TALES are by Mrs. OLIPHANT, ARTHUR LOCKER, T. W. SPEIGHT, and JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

PRICE ONE SHILLING, post free, 1s. 2½d.

OFFICE: 190, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

AMUSEMENTS

THE BIRMINGHAM CATTLE AND POULTRY SHOW.

The TWENTY-NINTH GREAT ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF FAT CATTLE, SHEEP, PIGS, DOMESTIC POULTRY, CORN, ROOTS, and IMPLEMENTS, will be held at Bingley Hall, MONDAY, December 3, Admission, 5s.; TUESDAY, December 4, WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, December 5 and 6, 1s.

For Excursion Trains and other special Railway Arrangements, see the advertisements and bills of the various Companies.

HENRY DUNBAR, by TOM TAYLOR, Powerfully Cast, and A ROUGH DIAMOND, by J. B. Buckstone (for a limited number of Nights). Box Office Hours, 11 to 5. No Fees for Booking. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. Doors open at 7, commence at 7.30.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD RIGHTON.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, £200 A-YEAR. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. At 9.45, ISAAC OF YORK. Messrs. Ryder, F. H. Macklin, Garner, A. H. Warren, C. Collette, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames C. Loseby, C. Lewis, Lucette, E. Ritta, Compton, J. Clifton, R. Sanger. Acting Manager, Mr. E. CLIFTON.

GLOBE THEATRE.—MORNING PERFORMANCES EVERY SATURDAY.—TO-DAY, Saturday, Nov. 24, at 2, FLIRTATION and ISAAC OF YORK.

NEW GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, the successful drama, BOUND TO SUCCEED. Messrs. George Conquest, W. James, Sennett, Syms, Hitchenough, George Conquest, jun., &c. Misses Mabel Verner, Victor, Henvil, &c. To conclude with (Wednesday and Thursday excepted) BRITISH BORN, on Wednesday with THE RENT DAY, and on Thursday with THE PORTER'S KNOT.—Acting Manager, Mr. ALPHONSE ROQUES.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—EVERY EVENING, at 6.45, TWO SONS, a New Drama by E. Manuel, Esq. MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. Messrs. Young and Dean, Emily Randall, William Randall, Ella Wesner. Concluding with A WIFE YET NO WIFE. Mrs. S. Lane.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.

THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening ditto.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—ONCE IN A CENTURY, by Gilbert A'Beckett; AT THE SEASIDE, by Mr. Corney Grain; and NO. 204, by F. C. Burnand. Every Evening, except Thursday and Saturday, at 8; every Thursday and Saturday, at 3.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, Oxford Circus.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN. — NOTICE. — These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, and Hobart Pasha. Also Portrait Models of the Pengo Convicts and the Perpetrators of the Great Turf Frauds, Benson and Kurr. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES WILL OPEN on Monday, December 3. 5, Pall Mall East.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

"GONE," by FRANK HOLL.—This Fine Picture is now ON VIEW at the ANNUAL WINTER EXHIBITION, 5, Haymarket (opposite Her Majesty's Theatre.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, by artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN, at Thomas McLean's Gallery, No. 7, Haymarket. Admission, including catalogue, 1s.

BRIGHTON. — PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.

EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.

Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.

The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.

J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE. — Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Engagement for Six Nights only, commencing MONDAY, November 26, of the Famous Comedian, Mr. J. L. TOOLE. In active preparation, and will be produced on MONDAY, Dec. 24, a Grand Comic Christmas Pantomime, by F. W. Green, entitled JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom. £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia, Ceylon, China } Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition. { India, Japan, New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher.

Our Illustrations

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH THE TURKS—GHAZI OSMAN PASHA

OSMAN PASHA, unlike some of the leaders of the Ottoman Army, is a Turk born and bred, having begun his education at a preparatory school superintended by his brother at Constantinople. Thence he passed into the Military School, in 1853 he entered the army, and on the outbreak of the Crimean War was attached to the general staff at Shumla. Having greatly distinguished himself throughout the campaign, he was appointed a captain in the Imperial Guards, and, after having been promoted to the rank of major, took part in the Cretan war of 1867. He was subsequently advanced to a colonelcy, and then to a generalship, and took part in the Turco-Servian campaign as commander of the Widdin Division. For his services there he was created a Muchir, or Field-Marshal. The beginning of the present war found him still at Widdin, whence in July last he advanced, with his army greatly reinforced, to Plevna, where, by considerable skill and generalship, he not only stemmed the tide of Russian invasion, but wrought upon the invaders such defeat and disaster as to lead to the hope that he might succeed in driving them back across the Danube. For his brilliant successes the Sultan bestowed on him the title of Ghazi (Victorious)—a title, however, which, if Russian accounts of the investment prove true, he will not long be able to bear in strict accordance with the truth. The great fault in his character seems to be the heartless way in which he treats his wounded, and his refusal of the aid of "foreign" doctors.

"Many rumours," writes the artist, "have been circulated as to the nationality of Osman Pasha, owing no doubt to a great extent to the fact that he would neither allow himself to be photographed nor sit for his portrait." Our engraving, which is from a drawing by a correspondent who has been with Osman for some time at Plevna, forms the only exception to this rule. The drawing was taken while Osman was resting in his tent, and was so much liked that the Grand Vizier and Osman Pasha both wished for a copy, which was at once supplied. One was also forwarded to the Sultan. Our correspondent was told by Osman Pasha, while sitting for this portrait, that he had never sat for sketch or photograph, and that the portraits which have been published have either been done quickly without his knowledge, or have been unauthentic. One of the peculiarities of Osman, who is about forty-five years of age, is that he always carries a pencil, not behind his ear, but stuck under his fez, as will be seen in our drawing. Concerning his nationality we may repeat that Osman is a "regular Turk," never having even been out of his own country.

IN THE SHIPKA PASS

OUR first sketch depicts the difficulties of moving artillery in the recent wet and snowy weather which has prevailed in the Shipka Pass, whence our artist sends a touching account of the hardships of an autumn in the Balkans. "Notwithstanding the inclemency," he continues, "the Turks continue to send their artillery up the heights, so that no time may be lost. But such heavy traffic on bad roads, made worse by deep yielding snow and thick mud, is by no means an easy matter, as my sketch will show. A gun drawn by six horses has come to a dead stop on the brink of a precipice owing to one of the horses having fallen down from fatigue. All efforts failing to induce the poor animal to rouse himself, the Turkish artillerymen unharnessed him, and, taking his place, attached themselves to the gun and resolutely dragged it up the incline to its destination."

STALKING RUSSIAN SENTRIES

NO European war of recent date has produced so many deeds of horror and useless and treacherous atrocities as the conflict now raging in the East, and our sketch of "stalking" unfortunate Russian sentries will serve to show one of the various characteristic episodes of warfare in the East, which reminds one of the mode of fighting of the Noble Red Man of the Far West. Some Albanian volunteers belonging to a battalion which had recently joined the army at Shipka are trying to capture the Russian sentinels on the road leading to Mount St. Nicholas. Armed only with a knife in his left hand, with the sure and stealthy step of a practised mountaineer, unnoticed by the half-numbed and worn-out sentry, each Albanian steals close behind his man, and with a sudden spring throws his right hand round his neck and gags him, while with his left he thrusts his knife into the skin just over the heart. In such a position the sentry has no choice but to surrender. "But," asked our artist, of an Albanian, "suppose he succeeds in crying out?" "My left hand," was the mountaineer's reply, "is sure, and the knife kills without any noise." "How if he sees you?" "I watch every movement," was the answer, "and upon the slightest motion on his part, hide behind a rock or disappear down the steep in the darkness."

SCENES AT CONSTANTINOPLE

HERE we have some characteristic incidents of life in Constantinople just now. Sultan Abd-ul-Hamid is a very different man to his predecessor, poor Abd-ul-Aziz, takes an energetic interest in the welfare of his State and people, and, instead of completely shutting himself up in his marble Palace of Dolma Bagtchè, shows himself constantly to the people, and to the soldiery in particular. In our sketch he is pinning, with his own hand, the Medal of Merit on the breasts of some of the wounded soldiers from the hospitals.

In the Frank quarters of Constantinople, and especially in Pera, the Café Chantant is a great institution, and in times of peace it was very amusing to watch grave old Turks from Stamboul drop in to see the fair Giaour, hailing from Marseilles or Vienna. Now, however, the so-called "concerts" are more popular than ever, as stirring patriotic songs—imported like the singers from Giaour land—are sung by young women studded with crescents and stars. The song at the time our sketch was taken was "Plevna: A Patriotic Hymn," interpreted into Turkish by a Mdlle. Caracachian.

The third sketch speaks for itself. A detachment of Turkish workmen, occupied with their labours during the day, are being voluntarily instructed at night in the exercise of arms, so that they may be ready to defend their city when the "Muscovs" appear at the gates.

ST. PETERSBURG—FUNERAL OF PRINCE LEUCHTENBURG

PRINCE SERGIUS OF LEUCHTENBURG, who was killed by a spent ball on the 23rd ult. during a reconnaissance expedition on the Lom, was the third son of the late Duke of Leuchtenburg and the Czar's sister, the Grand Duchess Marie Nicolaievna. He was twenty-eight years old at the time of his death, and a general favourite with the army, so that his fall not only threw a gloom over the Imperial household, but was felt to be a really national loss. The young Prince had shown considerable gallantry throughout the campaign, and in some cases had so recklessly exposed himself as to bring down a rebuke from his superior officers. His body was conveyed through Gorny Studen and Bucharest to St. Petersburg, where it arrived on the 4th inst., being conducted from the railway station to the Fortress Cathedral in a grand funeral procession. The Empress and the brothers and sisters of the late Prince accompanied the hearse, as well as the Princes and Princesses of the Imperial Family, and a large body of troops, the procession being headed by a squadron of the Imperial Guard, to which the young Prince belonged. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the streets were thronged with an immense crowd. The interment took place with great pomp on the following day.

THE CAFFRE WAR IN THE TRANSKEI

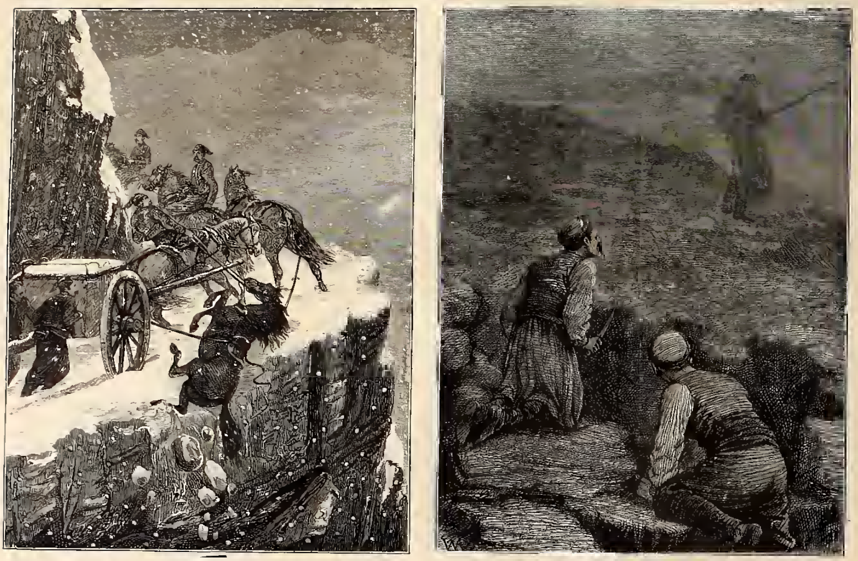
THE Transkei is divided into three sections, first, the territory of the Fingoes, who are strictly allied with the British Government; secondly, the "Idutzwa Reserve," occupied by a mixed body of Fingoes and less trustworthy races, also under British magistrates; and lastly, a tract of land between the British jurisdiction and the sea, peopled by the Galekas, a warlike tribe who can send from 10,000 to 12,000 fighting men into the field. The Galekas, who have multiplied greatly since the last outbreak in 1853, have always been very jealous of the Fingoes on account of their acceptance of British civilisation. A quarrel recently broke out between the two tribes, which Sir Bartle Frere was anxious to arrange, but Kreli, the Galeka Chief, refused to meet him, and formally dismissed the missionaries from his kraal, which was taken to be, as it was intended, a declaration of war. Kreli, son of Hintza, who was shot in an unfortunate dispute after his surrender to the English in the war of 1834-5, is paramount chief of the Caffres, and took a leading part in the wars of 1846 and 1851-3. Kreli is about fifty-five years of age. He is brave, sagacious, generous, and disposed for peace, but his sons are restive, and his people dissatisfied with their cramped condition between their enemies and the sea. Sir Bartle Frere has now proclaimed Kreli's deposition from the chieftainship, and declared his land confiscated. The South Africans, like most other uncivilised races, deal largely in magical arts, the pharmacopœia of the Caffrarian medico rests on a basis of witchcraft, and as rain is a matter of supreme importance in a region subject to desolating droughts, the "rain-maker" is a recognised professional. We have borrowed a portion of the above details from the Standard of the 30th ult. We are indebted for our portrait of Kreli to Mr. Charles Cowen, of Port Elizabeth.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO'S new work is continued on page 488.

"OUR TRIP TO BLUNDERLAND"

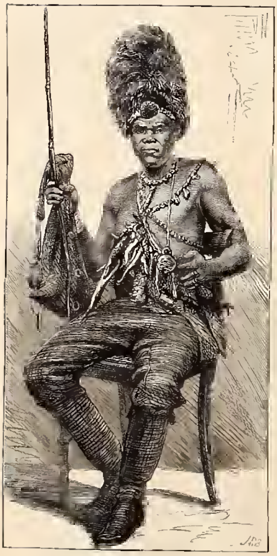
THIS little work, written by "Jean Jambon," and illustrated by Charles Doyle (W. Blackwood and Sons), is avowedly constructed after the fashion of "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking-Glass," to whose author the work is dedicated. The story deals with the adventures of three little boys, who are sent off on a trip to Wonderland by Alice herself, who signs a pass for their admission. Unfortunately, in making out the pass, one of the little boys had written "Blunderland," so thither accordingly they have to go. For the various marvels which they meet there, and the startling adventures which befel



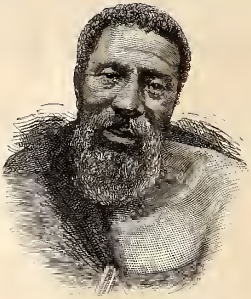
A DANGEROUS ROAD

STALKING RUSSIAN SENTINELS

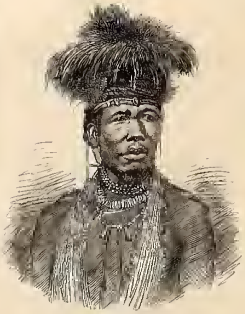
WITH THE TURKS IN THE SHIPKA PASS



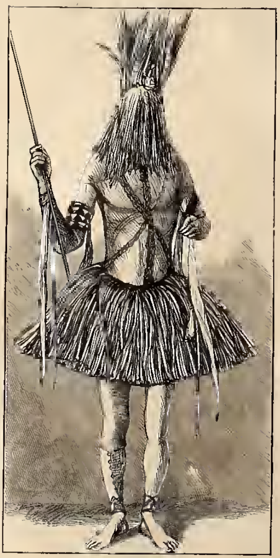
MAGUAPAAK, BASUTO DOCTOR



KRELI, THE REBEL CHIEF OF THE GALEKAS

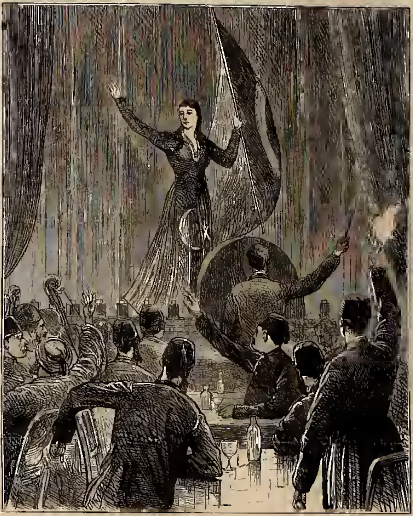


A RAIN MAKER

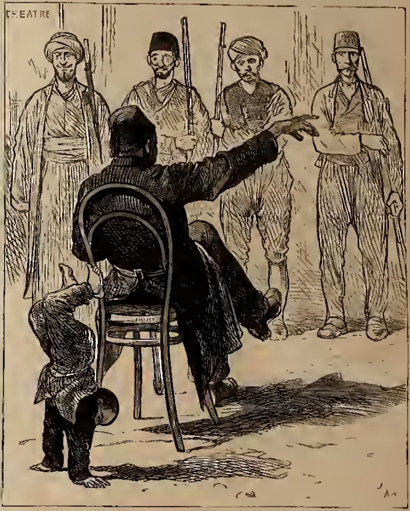


AMAGUILLA

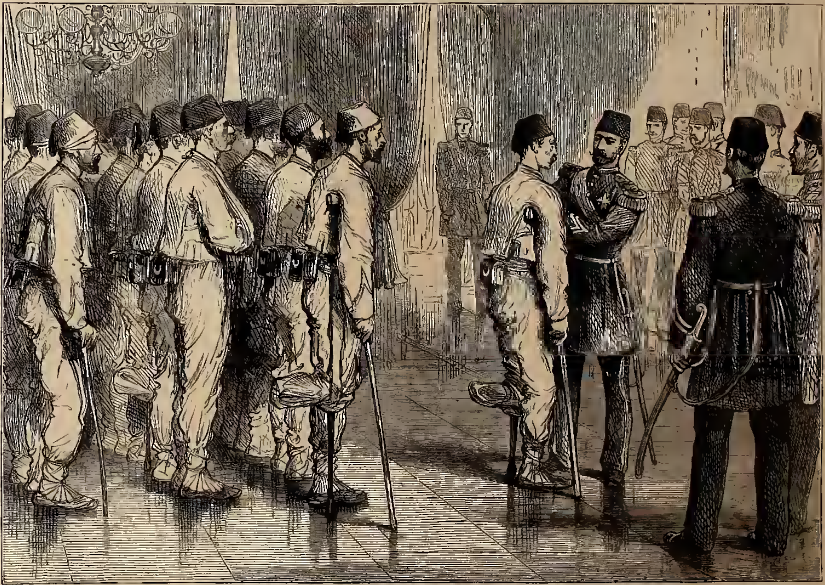
THE KAFFIR WAR IN THE TRANSKEI



A CAFÉ CHANTANT, "PLEVNA"—A PATRIOTIC HYMN



DRILLING TURKISH WORKMEN VOLUNTEERS IN THE STREETS AT NIGHT



THE SULTAN DECORATING WOUNDED SOLDIERS

WITH THE TURKS AT CONSTANTINOPLE

them, we will refer the reader to the work itself, which, bristling with puns and jeux de mots at every turn, can hardly fail to raise a hearty laugh; though whether the little folk in the nursery will appreciate its somewhat advanced humour as completely as the author would wish them is perhaps somewhat doubtful. The advance of nursery civilisation notwithstanding—our old friends "Cinderella" and "Jack and the Beanstalk" are still first favourites in Babydom, as they have been for many past generations, and it would require a very precocious inhabitant of the nursery to fully appreciate such jokes as "supporting the chair," or the humour of the various strange incidents in the Blunderland Court of Assize. The illustrations, as may be seen from the specimens we have selected for publication, are admirable, and the publishers have spared no pains to make the work as complete a miniature edition de luxe as possible.

"THE FIRST DIP"

THIS is a delightful picture to look at on a broiling hot day, such as visited us very rarely during the past chilly summer. But in November, the idea of a plunge into the briny ocean fills most people with shivering sensations, and therefore we are the more able to sympathise with the child, who is evidently in desperate terror of the water. Not that the "dipper" looks very ferocious. She is probably an elder sister, or an aunt, and may be trusted to accomplish the immersion mercifully. We were less lucky during our infancy at Broadstairs, being surrendered by our nurse to a veritable mer-woman, clad in blue serge, with a brick-red complexion, a harsh voice, and exceedingly muscular arms. She was wont to wade into the water after us like the Brobdingnagian monster making for Gulliver's shipwrecked vessel. Then she would clutch us in her iron grip, and plunge us thrice beneath the wave. Oh! how we hated the sight of her! And yet, a few years later, we were passionately devoted to bathing.

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 493.

THE COUNTESS LAMBERTINI

See page 495.

SYMPATHY WITH TURKEY—MAHOMEDAN MEETING AT PENANG

THE progress of the Russo-Turkish war is watched with the most intense interest in all those countries, however distant from Turkey they may be, in which there are adherents of the Mahomedan religion, and heartfelt prayers are everywhere offered up for the success of the Sultan's arms. A Mahomedan gentleman of Penang, Mr. Golamydinsah Marican, sends us a photograph which we here engrave, and an interesting account of the meeting therein depicted. He says, "A party of 6,000 Mahomedans and their Bishops, by the efforts of Mahomed Joonoos, Mahomed Ariff (my cousins), Payitam Mahomed Cauler Hoosain Marican, and myself, assembled in Hutton Lane, on the 2nd September last, where a religious meeting and festival were held, and celebrated from 6 A.M. till 10 P.M. About 2,500 poor persons who came from the Madras Presidency were at the same time fed, and otherwise charitably entreated. And at the same time all the people begged God for a victory in favour of His Majesty the Sultan of Turkey. 'May God,' they prayed, 'grant him a long life, and strength to his Empire, and may peace and happiness attend all the Imperial Family as long as the sun and moon exist, so that the religion of Islam may always be protected.' Another meeting was held where prayers were offered by the Mahomedan community to beg of God to strengthen the faith of the newly-appointed Sheik-ul-Islam, the Wazirs, the members of Parliament, and all the leaders of the Imperial army, so that all who profess the religion of Islam may be protected by them. May all praise be given to the martyrs of the cause of God and of His religion."

A NOVEL FIRE-ESCAPE

THIS engraving, which is taken from a suggestive sketch sent to us by an anonymous correspondent, shows a means of saving life from fire, the advantages of which are so manifest that we venture to predict that it will ere long be very widely adopted. The idea is taken from the nets now so commonly used by acrobats, notably Zazel, at the Westminster Aquarium, and Maraz, at the Alexandra Palace. The "dives" which these performers make, although thrilling and sensational to the uninitiated, are by no means so dangerous as they appear, as the elasticity of the net counteracts in a great degree the impetus of the descending body. The only real risk is of the performer falling head downwards in such a directly vertical manner as to break his neck, an eventuality so extremely improbable as to be hardly worth consideration. The advantages of the apparatus as a fire-escape are its portability, cheapness, and simplicity. The net of strong cordage is supported at the corners by stout poles, the the lower ends of which should be fitted with spikes to fix in the ground. These would be held by policemen, firemen, or others, while the crowd hauling at the ropes attached would keep the net sufficiently taut. It is possible that in few cases there might be some difficulty in persuading aged or nervous people to jump from a second or third storey even to save themselves from the devouring flames, but in most cases of the kind the imperilled are endowed with unwonted courage, and many instances are recorded of persons of both sexes having leaped from great heights into the arms of persons below, or even on to the bare pavement, at the risk of life and limb. We, therefore, unhesitatingly recommend the apparatus to the attention of Captain Shaw and whomsoever else it may concern, as an invaluable suggestion which ought to be at once adopted.

MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF NORFOLK

THE nuptial ceremony which took place at the Oratory, Brompton, on Wednesday, was one of almost unexampled magnificence. The Bishop of Southwark officiated, and was assisted by a retinue of lesser ecclesiastical dignitaries, whose vestments, supplemented by the brilliant toilettes of the ladies who formed the better if not the bigger half of the congregation, filled the building with a blaze of colouring rarely equalled. As we shall next week publish some illustrations from sketches taken during the ceremony, we reserve our account of the proceedings, and shall content ourselves with a few words concerning the noble Bride and Bridegroom, and the Castle of Arundel, which is the Duke of Norfolk's principal country seat.

HENRY FITZALAN HOWARD, Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Arundel, Surrey, and Norfolk, Baron Fitzalan, Clun, Oswaldestrie, and Maltravers, is the premier Duke of England, ranking immediately after the Princes of the Royal blood. He is also Earl Marshal and Hereditary Marshal of England, an office of the very highest dignity. He was born in Carlton Terrace on December 27th, 1847, and in November, 1860, he succeeded to the title, after the death of his father the fourteenth Duke. He is well-known as an enthusiastic supporter of the Roman Catholic Faith, as, indeed, is the whole family, two of the Duke's sisters having devoted themselves to religion, one as a nun, the other as a Sister of Charity.

LADY FLORA PAULYNA HETTY BARBARA HASTINGS, now Duchess of Norfolk, is the daughter of the late Countess of Loudoun and Mr. Abney Hastings, and granddaughter of the second Marquis of Hastings. She is now in her twenty-fourth year, and a few years ago she was received into the Roman Catholic Church by Monsignor Capel, the announcement of her conversion creating some sensation in society.

ARUNDEL CASTLE, Sussex, stands upon a high and steep circular knoll, from whence an extensive view is obtained. The ancient building dates from before the Conquest, and there is a legend of a giant warder, one Sir Bevis, whose weekly rations included a whole ox, with bread and mustard in proportion, and two hogsheads of beer. In the time of Charles the First it was taken from the Royalists by Lord Hopton, but retaken some two months afterwards by Sir W. Waller. It subsequently fell into ruin, but was restored in 1815 by Charles Howard, the eleventh Duke of Norfolk, at a cost of half a million of money. One of the most interesting parts of the building is the ancient keep, built by Richard Fitzalan in 1302. The square tower at the entrance has a portcullis and "machicoules," or funnel-shaped apertures, through which red-hot missiles or melted lead could be poured down amongst the assailants of the Castle. The walls of the Keep itself are eight to ten feet in thickness, and in its centre a shaft descends to a subterranean dungeon. The summit of the Keep is covered with a close net to keep in a colony of owls which have been imported from North America, and which seem perfectly satisfied with their quarters, breeding and rearing their young. In the Great Hall are some modern painted windows representing the Signing of Magna Charta, and figures of some of the Barons connected with that event; and amongst the pictures in the Castle are some family portraits by Holbein and Vandyke.—Our views and portraits are from photographs by Russell and Sons, East Street, Chichester.

MR. STANLEY AT CABENDA

WHATEVER opinion may be held as to Mr. Stanley's method of dealing with the native tribes of Central Africa it is impossible to deny him the honour and credit due to an intrepid and persevering explorer. During the journey just completed he has travelled over a distance of 7,000 miles by land and water, circumnavigated three great lakes, discovered the sources of the Nile and the Congo, and ascertained the identity of the latter with the Lualaba. His party at starting numbered 347, but was reduced by war, privation, fever, and accidents to 113; among those lost being the three Englishmen and his favourite boy Kalulu, who came with him to England after his first African expedition. Mr. Stanley left Nyangwe (the farthest point reached by Livingstone and Cameron) on the 5th November last year, determined to push westward at all risks. He had with him an escort of 150 Arabs, but after four days' journey they turned back, and the bold adventurer and his followers were left alone to face the cannibals, who sometimes ran after them, saying, "We shall have plenty of meat to-day." Independent of the hostility of the natives the difficulties of the journey appear to have been most extraordinary. For many miles the way had to be cut through dense forests, and they had to drag their canoes and boats overland. They fought thirty-two battles, passed over sixty-three cataracts, in one of which poor Francis Pocock was drowned, and at last on the 9th of August last they reached Boma, where they again met with white people. From thence they were carried by a Liverpool steamer to Cabenda (where the photograph of which our engraving is a reproduction was taken). Stanley and his party stayed there a week, and were then taken in a man-of-war to St. Paul de Loanda, where he was fêted by the Portuguese Governor. After this H.M.S. Industry took the whole party to the Cape, where he was again the subject of public adulation. By this time we suppose that he has sent his men back to Zanzibar by steamer, and is himself on his way to this country, where he will doubtless be made the lion of the hour. It is said that although he has suffered a great deal, he still looks wonderfully well, his bronzed complexion and silvered hair being the only indications of the great physical and mental strain which he has undergone.—Our engraving is from a photograph furnished to us by Mr. Phillips of Essex Road, Sale, Manchester.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——A new Reform Club built at a cost of 6,000*l.* was opened at Burnley, last week. Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth, Mr. Hibbert, and Mr. Rylands were among the speakers. The last named said that the Scottish University elections were a notice to Lord Beaconsfield to quit. There was a change coming over the country, the people were beginning to get tired of the present quiescent Government, which had committed some of the grossest jobs. The charge that Lord Hartington made against Lord Beaconsfield's Government was not that everybody was contented, but that for the interest of certain classes they had sacrificed those of the rest of the community.—Mr. Mundella, M.P., speaking before the Sheffield Trades Council, the other day, ascribed the present depression of trade, which he held to be much exaggerated, to the fact that bankrupt States to which English bondholders had lent money had repudiated their obligations to the extent of 300,000,000*l.* and reduced the national revenue by fully 20,000,000*l.* The demands of these countries fell off, and English capitalists who had lost principal and interest in foreign loans were compelled to retrench. With the recovery of those States, and they were recovering fast, would come a revival of trade even more marked than had ever been known.—On Friday last a deputation had an interview with Lord Carnarvon on the subject of the condition of South Africa, and the danger likely to arise to European subjects from inadequate protection. His lordship in reply said that the most recent despatches were of a very reassuring nature, but said that if, as he trusted, the insurrection was finally put down we had had a very narrow escape from a serious danger, due in a great measure to the energy and ability of Sir Bartle Frere.—The twenty-third anniversary of the death of Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart was kept on Saturday by the Polish Historical Society, under the presidency of Major Szulczewski, who after paying a feeling tribute to the memory of the lamented benefactor of the Polish Refugees referred to the Eastern Question, and said that though the Poles most heartily deprecate the conquest and partition of Turkey, yet for them to attempt an insurrection at this moment would be an act of lunacy or a downright crime. They must wait patiently and resignedly until Providence should prepare an opportunity for Poland to resume her place amongst the independent nations of Europe.—A startling announcement was last week made to the effect that the notorious Fenian, O'Donovan Rossa, was about to visit this country for the purpose of abolishing the House of Commons by means of a chemical popularly known as "Bottled Death," but known to science as "osmic acid." There is, however, no cause for alarm, for Professor Vincent, the well-known analyst, tells us that the acid is not so bad as it is alleged to be. It is not a deadly poison, but it has a strong pungent odour similar in its effects to the essence of a thousand onions, so that the worst consequences to be apprehended from its possible use at St. Stephens would be that honourable members would go home weeping bitterly.

MR. GLADSTONE.—The ex-Premier has been elected Lord Rector of Glasgow University, an honour which it appears he regards more as a political sign of the times than as a personal compliment. In acknowledging a letter from the President of the Glasgow University Liberal Club he says:—"I cannot but consider that my name has been employed as a symbol of principles and opinions, and thus I regard the acceptance of it by so large a majority as a remarkable indication of the healthy tone and pulse of the University."—It is announced that Mr. Gladstone is about to give a lecture at Hawarden upon "Russians, Turks, and Bulgarians," in reply to Mr. Archibald Forbes's recent article in The Nineteenth Century.—The "National" papers have been commenting upon Mr. Gladstone's visit. The Nation says that he was received with welcome and respect on the understanding that he came in a purely private capacity, but ridicules the idea that his personal influence would suffice to turn the people of Ireland into a herd of soulless and spiritless slaves, and induce them to abandon all they hold precious and dear. The Weekly News looks on the visit as a bid for Irish support, and says bluntly:—"If the Whigs see their goal before them so also do we see ours. If they hope for our help in anything our terms are easily known. The Irish nation will take no second price. We demand Home Rule for Ireland—not any reform in counties, or in cities, or in towns, but the sole and absolute power to an Irish Native Parliament to make all laws concerning Ireland only." The Flag of Ireland rejoices that the people received Mr. Gladstone not only with forbearance but in a kindly spirit, acknowledges that "he is naturally a benevolent man," and that "no English statesman has dared to do as much for Ireland," and is satisfied that for the rest of his life he will think better of the Irish people. The Spectator quotes some further particulars concerning Mr. Gladstone, from that well-informed Turkish journal, the Zemar and Bassiret:—"His gluttony for gold makes him look yellow. According to those who know him he is of middling height, with a yellow face, wearing closely-cut whiskers in the European style, and as a sign of the Satanic spirit his forehead and upper forehead are bare. His evil temper has made his hair fall off, so that from a distance he might be taken for quite bald. He has a long nose, a long face, and a very ugly mouth, as the words he utters indicate; and when he shuts his mouth two front teeth are seen protruding a décimètre (!) beyond the lower lip."

MISCELLANEOUS.——The Cambridge Senate House was crowded on Saturday by the admirers of Mr. Charles Darwin, upon whom was conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws. The undergraduates had an effigy of a monkey dressed in academicals, suspended upon a string across the building.—The other day Dean Stanley gave a most interesting lecture at the Society of Arts on "The Art of Rightly Questioning," recommending his hearers to acquire all the information they could about all subjects they heard of in conversation, and illustrating his advice by a number of anecdotes.—Miss Grace Vernon Bussell, the Australian heroine, whose portrait appeared in our issue of last week, has been awarded the silver medal of the Royal Humane Society and her black servant, Samuel Isaacs, is to be presented with the bronze one.—The men of the 19th Hussars who were concerned in the recent emeute at the Curragh Camp have been been sentenced to penal servitude for terms varying from five to eight years. Private Quinlan, one of the men charged, was acquitted. The sentences were promulgated on Wednesday last in presence of the whole of the troops of the Dublin Garrison, and Lieut.-General Herbert, the Commander of the district, made an impressive speech, pointing out the serious guilt of disobedience, and remarking that every soldier who had a real or fancied grievance had a right of appeal to his General, whose duty it was to see that justice was done "without partiality, favour, or affection."—Some extraordinary evidence has been elicited in the course of the inquiry respecting the colliery disaster at Blantyre. Some of the miners declared that naked lights were commonly used even when "shots" were fired, and that they knew of no order against them; and one man stated that during thirty-two years' mining experience in England and Scotland he had never anywhere met with so much gas as in this pit. There was no discipline, and he had been sworn at for reporting the presence of gas, and dismissed from No. 1 pit for asking that there should be an inspection of the soft coal.

SPORTING

THE TURF.——By an unfortunate arrangement the meetings at Warwick and Manchester have clashed, to the detriment doubtless of both, as neither men nor horses could be in two places at once. Warwick, perhaps, was the greater sufferer, for certainly the winding-up réunion on the Lammas Lands seemed shorn of much of its former glory, the fields being unusually small, and the calibre of the majority of the animals being nothing to boast of. On the opening day Mr. Gretton's colours were twice borne to the front, namely by Alameda in the Nursery Handicap and by Samaria in the Selling Nursery, and Mr. Hibbert scored twice by the aid of Victoire, who won the first and last race. On the second day they made Victorious favourite for the Guy Welter, which he won easily enough, the two next fancied, Speculation and Strike, running second and third. Boyne Water, with odds on, beat five others for the Warwick Steeplechase, and Lord Bradford, who has not had much luck lately, threw in for the Welter Handicap with Euxine.—At Manchester there was a large attendance of "locals" as usual, and the racing was very fair. A good field of thirteen contested the Rous Plate on the first day, and the prize fell to the outsider Young Sydmonton, who has not become "aged."

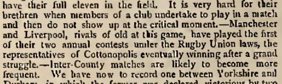
The same number of runners went for the Lancaster Nursery, and again an outsider, La Fiancée, came to the rescue of the bookmakers; and yet once more the metallicians had the best of it, when Spiegelschiff beat Sunray and eight others in the Heaton Park Cup. Sunray, however, to some extent recouped her friends on the following day by winning the De Trafford Handicap, though her backers had to put up with 6 to 4. But the balance of the day's results was decidedly against the makers of favourites, as My Nannie O in the Trafford Park Welter, Zanoni in the Stamford Nursery, and Cuckoo in the Irwell Plate upset all the most fancied animals. Rash backers, who often "go for the gloves" in the last week of the legitimate racing season, have only made matters worse at Manchester and Warwick.

Football.——Though the first ties of the Association Challenge Cup have been worked through, and nothing done since last week towards commencing the second, there have been several very interesting contests in different quarters. Among these the game played under Association rules at Bramhall Lane, Sheffield, on Saturday last, between the representatives of the Cutlery Town and London, is the most noticeable. The weather was brilliant, and fully 6,000 spectators were present, but not to see their friends win, as the visitors got the game by six goals to "love," being at all points superior to their opponents.—At Oxford, the University in a Rugby Union game has beaten Woolwich Military Academy; but at Eton has suffered defeat from the Eton boys in an Eton game.—The 1st Surrey Rifles have had to beat a retreat before the well-organised force of Upton Park, and Ravenscourt Park before the veterans of Richmond.—The Pilgrims and Ramblers, two very strong clubs, have also antagonised, to the grievous discomfiture of the latter, though, it should be added, they could not, or rather did not, have their full eleven in the field. It is very hard for their brethren when members of a club undertake to play in a match and then do not show up at the critical moment.—Manchester and Liverpool, rivals of old at this game, have played the first of their two annual contests under the Rugby Union laws, the representatives of Cottonopolis eventually winning after a grand struggle.—Inter-County matches are likely to become more frequent. We have now to record one between Yorkshire and Durham, in which the former was declared victorious by two tries, four touches-down, and a touch-in-goal.

Aquatics.——A match between Blackman of Dulwich and Nicholson of Stockton-on-Tees, in which considerable interest was manifested, for 100*l.* a side, was rowed at Newcastle on Monday last. Blackman gave his antagonist 10 seconds start, and the lead this represented he could never make up, though he rowed a most plucky stern race.—The Trial Eights are hard at work at both Universities, and at each an "unattached" student has been fixed. A "non gremial," as the staid dons call the men unattached to colleges, has never yet rowed in the Putney race, but perhaps we shall see one do so next spring.

Bicycling.——For the fourth time those old opponents Keen and Stanton met to contest a fifty miles race on Monday last at the Agricultural Hall, 50*l.* being the prize offered. As on the former occasions so on this, Keen proved the better man at this distance, winning easily enough in 3 h. 17 min. 22 sec., the track being by no means favourable for making fast times. Keen was thus far behind his wonderful performance in October of last year, when he covered the same distance in 3 h. 6 min. 45 sec.

Pedestrianism.——On Saturday, between eleven and twelve, at the Agricultural Hall, Gale, as probably all our readers interested in pedestrianism are aware, completed his task of walking 4,000 quarter-miles in 4,000 consecutive ten minutes. The performance of this semi-somnambulistic feat seemed to give great pleasure to the bulk of spectators present at the finish; and Sir John Astley ventured to designate as "fools" all who disapproved of such brute-endurance exhibitions. As a natural consequence Gale now proposes to attempt another still more absurd, unnatural, and we might add disgusting feat. Sir John Astley, too, intimates his intention of getting up a "most interesting" contest next March "to decide who is the best man in the world for a six days' journey." Why not a six weeks' or six years' one?



THEATRES

The management of the Olympic Theatre, having withdrawn Mr. Wilkie Collins's new play, The Moonstone, after a brief but sufficient trial, have revived in its stead Mr. Tom Taylor's Henry Dunbar, a drama founded on Miss Braddon's story of the same name, and originally brought out at this theatre in 1865. Twelve years are a long time in theatrical annals, and as this piece has not been revived here until now, it will be probably new to most persons who will witness its representation. Miss Braddon's story, though no more remarkable than other works from that lady's pen for depth or subtlety, is ingeniously constructed so as to excite interest and maintain curiosity, and there is a certain amount of freshness in its leading idea. A rich banker, returning to England from India after long absence, is received on his arrival by an old servant who has suffered in other times a great wrong at his hands. In brief, the servant had endured punishment for an offence against the law in which he was but slightly implicated, while Dunbar, the rich banker, who was the most guilty, went free and prospered. Nothing more is known till a dead body is found, which is assumed by the coroner's jury for certain reasons to be that of the old servant. Margaret Wentworth, the old servant's daughter, has no doubt that it is Dunbar, who by this deed had determined to rid himself of a troublesome accuser. Hence, with the help of a detective she makes inquiries about the whereabouts of Dunbar, whose systematic endeavours to avoid her necessarily confirm her suspicions. Finally she succeeds in confronting the object of her search, when to her horror she discovers that the man calling himself Dunbar is her father, who, as now appears, was not the victim but the assassin. The death of Dunbar, however, had, we learn, not been planned, but was the result of a quarrel and a hasty blow: but the servant had been tempted both by cupidity and by fear of punishment to exchange clothing with the dead man, possess himself of his papers and cashbox, and assume his place in England, where save by himself the banker's face was no longer remembered. Herein it will be observed is a dramatic idea, and the accident of the discovery by Margaret of the true position of affairs does not fail to afford Mr. Neville and Miss Pateman opportunities for powerfully exciting the audience. Up to this point, moreover, the necessarily sombre complexion of the play is relieved by the introduction of an amusing sketch of a rogue of pompous manner and of specious address, a part originally represented by Mr. Vincent, but now played by Mr. Anson with much humour and appreciation of character. The last two acts, however, fail to a considerable degree to sustain the interest of the play. They relate exclusively to the endeavours of Margaret to shield the man whom she has been hitherto pursuing so bitterly, and, above all, to baffle the detective whom she has herself instructed. Hence the spectator receives the impression that the plot of the play has taken a new point of departure. Unfortunately it also undergoes a change of tone which is out of harmony with the previous treatment of the story. When Margaret, who has hitherto figured as a very serious person of exalted sentiments, suddenly appears in the disguise of a housemaid with pail and broom, and endeavours to deceive the detective by assuming the manners of Betty in a farce; and when Mr. Neville in the very agonies of dissolution undergoes for the moment a disguise equally trivial and ludicrous for the same purpose, it must be confessed that the force of anti-climax could hardly further go. Mr. Taylor has handled the incidents of the original story with the skill of a practised hand; but the materials were intractable; he would assuredly have done better to trust more to his own invention. But perhaps a writer who undertakes to dramatise a novel would not be held blameless if he departed, in essentials, from so important a part of the original work as the dénouement of the story.

The morning performances at the Aquarium Theatre have now become a permanent feature, and are enjoying the success which they deserve. Mr. Phelps has lately appeared here in some of his most famous impersonations, in conjunction with Mrs. Stirling, Mr. W. Farren, Miss Litton, and other well-known performers.

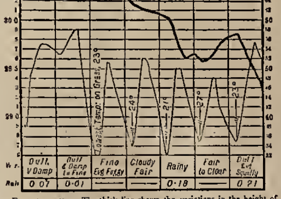
A new four-act drama, by Mr. Manuel, founded on a romantic story of the Rebellion of Monmouth in 1685, has been produced at the Britannia Theatre. The plot turns on the impersonation by a villain of the rightful heir, who, being himself a fugitive from Sedgemoor, dares not denounce the impostor. In the end the false claimant is unmasked, and all ends prosperously. The chief parts were well sustained by Miss Brewer, Mr. Newbound, Mr. Drayton, and Mr. Reynolds. The piece was received with marked favour by a very crowded audience.

Messrs. Reece and Farnie's new spectacular drama, entitled Russia, at the National Theatre, is to be succeeded this evening by a revival of an Irish drama, The Omadhaun.—This evening, also, Mr. Wills's Jane Shore is to be revived at the Princess's.—The Duke's will open with Lord Byron's Sardanapalus.

◆

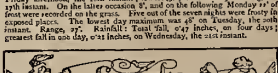
WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

November 15th to November 21st (inclusive)



Explanation.——The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

Remarks.——The weather during the whole of this week has been changeable and unsettled. After the severe southerly gale which swept over the country during the latter part of the 14th and beginning of the 15th the barometer rose quickly, and reached its highest point early on Saturday morning, the 17th instant. This rise of the mercury to its highest point was accompanied, as is so often the case, with a rapid decrease of temperature, so that in the course of a few hours, viz., between about three p.m. on Friday, the 16th instant, and six a.m. on Saturday, the 17th instant, the maximum range of temperature for the whole week was recorded. Cool days and frosty nights then followed, and remained with us till the close of the period, about which time the thermometer rose fast, and the wind increased to a gale from west-south-west. The barometer was highest (30·45 inches) on Saturday, the 17th instant; lowest (29·30 inches) at midnight on Wednesday, the 21st instant, when the mercury was still falling; range, 1·15 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (58°) on Friday afternoon, the 16th instant; lowest (31°) on Saturday morning, the 17th instant. On the latter occasion 8°, and on the following Monday 11° of frost were recorded on the grass. Five out of the seven nights were frosty in exposed places. The lowest day maximum was 48° on Tuesday, the 20th instant. Range, 27°. Rainfall: Total fall, 0·47 inches, on four days; greatest fall in one day, 0·21 inches, on Wednesday, the 21st instant.



Scraps

The Herons in Richmond Park, which migrate during the summer months, have, says the Live Stock Journal, returned to their winter quarters.

Snow has fallen in the Cashmere Valleys for the first time for thirty or forty years, and the destruction of the rice crop is accordingly feared.

The British Museum is to receive a collection of Armenian antiquities from the Province of Van, which are now in Mr. Layard's keeping at Constantinople.

The Relics of the "Victory," formerly preserved by the Duke of Clarence at Bushey, and which we mentioned some weeks ago, are to be exhibited in the Queen's Guard Room at Hampton Court Palace.

The Centenary of the Death of Albrecht von Haller, the celebrated physiologist, is to be celebrated next month at Berne, Haller's birthplace. In Germany Haller is as much famed for his poems as for the scientific studies which gained him the title, "Father of Physiology."

The Late M. Gustave Brion, according to Mayfair, was in very reduced circumstances in Paris during his student days. A friend, meeting him at a café, told him his coat was worn out at the elbow. "What does it matter?" replied Brion cheerfully; "talent, true talent, must come out somewhere."

Cremation in Madras is said to be managed better than in any other part of India. In Bengal dead bodies are placed on an open funeral pyre which speedily gives forth an unpleasant odour, while vultures and dogs hover round, but in Madras the body is put into a kind of mud-pie, and baked until nothing remains but the calcined bones, which are duly cast into the Cauvery.

An Ethnographical Museum is to be formed in Paris from the collections made by various French scientific expeditions. Scientific and archæological objects only will be exhibited, as all artistic treasures will go to the Louvre. In connection with the museum an ethnographical exhibition of collections from South America will be held at the Palais de l'Industrie from January 15 to March 1st, 1878.

The Transit of Mercury on the 6th of May next is to be observed by a special scientific expedition sent to San Francisco by the French Government. French astronomers are specially desirous to be represented, as their countryman, Pierre Gassendi, was the first person who succeeded in observing the transit of the planet. On November 7, 1631, Gassendi, then at the College de France in Paris, witnessed the passage by means of a camera obscura into which he introduced the solar rays through a hole cut in the shutters.

M. Victor Hugo's Portrait is to be painted by M. Bonnat, whose likeness of M. Thiers was one of the chief attractions of the late Paris Salon. Recently reading the first volume of M. Hugo's "Légende des Siècles," the artist became so enthusiastic that he offered to paint the author's portrait for the sole reward of an autograph of three lines, an offer M. Hugo accepted. M. Bonnat has lately given a forcible proof of the advantages of criticism. One of his pictures at the Salon, "Jacob Wrestling with the Angel," was fiercely condemned, and the artist accordingly refused all offers to buy the painting, and is now retouching it and correcting the faults pointed out to him.

An Interesting Record of the Early Exploration of Australia has been discovered at Melbourne by Mr. J. Shillinglaw, who has found a MS. journal of an expedition despatched in 1802 under Mr. Grimes, Surveyor-General of New South Wales, and which resulted in the discovery of the river Yarra-Yarra, on which Melbourne is situated. Mr. Grimes ascended the river on January 30th, 1803, in the Cumberland, and the map of his survey round Port Phillip—originally called by him Port King, and subsequently altered in honour of the first Governor of New South Wales—has also been found. This chart and journal have been searched for by numerous writers of Australian history, and will doubtless prove of great value.

The Shakespeare Memorial Theatre at Stratford-upon-Avon, now in course of construction, is progressing satisfactorily, but the question of funds has once more come to the fore. The accompanying library and picture-gallery cannot be built unless 8,000*l.* be forthcoming, and of this sum Mr. C. E. Flower, who has already given the site for the memorial buildings, has promised 4,000*l.* if a like amount can be collected by the end of the year. The Mayor and Corporation accordingly appeal for donations, and are specially desirous to erect the gallery, as Mr. Graves, the well-known publisher, has bequeathed to it all his pictures of a Shakespearian character. Subscribers are to receive a steel engraving of Gainsborough's portrait of David Garrick, which was in the last Winter Exhibition at Burlington House, the engraving being executed only for this purpose.

London Mortality slightly decreased last week, and 1,435 deaths were registered against 1,448 during the previous seven days (a decline of 13, being 297 below the average, and at the rate of 21·2 per 1,000). There were 14 deaths from small-pox (a decrease of 11), 66 from measles (an increase of 4), 61 from scarlet fever (a decline of 6), 8 from diphtheria (an increase of 2), 23 from whooping-cough (an increase of 8), 28 from different forms of fever (a decline of 11, being 15 below the average), and 22 from diarrhœa. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 313 (a decline of 25, being 130 below the average), of which 185 resulted from bronchitis and 89 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 53 deaths, 49 of which were the result of negligence or accident. There were 2,666 births registered, against 2,432 during the previous week, being 208 above the average. The mean temperature was 45·6 deg., or 3·1 deg. above the average. The duration of sunshine was 10·9 hours out of 62·1 hours that the sun was above the horizon.

A Forgotten Festival.——Little more than a couple of generations ago the 25th of November was a holiday in many parts of the Midland agricultural districts. No matter what might be the state of the weather, no interruption of the festivities was allowed, however great might be the discomfort of those taking part in the "Catherine Procession." In the towns, those taking part in the processions were principally female children belonging to the workhouses, who discarded for the nonce their customary workhouse attire, and appeared neatly dressed in white, decorated with various coloured ribbons, chiefly scarlet, the tallest girl being selected to represent the queen, or rather saint, for which purpose she was provided with a tinselled crown or sceptre. The procession invariably made a stop at the dwellings of the principal townsmen, when the children sang a ballad beginning thus:—

> Here comes Queen Catherine, as fine as any queen,
> With a coach and six horses a coming to be seen,
>   And a spinning we will go, will go, will go,
>   And a spinning we will go.

While this was being sung, several of the children would beg for money at the neighbouring houses, the proceeds being devoted to defraying the cost of the procession, and providing the little ones with the unwonted luxury of a good dinner. One of the most famous of these processions was that at Peterborough, which was continued until the introduction of the new Poor Law, when the "Catherine Processions" became things of the past. Previous to this spinning constituted the principal occupation of the female inmates of our workhouses, hence the origin of the festival, St. Catherine being popularly regarded as the patron saint of this particular industry. She was also regarded in a similar light by the Midland lace-makers, many of whom signalise the arrival of "Kattern's Day" with a rump-steak and onion dinner—an example largely emulated by the Northamptonshire shoemakers, who evidently think more of a "Kattern Supper" than of a "Crispin Dinner." But these festival meals furnish a poor substitute for the picturesque features which formerly marked the celebration of St. Catherine's Day, which already displays indications of speedily becoming added to the lengthy list of our forgotten festivals.

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

XVII.

THE REBOUND OF THE 24TH JUNE, 1848, ON THE 2ND DECEMBER, 1851

ON Sunday, 26th June, 1848, that four days' combat, that gigantic combat so formidable and so heroic on both sides, still continued, but the insurrection had been overcome nearly everywhere, and restricted to the Faubourg St. Antoine. Four men who had been amongst the most dauntless defenders of the barricades of the Rue Pont-aux-Choux, of the Rue St. Claude, and of the Rue St. Louis in the Marais, escaped after the barricades had been taken, and found safe refuge in a house, No. 12, Rue St. Anastase. They were concealed in an attic. The National Guards and the Mobile Guards were hunting for them in order to shoot them. I was told of this. I was one of the sixty Representatives sent by the Constituent Assembly into the middle of the conflict, charged with the task of everywhere preceding the attacking column, of carrying, even at the peril of their lives, words of peace to the barricades, to prevent the shedding of blood, and to stop the civil war. I went into the Rue St. Anastase, and I saved the lives of those four men.

Amongst those men there was a poor workman of the Rue de Charonne, whose wife was being confined at that very moment, and who was weeping. One could understand, when hearing his sobs and seeing his rags, how he had cleared with a single bound these three steps—poverty, despair, rebellion. Their chief was a young man, pale, and fair, with high cheek bones, intelligent brow, and an earnest and resolute countenance. As soon as I set him free, and told him my name, he also wept. He said to me, "When I think that an hour ago I knew that you were facing us, and that I wished that the barrel of my gun had eyes to see and kill you!" He added, "In the times in which we live we do not know what may happen. If ever you need me, for whatever purpose, come." His name was Auguste, and he was a wine-seller in the Rue de la Roquette.

Since that time I had only seen him once, on the 26th August, 1849, on the day when I held the corner of Balzac's pall. The funeral procession was going to Père la Chaise. Auguste's shop was on the way. All the streets through which the procession passed were crowded. Auguste was at his door with his young wife and two or three workmen. As I passed he greeted me.

It was this remembrance which came back to my mind as I descended the lonely streets behind my house; in the presence of the Second of December I thought of him. I thought that he might give me information about the Faubourg St. Antoine, and help us in rousing the people. This young man had at once given me the impression of a soldier and a leader. I remembered the words which he had spoken to me, and I considered it might be useful to see him. I began by going to find in the Rue St. Anastase the courageous woman who had hidden Auguste and his three companions, to whom she had several times since rendered assistance. I begged her to accompany me. She consented.

On the way I dined upon a cake of chocolate which Charamaule had given me.

The aspect of the boulevards, in coming down the Italiens towards the Marais, had impressed me. The shops were open everywhere as usual. There was little military display. In the wealthy quarters there was much agitation and concentration of troops; but on advancing towards the working-class neighbourhoods solitude reigned paramount. Before the Café Turc a regiment was drawn up. A band of young men in blouses passed before the regiment singing the "Marseillaise." I answered them by crying out "To Arms!" The regiment did not stir. The light shone upon the playbills on an adjacent wall; the theatres were open. They were playing Hernani at the Théâtre des Italiens, with a new tenor named Guasco.*

The Place de la Bastille was frequented, as usual, by goers and comers, the most peaceable folk in the world. A few workmen grouped round the July Column, and, chatting in a low voice, were scarcely noticeable. Through the windows of a wine shop could be seen two men who were disputing for and against the Coup d'État. He who favoured it wore a blouse, he who attacked it wore a cloth coat. A few steps further on a juggler had placed between four candles his X-shaped table, and was displaying his conjuring tricks in the midst of a crowd, who were evidently thinking only of the juggler. On looking towards the gloomy loneliness of the Quai Mazas several harnessed artillery batteries were dimly visible in the darkness. Some lighted torches here and there showed up the black outline of the cannons.

I had some trouble in finding Auguste's door in the Rue de la Roquette. Nearly all the shops were shut, thus making the street very dark. At length, through a glass shop front I noticed a light which gleamed on a pewter counter. Beyond the counter, through a partition also of glass and ornamented with white curtains, another light, and the shadows of two or three men at table could be vaguely distinguished. This was the place.

I entered. The door on opening rang a bell. At the sound, the door of the glazed partition which separated the shop from the parlour opened, and Auguste appeared.

He knew me at once, and came up to me.

"Ah, sir," said he, "it is you!"

"Do you know what is going on?" I asked him.

"Yes, sir."

This "Yes, sir," uttered with calmness, and even with a certain embarrassment, told me all. Where I expected an indignant outcry I found this peaceable answer. It seemed to me that I was speaking to the Faubourg St. Antoine itself. I understood that all was at an end in this district, and that we had nothing to expect from it. The people, this wonderful people, had resigned themselves. Nevertheless, I made an effort.

"Louis Bonaparte betrays the Republic," said I, without noticing that I raised my voice.

He touched my arm, and pointing with his finger to the shadows which were pictured on the glazed partition of the parlour, "Take care, sir, do not talk so loudly."

"What!" I exclaimed, "you have come to this—you dare not speak, you dare not utter the name of 'Bonaparte' aloud; you barely mumble a few words in a whisper here, in this street, in the Faubourg St. Antoine, where, from all the doors, from all the windows, from all the pavements, from all the very stones, ought to be heard the cry, 'To Arms!'"

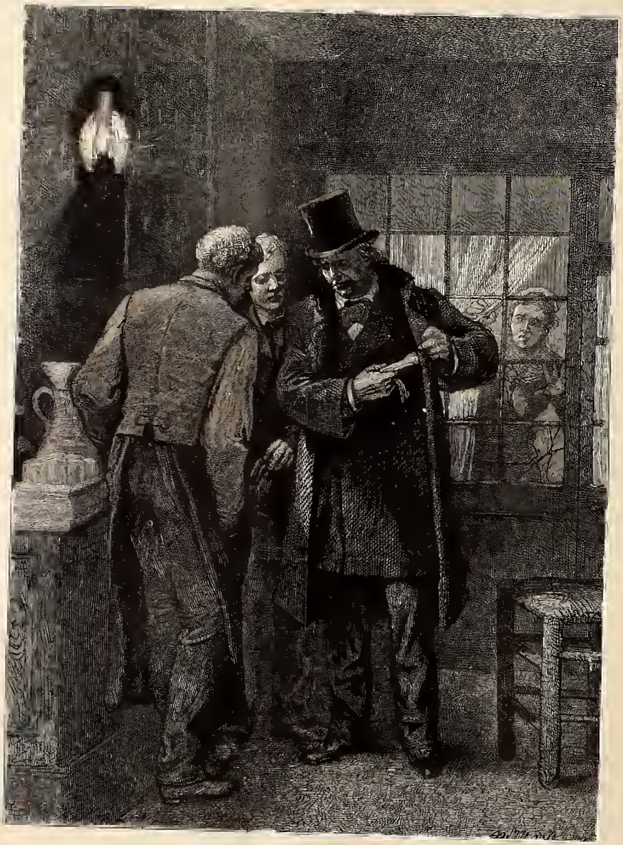
Auguste demonstrated to me what I already saw too clearly, and what Girard had shadowed forth in the morning—the moral situation of the Faubourg—that the people were "dazed"—that it seemed to all of them that universal suffrage was restored; that the downfall of the law of the 31st of May was a good thing.

Here I interrupted him.

"But this law of the 31st of May, it was Louis Bonaparte who instigated it, it was Rouher who made it, it was Baroche who proposed it, and the Bonapartists who voted it. You are dazzled by a thief who has taken your purse, and who restores it to you!"

"Not I," said Auguste, "but the others."

And he continued, "To tell the whole truth, people did not

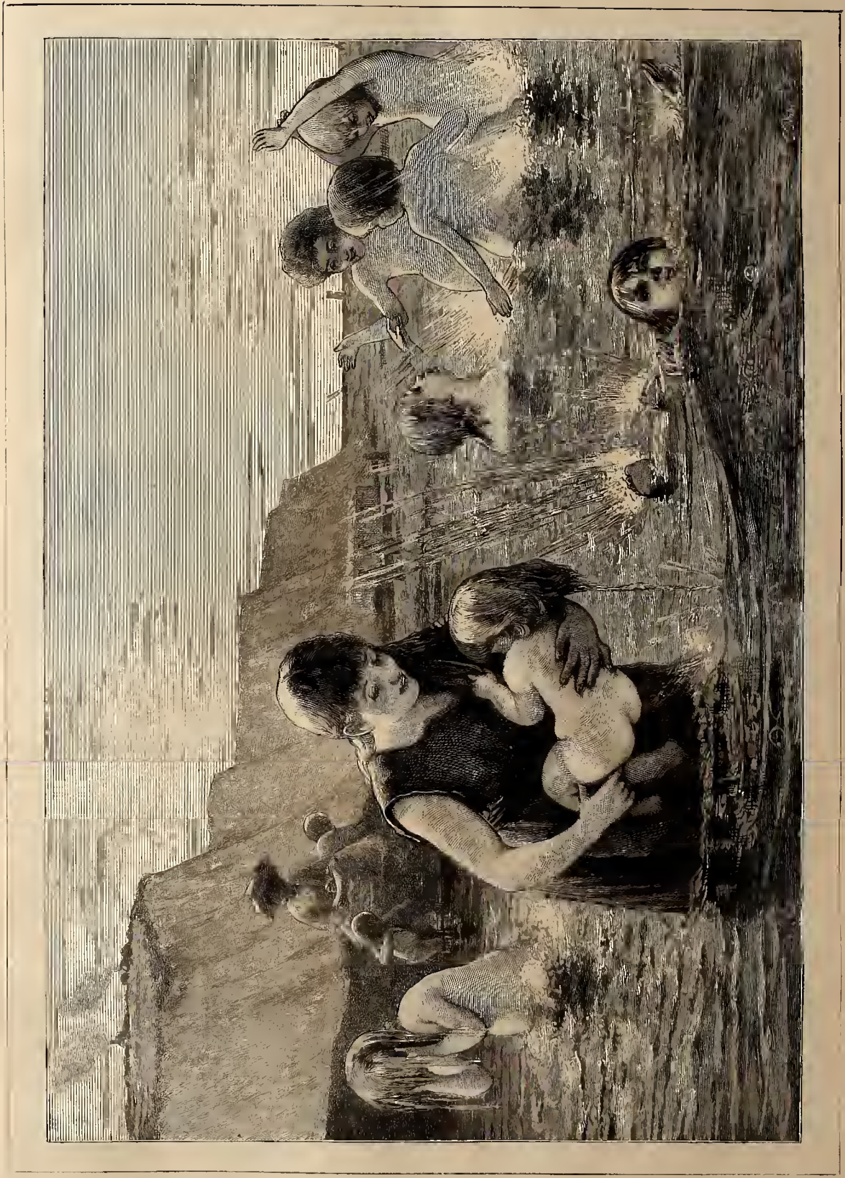


VICTOR HUGO IN AUGUSTE'S WINE-SHOP

"Have you your scarf of office?" I half drew it out of my pocket. His eyes glistened with joy. "Excellent," said he. "The Citizen has his pistols, the Representative his scarf. All are armed."

---

* The play, on which the libretto of the opera was founded, is by Victor Hugo.



"THE FIRST DIP"

FROM THE PICTURE BY JAMES CHRISTIE, EXHIBITED AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY care much for the Constitution,—they liked the Republic, but the Republic was maintained too much by force for their taste. In all this they could only see one thing clearly, the cannons ready to slaughter them—they remembered June, 1848—there were some poor people who had suffered greatly—Cavaignac had done much evil—women clung to the men's blouses to prevent them from going to the barricades—nevertheless, with all this, when seeing men like ourselves at their head, they would perhaps fight, but this hindered them, they did not know for what." He concluded by saying, "The upper part of the Faubourg is doing nothing, the lower end will do better. Round about here they will fight. The Rue de la Roquette is good, the Rue de Charonne is good; but on the side of Père la Chaise they ask, 'What good will that do us?' They only recognise the forty sous of their day's work. They will not bestir themselves; do not reckon upon the masons." He added, with a smile, "Here we do not say 'cold as a stone,' but 'cold as a mason'"—and he resumed, "As for me, if I am alive, it is to you that I owe my life. Dispose of me. I will lay down my life, and will do what you wish."

While he was speaking I saw the white curtain of the glazed partition behind him move a little. His young wife, uneasy, was peeping through at us.

"Ah! my God," said I to him, "what we want is not the life of one man but the efforts of all."

He was silent. I continued—

"Listen to me, Auguste, you who are good and intelligent. So then, the Faubourgs of Paris—which are heroes even when they err—the Faubourgs of Paris, for a misunderstanding, for a question of salary wrongly construed, for a bad definition of socialism, rose in June, 1848, against the Assembly elected by themselves, against universal suffrage, against their own vote; and yet they will not rise in December, 1851, for Right, for the Law, for the People, for Liberty, for the Republic. You say that there is perplexity, and that you do not understand, but, on the contrary, it was in June that all was obscure, and it is to-day that everything is clear!"

While I was saying these last words the door of the parlour was softly opened, and some one came in. It was a young man, fair as Auguste, in an overcoat, and wearing a workman's cap. I started. Auguste turned round and said to me, "You can trust him."

The young man took off his cap, came close up to me, carefully turning his back on the glazed partition, and said to me in a low voice, "I know you well. I was on the Boulevard du Temple to-day. We asked you what we were to do; you said 'We must take up arms.' Well, here they are!"

He thrust his hands into the pockets of his overcoat and drew out two pistols.

Almost at the same moment the bell of the street door sounded. He hurriedly put his pistols back into his pockets. A man in a blouse came in, a workman of some fifty years. This man, without looking at any one, without saying anything, threw down a piece of money on the counter. Auguste took a small glass and filled it with brandy, the man drank it off, put down the glass upon the counter, and went away.

When the door was shut: "You see," said Auguste to me, "they drink, they eat, they sleep, they think of nothing. Such are they all!"

The other interrupted him impetuously: "One man is not the People!"

And, turning towards me,—

"Citizen Victor Hugo, they will march forward. If all do not march, some will march. To tell the truth, it is perhaps not here that a beginning should be made, it is on the other side of the water."

And suddenly checking himself:

"After all, you probably do not know my name."

He took a little pocket-book from his pocket, tore out a piece of paper, wrote on it his name, and gave it to me. I regret having forgotten that name. He was a working engineer. In order not to compromise him I burnt this paper with many others on the Saturday morning, when I was on the point of being arrested.

"It is true, sir," said Auguste, "you must not judge badly of the Faubourg. As my friend has said, it will perhaps not be the first to begin; but if there is a rising it will rise."

I exclaimed, "And who would you have erect if the Faubourg St. Antoine be prostrate! Who will be alive if the People be dead!"

The engineer went to the street door, made certain that it was well shut, then came back, and said,

"There are many men ready and willing. It is the leaders who are wanting. Listen, Citizen Victor Hugo, I can say this to you, and," he added, lowering his voice, "I hope for a movement to-night."

"Where?"

"On the Faubourg St. Marceau."

"At what time?"

"At one o'clock."

"How do you know it?"

"Because I shall be there."

He continued: "Now, Citizen Victor Hugo, if a movement takes place to-night in the Faubourg St. Marceau, will you lead it? Do you consent?"

"Yes."

"Have you your scarf of office?"

I half drew it out of my pocket. His eyes glistened with joy.

"Excellent," said he. "The Citizen has his pistols, the Representative his scarf. All are armed."

I questioned him. "Are you sure of your movement for to-night?"

He answered me, "We have prepared it, and we reckon to be there."

"In that case," said I, "as soon as the first barricade is constructed I will be behind it. Come and fetch me."

"Where!"

"Wherever I may be."

He assured me that if the movement should take place during the night he would know it at half-past ten that evening at the latest, and that I should be informed of it before eleven o'clock. We settled that in whatever place I might be at that hour I would send word to Auguste, who undertook to let him know.

The young woman continued to peep out at us. The conversation was growing prolonged, and might seem singular to the people in the parlour. "I am going," said I to Auguste.

I had opened the door, he took my hand, pressed it as a woman might have done, and said to me in a deeply-moved tone, "You are going: will you come back?"

"I do not know."

"It is true," said he. "No one knows what is going to happen. Well, you are perhaps going to be hunted and sought for as I have been. It will perhaps be your turn to be shot, and mine to save you. You know the mouse may sometimes prove useful to the lion. Monsieur Victor Hugo, if you need a refuge, this house is yours. Come here. You will find a bed where you can sleep, and a man who will lay down his life for you."

I thanked him by a hearty shake of the hand, and I left. Eight o'clock struck. I hastened towards the Rue de Charonne.

XVIII.

THE REPRESENTATIVES HUNTED DOWN

At the corner of the Rue de Faubourg St. Antoine, before the shop of the grocer Pépin, on the same spot where the immense barricade of June, 1848, was erected as high as the second storey, the decrees of the morning had been placarded. Some men were inspecting them, although it was pitch dark, and they could not read them, and an old woman said, "The 'Twenty-five francs' are crushed—so much the better!"

A few steps further I heard my name pronounced. I turned round. It was Jules Favre, Bourzat, Lafon, Madier de Montjau, and Michel de Bourges, who were passing by. I took leave of the brave and devoted woman who had insisted upon accompanying me. A fiacre was passing. I put her in it, and then rejoined the five Representatives. They had come from the Rue de Charonne. They had found the premises of the Society of Cabinet Makers closed. "There was no one there," said Madier de Montjau. "These worthy people are beginning to get together a little capital, they do not wish to compromise it, they are afraid of us. They say, 'Coups d'État are nothing to us, we shall leave them alone!'—"That does not surprise me," answered I, "a Society is a shopkeeper."

"Where are we going?" asked Jules Favre.

Lafon lived two steps from there, at No. 2, Quai Jemmapes. He offered us the use of his rooms. We accepted, and took the necessary measures to inform the members of the Left that we had gone there.

A few minutes afterwards we were installed in Lafon's rooms, on the fourth floor of an old and lofty house. This house had seen the taking of the Bastille.

This house was entered by a side door opening from the Quai Jemmapes upon a narrow courtyard a few steps lower than the Quay itself. Bourzat remained at this door to warn us in case of any accident, and to point out the house to those Representatives who might come up.

In a few moments a large number of us had assembled, and we again met—all those of the morning, with a few added. Lafon gave up his drawing-room to us, the windows of which overlooked the back yard. We organised a sort of "bureau," and we took our places, Jules Favre, Carnot, Michel, and myself, at a large table, lighted by two candles, and placed before the fire. The Representatives and the other people present sat around on chairs and sofas. A group stood before the door.

Michel de Bourges, on entering, exclaimed, "We have come to seek out the people of the Faubourg St. Antoine. Here we are. Here we must remain."

These words were applauded.

They set forth the situation—the torpor of the Faubourgs, no one at the Society of Cabinet Makers, the doors closed nearly everywhere. I told them what I had seen and heard in the Rue de la Roquette, the remarks of the wine-seller, Auguste, on the indifference of the People, the hopes of the engineer, and the possibility of a movement during the night in the Faubourg St. Marceau. It was settled that on the first notice that might be given I should go there.

Nevertheless nothing was yet known of what had taken place during the day. It was announced that M. Havin, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 5th Legion of the National Guard, had ordered the officers of his Legion to attend a meeting.

Some Democratic writers came in, amongst whom were Alexander Rey and Xavier Durrieu, with Kesler, Villiers, and Amable Lemaitre of the Révolution; one of these writers was Millière.

Millière had a large bleeding wound above his eye-brow; that same morning on leaving us, as he was carrying away one of the copies of the Proclamation which I had dictated, a man had thrown himself upon him to snatch it from him. The police had evidently already been informed of the Proclamation, and lay in wait for it; Millière had a hand-to-hand struggle with the police agent, and had overthrown him, not without bearing away this gash. However, the Proclamation was not yet printed. It was nearly nine o'clock in the evening and nothing had come. Xavier Durrieu asserted that before another hour elapsed they should have the promised forty thousand copies. It was hoped to cover the walls of Paris with them during the night. Each of those present was to serve as a bill-poster.

There were amongst us—an inevitable circumstance in the stormy confusion of the first moments—a good many men whom we did not know. One of these men brought in ten or twelve copies of the appeal to arms. He asked me to sign them with my own hand, in order, he said, that he might be able to show my signature to the people——. "Or to the police," whispered Baudin to me smiling. We were not in a position to take such precautions as these. I gave this man all the signatures that he wanted.

Madier de Montjau began to speak. It was of consequence to organise the action of the Left, to impress the unity of impulse upon the movement which was being prepared; to create a centre for it, to give a pivot to the insurrection, to the Left a direction, and to the People a support. He proposed the immediate formation of a Committee representing the entire Left in all its shades, and charged with organising and directing the insurrection.

All the Representatives cheered this eloquent and courageous man. Seven members were proposed. They named at once Carnot, De Flotte, Jules Favre, Madier de Montjau, Michel de Bourges, and myself; and thus was unanimously formed this Committee of Insurrection, which at my request was called a Committee of Resistance; for it was Louis Bonaparte who was the insurgent. For ourselves, we were the Republic. It was desired that one workman-Representative should be admitted into the Committee. Faure (du Rhône) was nominated. But Faure, we learned later on, had been arrested that morning. The Committee then was, in fact, composed of six members.

The Committee organised itself during the sitting. A Committee of Permanency was formed from amongst it, and invested with the authority of decreeing "urgency" in the name of all the Left, of concentrating all news, information, directions, instructions, resources, orders. This Committee of Permanency was composed of four members, who were Carnot, Michel de Bourges, Jules Favre, and myself. De Flotte and Madier de Montjau were specially delegated, De Flotte for the left bank of the river and the district of the schools, Madier for the Boulevards and the outskirts.

These preliminary operations being terminated, Lafon took aside Michel de Bourges and myself, and told us that the ex-Constituent Proudhon had inquired for one of us two, that he had remained downstairs nearly a quarter of an hour, and that he had gone away, saying that he would wait for us in the Place de la Bastille.

Proudhon, who was at that time undergoing a term of three years' imprisonment at St. Pélagie for an offence against Louis Bonaparte, was granted leave of absence from time to time. Chance willed it that one of these liberty days had fallen on the 2nd of December.

This is an incident which one cannot help noting. On the 2nd of December Proudhon was a prisoner by virtue of a lawful sentence, and at the same moment at which they illegally imprisoned the inviolable Representatives, Proudhon, whom they could have legitimately detained, was allowed to go out. Proudhon had profited by his liberty to come and find us.

I knew Proudhon from having seen him at the Concièrgerie, where my two sons were shut up, and my two illustrious friends, Auguste Vacquérie and Paul Meurice, and those gallant writers, Louis Jourdan, Erdan, and Suchet. I could not help thinking that on that day they would assuredly not have given leave of absence to these men.

Meanwhile Xavier Durrieu whispered to me, "I have just left Proudhon. He wishes to see you. He is waiting for you down below, close by, at the entrance to the Place. You will find him leaning on the parapet of the canal."

"I am going," said I.

I went down stairs.

I found in truth, at the spot mentioned, Proudhon, thoughtful, leaning with his two elbows on the parapet. He wore that broad-brimmed hat in which I had often seen him striding alone up and down the courtyard of the Concièrgerie.

I went up to him.

"You wish to speak to me," I said.

"Yes," and he shook me by the hand.

The corner where we were standing was lonely. On the left there was the Place de la Bastille, dark and gloomy; one could see nothing there, but one could feel a crowd; regiments were there in battle array; they did not bivouac, they were ready to march; the muffled sound of breathing could be heard; the square was full of that glistening shower of pale sparks which bayonets give forth at night time. Above this abyss of shadows rose up black and stark the Column of July.

Proudhon resumed:

"Listen. I come to give you a friendly warning. You are entertaining illusions. The People are ensnared in this affair. They will not stir. Bonaparte will carry them with him. This rubbish, the restitution of universal suffrage, entraps the simpletons. Bonaparte passes for a Socialist. He has said, 'I will be the Emperor of the Rabble.' It is a piece of insolence. But insolence has a chance of success when it has this at its service."

And Proudhon pointed with his finger to the sinister gleam of the bayonets. He continued:

"Bonaparte has an object in view. The Republic has made the People. He wishes to restore the Populace. He will succeed and you will fail. He has on his side force, cannons, the mistake of the people, and the folly of the Assembly. The few of the Left to which you belong will not succeed in overthrowing the Coup d'État. You are honest, and he has this advantage over you—that he is a rogue. You have scruples, and he has this advantage over you—that he has none. Believe me. Resist no longer. The situation is without resources. We must wait; but at this moment fighting would be madness. What do you hope for?"

"Nothing," said I.

"And what are you going to do?"

"Everything."

By the tone of my voice he understood that further persistence was useless.

"Good bye," he said.

We parted. He disappeared in the darkness. I have never seen him since.

I went up again to Lafon's rooms.

In the meantime the copies of the appeal to arms did not come to hand. The Representatives, becoming uneasy, went up and down stairs. Some of them went out on the Quai Jemmapes, to wait there and gain information about them. In the room there was a sound of confused talking. The members of the Committee, Madier de Montjau, Jules Favre, and Carnot, withdrew, and sent word to me by Charamaule that they were going to No. 10, Rue des Moulins, to the house of the ex-Constituent Landrin, in the division of the 5th Legion, to deliberate more at their ease, and they begged me to join them. But I thought I should do better to remain. I had placed myself at the disposal of the probable movement of the Faubourg St. Marceau. I awaited the notice of it through Auguste. It was most important that I should not go too far away; besides, it was possible that if I went away, the Representatives of the Left, no longer seeing a member of the Committee amongst them, would disperse without taking any resolution, and I saw in this more than one disadvantage.

Time passed, no Proclamations. We learned the next day that the packages had been seized by the police. Cournet, an ex-Republican naval officer who was present, began to speak. We shall see presently what sort of a man Cournet was, and of what an energetic and determined nature he was composed. He represented to us that as we had been there nearly two hours the police would certainly end by being informed of our whereabouts, that the members of the Left had an imperative duty—to keep themselves at all costs at the head of the People, that the necessity itself of their situation imposed upon them the precaution of frequently changing their place of retreat, and he ended by offering us, for our deliberation, his house and his workshops, No. 82, Rue Popincourt, at the bottom of a blind alley, and also in the neighbourhood of the Faubourg St. Antoine.

This offer was accepted. I sent to inform Auguste of our change of abode, and of Cournet's address. Lafon remained on the Quai Jemmapes in order to forward on the Proclamations as soon as they arrived, and we set out at once.

Charamaule undertook to send to the Rue des Moulins to tell the other members of the Committee that we would wait for them at No. 82, Rue Popincourt.

We walked, as in the morning, in little separate groups. The Quai Jemmapes skirts the left bank of the St. Martin Canal; we went up it. We only met a few solitary workmen, who looked back when we had passed, and stopped behind us with an air of astonishment. The night was dark. A few drops of rain were falling.

A little beyond the Rue de Chemin Vert we turned to the right and reached the Rue Popincourt. There all was deserted, extinguished, closed, and silent, as in the Faubourg St. Antoine. This street is of great length. We walked for a long time; we passed by the barracks. Cournet was not longer with us, he had remained behind to inform some of his friends, and we were told to take defensive measures in case his house was attacked. We looked for No. 82. The darkness was such that we could not distinguish the numbers on the houses. At length, at the end of the street, on the right, we saw a light; it was a grocer's shop, the only one open throughout the street. One of us entered, and asked the grocer, who was sitting behind his counter, to show us M. Cournet's house. "Opposite," said the grocer, pointing to an old and low carriage entrance which could be seen on the other side of the street, almost facing his shop.

We knocked at this door. It was opened. Baudin entered first, tapped at the window of the porter's lodge, and asked, "Monsieur Cournet?"—An old woman's voice answered, "Here."

The portress was in bed. All in the house sleeping. We went in.

Having entered, and the gate being shut behind us, we found ourselves in a little square courtyard which formed the centre of a sort of a two-storied ruin; the silence of a convent prevailed, not a light was to be seen at the windows; near a shed was seen a low entrance to a narrow, dark, and winding staircase.—"We have made some mistake," said Chammaule, "it is impossible that it can be here."

Meanwhile the portress, hearing all these trampling steps beneath her doorway, had become wide awake, had lighted her lamp, and we could see her in her lodge, her face pressed against the window, gazing with alarm at these sixty dark phantoms, motionless, and standing in her courtyard.

Esquiros addressed her: "Is this really M. Cournet's house?" said he.

"M. Cornet, without doubt," answered the good woman.

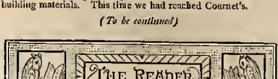
All was explained. We had asked for Cournet, the grocer had understood Cornet, the portress had understood Cornet. It chanced that M. Cornet lived there.

We shall see by and by what an extraordinary service Chance had rendered us.

We went out, to the great relief of the poor portress, and we resumed our search. Xavier Durrieu succeeded in ascertaining our whereabouts, and extricated us from our difficulty.

A few moments afterwards we turned to the left, and we entered into a blind alley of considerable length and dimly lighted by an old oil lamp—one of those with which Paris was formerly lighted—then again to the left, and we entered through a narrow passage into a large courtyard encumbered with sheds and building materials. This time we had reached Cournet's.

(To be continued)



THE READER

"Etchings in Belgium," by Ernest George (Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday), a companion volume to his earlier "Etchings on the Mosel" and "on the Loire," are finished specimens of careful work in a country possessing equal attractions for the architect and the artist. For Belgium, with its quaint bits of water-way flanked by antique and gabled mansions or bridged by crumbling arch and watergate, its spires and belfries, and gorgeous halls of old-world guilds and municipalities, is everywhere an etcher's Paradise; a treasure-house of scenes which but for the warm tone here and there of some old brick-work, or the brighter colouring of a water-plant, can almost perfectly be reproduced in the engraver's "black and white." The views selected by Mr. George in his artistic wanderings from Bruges to Liège, and from Ypres to Antwerp, include many that the tourist rarely stops to see, and many more which if better known are taken here from some new and striking point. Among the most effective in treatment or in subject we might instance the etchings of the Bishop's Court at Liège, of the castled heights of Huy and Dinant, and the grand apse of St. Maternus in the former town, or the side views of the twin spires of Louvain and of that of Antwerp rising from behind the central mass of the cathedral like some Swiss snow peak hung in air behind the lower ranges of the mountain. The graceful letterpress will often pleasantly remind the reader of the historic memories linked with these old towns from the days of Baldwin Bras de Fer to those of Egmont and of Alva.

We must plead guilty to setting down "Recollections of Samuel Breck," edited by H. C. Scudder (S. Low and Co.), with just the slightest sense of disappointment. No doubt Mr. Breck—Breck, be it observed, i.e., in Erse "distinguished chief," not Brick, as un-etymological Bostonians sometimes called him—was a most excellent, and in many ways, a noteworthy man; a fine example among other things of the U.S. aristocrat of olden days, who called a spade a spade and a servant a servant, talked (A.D. 1817) of "purchasing" domestics out of an emigrant ship, and thought the world was coming to an end when crowded up by workmen and factory-girls in his first railway car. And in the "ninety-one years forty-six days" of his life he saw much that was worth seeing, and made the acquaintance of many personages well worth knowing. Sent by his father, a Boston merchant and large French agent, to France at the age of twelve, he passed his school days in a Benedictine College among aristocratic schoolfellows of the ancien régime. Revisiting the Old World as a young man, he hears Mirabeau in the Assembly and Burke at Westminster, is delighted with the Lord Mayor's Show, and still more charmed at being honoured with a bow from George IV. (query, George III. Mr. Breck's European history and geography are at times a little loose) when on his way to open Parliament. At Philadelphia, for some years the seat of the Federal Government, and the residence of his family when high taxes drove them from Boston in 1792, he meets the cream of native and foreign society in the States; deplores the degradation of the Presidency by the "levelling" tendencies of Jefferson; has talks and walks with Talleyrand and Volney; is introduced to Louis Philippe, then "Mr. d'Orleans," a poor emigré; remembers Cobbett's quarrels with the authorities, and the Scotch forwardness of Reviewer Jeffrey; or, coming down to more recent times, Webster, Audubon, Randolph among home celebrities, and blunt Captain Marryat among the English visitors. But the "Recollections"—in part a continuous diary down to about the commencement of the century, in part loose jottings of a later date—rather divide themselves into amusing stories of persons not generally known, and stories of great men that are scarcely amusing at all. People of course who are never tired of hearing how it once took from four to nine days to reach Boston from New York, how Sunday travellers were arrested in Massachusetts in 1791, or how Mr. Breck first burned coal fires in 1807, and what they cost, will be well satisfied with the little volume. Still, something more than recollections of an oldest inhabitant is required to earn the title given him in America of a modern Pepys.

Two volumes of considerable interest, "A Young Squire of the Seventeenth Century, from the Papers (1676-1686) of Chris. Jeaffreson, of Dullingham House, Cambridgeshire," edited by J. C. Jeaffreson (Hurst and Blackett), deserve notice scarcely less for their illustrations of social manners in the England of Charles the Second's reign than for their story of the fortunes of a West Indian planter, at a time when the young colonies barely held their own against the Spaniards and the French. The story of the son of Colonel John Jeaffreson, partner of Thomas Warner in the first settlement of St. Kitts, as told by himself in these papers, divides itself into a five years' residence in the plantations as a leading colonist, and four years more in London "as a political agent for the Captain-General of the Leeward Islands and Commissioner of the English Colony of St. Kitts." Of his papers—a diary of the outward voyage, home letters from the island, and letters out as London agent—the last are the more especially valuable. The work of such an agent was by no means easy. He was expected to keep his correspondents well posted up in social and political news from home, to exercise a special watch over the political and commercial interests of the colony, and above all to ensure for it a full supply of labour by procuring from the home authorities grants of the malefactors who chose to plead their pardons on condition of serving for a term of years in the colonies as slaves. In return, perhaps, he would find, as did Chris. Jeaffreson, that his own interests were faring at the hands of West Indian friends as have those of absentee proprietors in all ages of the world. Even more, however, than for their business notes—their estimates of the profits made on each assigned prisoner, and their deductions of the bribes to be paid to high and low, to Lords Commissioners and to prison keepers, in order to secure a good allotment—are these letters interesting now for their bits of family and social gossip, their glimpses of fast London life, its duels, and its revels, in an age still leavened with the hot adventurous spirit of the Puritan and the Cavalier. A fairly-written memoir by the editor gives ampler details of the hero's life than can be gathered from his papers alone, and some curious particulars besides of the early and obscure history of the West Indian colonies. We trust, however, in these days of State papers Mr. Jeaffreson has some better authority than a careless note in Bryan Edwards for the wondrous tale of the roasting of Governor Clarke, and could have wished besides some reason given for treating "the fable of Jenkins' Ear" as an undoubted instance of British heroism. Besides, this latter incident took place temp. George II., not temp. George I.

We do not envy the biographer of Pio Nono who strives to turn neither to the right nor to the left, to hold the balance between the savagery of Petrucelli and the adulation of Villefranche. Yet, difficult as the task may be, "The Story of the Life of Pius IX." (2 vols.: Bentley and Son), by T. A. Trollope, may claim on the whole to be fairly as well as ably told, while the writer's long acquaintance with Italy and the Italians entitles him to speak with something of authority as one who has himself seen much that he relates, and has heard of much besides from the lips of unimpeachable witnesses. It may not be denied that Mr. Trollope at heart is anti-Papal, that his very language here and there will be deemed by rigid Catholics unduly flippant. The love of show and admiration that have ever characterised the present Pontiff, the desire to pose in times past as a would-be reformer, in times present as an imaginary captive—the wish to do hard things in a pleasant way, which has given the enemy occasion to depict him as untruthful—the absence of strong feeling, which has contributed so powerfully to his great longevity, are all undoubtedly made the most of. On the other hand, full justice is done to the Holy Father's real devotion to the Church, to the firm will which, since it first found whither Liberalism was leading it, has never wavered before Imperial blandishments or Revolutionary threats, and has thus inspired in the Catholic world a personal devotion of which few Popes could boast before. Nor, indeed, is it difficult to find excuses for Pio Nono's sudden change from superficial reform to sharp reaction,—for his refusal to be dragged along what Mazzini terms a path "where he must see no further than the first step to be taken." Whether some phenomenal man could have realised Gioberti's vision of a United Italy under the ægis of the Church must remain an open question. It is quite certain Pio IX. could not, nor would the Revolution have allowed him even a fair trial. His career in its portentous length and activity seems quite superior to ordinary changes of times and governments—a period per se which (Rome now whispers) is being recorded for future generations in the pages of an infallible autobiography. For its mere facts we can hardly go as yet to a better source than Mr. Trollope's excellent volumes.

Of Fénélon's "Spiritual Letters (II.) to Women" (Rivingtons)—letters for all their gentle piety and insight into human nature a little repugnant at times to minds that claim the right of private judgment—it is needless nowadays to attempt a criticism. The translation, by the author of the "Life of Fénélon," is animated and graceful.

"Stephen Heller: His Life and Works," from the French of M. Barbedette, by the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick (Ashdown and Parry), is a sympathetic sketch of one of the most original among the Little Masters—to take a phrase from mediæval art—of our time, the truest inheritor, perhaps, among them all of the mantle of Chopin. Slight in the extreme as a biography—what is there indeed to say of the solitary Heller?—it is a memoir for the musician, not a book for the general reader of lives. To the musical student it will reveal much of a pianist whose popularity grows with every year.

"Bible Readings from the Gospels," by Mrs. Frederick Locker (Religious Tract Society).—These readings are intended to help those ladies who, though they may be very glad to read the Bible itself at a Mothers' Meeting, do not feel themselves always capable of speaking afterwards, and explaining or applying, in their own words, that which has been read. Now there is doubtless a great power in words spoken from the heart to the hearts of others, and we think one merit of the little book before us is that from the style, which is colloquial and simple, it would rather encourage a bashful reader to stop and make any remarks of her own that might occur to her. The readings consist of comments to be made after the Scriptural relation of some incident in our Lord's life on earth, such as "The Interview with the Woman of Samaria," "The Walk to Emmaus," "The Healing of the leper," "The Meeting at the Sea of Galilee," after the Resurrection. In these several comments, of which there are twelve, occasion is taken first to give some local colouring to the incident related, as, for example, in the story of the Temptation to describe the Wilderness; and again, in another, to bring the shores of the Lake of Galilee well before the hearers. Then the teaching which each incident has for us at the present time is carefully, and with a peculiarly sympathetic tenderness as from one mother to another, brought out, and words of encouragement and warning are well united. We notice these especially in the story of the Five Thousand and in the Charge to St. Peter at the Lake of Galilee.

◆

RURAL NOTES

The Weather.——For the last two weeks the weather has been even worse than could have been prophesied by "Old Moore." Several fine days we have had, allowing farmers who were late in harvesting to cart out manure, and those in earlier districts, and where cabbages are growing, to transplant the brassica successfully. Cabbages and kohl rabi have not yet come into such general use among cattlefeeders as they ought to. The farm work is pretty well forward, the winter wheat having been sown under favourable circumstances where the land was workable; it is pitiable, however, to see some of the fields on lands adjacent to rivers quite sodden. Grass looks green; but swedes are not improved by the wet. In connection with roots, farmers do not pay quite so much regard to the weather as they ought to do; they are too greedy. They keep their turnips in the soil too long, in order that they may grow into Goliath proportions; and "Jack Frost," like little David, puts his finger upon them, and lo! they are worthless. Early storing, after a season such as we have had, is advisable. The wheat is threshing out worse than was expected, and quite a fourth under average.

Mr. Henry Corbet.——In 1849 Mr. Henry Corbet wrote:—"There is something in the character of the British yeoman that makes him never so impressive as when he speaks for himself. The writer on agricultural matters can never succeed so well as when he calls in the words and facts of the farmer himself to confirm his argument. This work, then ('A Digest of Agricultural Customs in Reference to Tenant Right') has at least the recommendation of embodying the opinions and experience of practical agriculturists—arranged, may be, with some care and impartiality, but depending for all its worth and importance upon the testimony of the farmers themselves." Mr. Corbet submitted his skilful digest to the "serious consideration" of the landlords, "confident that it would be more approved as better understood." Mr. Corbet is ill. No one has done more than the late editor of the Mark Lane Express to champion the farmers' cause, and they should not forget him on his sick bed.

Miscellaneous.——Messrs. Carter and Co.'s annual root show was this year one of the best they have held. The mangolds were not so large in size as we have seen them, the heaviest long mammoth only scaling 33 lbs., but the quality of all the roots was very good for the season.—Mr. M'Lagan's Game Bill, it would appear, has not satisfied the Scottish farmer, at least some of those connected with the Scottish Chamber of Agriculture. Rabbits in Scotland apparently mean rabies, and Mr. M'Lagan had to re-explain the text of his Bill, generally considered as a good one, to what he called an "intelligent body of farmers." It is, as The Graphic has said in this column all along, the only practicable Act, but Scotch farmers could not do without a grievance.—The harvest of the stock farmers is now on the point of being reaped. The year's labour in the feeding of cattle will be tested at Birmingham on the 1st of next month, where 2,800*l.* is to be given away in prizes in the various sections of oxen, cows, and heifers. To the butcher at last must pedigreed and unpedigreed animals alike go, and the Knight of the Cleaver is such a prosaic individual that the sentiment surrounding fashionable shorthorns will not make him part with a sixpence more than he thinks the animals, judging by weight and quality, would bring per lb. on his stall. As a rule, in fact, the "fleshers," as they call them in Scotland, prefer "crosses" for Christmas beef, and some rare good ones from what we have heard will be seen in Bingley Hall, Birmingham, this day week.—At a meeting at Burnley, on Saturday evening, Sir U. J. Kay-Shuttleworth said "when he considered the Land Laws, he saw some grievance which might be removed, and if they were they would greatly add to the improvement of our land." It is pleasing to see Sir J. Kay-Shuttleworth on the side of those who, like Mr. Corbet, have been fighting so perseveringly for Tenant Right.—Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., is coming out as the champion of the agricultural labourer, as a decided enemy to the farmer, and inveterate foe of the Tories. In a speech at West Bromwich on Monday night he said what was true enough, "that there is one great class of the community, and that one of the most orderly, the most industrious, and the most necessary, which is altogether excluded from the suffrage—agricultural labourers." So far so good, Mr. Chamberlain; but when such a statement as the following is made, it only reveals the prejudice and the little knowledge of the speaker:—"Farmers are altogether opposed to the extension of the franchise to their labourers, and the farmers have thrown themselves recently completely into the hands of the Tories." Farmers nowadays are not led like sheep to the slaughter, and they care neither for Whig or Tory. What they desire, and what we have insisted upon for years, is that they should have a Minister of Agriculture to look after their interests, and they won't care much about his political proclivities provided he be practical.

◆

BOOKS RECEIVED

Temple Bar: E. W. Godwin, F.S.A. B. T. Batsford.

Christmas Carols: Arranged by W. H. Essex; Christmas Wishes; Sketches of Country Life: After Birket Foster. Religious Tract Society.

Silver Wings; Field Friends; The Sea, Part I.; Dictionary of English Literature: H. Davenport Adams; History of India: James Grant; History of the United States, Vol. III.; Little Folks, 1877; Picturesque Europe (The British Isles); Our Real Design in India: C. Forjett. Cassell.

Tennyson's Works (Author's Edition, Vol. VI.); Margaret Chetwynd (3 vols.): Susan Morley; Pyramid Facts and Fancies: James Bonwick. C. Kegan, Paul, and Co.

Trustees and Savings Banks: U. A. Forbes. Hardwicke and Bogue.

Gabriel's Appointment (3 vols.): Anna H. Drury. Bentley and Son.

Poems and Lyrics: Robert Nicoll. Alex. Gardner, Paisley.

Jesus the Messiah: G. C. Davies; The Portrait, No. 14. Provost and Co.

Solomon Isaacs (Christmas Number of Tinsley's Magazine), by B. L. Farjeon. Tinsley Bros.

Golden Christmas. F. E. Longley.

Logroño: Frederick Cering. Marcus Ward and Co.

Turko, or the Little Dark Boy in Dame Europa's School: by the Author of "John Justified." W. Mack.

Biblical Cosmography: John Hampden. Beaumont and Co.

Constance (a Tale). Smith, Elder, and Co.

The Mystery of the Bible Dates Solved by the Great Pyramid: Wm. Rowbottom. W. H. Guest.

Poetical Birthday Book. Hatchards.

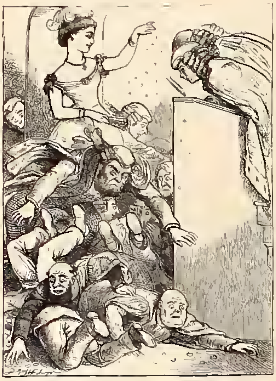
Life and Works of E. J. Armstrong (3 vols.). Longmans.

The Farmer's Almanac for 1878: Cato Johnson, Esq., F.R.S. W. Ridgway.

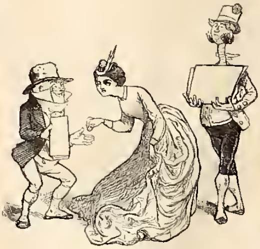
Rifle Cavalry and Red Tape. W. H. Johnson, Fleet Street.

Lessing's Nathan the Wise, in English Blank Verse, by Andrew Wood, M.D.; A Book about Travelling: Bible Wonders: Rev. R. Newton; A Holiday Book: Richard Rowe; Bible Jewels: Rev. R. Newton; Harvey Sinclair; Rills from the Fountain of Life: Rev. R. Newton; The Boys of Willoughby School: R. Richardson, B.A.; Treasury of British Eloquence. W. P. Nimmo.

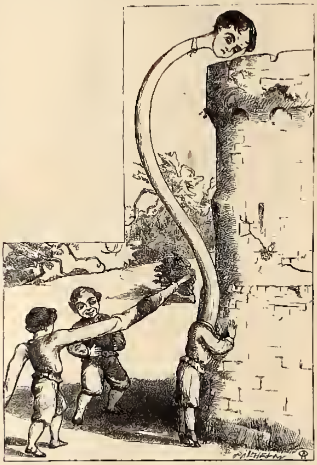
The Village Comedy (3 vols.): Mortimer and Frances Collins. Hurst and Blackett.



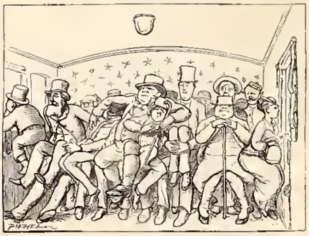
"LOZENGES!" SHOUTED THE JURY. 'OH, GIVE ME SOME!" CRIED EVERYBODY



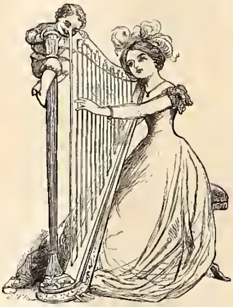
AND, TURNING ROUND, THEY SAW A YOUNG LADY, DRESSED IN PERFECT TASTE . . . A FOOTMAN FOLLOWED HER



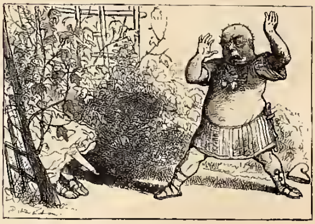
NORVAL LOOKING INTO THE TOWER



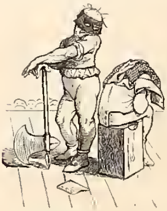
IT WAS ALREADY SO FULL THAT THE BOYS WERE OBLIGED TO SQUEEZE THEMSELVES INTO THE CORNERS



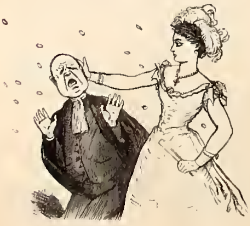
HER NIMBLE FEMININE FINGERS WERE SO GENTLE, THAT RANULF WAS NOT AT ALL PUT OUT



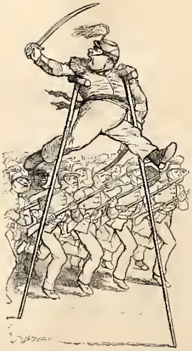
AND DID DISCLOSE 'NEATH GRACEFUL SKIRT, DRAWN UP FROM DIRT, HER ANKLE NEAT NEAR TWO GREAT FEET, TO ANXIOUS PA



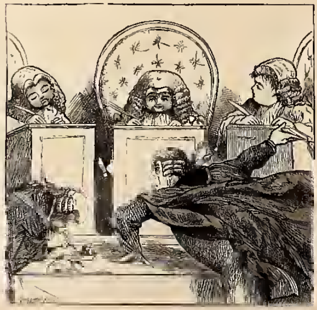
AND THE EXECUTIONER, TAKING HIS STAND . . . SOLEMNLY SAID, "THIS IS THE END OF A CRATUR"



"OH, NOTHING," SAID THE LADY, SKIPPING OUT OF THE DOCK, AND ADMINISTERING A BOX ON THE EAR TO THE CLERK *



WITHOUT WAITING FOR AN ANSWER HE CRIED "DISCHARGE!" AND GALLANTLY GOING AT THE HEAD OF HIS MEN ON HIS CRUTCHES, SHOUTED, "VICTORY!"



"M'LUD, WHAT AM I TO DO? I CAN MAKE NOTHING OF THIS WITNESS"

"OUR TRIP TO BLUNDERLAND"

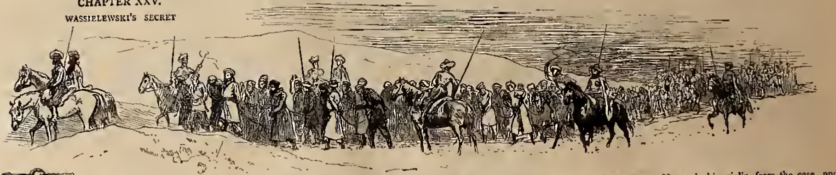
BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXV.

WASSIELEWSKI'S SECRET



THE Polish newspapers at one time, and until they were ordered to desist, used to print the words Past and Future in very big capitals, while they spoke of the present in the smallest possible type. That was Wassielewski's method. The Past was radiant with Polish glory and Polish struggles set in a black background of Russian atrocities. Like one of the new-fashioned "Arrangements in Brown," the details were smudged. The Future, after a good deal more of fighting and bloodshed, was also to be a chronicle of great glory. As for the present it did not exist, it was a dream.

For himself, he was almost the last of the Poles whom I remembered as a child in the old black barrack. The barrack itself was gone, and the Poles dispersed. Those who were left lived about the town singly. Wassielewski alone among them still nourished thoughts of revenge and patriotism. He was certainly the only man of all the exiled Poles capable of giving life to the cause in a hopeless effort, where the only object was to keep alive the spark of rebellion. He also never flagged or lost heart, because he knew what he had to give, and he knew what he was going to get. I was accustomed to his fanaticism. If he met me when I was a child, he was wont to say, parenthetically, "Ladislas, Poland is not dead, but sleeping," and then pass on without waiting for an answer. He was like a bird which has but one tune; his one idea was the resuscitation of his country. Sometimes he would stop me in the street, and take off his hat, standing like a prophet of Israel with his deep-set eyes, his long white locks, and his passionate look, keeping me beside him while he whispered in earnest tones, "Listen, Ladislas Pulaski, there is a stir in her limbs. She will spring to her feet again, and call upon her children to arise and fight. Then let all the Poles scattered over the broad face of the earth, the Poles of Galicia, the Poles of the Kingdom, join together. We are the children of those who fought with Kosciusko, and we are the grandchildren of those who followed Sobieski. If we die, the tradition of hate will be preserved. Let us die, if Heaven so will it."

I was therefore trained in the traditional hatred of Russia, almost as much as if I had been brought up in Warsaw among those Polish ladies who go in mourning all their days, and refuse to dance or have any joy. But my own feeling was of the passive kind, which is not fertile in action. By temperament as well as physique I was inclined to the contemplative life; if I regarded the Muscovite with patriotic hatred, I was by no means prepared to leave my own ease, and put on the armour of a soldier. Besides, to all intents I was an Englishman, with English ideas, English prejudices; and the Poles were foreigners to me, although I was of Polish blood, and—I was a cripple.

Wassielewski saw with pity that his most fiery denunciations, his most highly-coloured narratives of blood failed to rouse me to the level of his own enthusiasm, and therefore the old conspirator had recourse to his last and most desperate measure. If that failed I was hopeless. He told me the secret that had been religiously kept from me by the Captain, Mr. Broughton, and the few who knew it—the tragedy of my birth.

I wish he had not told me; I ought to have been spared the bitter knowledge; it was with kindness that it had been kept from me. For the story fired my blood, and maddened me for awhile with the thirst of vengeance.

It was about four o'clock one afternoon—a week before Leonard's return, that I went to Wassielewski's lodgings—at his own request. I went unwillingly, because it pained me to see him so eager, and to feel myself so lukewarm over the wrongs of my country; but I went.

His one room was furnished with a narrow bed, a chair, a table, and a music stand. A crucifix was hanging on the wall—Wassielewski was a Catholic—a sword hung below it; at the head of the bed was a portrait in water-colours, which I had never seen before, of a young lady, dressed in the fashion of the Thirties. She had a sweet, calm face, and her eyes which fell upon me when I entered the room seemed to follow me about. They were large eyes full of thought and love.

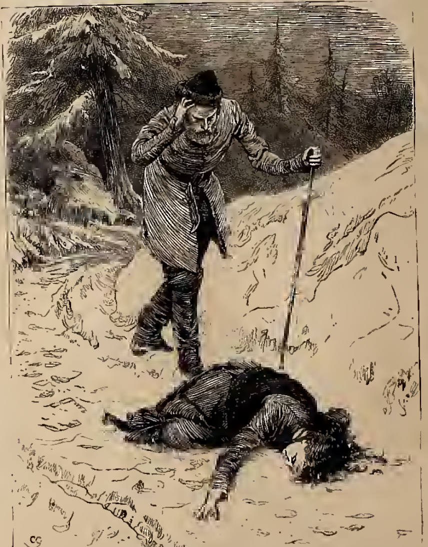
"That is your mother, Ladislas Pulaski," said the old man slowly. "Your sainted mother, one of the martyrs of Poland. Claudia, wife of Roman Pulaski."

My mother! I, who never knew a mother, and hardly ever gave her memory one filial thought. A strange yearning came over me as I gazed at the face, and saw it blurred through the tears that crowded in my eyes.

"My mother! Wassielewski, why have you never shown this to me before?"

"Because I waited for the moment to come when I could give you her portrait, tell you her story, and send you forth to kill Russians in revenge. Sit down, poor boy. I have much to say, and nothing that is not sad."

I sat down with strange forebodings. But I took the portrait of my mother from the wall.



"I found her lying cold and dead in the road"

"You will give this to me, Wassielewski?"

"When I die, or when we go together to Poland."

Ah! The tender sweetness of the face; the kind face; the noble face. Ah! the good and true eyes that saw her son after so many years; so bright, and yet so sad. For they had the sadness which seems to lie in the eyes of all whom death takes young. Death! How did my mother die? And while I looked I felt that the poor old man who loved her so much—else he could not have been so careful for me—was looking with me in her face, and dropping tears upon my head.

"Do not tell me, Wassielewski—not now—if it pains you so much."

"That will pain you more," he groaned. "Day and night for twenty years it has been ever before my eyes. I was only her humble friend and servant. You are her son. How shall I tell you the shameful story?

"Sit so, Ladislas Pulaski, with your eyes upon the face of your dead mother—perhaps she will smile upon you as she does upon me sometimes in moonlit nights when I lie awake and listen for the call from Poland. So—so—while I try to tell you how she died, and how your father died."

His voice was calm and steady, but his eyes were wild. I looked at him no more, but kept my eyes upon the picture, awed and expectant. He took his violin from the case, and played a few bars walking up and down the room.

"That is a Polish waltz. We used to dance a great deal in Poland before 1830. We were Russian subjects, it is true, but we were happier than our brothers who were under Prussia. Some of us were young, too—not I. I am seventy-five now, and I am talking of events which took place only five-and-twenty years ago. But I was not too old to join in the dances of the people. And I was happy in my stewardship of the Lady Claudia. She was an only child, like your father, Roman Pulaski, and I was the steward of her father, and had special charge of the young lady. There is a girl in this place; I often see you with her."

"Celia Tyrrell?"

"Yes—perhaps. She has the eyes of your mother and her sweet face. I think she must be good, like her.

"Lady Claudia was not proud. We went about together, her father and she and I, to all the peasants' festivals. I was but a peasant born, but she, it is true;—oh! she was a great lady. When we had a wedding it lasted a week, and we danced all night; we wore our national dress; we sang our national songs—this was one of them."

He played a quaint delightful air, full of sweetness and character.

"We ate our bigos and cholodiec; we laughed and joked. And with the Muscovites we were friends. You would have been a happy child, Ladislas Pulaski, could you have been brought up among your own people, and learned their customs, such as they were. Now, it is all changed. The national costume is forbidden; we may not sing the Polish hymns——Listen to one. Ah! you cannot understand the words."

He played a hymn with soft and melancholy cadences, crooning rather than singing the words, which I could not, as he said, understand.

"We dance no longer; even the young Polish girls, who loved dancing more than any girls in the world, dance no more; we go in mourning all our days;—even the young Polish girls, whose dress was so gay and bright, wear black all their lives; we laugh no more, but sit with weeping eyes; we go to church, not to pray for good harvests and joy, but for the hour of revenge."

He paused a moment.

"That is what you know already. Up to the age of nineteen, my young lady was as happy as the day is long. She was as happy as God ever allowed any human being to be. For when she was eighteen she was married—to your father.

"Roman Pulaski was worthy of her—he, alone among men. He was of a good descent; he was as rich, he was as handsome, he was as strong and brave as she was true and good. They were married and you were born—a strong and straight-backed boy—a true Pulaski, with curly brown hair, and plenty of it, when you were but a little baby. And who so happy as your mother? All day long she held you in her arms; all day and all night; it made the tears come into my eyes only to see how pleased and happy she was with her child.

"That lasted two years. Then came the insurrection. Of course, your father joined it. How could he keep out of it? And the Lady Claudia wove silk banners, and brought her jewels to buy arms, and gave all she had to the brave rebels.

"One day, after three months of fighting, I came back——alone.—Your father had disappeared; our men were all killed; and the Russians were marching upon the castle to destroy it. I remembered how, once, they set fire to a house full of Poles, and killed all who tried to escape. So I hurried your mother away; we carried the child between us, and escaped into the woods, where we wandered backwards and forwards through the bitter cold night, and watched at nightfall the red glow in the sky, which marked our burning castle. So you no longer had a house, you and the Lady Claudia.

"In the morning, finding that the Cossacks were gone, I took her home to our village. It was a place full of women and children; not a man left in it; only a few boys of ten and old men of seventy; but because there were no men, I thought she would be safe. She was brave—always brave—and in her pale face there was no thought of repentance. They weighed the cost, and joined the losing side. Her husband gone—perhaps dead; her house destroyed; nothing left in the world but her year-old child. Yet she never lamented. Only, the second day, she sent me away. 'Old friend,' she said, "go—and, if you can, bring me news of Roman Pulaski. If he is dead we will mourn for him as those who mourn for the dead in Christ.'

"I left her—in safety, as I thought—I crept cautiously through the woods, from village to village, and asked of the women and old men in each place for news. For a time I could learn nothing, but one day I found a newspaper, and read that Roman Pulaski was not dead, but a prisoner.

"It would have been better for him had he died in battle. You have heard—I have told you over and over again—how the Czar Nicholas hated the very name of Pole; how there was no cruelty practised by his officers, no severity too great, towards the Poles that it should displease him. But the case of one who stood so high as your father was too important to be decided upon even by the Archduke Constantine's favourite, General Kuruta. Roman Pulaski had been a favourite in the St. Petersburg Court; he had attracted the notice of the Empress, who hoped to attach him to the Russian cause; his rebellion incensed the Czar more than the defection of all the other Poles put together. Imagine, therefore, his satisfaction at having his enemy in his own power. At first he ordered that the prisoner should be shot. This order was immediately afterwards commuted, as he called it, to hard labour in the mines of Siberia for life. Which was called the Czar's clemency.

"Even the Russians were appalled at such a sentence, which condemned a gentleman to the lowest degradation of companionship with criminals. They drew up a petition; it was represented that the Count Roman Pulaski was young and hot-headed; they said he had been drawn into the rebellion by disaffected advisers and by misrepresentations. The Czar refused to receive the petition. Then the Empress herself, his own wife, threw herself on her knees at his feet and implored mercy.

"'You ask mercy for a Pole,' he cried. 'Then this is what you shall get for him.' He took the paper containing the sentence, and added to it, in his own handwriting, 'And the prisoner shall walk the whole way.'"

"Walk?—walk the whole way from Warsaw to Siberia?"

"Walk. Think of it quietly, if you can, for a while. Try to understand something of what it means. To be one of a gang of murderers and common thieves—because they did not allow him to perform his journey with brother Poles; to step side by side, manacled together at the wrist, with one of the worst of these criminals; to sleep with him at night on a sloping bench; to eat and drink with him; never to be separated from him; to be driven along the never-ending road by Cossacks armed with whips; to endure every indignity of blows and curses; to have no rest by day, no repose by night; to eat the vilest and commonest food; to spend the winter—it was in the winter that he started—pacing for ever along the white and frozen snow; to be on the road when spring returned; to be still walking, always with the thieves and murderers, in the glaring summer.

"Take a map, measure the distance from Warsaw to Moscow, from Moscow to Astrakhan, from Astrakhan to Tobolski, and thence to the mines. You will say to yourself, 'Fifteen miles a day; that makes—how many months of walking?' Behind him a wife, young and beautiful as the day; a boy not old enough yet to do more than look in his father's face, and cry, 'Papa—Wassielewski!'

"Wife and boy gone—happiness gone for ever—no hope—before him the long road with the horrible daily and nightly companions, and after the road? Perhaps after the road the worst part of the sentence; for in the road there is change, in the mines none; day after day the same work; day after day the same hopeless toil; day after day the same gloom; day after day the same wretched fellow-prisoners; the same face; the death in life.

"They used to go mad, some of them; they used to commit suicide; some would murder a soldier or a gaoler for the mere excitement of being flogged to death. Some tried to run away. It was fortunate for those who made their escape in winter, because when night fell they lay down in the snow—out on the free white snow, which covered them up and hid them after the cold winter wind had fanned them to sleep, and when they were found in the spring they were dead corpses covered over with tall grasses and pitiful flowers. Those who neither went mad, nor were knouted, nor were frozen to death, nor committed suicide, drooped away and died day by day, like your father, and for the last few months of their lives, God, more merciful than the Czar, made them stupid."

Wassielewski stopped. I looked up at him with beating heart and flashing eyes. His own eyes, deep set and stern, were glowing with the intensity of his wrath, and the red gash on his cheek was a long white line.

"Go on, Wassielewski," I cried, "tell me more."

"I have thought upon that journey," he continued in a calm voice, "till I seem to know it every step. And he was so tall, so brave, so handsome.

"News came, later on—not for a long time—about him. More than half the convicts died upon the road, the man to whom he was manacled threw himself down upon the road one day, and refused to move another step; they flogged him till he could not have walked if he had tried; but he still refused, and then they flogged him again until he died. That was part of the Czar's clemency. Your father was one of the few who survived the journey, and reached Siberia in safety. He sent home by a sure hand a little wooden cross, on which he had carved—the names of Claudia his wife, and Ladislas his boy."

"Stop—stop! Wassielewski, I cannot bear it."

"I shall not stop," he replied, "you must bear this, and more. There is worse to hear. Do you think it is for nothing that I tell you all these things? The cross was to show his wife that he was alive, and that he still thought of them. But when it arrived his wife was dead, and the child was in exile. The cross,"—he opened a little cabinet which stood upon a chest of drawers—"the cross is here. I have kept it for you."

It was a roughly-carved cross, eighteen inches long, of a dark-grained wood, a Latin cross. On the longer limb was carved in letters rude, but deeply cut in the wood, "Roman to Claudia," and on the transverse limb the single word, "Ladislas."

"See, from his grave your father calls you."

"From his grave?"

"He died like all the prisoners in the mines, of hard work, of despair, of misery, and neglect. He could write no letters, he could receive none; he had no longer anything to hope for in this world. Roman Pulaski died. Grey, deaf, and blind, my poor old master died. He was not thirty years of age.

"When he was dead lying news was published in the papers by the command of Nicholas. They said that he had been released from the mines, that he had voluntarily entered as a private soldier in a Caucasian regiment, that he had fallen in action. Lies! Lies! No one believed them. As if Roman Pulaski would not have written to Poland for news of his wife and son; as if he would not have flown along the road as soon as he obtained his liberty, to learn if they were dead or living. No! In the darkest and deepest mine, with the foulest thieves of a Muscovite crowd, Roman Pulaski lived out his wretched years, and died his wretched death. And you are his son.

"Before you go home, remember this: he died for Poland; his death is not forgotten; for fifty generations, if need be, the story shall be told of the Czar's revenge."

He paused for a moment.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE MASSACRE OF THE INNOCENTS

"I have more to tell you," he went on, wiping the beads from his brow wearily. "More to tell you, more that I cannot tell without the bitterest pain, and that will sodden all your after years. But you must learn it, you must learn it, before you become a true child of Poland."

He leant over me and kissed my head.

"Poor boy! I thought at one time that you might be spared. The good Captain said to me when you went away to live with him, 'Let him not know, Wassielewski, let him never know.' I said, 'He shall never know, Captain; no one shall tell him;—unless his country ask for him. Then he shall know, because the knowledge will fire the blood, and make him fight like ten men. We are all like ten men when we rise to fight the Muscovite.' So I promised and I prayed of a night to the Lady Claudia, who is now a saint in Heaven, and hears what sinners ask, that she would guard her son from harm. 'Because,' I said on my knees, 'he is not a strong man like your husband or your servant; he is afflicted, he is feeble, he is a boy of peace and fond of music, and he has made good friends.' I knelt by the bed, and I looked on that face. The face changed as I prayed, and sometimes, by candlelight, or by moonlight, I could see the eyes of my mistress shining upon me, or see her lips move as if to speak or to smile. And always happy. Ladislas, happy are those who forgive."

"But we cannot forgive," I said.

"Never, boy, never. We are God's instruments of wrath. And now the time has come, and Poland asks for you. So I must tell you, Ladislas," he added, pitifully, "I must tell you, in addition, how your mother died. You will think over the story every day for the rest of your life. And you will understand, henceforth, how Russia may become the Protector of Christians—out of her own country.

"It happened while I was away, looking for certain news of your father. I left her in safety, as I thought, among the women and children. Even I did not know how far the Czar could carry his revenge. Not even the little children were safe. An order came from St. Petersburg that all orphan Polish children—all those whose fathers had fallen in the insurrection—all who were a burden to the State—should be carried away and brought up in military schools. That was a master-stroke. The little Poles were to become Russians, to fight their brothers.

"You were not an orphan, nor a burden on the State, you did not fall within that law. It was by the great, by the divine clemency of the Czar that that ukase was issued, to save the children whom every Polish household would have welcomed, to relieve the State of a burden which did not exist. But the order did not affect you, and if I had known of it I should not have been disturbed. You were safe, safe with your mother, and she was safe among her own people, the women who knew her and loved her.

"As the order was issued it had to be carried out, and the soldiers were sent to find orphan children, begging their bread, and a burden on the State. But there were none; yet the order must be obeyed. So they began to carry off all the children they could find, whether they were orphans or not, whether their mothers wept and shrieked, or whether they sat silent, struck with the mad stupor of a misfortune greater than they could bear.

"When Herod slew the infants in Bethlehem, there were some thirty killed. When Nicholas murdered the innocents in Poland, there were thousands. Perhaps, when one crime becomes as well known as the other, that of the Czar will take its proper rank.

"In the afternoon, when the day was sinking, there came clattering up to the village where your mother had taken refuge a long cavalcade of carts, horses, and cavalry. In the carts were infants;—it was a day of winter, and the snow was lying over the fields and in the branches of the pines. The carts were covered, it is true, and within them the children cried and moaned, huddled together against each other for warmth; some mere infants in arms; some five or six years of age who carried the smaller ones; some little toddling things of two. They had spread rough blankets on the floors of the carts, but still the helpless babes were cold. And their only nurses were the soldiers who had small pity.

"The women of the village came out crying over the poor children, bringing them bread and milk. With them they carried their own. They had better have stayed indoors; better still have fled into the woods, and hidden there till the Cossacks went away. For presently, the soldiers began picking up the children of the village and tossing them, too, into their carts. Among them, led by an older child, wrapped in furs, was a little boy of two years old——you, Ladislas Pulaski.

"You were straight-backed then, poor boy; straight and comely, like your father——

"When they rode away, the carts lumbering along the roads, the children crying, the soldiers swearing, they were followed by a stream of women, who shrieked and cried, and first among them all ran and cried your mother—the Lady Claudia. Yes—she was brave when her beautiful home was burned with all the sweet things she had grown up amongst; but when she saw the boy torn from her, she became, they told me, like a mad woman. They were all mad women.

"It was twenty-four hours later when I returned and heard what had happened. The carts had all that much start of me; also I had to be careful, because near the villages I might be recognised and arrested. I followed on the high road when I could—through forests when I could find a faithful guide—any how so that I followed.——After two days of pursuit, I found—courage, Ladislas—courage, boy—so—drink this water—lie down for a moment—sob and cry—it will do you good as it did me, when I found her—the tale is almost told.

"I found her lying cold and dead in the road. She was bareheaded, and her long hair lay blown about her beautiful head; her face was looking with its pale cold cheeks and closed eyes—looking still along the road in the direction of the carts—one arm was bent under her, one hand upon her heart; one lay extended, the fingers clutched in the snow as if she would drag herself along the way by which she could no longer creep; her shoes had fallen from her feet, she was frozen;—in the night she had fallen, and, too weak to rise, must have died in the painless sleep that swiftly closes the eyes of those who lie down in our winter snow. I lifted her and bore her to the edge of the forest, where, because I could not dig her a grave, I made a hole in the snow, and covered her over with branches to keep off the wolves. I knelt by her dead form and called Heaven to witness that such revenge as I could work upon the people who had killed her I would work—it is a vow which I have renewed from day to day; and, after many years, the time has come at last. It always comes to those who have faith and patience.

"When I had buried your mother, I hurried along the road still in pursuit of the train of children. These trains do not move quickly, and I knew that I should come up with it—sooner or later. The roads were very still and quiet; it was not only the snow that lay on the earth, but the dread and terror of the Cossacks. Death was in the air; in the woods lay the bodies of the men: in the villages lay the women weeping; on the cold roads lumbered the long lines of kibitkas that carried away the children. Somewhere on that road marched the train of convicts manacled wrist to wrist, your father among them.

"Presently—it may have been a day, it may have been an hour, after I left your dead mother, I heard far off the dull dead sound of the carts, the cracking of whips and the curses of the drivers. Then I stopped to think. If they saw me I should be shot, and that would be of no use to any one. Now, if I lost sight altogether of the train, how could I help you, who were in it?

"Walking and running, I kept up close behind the train; as the night fell again, I could get so close as to hear the wailing of the children, who cried for hunger and for cold. And Providence befriended us; for while I went along the road, I saw something move in the moonlight,—and heard a faint cry. Ladislas, it was you. You had fallen from the cart, and they left you there to die. Perhaps they did not see you. Five minutes more, and you would have died, like your mother, of that fatal sleep of frost.

"There is nothing more to tell——I had a long and weary journey from village to village before I reached the Austrian frontier, and found a friend who would help us over mountains and by forests to Switzerland. All Europe was full of our sufferings, and we made friends wherever we went; there were societies called 'Friends of Poland,' who helped us with money and work; had they given us soldiers and arms we should have asked no other help—we passed from Switzerland to France, and from France we came to England. Always the same kindness from the people; the same indignation; and the same help. I wonder, now, if they have forgotten the cause of Poland; perhaps, because it is twenty years ago.

"Well, as the days passed on, I noticed something. At first, it was not much, but as the time went on, I found that your back was round, and that you were—poor boy—deformed. It was done by the fall from the cart. Remember, Ladislas, that you owe that, as well as everything else—to the Czar. When you look in the glass, say to yourself, 'But for them I should be well and straight like my father:' when you pass a rich man's house you may say, 'My house stood among woods fairer than these, with more splendid gardens; the Czar burned it, and took my broad lands.' When you stand upon the ramparts and see the lines of convicts working, silent, in single file, think of your father dying slowly in the Siberian mines—and every evening and every morning, look at the face of your mother and think of her rushing along the frozen roads, catching at the hands of the soldiers, crying and imploring—to fall at last for very weakness on the ground and die in misery.

"Hush, boy—hush—strengthen your heart—rouse yourself—think that your arms are strong though your back is round; you can fire a gun; you can kill a Russian; you can fight, as men fight now; and you are a Pulaski.

"I thought, when I saw what you were, that Heaven had resolved to spare you the common lot of Poles. But that is not so—we must all go, now."

"Yes, Wassielewski—all must go. I among the rest."

"I knew you would say that, when you had been told all. Look me in the face, boy, and swear it."

"I swear it," I murmured, in a broken voice. "By the portrait of my mother, Wassielewski, I will go with you to Poland, when you claim my promise. You shall take me back to my own people: you shall say to them that I am poor and deformed; that I can neither march with them, nor ride, nor stand upright among their ranks; that I cannot even speak my own language; but that I have greater wrongs to avenge than any of them; and that I ask leave just to crawl among them and load my rifle with the rest.

"Good—boy—good." The old man's eyes had an infinite tenderness in their depths while he took my hand. "I am taking you to Death. That is almost certain. I pray God that we may die together, and that we may die upon a heap of Russians while the enemy is flying before our faces scattered like the chaff before the wind. Then I can take you by the hand and lead you to Heaven, where we shall find them both, waiting for us—Count Roman and Lady Claudia—and I shall say, 'My master and my mistress, I have brought your boy home to you. And he died for Poland.'

"It is not that I have done this of myself," he went on. "For years a voice has been ringing in my ears which at first I could not understand,—it was only a voice, and indistinct. Gradually I began to hear and make out what it said. 'The time is coming,' it said, 'the time is coming. Prepare to end thy work. The time is coming.' That lasted for a long while, but I was patient, because I knew that it was the Lady Claudia who spoke to me at night, and she would have good reason for what she said. And now the voice says more. It says, 'Ladislas must be told; Ladislas must go with you; let Ladislas, too, fight for Poland.' We must obey a voice from Heaven, and so I have told you.

"Remember, I can promise you nothing,—not even glory, not even a name. You may be killed in a nameless fight upon a village green; you may follow your father to Siberia; I know not. I partly read the future, but not all. I see fighting. I hear the Polish hymn; there are the accursed grey coats, there is the firing of guns, and all is finished. Among the patriots I do not see you Ladislas, and I do not see myself.

"You have sworn, and I will give you, besides your father's cross, your mother's portrait. Take them with you to-night, put them in some safe place, pray with them in your hand, night and day. Remember, you are no longer a music master in an English town, you are a child of Poland, and you teach music till you hear your country's call. And now, farewell; wait and expect."

. . . .

"Play something, Celia, my dear," said the Captain. "Soothe his spirit with music. Poor boy, poor boy! He should not have told you."

. . . .

I went home in a dream, bearing with me the precious relics which Wassielewski gave me. I think I was mad that evening. It was nine o'clock when I reached home, and Celia had waited for me all the evening. But I had no eyes for Celia, and no thought for anything but what I had heard. And then, in such language as came to me, with such passion and tears as the tale called up within me, I told my story and once more renewed my vow.

. . . .

There was no sleep for me that night, but in the morning I fell into a slumber broken by unquiet dreams. There was the lumbering, grinding roll upon the frozen snow of the children's train escorted by the mounted soldiers; there was the figure of my mother, lying stone dead on a road of ice; there was the gang of convicts limping along a road which seemed to have no beginning and no end.

. . . .

They would not let me go to my pupils; my hands were hot, my brow was burning. Celia came to sit with me, and we talked and wept together. I was fain to tell my story all over again. She held my hand while I told it, and when it was finished I saw in her face no wrath, none of the madness with which Wassielewski filled my soul the day before, but only a great sadness. I was still mad for revenge, but somehow I felt instinctively that Celia's sorrow was a higher thing than the old Pole's thirst for revenge. And I was ashamed in presence of her sad and sympathising eyes to renew my oath of vengeance.

"Poor Laddy!" she said, "What a tale of misery and wrong! Let us pity the soldiers who had to carry out such an order. Let us believe that the Czar did not know—could not know—how his order was obeyed. Do not dwell upon it, dear. Do not let cruel and revengeful thoughts grow out of the recollection. 'Vengeance is mine,' you know. Your mother's face—how beautiful it is!—does not make you think of revenge? See how calmly the sweet eyes look at you! And oh! dear, dear, Loddy, make no more rash vows, at least till Leonard comes home. And it wants but three days—three short, short, days, and we shall see him again, and all will go well with us once more."

The Captain said nothing, but in his sad face I saw that he sorrowed for me, and in his grave eyes I read the warning which did not leave his lips.

(To be continued)

"Doubleday's Children," by Dutton Cook (3 vols.: Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.).—The device of telling a story through the mouths of different narrators is not, as a rule, wont to be attended with very happy or successful results, but Mr. Dutton Cook is a practised hand at fiction, and is able to spare us those painful breaks of continuity and abrupt transitions which are the usual drawbacks on the method he has here adopted. The "Narrative" of Basil, the youngest of the children of Duncan Doubleday, architect and surveyor, the "Statement" of Nicholas, the eldest, and the "Confession" of Doris, the sister who comes between them, fit well and closely together, and give us the story just as at the moment it could best be told. We have had stories from Mr. Dutton Cook of which we have thought more highly; all the same, the interest of this history of Doubleday's Children is unquestionable; whilst its style, and the many touches of quiet humour that embellish it, raise it very much above the level of the ordinary novel of the day. The best parts of the book, we think, are the opening chapters which describe the somewhat uncared-for, but not uncheery childhood of the little Doubledays in their dingy and poverty-stricken home in Somers Town—a home to which the importunate dun, and even the bailiff, were no infrequent visitors. The character of the easy-going, sanguine, out-at-elbows father, Duncan Doubleday, seems evidently a study "after" Dickens, and a very fairly successful one. He is for ever humming little scraps of songs, and "never seemed quite so much in earnest as were other people." As an architect he never designed anything in particular, but was convinced all the same that he could astonish the world could he but command a suitable "opportunity." "The space cleared by some such catastrophe as the Great Fire, and a commission to build London anew, would have suited him very tolerably." The characters and fortunes of Nick, Doris, and Basil (known in childhood as "Buppy") Doubleday we must in the main leave readers to learn from Mr. Dutton Cook's pages, for we have not the space to state our impressions of them here. We may say, however, that Nick, amusing as he is in his pig-headed stupidity, self-importance, and self-sufficiency, is almost too much of a caricature, especially in his own "statement," for a picture of real life such as the book aims at being. Lucius Grisdale, the old Chartist newspaper editor—no doubt a sketch from life—is a vigorously-drawn figure, only we have a little too much of him. The leading fault of the book is that it is too episodical, and that many of its episodes seem to have little raison d'être, save as giving the author an opportunity of working certain more or less out-of-the-way experiences of his own into the story. The history of Doris's brief theatrical career, for instance, which fills no less than six chapters, though far from unamusing, might simply be skipped for any connection it has with the rest of the story. The mysterious disappearance of Norah, the Irish housemaid, again, is a mere excrescence, which Mr. Dutton Cook himself seems to feel calls for a quasi-apology. Still, though we have found some fault with the book, we have read it with, on the whole, much pleasure, and it well deserves to be a popular favourite.

"Gwen Wynn: A Romance of the Wye," by Captain Mayne Reid (3 vols.: Tinsley).—Captain Mayne Reid had much better have kept to his old field of Mexico and the Prairies. His romances of deadly perils and hairbreadth escapes, peopled with lovely damsels, gallant cavaliers, and profligate and bloodthirsty ruffians—all of them the merest "dummers," if you looked into them—never had any literary merit, of course; but there was generally a "go" about them which made them readable. But he is utterly at sea in constructing a tale of English life, and only makes himself ridiculous by the attempt. His tale is spiced hot with crime of divers kinds; but the crime is so out of keeping with the English climate that we are inclined to laugh when we are meant to shudder. As villain-in-chief, we meet our old familiar friend who, we thought, was becoming as extinct as the dodo, the traditional Jesuit of fiction, and a very pretty specimen of a monster Captain Mayne Reid makes of him. We cannot stop to enumerate the enormities of this wicked priest, who rather oddly turns out, in the end, to be no priest, perhaps not even a Jesuit, but yet can always command "the treasures of the Vatican," which Captain Reid seems to think are always at the service of any one engaged in doing evil in the interests of the Church. If he really believes all the nonsense he has written here—and his book does not seem meant as a joke—we can only say we are very sorry for him.

"A Girl of a Thousand; or, Passages in the Life of Laura Bellairs" (Walbrook and Co.).—In a "prefatory" couple of pages the author of this book gives his—or her—own impression of the character set before us in Miss Bellairs. No doubt such an analysis may save the reviewer trouble; still, it is best, perhaps, that readers should be allowed to judge for themselves, without being told what they are intended to think beforehand. Laura Bellairs, however, seems from the pages of her autobiography much what she is described as being,—a pretty girl with a quick and well-trained intellect, and quite without heart or conscience. She has splendid health, imperturbable good-temper, and no sense of responsibility. She is thoroughly selfish and little troubled with moral scruples, but her good sense and caution keep her clear of indiscretions. She plays her cards cleverly, and, whilst still a girl, wins a husband, young, handsome, well-born, and rich, who adores her without ever finding out that she does not care a jot for him, though she admits that she thinks he suits her at least as well as any other would have done. The book is to be regarded, we think, as a mere jeu d'esprit, which it would be absurd to take too seriously, and is not without cleverness in its way.

◆

THE ANTONELLI-LAMBERTINI LAWSUIT

"The Antonelli lawsuit, was resumed on Thursday, the 3rd inst. The counsel of the brothers Antoaelli strove hard to have the proceedings postponed until January. Signor Gallini, the legal adviser of the Countess Lambertini, strenuously opposed this. The tribunal decided that the case would receive definite judgment on the 29th inst. On the 20th, a series of documents will be published, shedding a new and startling light on the whole affair, and compromising, it is said, certain individuals who have not yet figured in the trial." This is the latest, by telegram from Rome to the Daily News. The case, as far as known, is as follows. The Countess Loreta Domenica Vittoria Lambertini, asserts her rights as legal heiress to the fortune of the late Cardinal Giacomo Antonelli, bringing forward documentary and personal testimony to prove that she is the daughter of the said Cardinal. It is alleged that, on the 21st of October, 1855, in the house of Anna Gervasi, a midwife in Rome, a daughter was born to a foreign lady, who came to be delivered in her house, and that during the lady's confinement she was visited by Cardinal Antonelli; and that Dr. Raffaele Lucchini, Anna Gervasi, and Antonietta Marconi, to whom the child was afterwards confided, knew Cardinal Antonelli to be the father of this child. It is alleged also that the child was baptised in the Church of Santa Maria in Via, by desire of the Cardinal, with the names Loreta Dominica Vittoria; Loreta, in memory of the Cardinal's mother, and Domenica, in memory of his father; and that the Cardinal himself recommended his daughter to the care of the wet-nurse Pontesilli. It is further alleged that the Cardinal gave to Marconi, for his daughter, a silver medal engraved with his crest, and with the inscription, "Jacopo Antonellio, S.R.E.D.C.A., Pube. Negot. Pii IX., P.M.;" and another gold medal, with a portrait of himself in a Cardinal's dress on one side, and a portrait of his daughter Loreta, on the other; the Cardinal expressing a wish that his daughter should always wear these medals. It is further alleged, that the Cardinal sought frequent opportunities for seeing his so-called daughter, driving daily past her residence, 88, Via Quatro Fontane, when, at his desire, she was to show herself on the balcony; that, on the death of Marconi, the Cardinal appointed Signor Costanzo Chauvet, of Rome, to be her legal guardian; and that on her marriage with Count Lambertini, he allotted to her 100,000 lire Italiani, as dowry, besides furnishing a house for her at Cesana. From the time of her marriage to that of the death of the Cardinal, the Countess frequently visited the Cardinal at the Vatican, and it is said that the Cardinal's confessor, Padre Marco Rossi, knew the Countess to be the daughter of his Eminence, and had intended questioning the Cardinal as to what provision he purposed making for the Countess, but that on the morning of the day when Padre Rossi was to have had an interview with the Cardinal his Eminence died. Among other evidence shown in favour of the Countess, is a series of photographs of the Cardinal by the side of the Countess, taken at different periods of her life. Tamburlani, an old servant of the Cardinal, gave evidence as to the Cardinal's relations with "La Baronessa," the mother of the Countess; and the Archpriest Venditti has added his testimony to that of other witnesses. To punish him for his disclosures, the Vatican has deprived him of the right to say mass. The portrait of the Countess in our issue of this week is thought by some to bear a resemblance to the late Cardinal.

◆

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

II.

Among the Christmas attractions for the children this year come, with gilded bindings and profusely illustrated pages, from Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, "Field Friends and Forest Foes," by Phillis Browne; a description for the little ones of the lives and characteristics of animals wild and domestic, from the elephant to the mouse; and, in livelier language and more winning style, "Silver Wings and Golden Scales," by one of the authors of "Poems Written for a Child." This is natural history made attractive indeed; and the general get-up of the latter book especially, and the beauty of its illustrations form a very charming present for a child.—The twelfth volume of the Quiver magazine, prettily bound, comes to us from the same enterprising firm; and "Jungle, Peak, and Plain," a boys' book of adventure north and south, by Gordon Stables, R.N.

Messrs. Grant and Co. have R. E. Francillon's Christmas number for 1877, entitled "In the Dark," a rather weird story, "in seven watches," from sundown to morning; and, for the juveniles again, Messrs. Ward, Lock, and Co. contribute "The Children's Forget-me-Not," a work likely to be highly appreciated by the eager little heads bent over its many-pictured leaves; "The Children's Picture Annual," by Mercie Sunshine, an attempt to convey instruction pleasantly through the medium of the holiday adventures of some young sisters and brothers; and "Golden Childhood," a magazine of stories and rhymes for the little folk, who will be pleased with the quantity, if not critical about the quality, of its 400 pictures.

An elegant gift-book for the table, in its delicate binding of green and gold, is the second series of "Men of Mark," (Sampson Low and Co.), another volume of photographs of living celebrities; again with a short biographical notice—just filling a page—to each, contributed by Thompson Cooper.

Those in search of a welcome present for the lovers of a sea-story among boys may turn once more to the fruits of W. H. G. Kingston's prolific pen in "The Two Supercargoes" (S. Low and Co.), a tale of adventure in savage Africa; and "The Three Admirals" (Griffith and Farran), which is illustrated by J. R. Wells and C. J. Staniland.—The same indefatigable writer has translated Jules Verne for their benefit, in the shape of "The Child of the Cavern" (S. Low and Co.), in which the clever French author lays the scene in Scotland of the "strange doings underground" his vivid fancy has portrayed.—"Wilton of Cuthbert's" (Griffith and Farran), is the title of the tale of undergraduate life thirty years ago, with which the Rev. H. C. Adams comes before his readers for the new year; and the same publishers give us "Talent in Tatters," by Hope Wraythe, the story of a ragged little boy, whose "talent" of a splendid voice becomes the chief ornament of a cathedral choir.

For the girls we have "Lettice Eden," a tale of the sixteenth century, by Miss Emily Holt, authoress of so many similar works. The story describes, through the imagined diary of a young-girl, the struggling growth of the Reformed faith in the days of Henry VIII. It may be clever to write in old-world English, but we doubt if the style does not become rather wearisome to its readers.

Work among the London poor is the chief subject of the very readable tale, "A Knight of To-day," by L. T. Meade. The "knight" is brave and chivalrous, but his ruin is nearly worked by the villain of the plot, a wicked old miser. Right, however, triumphs in the end, and the principle of the story is good throughout.—Over fifty compositions of the Cornish miner, John Harris, are collected between the pretty green covers of "Tales and Poems" (Hamiltoa, Adams, and Co.). The former, which have been reprinted from periodicals, are short sketches of the lives of those in the writer's own condition, and the latter contain some well-clothed thoughts which would not disgrace a more educated pen.

We hope a favourable reception will be given to the new illustrated edition of the Waverley Novels, of which the first volume, "Waverley" has been forwarded to us by the publishers, Mareus Ward and Co.

Another contribution to the literature of the season is "Mists of the Valley," by Agnes Giberne (S. Bagster and Sons). This little work is intended, as the authoress states, as an effort towards the removal of religious doubts, and simply this end is kept in view, as gradually the "mists" roll away through the course of a very sweet and touching story.

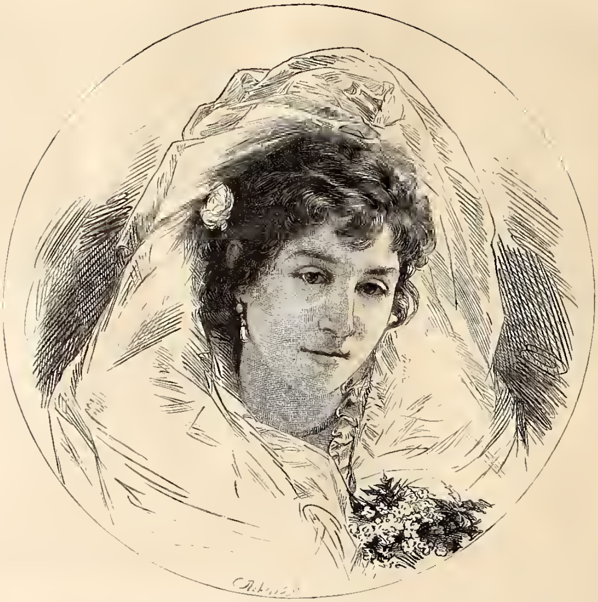
Messrs. Rivington's forward us a book for hospital nurses by one of themselves. "Our Work for Christ," by M. A. Morrell, contains excellent advice on the subject of nursing, with the aim of raising its lowliest duties to a standard of high and holy motives.

The old history of the failure of Art to descend to the commonplace level of domestic existence, once again comes to the fore in "The Story of Avis," by E. S. Phelps (Routledge). Avis, a painter of no ordinary mind and talents, rapt in her art, and fickle superficial Philip Ostrander, are idealistic romantic characters, drawn with elaborate care, yet leaving an impression of unreality on the reader. The old professor, also, the father of Avis, so blind to all but literary interests, is of the type more common in fiction than in actuality. For poetic expression, pathos, and refinement, however, "The Story of Avis" is pre-eminent, and the descriptions of American scenery are the happiest portions of the book.—Descending from Transatlantic dreamland to the realities of a Shoreditch refuge, "Them Boots," by W. Gilbert (Daldy, Isbister), paints humorously, but sadly enough, the effects of gin and the narrow strata of superstition underlying the ideas of many of the poorer classes. "Them Boots" have the misguided determination to lead their wearers into mischief and public-houses. Stolen in a weak moment by a reclaimed thief, directly they encase any one's feet that person is attracted to a gin-palace, and though the unlucky shoes are possessed by numerous owners no one escapes the fate until "them boots" are safely lodged in the fire.—A plea for the reclamation of navvies is put forth in "Little Rainbow" (Daldy, Isbister), a pathetic story by Mrs. C. Garnett.—Quiet and uneventful is the career of the hero of "Matthew Morison," by G. R. Whitehead (Hodder and Stoughton), a shy Scotch Minister. Yet the story is not without touches of humour, witness Matthew's first sermon, which strongly suggests Mr. Graham's failure in "The Marquis of Lossie."—The early days of the Cape Colony find an able exponent in Mr. R. M. Ballantyne, who, in "Settler and Savage" (J. Nisbet), hangs on the peg of history a stirring account of the struggles of the early settlers up-country. Kaffir wars, wild beast encounters, perils by flood and land, all have due place in Mr. Ballantyne's pages, which will be devoured by many a schoolboy.

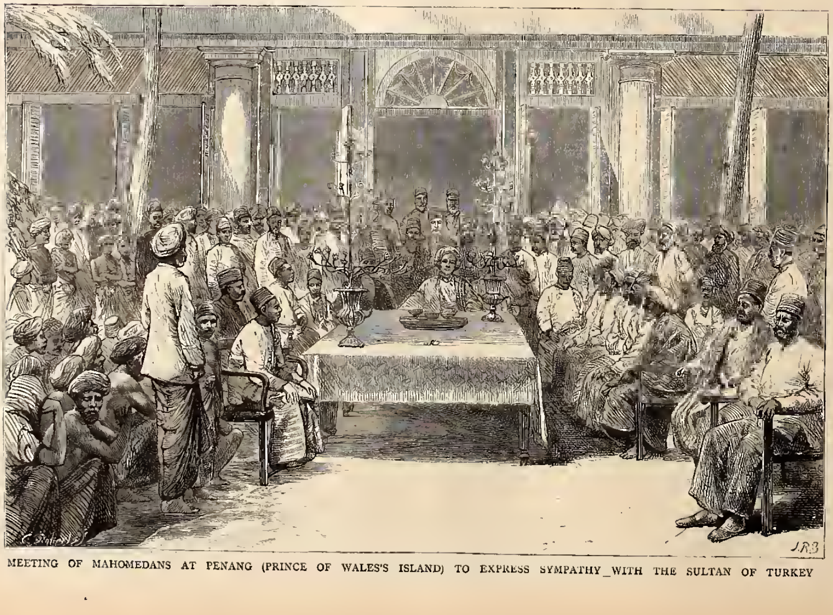
Our list closes with a small volume from Routledge's American Shilling Library, the "Story of a Mine;" and we have also received "The Cosmopolitan Masonic Calendar;" and a couple of pamphlets, one on "The Preservation of the Teeth," by Edwin Cox (Elliot Stock) and "May Young England Smoke?" (Partridge and Co.), a question answered very warmly and decidedly in the negative.

◆

A Self-pasting Scrap Book.——Mr. Clemens, better known as Mark Twain, has conferred a great boon on keepers of scrap books. It is now rendered perfect for the collector by having printed on the pages small bars of adhesive matter (as on postage stamps), to be moistened by the finger in order to fasten the sheets, large or small, thus rendering him free from the trouble of seeking for paste or gum, often troublesome to procure when travelling. Mr. Clemeus sends the following characteristic letter to his publishers, Messrs. Slote, Woodman, and Co., 119 and 121, William Street, New York:—"Hartford, Monday evening. —My dear Slote—I have invented and patented a new scrap book, not to make money out of it, but to economise the profanity of this country. You know that when the average man wants to put something in his scrap book he can't find his paste—then he swears; or if he finds it, it is dried so hard that it is only fit to eat—then he swears; or if he uses mucilage it mingles with the ink, and next year he can't read his scrap—the result is barrels and barrels of profanity. This can be saved and devoted to other irritating things, where it will do more real and lasting good, simply by substituting my self-pasting scrap book for the old-fashioned one. If Messrs. Stote, Woodman, and Co. wish to publish this scrap book of mine, I shall be willing. You see by the above paragraph that it is a sound moral work, and this will commend it to editors and clergymen, and in fact to all right-feeling people. If you want testimonials I can get them, and of the best sort, and from the best people. One of the most refined and cultivated young ladies in Hartford (daughter of a clergyman) told me herself, with grateful tears standing in her eyes, that since she begun using my scrap book she had never sworn a single oath. Truly yours, Mark Twain."



LORETA DOMENICA VITTORIA, COUNTESS LAMBERTINI
The alleged Daughter and Heiress of the late Cardinal Antonelli



MEETING OF MAHOMEDANS AT PENANG (PRINCE OF WALES'S ISLAND) TO EXPRESS SYMPATHY WITH THE SULTAN OF TURKEY

